
This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

<https://books.google.com>

This is a reproduction of a library book that was digitized by Google as part of an ongoing effort to preserve the information in books and make it universally accessible.

Google™ books

<https://books.google.com>

California
Journal of Law and Economics

LIBRARY
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA
RIVERSIDE

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE AND ART.

JULY — DECEMBER,
1891.

VOLUME XL.

PUBLISHING OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, LONDON, W.C.

1891.

LONDON:
PRINTED BY ALEXANDER AND SHEPHEARD, LONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME XL.

LITERATURE.

REVIEWS.

Abbott's (Evelyn) edition of Purves' Iliad of Homer ... 304
Amcer Ali's The Spirit of Islam ... 402
Arbutnot's (F. F.) edition of The Raucat-us-safa ... 379
Arnold's (Sir Edwin) Seas and Lands ... 425
Bapt's (E.) Deux Gentilshommes. Poésies de la Cour de Henri VIII. ... 70
Baldes, Thomas Lovell, Poetical Works of ... 128
Bell & Fischer's translation of Von Moltke's Franco-German War ... 553
Ben's (Mathilde) Dramas in Miniature ... 531
Bogatzky's Golden Treasury ... 581
Bonaparte's (Prince Roland) Une Expédition en Corse ... 281
Booth's (Charles) Labour and Life of the People ... 257
Bradley's (Henry) New English Dictionary ... 167
Buchanan's (Robert) The Outcast ... 375
Buchheim's (C. A.) Ballads and Romances ... 230
Burd's (L. Arthur) edition of Machiavelli's Il Principe ... 423
Butler's (Col. Sir William F.) Sir Charles Napier ... 259
Caine's (Hall) The Scapegoat ... 277
Casati's (Maj. G.) Ten Years in Equatoria and the Return with Emin Pasha ... 88
Chapman's (Mrs. E. F.) Some Distinguished Indian Women ... 232
Clyne's (T. K.) The Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter ... 180
Clarke's (Maj. G. S.) Fortification ... 230
Cray & Landon's translation of Major Casati's Ten Years in Equatoria ... 88
Cressan's (H.) translation of The Voyages and Adventures of Ferdinand Mendez Pinto ... 31
Cullins's (John Churton) The Study of English Literature ... 520
Cullen's (Rear-Admiral P. H.) Naval Warfare ... 328
Culvin's (Sidney) Letters of John Keats to his Family and Friends ... 87
Cur's (Rev. Dr. J. Charles) Three Centuries of Derbyshire Annals ... 447
Cuttill's (Rev. Alexander H.) General Crawford and his Light Division ... 471
Davidson & Benham's Archibald Campbell Tail, Archbishop of Canterbury ... 5
De Paravicini's (Francesca) Early History of Balliol College ... 495
De Saint-Amand's (Imbert) Marie Antoinette, Josephine, and Marie Louise ... 151
Duchétil's (M. V.) Les Meurs des Kérouarés ... 330
Emme's (Augusta-Theodosia) The History of Saint Dominic ... 305
Edgar's (Matilda) Ten Years of Upper Canada ... 427
Farmer's (Archdeacon) Darkness and Dawn ... 578
Faul's (Mrs. E. M.) The Child and his Book ... 280
Faul's (Henry T.) Spain and Morocco ... 353
Fitzgerald's (Percy) Life of James Boswell (of Auchinleck) ... 400
Fisher's (Sir William) Israeli and his Day ... 129
Fisher's (J. T.) Calendar of Ancient Records of Dublin ... 192
Golden Treasury (the) of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language ... 401

REVIEWS—continued.

Gordon's (Alexander) The Folks o' Car-glen ... 211
Gosse's (Edmund) edition of The Poetical Works of Thomas Lovell Beddoes ... 128
Gruetz's (Prof. H.) History of the Jews ... 474
Greenstreet's (W. J.) translation of Guyau's Education and Heredity ... 277
Grimwood's (Mrs.) My Three Years in Manipur ... 530
Gross's (Charles) The Gild Merchant ... 170
Gulbenkian's (C. S.) La Trans-Caucasie et la Péninsule d'Asie ... 330
Guyau's (J. M.) Education and Heredity ... 277
Hall's (Hubert) The Antiquities and Curiosities of the Erchequer ... 447
Harr's (J. Rendel) The Apology of Aristides ... 229
Hartmann's (Franz) Life and Doctrines of Jacob Boehme ... 355
Havet's (Ernest) La Modernité des Prophètes ... 89
Hayes's (Alfred) The March of Man, and other Poems ... 475
Headrick's (James) Backward Glances ... 353
Heine, Heinrich, The Works of ... 256
Herckless's (John) Cardinal Beaton, Priest and Politician ... 210
Hodder's (Edwin) Sir George Burns, Bart. ... 329
Houghton's (Lord) Stray Verses ... 9
Howells's (W. D.) Criticism and Fiction ... 200
Ireland's (Mrs. A.) Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle ... 68
Japp's (Alexander H.) The Posthumous Works of Thomas De Quincey ... 107
Johnston's (H. H.) Livingstone and the Exploration of Central Africa ... 440
Kemble's (Frances Anne) Further Records ... 190
Kipling's (Rudyard) Life's Handicap ... 327
Lamennais's (F.) Words of a Believer and The Past and Future of the People ... 270
Lano-Poole's (Stanley) Sir Richard Church ... 108
Lang's (Andrew) Angling Sketches ... 498
Lang's (Konrad) Der Papstsel ... 100
Law's (Ernest) History of Hampton Court Palace ... 375
Lawford Hall, The Hall of ... 351
Lecky's (William Hartpole) Poems ... 448
Lee-Hamilton's (Eugene) The Fountain of Youth ... 160
Le Gallienne's (Richard) The Book-Bills of Narcissus ... 377
Leisching's (L.) Personal Reminiscences of Laurence Oliphant ... 27
Leland's (Charles Godfrey) translation of The Works of Heinrich Heine ... 256
Löwy's (Bella) translation of Prof. Gruetz's History of the Jews ... 474
Lynch's (Arthur) Modern Authors ... 403
Machiavelli's (Niccolò) Il Principe ... 423
Mackay's (E.) Nero and Actea Manipur, compiled from the Columns of the "Pioneer" ... 530
Manning's (G. E.) With Are and Rope in the New Zealand Alps ... 473
Markham's (Capt. A. H.) Life of Sir John Franklin and the North-West Passage ... 149
Markheim's (H. W. Gogx) Le Misanthrope ... 472
Martineau's (L. E.) Translation of Lamennais' Paroles d'un Croquant ... 69
Maurice's (Col. F.) War ... 278

REVIEWS—continued.

Miles's (Rev. C. P.) Correspondence of William Augustus Miles on the French Revolution ... 49
Mirkhond's Garden of Purity ... 379
Morris's (W. O'C.) Great Commanders of Modern Times, and the Campaign of 1815 ... 9
Morris & Magnusson's translations of the Icelandic Sagas ... 447
Nichols's (Francis Morgan) The Hall of Lincford Hall ... 351
O'Leary's (Ellen) Lays of Country Home and Friends ... 70
Oliphant's (Mrs.) Memoir of the Life of Laurence Oliphant and of Alice Oliphant, his Wife ... 27
Oliphant's (Mrs.) Jerusalem ... 555
Orr's (Mrs. S.) Life and Letters of Robert Browning ... 47
Orford, The Colleges of ... 495
Palgrave's (William Gifford) A Vision of Life ... 424
Phinn's (Charles O.) edition of Bogatzky's Golden Treasury ... 581
Piatt's (Sarah M. B.) An Irish Wild-Flower ... 192
Picton's (J. Allanson) Sir James A. Pinto, Ferdinand Mendez, Voyages and Adventures of ... 31
Pollock's (Sir Frederick) Orford Lectures and other Discourses ... 447
Portal's (Gerald H.) My Mission to Abyssinia ... 557
Purves's (John) The Iliad of Homer ... 304
Rehateck's (E.) translation of The Raucat-us-safa ... 379
Rhys's (J.) Studies in the Arthurian Legend ... 67
Ridcut Letters, The ... 427
Robinson's (J. A.) Texts and Studies, Contributions to Biblical and Patristic Literature ... 229
Robinson's (J. R. & H. H.) Life of Robert Coates ... 378
Rockhill's (William Woodville) The Land of the Lamias ... 390
Rosebery's (Lord) Pitt ... 577
Ryle & James's Psalms of the Pharisees "Sage Library, The" ... 447
Saintsbury's (G.) Essays on French Novelists ... 30
Scherer's (Edmond) Essays on English Literature ... 496
Schirrmacher's (Dr. Friedrich Wilhelm) Geschichte Spaniens ... 233
Seton-Karr's (H. W.) Bear Hunting in the White Mountains ... 168
Sidgwick's (Henry) The Elements of Politics ... 303
Smart's (W.) translation of Von Böhm Bawerk's Positive Theory of Capital ... 213
Sonnenschein's (W. Swan) The Best Books ... 50
Spencer's (Herbert) Justice ... 147
Stephens's (H. Morse) History of the French Revolution ... 527
Stokes's (Dr. George T.) Pochocke's Tour in Ireland ... 590
Tennyson's (Frederick) Daphne and Other Poems ... 352
Van de Velde's (Mme. M. S.) French Fiction of To-day ... 231
Verne's (Maurice) Les Résultats de l'Érègèse Biblique ... 89
Essais Bibliques ... 89
Von Böhm Bawerk's (E.) Positive Theory of Capital ... 213
Von Moltke's Franco-German War of 1870 ... 553

REVIEWS—continued.

Waithman's (H. M.) Charybdis and other Poems ... 109
Wallace's (Robert) The Rural Economy and Agriculture of Australia and New Zealand ... 131
Watson's (J.) Poachers and Poaching ... 171
Watts's (H. E.) Life of Miguel de Cervantes ... 428
Westcott's (Bishop) Essays in the History of Religious Thought in the West ... 378
Wetz's (Dr. W.) Shakespeare vom Standpunkte der vergleichenden Literaturgeschichte ... 151
Wheatley's (Leonard A.) The Story of the "Imitatio Christi" ... 212
Wilde's (Oscar) Intentions ... 7
Lady's Notes on Men, Women, and Books ... 354
Wilson's (Edward L.) In Scripture Lands ... 257
Wingate's (Major F. R.) Mahdism and the Egyptian Sudan ... 498
Wordsworth's (Bishop) Annals of my Early Life ... 555
Yeats's (W. B.) Representative Irish Tales ... 308
Young's (William) History of Dulis College ... 255

NOVELS.

Adams's (Mrs. Leith) Bonnie Kate ... 172
— (Francis) John Webb's End ... 200
Alan's (Miriam) Wednesday's Child ... 172
Albert's (Mary) Brooke Finchley's Daughter ... 112
Alexander's (Mrs.) A Woman's Heart Well Won ... 200
Allen's (Grant) What's Bred in the Bone ... 72 — Recalled to Life ... 354
— Dumaresq's Daughter ... 424
Archer's (William) translation of Kielland's Tales of Two Countries ... 452
Arkwright's (Denis) Mrs. Arnold ... 558
Armstrong's (L.) Spindle and Shears ... 33
Bain's (F. W.) Treachery ... 72
Balguy's (Guy) The Bantams of Sheffield ... 477
Barnett's (Edith A.) Dr. and Mrs. Gold ... 452
Barrett's (Frank) The Sin of Olga Zassoulch ... 500
Barrie's (J. M.) The Little Minister ... 532
Beale's (Anne) Charlie is My Darling ... 332
Bengough's (M. A.) No Near Akin ... 111
Benson's (Mary Eleanor) At Sundry Times and in Divers Manners ... 428
Besant's (Walter) St. Katherine's by the Tower ... 32
Betham-Edwards (M.) A Romance of the Wire ... 53
Black's (William) Donald Ross of Helmsa ... 52
— (M. M.) Disinherited ... 214
Boldwood's (Rolla) A Sydney-Side Sacon ... 280
Bourke's (Mrs. Herbert) A Political Wife ... 132
Bromont's (Comte de) The Gentleman Digger ... 11
Brimley-Richards's (J.) The Alderman's Children ... 71
Bunner's (H. C.) Zadoc Pine, and Other Stories ... 194
Burton's (Miss E.) Ruling the Planets ... 259

NOVELS—continued.

Cambridge's (Ada) The Three Miss Kings 152
Campbell's (Mrs. Vere) Of this Death 404
Claverling's (Vere) A Harvest of Tares 72
Cobban's (J. Maclaren) A Reverend Gentleman 452
Secret Sir Ralph's 477
Coleridge's (Christabel R.) Amethyst 356
Comyn's (E.) Romance by Proxy 11
Conroy's (Mrs.) Penny's Perversity 370
Couperus's (L.) Footsteps of Fate 52
Craddock's (Charles Egbert) In the Stranger People's Country 582
Crain's (Georgina M.) Patience Holt 356
Crawford's (F. Marion) Khalid 32
The Witch of Prague 193
Croker's (B. M.) Interference 404
Dahm's (Talmage) European Relations 501
Davidson's (John) The Great Men 532
Davis's (Richard Harding) Galliegher, and other Stories 112
Dawson's (Erasmus) The Fountain of Youth 194
(W. J.) The Redemption of Edward Strahan 357
De Havilland's (Saumarez) The Mystic Serpent 380
Dering's (R. G.) The Undergraduate 72
Desart's (Earl of) Helen's Vow 72
Dickens's (Mary Angela) Cross Currents 452
Don's (Isabel) Only Children 52
Doudney's (Sarah) Gooliva Durlough 428
Douglass's (L.) Beggars All 260
Downey's (Edmund) Captain Lanagan's Log 193
Dunstan's (Cecil) Quita 33
Egerton's (Beatrice) Lipa 173
Elliott's (S. B.) Jerry 72
Envy, Hatred, and Malice, by V. D. W. Evans's (Sebastian and Frank) The Upper Ten 92
Evelyn's Career, By the author of "Dr. Edith Romney" 281
Fairlee's (B.) The Mystery of a Type-Writer 214
Falconer's (Lance) Cecilia de Noel 493
Falk's (David C.) Rick 532
Farjeon's (B. L.) The Shield of Fate 532
Fendall's (Percy) The Gambler's Secret 5-2
Fein's (G. Manville) Mahma Noustie 214
Filon's (A.) Violette Merion 52
Fleur de Lys' Unto Death 582
France's (Anatole) The Crime of Sylvestre Bonnard 52
Perron's (W.) translation of Perron's A Village Priest 112
Gellie's (Mary E.) Ruffians Folk 282
Gibney's (Somerville) The Trial of Payson Finch 104
Gissing's (Algernon) A Moorland Idyl 171
Glanville's (Ernest) The Footsucker 582
Graham's (Scott) The Scandal Mystery 234
Gravenhill's (G.) Jack Sheffington 52
Gray's (E. M'Queen) Elsa 92
Grey's (E. Dr. Sinclair's) Sister 213
Haines's (Randolph) Unless 380
Hamilton's (Col. R.) Betwixt Two Lovers 10
Hardy's (Miss) Tibby's Trust 11
(Thomas) A Group of Noble Dames 153
Harris's (Joel Chandler) Balaam and his Master 92
(A. L.) The Fatal Request 214
Hart's (Mabel) From Harvest to Hay 558
Havell's (H. L.) A Great Gulf Fixed 357
Hawke's (Lionel) Clement Barnold's Intention 477
Hay's (Mary C.) Among the Ruins, and other Stories 392
Herbert's (William) The World Grown Young 92
Herman's (H.) A Leading Lady 52
Herriot's (Scarlet) Fortune 357
Hertzka's (Dr. T.) Freeland 282
Hitchman's (C. E.) Wounded by a Word 33
Hobbes's (John Oliver) Some Emotions and a Moral 332
Hope's (Anthony) Rather Stafford 570
Horner's (Christopher) Darrell's Dream 163
Howard's (Lady C.) and Fielder-King's (Ada) Master of Her Life 132
Hume's (Fergus) Whom God hath Joined 152
Hynes's (C. J.) A Matrimonial Mixture 380
James's (Charles T. C.) Humbling his Pride 152
Jewett's (Sarah Orne) Strangers and Wayfarers 132
Kenry's (Annie) A Doubting Heart 234
Keith's (Leslie) The Hallotts 10
Kennard's (Mrs. Edward) That Pretty Little Horsebreaker 331
Koutle's (Rose M.) The Magic of the Pine Woods 153

NOVELS—continued.

Kevill-Davies's (A.) Marriage up to Date 558
Kielland's (Alexander L.) Tales of Two Countries 453
King's (Capt. Charles) Captain Blake 112
Le Clerc's (Mistress) Beatrice Cope 240
Lee's (Katherine) Love or Money 452
Lemon's (Ida) A Divided Duty 172
Lilian and Lili, By the Author of "The Atelier du Lys" 477
Lockhart-Ross's (H. S.) Hamtura 252
Ludlow's (James M.) A King of Tyre 429
Lynton's (E. Lynn) An Octave of Friends 214
Macalpine's (Avery) A Man's Conscience 234
Mackenzie's (Hannah B.) After Touch of Wadded Hands 428
Malot's (Hector) Conscience 582
Marryat's (Florence) The Risen Dead 152
A Fatal Silence 557
Marshall's (Frederick) It Happened Yesterday 91
Mathers's (Helen) My Jo, John 305
Matthews's (Brander) With my Friends Maude's (F. D.) A Merciful Divorce 330
Meadows's (A. M.) The Romance of a Madhouse 332
Merrick's (Leonard) Violet Mosses 213
Milners, The 282
Moore's (George) Vain Fortune 532
(Susan Teackle) Ryle's Open Gate (H. C.) Who was She? 133
Morris's (Alfred) A Minimum Wage 172
Muir's (Alan) Charming to Her Latest Day 404
Munster's (Countess of) A Scotch Earl 172
Murree's (Fanny N. D.) Filicia 191
Murray's (Henry) A Deputy Providence 91
Murray & Herman's Only a Shadow 453
Nicholas's (J. W.) The House of Mystery 173
Norris's (W. E.) Jack's Father, and other Stories 33
Miss Wentworth's Idea 357
Mr. Chaine's Sons 401
On Heather Hills 152
Orbilus's A Schoolmaster's Chat 558
Page's (Thomas Nelson) On Newfound River 172
Pain's (Barry) In a Canadian Canoe, &c. 234
Peacock's (Edward) Narcissa Brendon 308
Phipps's (Elizabeth Stuart) Fourteen to One 420
Phillips's (F. C.) Extenuating Circumstances 112
Phillips's (Mrs. A.) A Rude Awakening 532
Phillipotts's (Eden) Polly and Fresh Air 332
Pirkis's (C. L.) A Red Sister 476
Pool's (Maria Louise) Dilly 501
Porritt's (Norman) Cornered 132
Potapenko's A Village Priest 112
Price's (Richard) Miss Maxwell's Affections 308
Pryce's (Richard) Deck Chair Stories 380
Rue's (J. E. S.) translation of Hector Malot's Conscience 582
Ransom's (Arthur) translation of Dr. Hertzka's Freeland 282
Rives's (Amelie) According to St. John 555
Robinson's (F. W.) Poor Zeph 308
(F. Mabel) Hovenden, V. C. 582
Roosevelt's (Blanche) Hazel Fane 470
Russell's (W. Clark) My Danish Sweetheart 500
Sandara's (Lady V.) A Life's Devotion 33
Sergeant's (Adeline) Caspar Brooke's Daughter 293
Shand's (A. Innes) Kilcarran 332
Shorthouse's (J. H.) Blanche, Lady Filaise 452
Sinne's (Sidney) A Curious Case 194
Smart's (Hawley) Thrive Post the Post 200
Beatrice and Benedict 477
Smith's (Haskell) For God and Humanity 91
(F. Hopkinson's) Colonel Carter of Cartersville 172
Somerville & Ross's Naboth's Vineyard 305
Stackpole's (W. H.) A Strange Prison and other Stories 133
Stedfield's (H.) The Brethren of Mount Atlas 582
Stockton's (Frank R.) The House of Martha 477
The Squirrel Inn 600
The Rudder 533
Eleven Possible Cases 558
Swan's (Annie S.) The Ayres of Studleigh 173
Trebuck's (William) Dorrie 234
Tonbell's (Philippe) Retribution 112
Vautta's Won by Honour 389
Victoria's (Louise H.) Lady Rosalind 332
Violin and Vendetta 380

NOVELS—continued.

Vredenburg's (Edric) The Haunted House in Berkeley Square 234
Vrd Staff, The. By X. Y. Z. 305
Walford's (L. B.) The Mischief of Monica 307
Warden's (Florence) Those Western Girls 132
Warren's (Paul) Hawthorne's Dan After 132
Watson's (H. B. Marriott) The Web of the Spider 309
Werner's (E.) Beacon-Fires 281
Whitby's (Beatrice) One Reason Why 44
Wilde's (Oscar) Lord Arthur Savile's Crime, and other Stories 194
Williamson's (Mrs. F. H.) A Child Widow 10
Willis's (C. J.) Jardney's Wife 111
Was He Justified? 234
Winter's (John) Strange Good Bye 92
Wood's (Margaret L.) Esther Van-hornough 551

MINOR NOTICES.

Andrews's (William) Old-Time Punishments 93
Ashley's (Mrs.) translation of De Coulanges's essay on The Origin of Property in Land 235
Bacon's (Alice Mabel) Japanese Girls and Women 195
Bux's (Ernest Belfort) Outlooks from the New Standpoint 153
Broughman's (Hon. R.) A Cruise on the Friesland Poultry 53
Brown's (E.) Poultry Keeping as an Industry 429
Burne's (Maj.-Gen. Sir O. T.) Cycle and Strutharius 215
Came's (Hall) The Little Manx Nation 357
Caldwell's (Alfred) English Colonisation and Empire 308
Coleridge's (Edward P.) translation of The Plays of Euripides 173
Conway's (W. M.) Clumber's Guide to the Pennine Alps 53
Cooke's (M. C.) British Edible Fungi 429
Crozet's Voyages to Tasmania, New Zealand, &c. 300
Cust's (Lady Elizabeth) Some Account of the Stuarts of Aubigny in France 93
Davies's (G. C.) Handbook to the Rivers and Broads of Norfolk and Suffolk 54
De Coulanges's (Fustel) The Origin of Property in Land 235
De Goncourt's (Edmond) Outamoro 185
De Witt's (John) translation of The Psalm 261
Ditchfield's Old English Sports, Pastimes, and Customs 94
Dixon's (Charles) The Birds of our Rambles 429
Fittis's (R. S.) Sports and Pastimes of Scotland 357
Frederic's (Harold) The Young Emperor 214
Furst's (Dr. Julius) Glossarium Graeco-Hebraicum 261
Gardiner's (Samuel Rawson) Student's History of England 92
Garratt's (Miss) The Women of Turkey 252
Gentleman's Magazine Library 93
Gower's (Lord Ronald) Stafford House Letters 133
Grace's (W. G.) Cricket 53
Grashy's (W. C.) Teaching in Three Continents 261
Groen's (Mrs. Everett) Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding 94
Guns and Shooting, Something about Hartshorne's (Albert) Hanging in Chains 93
Hay's (James) Swift: the Mystery of his Life and Love 133
Henty's (G. A.) Those other Animals 429
Holyoake's (G. J.) The Co-operative Movement To-day 236
Juavier's (Thomas A.) Stories of Old New Spain 283
Kerr's (W.) Riding, and Riding for Ladies 358
Leguat, Francois, The Voyage of L'Estrange's (Rev. A. G.) Lady Belcher and her Friends 133
Life in the Royal Navy, By a Ranker 358
Linton's (W. J.) The English Republic 234
Lowell's (Perival) Noto: an Unexplored Corner of Japan 185
Lucas's (C. P.) Historical Geography of the British Colonies 309
Lupton's (James J.) Mayhew's Illustrated Horse Doctor 429
McLaughlin's (Andrew C.) Lewis Cass 215
McClagh's (Thomas) Sir William M'Arthur 215
Meyer's (Elard Hugo) Germanische Mythologie 283

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Michaelis & Moore's Froebel's Letters on the Kindergarten 261
Moore's (A. L.) Essays Scientific and Philosophical 11
Morrison's (William Douglas) Crime and its Causes 235
Murray's (R. W.) South Africa from Arab Domination to British Rule 309
Naden's (C. W.) Induction and Deduction 11
Newman's (F. W.) Supplement to Studies in Aeschylus and Notes on Euripides 173
Oliver's (Capt. P. Field) edition of The Voyage of 309
Payne's (John Drury) Collections to a History of the Family of Matanus 93
Peunen's (J. & E.) The Stream of Pleasure 53
Phillips's Handy-Volume Atlas of London 54
Pineau's (Léon) Les Contes populaires de Poitou 263
Potter's (Miss Beatrice) The Co-operative Movement in Great Britain 235
Prickard's (A. O.) Aristotle on the Art of Poetry 173
Rau's (W. F.) The Business of Travel 54
Renach's (Th.) French translation of Aristotle 351
Robertson's (John M.) Modern Humanists 153
Rogers's (W. H. Hamilton) The Strife of the Roses and Days of the Tudors of the West 93
Roscoe's (E. C.) Buckinghamshire Sketches 53
Ross's (Janet) Early Days Recalled 133
Both's (H. Ling) translation of Crozet's Voyage to Tasmania, &c. 300
Rye's (Walter) The Rights of Fishing, Shooting, and Sailing on the Norfolk Broads 54
Salomon's (Otto) The Teachers' Handbook of Sloyd 26
Scrivener's (Scrivener, C.) Our Fields and Cities 23
Shore, Emily, Journal of 11
Siegfried & Stadel's (Pros.) Illyrisches Wörterbuch zum alten Testament 24
Smith's (C. Roach) Retrospections, Social and Archaeological 24
Spencer's (B.) The Threefold Cord 24
Stebbing's (Rev. T. R. R.) The Naturalist of Cumbria 1
Talks with Athenian Youths 1
Thompson's (Herbert M.) The Purse and the Conscience 2
White's (Arnold) Triss at Truth 2
Wildboer's (G.) Die Entstehung des alttestamentlichen Kanons 2
Windelband's (W.) Geschichte der Philosophie 2

SCHOOL BOOKS.

Biese's (Alfred) Griechische Lyriker in Auswahl für den Schulgebrauch 3
Butler's (Mrs.) Herodotus VII. 3
Edwards's (G. M.) Homeri Ilias XVI. 3
Holden's (H. A.) Seventh Book of the History of Thucydides 3
Marchant's (E. C.) Thucydides, Book II. 3
Marshall's (J.) Short History of Greek Philosophy 3
Morice's (F. D.) Locuti 3
Nettelbladt & Sandys's edition of Seyffert's Lexicon der Altertumskunde 3
Seuender's (A.) Wortverzeichnisse zu Homeri Ilias A-Δ 3
Schmidt's (J.) Commentar zu Cäsar's Denkwürdigkeiten 3
Seuffert's Dictionary of Classical Antiquities 3
Strauchan's (J.) Herodotus, Book VI. 3
Turner's (B. D.) The Protagoras of Plato 36

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE.

Allen's (A. J. C.) The Acts of the Apostles 405
Alles's (Thomas W.) Peter's Rock in Mohammed's Flood 333
Bain's (E. W.) Antichrist 453
Birk's (H. A.) God's Champion, Man's Example 405
Bonney's (Rev. T. G.) Old Truths in Modern Lights 119
Bramston's (Rev. T. F.) Sermons to Boys 119
Brooks's (Phillips) The Light of the World and Other Sermons 405

THEOLOGICAL LITERATURE—con.

Cavanagh's (Father Pius) The Life of St. Thomas Aquinas ... 333
Church's (Rev. A. J.) Stories from the Bible ... 405
Cone's (Dr. Orallo) Gospel Criticism and Historical Christianity ... 453
Davies's (Rev. J. Llewelyn) Order and Growth ... 112
Dillmann's (A.) Kurzgefasstes exegetisches Handbuch zum Hebr. ... 454
D.-d.'s (Dr. Marcus) The Gospel of St. John ... 73
"Expositor's Bible, The" ... 73
Findlay's (G. G.) The Epistles to the Thessalonians ... 406
First Gospel, A Plain Commentary on ... 73
Foakes-Jackson's (F. J.) History of the Christian Church to A.D. 337 ... 406
Fouard's (Abbe Constant) The Christ the Son of God ... 333
Gauguin's (Dr. Paton J.) Introduction to the Johannine Writings ... 73
Guthrie's (G. F. X.) translation of Abbe Fouard's The Christ the Son of God ... 333
Harmer's (J. R.) edition of Bishop Lightfoot's The Apostolic Fathers ... 72
Hoxley's (Rev. C. H.) Pamphlet on the Coder Alexandrinus ... 73
Hewitt's (Rev. J. R.) The Children's Prayer ... 454
Jacquier's (Abbe E.) La Doctrine des Douze Apotres et ses Enseignements ... 73
Lightfoot's (Bishop) The Apostolic Fathers ... 72
Lohr's (Dr. Max) Die Klagelieder des Jeremias ... 453
Moore's (Aubrey L.) Some Aspects of St. Macpherson's (Bishop) The Teaching of Christ ... 112
Phillips's (Frances) Fathers of the Eastern Church ... 405
Scott's (Philip) Saint Chrysostom and St. Augustine ... 405
Scotland, The Church of, Past and Present ... 453
Stewart's (F. H.) The Church of Scotland ... 453
Whitcomb & Scannell's Manual of Catholic Theology ... 332
Wilson's (Rev. J. M.) Sermons Preached in Clifton College Chapel ... 114
Wright, Bernard & Hemphill's The Literature of the Second Century ... 405

MINOR POETRY.

Case's (Valter) Renaissance ... 501
Case's (Hancor) Dreaming ... 502
McIntosh (Annie) The Religion of Humanity, &c. ... 501
Perry's (J.) In Cloud and Sunshine ... 501 Pemberton's (William) Lays of Common Life ... 502

GIFT BOOKS.

Alford's (F. D.) Comrades True ... 534
A. L. O.'s The Iron Chain and the Golden ... 560
Anderson & Wall's A Romance of a School ... 534
Armstrong's (A. E.) Three Bright Girls ... 534
"Marian; or, the" ... 559
"Aby-rango" ... 533
Armstrong's (Janet) The Tenant's of James's Court, and other Stories ... 534
Austen's (J. C.) The Last of the Guest Illers ... 477
Austin's (Stella) Tib and Tib ... 534
Baldwin's (R. M.) The Buffalo Pass ... 478
"Bride" ... 534
Bart's Second Innings ... 583
Barnes's (Rev. W.) Peck ... 584
Bart's (Marguerite) Sweet William ... 584
Barnes's (M.) Neal Russell ... 584
Bart's (Maggie) Pleasant Work for Busy fingers ... 584
Baker's (Maude M.) Waiting and Worry ... 534
"By the Lyrth Sea Shore" ... 580
Baker's (Maude) Miss Pussie ... 534
Baker's (Hope) Dorothy, and other Stories ... 584
Baker's (Rev. A. J.) Stories from the Bible ... 583
Baker's (Justin) A Local Hero ... 478
Baker's (C.) The Story of a Puppet ... 583
Baker's (F. M.) Isaac Beach, Signalman ... 584
Baker's (Richard Harding) Stories for Boys ... 583
Baker's (Frank) Uncle ... 478
Baker's (Sarah) The Family Difficulty ... 534
Baker's The Love-Drum of Gatty Fenning ... 584

GIFT BOOKS—continued.

Doudney's (Sarah) Where Two Ways Meet ... 550
Duboyne's (Lady) Aunt Lilly's Motto ... 584
Edmonds's (Mrs.) Stories from Fairyland by George Drossines, and the Cap of Tears, and other Tales by Aristotle Kourtidis ... 477
Ehler's King Must ... 534
Evelyn's (J.) An Inca Queen ... 478
Everett-Green's (E.) In the Wars of the Roses ... 477
"The Lord of Dynenour" ... 583
"The Church and the King" ... 559
"A Holiday in a Manor House" ... 580
Francillon's (R. E.) Gods and Heroes ... 583
Gall's (Hon. Mrs. Lyttelton) The Cloud of Witness ... 583
Gibberne's (Agnes) The Dairymops ... 478
Gilliat's (Edward) Dorothy Dumoke ... 559
Gow's (Gregson) Brave and True ... 584
Hardy's (Robina F.) Polly, who was Nobody's Child ... 534
Harrison's (F. Bayford) Littlebourne Lock ... 534
Henty's (G. A.) Held Fast for England ... 477
"The Dash for Khartoum" ... 559
Hertford's (A. C.) Molly ... 580
Heygate's (Rev. E. W.) Short Tales for Lads of a Bible Class ... 583
"Tales for a Bible Class of Girls" ... 583
Hope's (Ascot R.) Royal Youths ... 533
Hyne's (C. J.) Stimson's Reef ... 478
Jackson's (A. F.) The Doll's Dress-maker ... 531
"Charley" ... 584
Jacob's (Joseph) Celtic Fairy Tales ... 558
Japp's (A. H.) Successful Business Men ... 580
Johnstone's (D. Lawson) Richard Tregellas ... 533
Jones's (C. A.) Nicco ... 534
"Rev. Harry" Voices by the Way ... 584
Lamb's (Ruth) Work, Wait, Win ... 580
Laurie's (A.) The Secret of the Magian ... 559
Leighton's (R.) The Pilots of Pomona ... 584
Lowndes's (C. S.) A High Resolute ... 584
Lyster's (Anette) Hatherley's Home-spuns ... 531
"Mackay of Uganda, The Story of the Life of" ... 531
Marrvax's (Florence) The Little Marine and the Japanese Lily ... 583
Marshall's (Emma) My Lady Bountiful ... 478
"Born in the Purple" ... 580
"Those Three" ... 580
Meade's (L. T.) Hepsy, Gipsy ... 559
"The Honourable Miss" ... 533
Metcalfe's (W. C.) Aboveboard ... 478
Miles's (Alfred H.) Fifty-two Further Stories for Boys ... 533
"Fifty-two Further Stories for Girls" ... 533
Milman's (Constance) Evenings Out ... 478
Molesworth's (Mrs.) The Red Grange ... 478
"Nurse Heatherdale's Story" ... 533
Moore's (F. Frankfort) The Ice Prison ... 478
Murray's (M. A.) translation of Colloidi's Story of a Puppet ... 5-3
Nash's (Henry) Barerock; or, the Island of Pearls ... 559
Nisbet's (Hume) The Savage Queen ... 580
Norway's (G.) How Martin Drake found his Father ... 559
"Parson's Green" ... 584
Pekering's (Edgar) Silas Verney ... 533
Pitman's (Mrs. E. R.) Lady Hymn Writers ... 583
Playne's (F. C.) An Old Maid's Child ... 584
Read's (F. E.) Mrs. Glen's Daughter ... 584
Reed's (Talbot Baines) Roger Ingleton, Minor ... 559
Saxby's (Mrs.) Her First Place ... 580
Scaufield's (Alfred T.) How to keep Healthy ... 584
Sequin's (L. G.) Heroisms in Humble Life ... 478
Senior's (Rev. Walter) The Precious Things of Home ... 584
Sharplin's (Eleanor) For Larkie's Sake ... 580
Shipton's (Helen) Two Friends and a Riddle ... 533
Spear's (John W.) Rudolph of Rosenfeldt ... 559
Stables's (Dr. Gordon) Captain Japp ... 580
"The Cruise of the Crystal Boat" ... 580
Swan's (Annie S.) Climbing the Hill, and other Stories ... 580
"Talks to Girls by One of Themselves" ... 584
Thompson's (Louisa) Gladys Austruther ... 534
Thorn's (Imay) Bab ... 584
Verne's (Jules) Cesar Cascabel ... 533
Walton's (Mrs. O. F.) The King's Cup-Bearer ... 559
White's (Hester) Fleming of Briarwood ... 584
Wood's (Frances Harriet) Ten Minutes Tales for every Sunday ... 584
Yoxall's (J. H.) The Lonely Pyramid ... 580

ORIGINAL VERSE.

Abroad, From ... 95
Art, The Antiquity of ... 216
Autumn's Tale ... 359
Change and Rest ... 586
Clodd, Edward, To ... 311
Cor Cordium ... 55
Flag of Distress, The ... 35
Flight from Heaven, A ... 455
Früh-Herbst—Nebel ... 237
Harvest Thoughts ... 335
Horsae, Book I. Ode 9 (translation) ... 407
Indian Summer, The ... 431
Little, Miss L. M., To ... 75
London Nights ... 13
Love-Misaise, A ... 538
"Mary and Marfa" ... 284
Müller, Wilhelm: a Memory ... 262
Nanda Suriya (the Burmese Prince), Lines written by ... 504
Nature's Soliloquy ... 155
Northern Sailor, A ... 174
Prelude to a new Edition of Poems ... 480
Rondel ... 562
Sea, The Language of the ... 383
Shaikh Mualihud-din Sa'di ... 134
Tennyson, Lord, To ... 115
Weal and Woe ... 199

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Cambridge, Honorary Degrees at ... 156
Civil List Pensions ... 75
Dante Discovery, A supposed ... 14
English Dictionary, The New ... 134, 156, 175, 312, 480, 285
Folk-Lore Congress, International In Memoriam: Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte ... 455
London Teaching University, The Charter for a ... 5
Shelley's Centenary ... 407
University Journals ... 13, 34, 55, 76, 94, 114, 154, 284, 311, 335, 359, 3-2, 406, 430, 455, 479, 543, 536, 502, 585
Vatican Library, Extension of the ... 95

CORRESPONDENCE.

Allyn and Shakspeare: a Warning ... 312
Anandibab ... 267
"Ape," The Egyptian ... 242
"Balade of Our Lady, A" ... 286, 504
Ballade addressed by Eustache Deschamps to Geoffrey Chaucer ... 432, 504
Browning, An Anecdote about ... 97
Burton's (Sir R. F.) Works ... 538
"Calmertown," The Old-English ... 385
Celtic, The Study of, in Scotland ... 219
Caesaresco, Countess Evelyn Martinengo "Charles I., New Light on the Execution of" ... 241, 504, 538
Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, The Arrangement of ... 96
Chaucer's "Balade" in the Legend of Good Women ... 504
Chaucer's "Book cleped Valerie," The Author of ... 588
Chilnrun and other River-Names ... 219
"Content"—"Contents" ... 287, 433, 456
"Copperas," "Copper-Nose" ... 583
"Court of Love, The" ... 56
Cover, The Correspondence of ... 482
De Digulleville, Guillaume ... 338
"Dismal," The Etymology of ... 482, 505, 539, 589
Dixon's (R. W.) History of the Church of England ... 36
"Efenep," Old English ... 14, 178, 198
"Elk" and "Entertain," Anglo-Indian ... 77
"Faery Queen," Book I., Some Notes on the ... 199
"Fel, Felon," Old French ... 157
Frazer's (J. G.) The Golden Bough ... 433
Freeman's (Mr.) Sicily ... 15, 50, 76
Garnett's (Lucy M. J.) The Sovereigns of Europe and their Courts ... 38
Gollanz's Pearl ... 36, 76, 116
"Hatchment," The Etymology of ... 96
Hero(n)idas, Notes on ... 242, 285, 286, 313, 330, 300, 381, 403, 433, 538, 583, 287
John of Westphalia ... 31
John, Jona, Jousa, and Jona, Confusion of, in the Authorized and Revised Versions of the New Testament ... 457
Kyd's "Spanish Tragedy" ... 167, 197, 220
"Lady or the Salmon, The" ... 584, 590
Lermonoff, A Reminiscence of ... 197
Lermonoff's First Duel ... 457
Littledale Prize, The, at Trinity College, Dublin ... 220

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

"Loculi" ... 400
London Teaching University, The Charter for a ... 587
Marat, A Lost Book by ... 57
"Measure for Measure," Act I., Sc. 1 ... 338
"Men-Turannos" ... 482
Morris's (Dr.) Criticism of Gollanz's Pearl ... 36, 76, 116
Newman's Election to a Trinity Scholarship ... 564
Nuptial Number, The ... 157
Old English Chronicle, A Passage in the "Ondemot" ... 77
Papal Infallibility ... 338
Phut and Saba ... 117
"Pudha-Yawan" ... 76
Rames II., A War of, against Mitanni and Assyria ... 35
"Roumant of the Rose," The Three Fragments of the ... 137
Saxon Chronicle, Two Passages in the "Scapegoat, The" ... 34
Senjerli and Sama'la-Land ... 286
Sicilian History, Mr. Isaac Taylor on ... 596
Sultan, The "Monogamous" ... 38
"Tallyho!" "Houni" ... 197, 287, 409
Taylor, Mr. Isaac, on Sicilian History 66, 76 "Tenserie" ... 37, 77
Tiglath-Pileser III., and the Transjordanic Tribes ... 136
"To" expressing Motion ... 178
"Torphy" ... 198
White's (Blanco) Sonnet—"Night and Death" ... 219
Wordsworth and Shakspeare ... 118
"Yet," O. E. "Glet," The Etymology of 584

OBITUARY.

Abraham, Rev. John Hoskyns ... 335
Anderson, Sir Charles ... 336
Bulstier, Wolcott ... 537
Bulston, Archdeacon ... 536
Bonaparte, Prince Louis Lucien ... 407, 455
Cooke, Robert ... 336
Henderson, William ... 480
Kuenen, Abraham ... 586
Lafroy, Edward Crosscroft ... 284
Lowell, James Russell ... 155
Major, Richard Henry, F.S.A. ... 13
Mozley, Miss Anne ... 14
Myles, Rev. Percy W. ... 335
Rajendra Lala Mitra, LL.D., C.I.E. ... 115
Von Dinklage, Emmy ... 34
Widgery, William Henry ... 216
Williams, Edmund Sydney ... 196
"John" ... 335

NOTES.

Academy, 1000th number of the ... 12
Arnold's (Edward) Literary List ... 134
Bib, the episode of the ... 430
"Chiswick Press Editions" ... 479
Christian Knowledge Society's publications ... 154
Clarendon Press New English Dictionary ... 31
Constable's (Archibald) edition of Bernier's Travels ... 535
Dickens's familiar letters to Wilkie Collins ... 151
Funk and Wagnall's Standard Dictionary ... 131
Gray's Poetical Works, new edition of Greg's (W. R.) Enigmas of Life, New edition ... 74
Hakluyt Society's publications ... 74
Harrovians, a register of ... 134
India Office, publishers and literary agents to the ... 94
Marshall's (Prof. A.) Principles of Economics ... 54
Nicholson's (E. W. B.) "Bodleian Facsimile Series" ... 430
Palgrave's (F. T.) Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language ... 13
Palgrave's (R. H. Inglis) Dictionary of Political Economy ... 133
Phillipps's (Sir T.) autograph letters and historic documents ... 34
"Social Science Series" ... 479
Swedenborg Society, annual meeting of the ... 31
Thackeray's letters, another collection of Verney Family, the, during the Civil War ... 502
"Victoria Library for Gentlewomen" 154
Wills, early English ... 174

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES.

Table listing magazine contents with titles like 'Albemarle Review', 'Alt-russische Monatschrift', and page numbers.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

Continuation of magazine contents table with titles like 'English Illustrated Magazine', 'Expositor', and page numbers.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

Continuation of magazine contents table with titles like 'Literary Opinion', 'Little Folks' Magazine', and page numbers.

CONTENTS OF THE MAGAZINES—con.

Continuation of magazine contents table with titles like 'Quiver', 'Religious Review of Reviews', and page numbers.

SCIENCE.

REVIEWS.

Table listing reviews with titles like 'Bauer's (A.) Literarische und Historische Forschungen zu Aristoteles', 'Clarke's (Lient.-Col. H. Wilberforce) The Divan-i-Hafiz', and page numbers.

MINOR NOTICES—continued.

Table listing minor notices with titles like 'Hobson's (John A.) Problems of Poverty', 'Howell's (George) Trade Unionism', and page numbers.

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

Table listing correspondence with titles like 'Buddhism, Introduction of, into China', 'Bujjhaka' in the Dipavamsa', and page numbers.

PHILOLOGY NOTES—continued.

Table listing philology notes with titles like 'Ferrini's (C.) Aristotele, La Costituzione degli Ateniesi', 'Germans, Map of the distribution of in Europe', and page numbers.

OBITUARY.

Table listing obituary notices for Philip Herbert, Paul Hunfalvy, and Sir A. C. Ramsay.

SCIENCE NOTES.

Table listing science notes with titles like 'Geographical Congress, International', 'Geologists' Association, Excursion of the German Race', and page numbers.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

Table listing meetings of societies with titles like 'Anthropological Institute', 'Aristotelian Society', 'British School at Athens', and page numbers.

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Table listing original articles with titles like 'British Association Grants', 'International Congress of Experimental Psychology', and page numbers.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

Table listing philology notes with titles like 'Aborigines of the British Islands', 'National names of the', 'Batak of Sumatra, MS. found among the', and page numbers.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Table listing correspondence with titles like 'As va' "Water," Sanskrit', 'Babylonian Discoveries of the American Expedition to', and page numbers.

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Table listing contents of journals with titles like 'Archivio Glottologico Italiano', 'Asiatic Quarterly', 'Babylonian and Oriental Record', and page numbers.

FINE ART.

REVIEWS.

De Rouge's (Vie. Jacque) Geographie Ancienne de la Basse Egypte ...	412
Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities ...	340
Frith's (W. P.) John Leech ...	568
Lermoloeff's (Ivan) Die Galerien zu München und Dresden ...	243
Psirie's (W. M. Flinders) Illahun, Kahun, and Gurob ...	541
Redgrave's (F. M.) Richard Redgrave ...	97
Reinach's (Salomon) Chroniques d'Orient ...	436
Rogee's (John Lewis) A History of the "Old Water-Colour" Society ...	484
Triarte's (Charles) Autour des Borgia ...	179

MINOR NOTICES.

Day's (Lewis F.) The Application of Ornament ...	364
Dyer's (L.) Studies of the Gods in Greece ...	222
Evans's (John) Supplement to the Coins of the Ancient Britons ...	121
Ewart's (Henry C.) Toilers in Art ...	593
Gordon's (Mrs. J. E. H.) Decorative Electricity ...	503
Letters to Living Artists ...	364
Lectie's (W. J.) Reynolds and Children's Portraiture in England ...	593
Nisbet's (Hume) Lessons in Art ...	364
Pocock's (Prof. Reginald Stuart) Catalogue of Mohammedan Coins ...	121
Redgrave's (Gilbert R.) David Cox and Peter de Wint ...	502
Rice's (Lewis) Inscriptions at Sravana Belgola ...	223
Shepherd's (George H.) Short History of the British School of Painting ...	593
Sater's (J. H.) Engravings and their Value ...	593
Williamson's (George C.) Trade Tokens issued in the Seventeenth Century ...	120

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

Art Sale ...	20
Beni Hasan, The Tombs of ...	60
Book-Plates, The Revived Interest in ...	568
Chester, The Excavations at ...	361
Cruikshank's Etchings to Grimm's Tales ...	260
Cyprus, Excavations in ...	269
De Salicis Meryons, The ...	80
Edinburgh Heraldic Exhibition, The ...	50
Edinburgh Congress of the Royal Archaeological Institute ...	169
Egypt Exploration Fund ...	60, 79, 508
Egypt, Letters from ...	461, 509
Egyptological Jottings ...	594
Fettes Douglas Sale, The ...	593
Graeco-Roman Influence on the Civilisation of Ancient India ...	200
Grimm's Tales, Cruikshank's Etchings to ...	260
Hellenic Studies, Prof. Jebb on the Progress of ...	18
Honassieh (Hanes), Excavations at ...	79
Hittite Discoveries in Asia Minor ...	100
Jebb (Prof.) on the Progress of Hellenic Studies ...	20
Meryons, The, of M. de Salicis ...	80
National Portrait Gallery ...	140
New English Art Club ...	543
Numismatics, Indian ...	388
Ohnefalsch-Richter's (Mr.) Excavations in Cyprus ...	269
Pre-Raphaelite Loan Collection at Birmingham ...	316
Royal Scottish Academy, New Charter of the ...	436
Royal Scottish Society of Painters in Water-Colours ...	461
Royal Society of Painters in Water-Colours ...	507
Silchester, Excavations at ...	317

CORRESPONDENCE.

Amorites and Hebrews in Early Cuneiform Inscriptions ...	291, 341
Babylonian Standard Weight, The ...	585
Book-Plates ...	121
Chester Pigs of Lead, The ...	390, 412, 437
Falkland Palace ...	246

CORRESPONDENCE—continued.

Führer's (Dr.) Excavations at Mathura ...	437
Inscription, Roman, at West Park ...	181
Ionian Greek, Mention of an, in the Tablets of Tel el-Amarna ...	341
Luxor, The Temple at ...	40, 81, 101
Mathura, Excavations at ...	437
Sekhiti, The Story of the ...	341
Shalmaneser II., The Irqanat of ...	412
Sikels on the Egyptian Monuments ...	222
Stones, Inscribed, in the North ...	180, 301
Tombstone, Ancient, at Inishowen ...	412
Trojan Inscriptions ...	364

OBITUARY.

Bosboom, The Dutch water-colour painter ...	341
Douglas, Sir William Fettes, P.R.S.A. ...	81
Steele, Sir John, R.S.A. ...	270

NOTES.

Akindynos, Saint, Skull-bone of ...	437
Anuradhapura, Ruins of monuments and shrines at ...	161
Balzac, Monument to ...	101
Birmingham Museum and Art Gallery, Additional pictures for ...	245
Brighton, Mistake made by the Corporation of ...	509
British Archaeological Association, Congress of ...	40
British Association Meeting at Cardiff ...	161
Cachet, of a Roman oculist ...	21
Chanterey Bequest, The ...	20
Chester, Excavations at the old city walls of ...	223
Clercq Collection, Marble head from the Coins of Southern India ...	593
Daniell, E. T., Exhibition of the works of Dicksee, Mr. Frank ...	20
Fictile ivories, Prof. Westwood's collection of ...	594
Fleet Street, Ancient Houses in ...	161
Ford's (Mr. Onslow) Statue of Lord Strathnairn ...	485

NOTES—continued.

Hewett's (Sir Prescott) Collection of Water-colour Drawings ...	181, 594
Horne's (Mr. Percy) Catalogue of Engraved Portraits and Fancy Subjects Painted by Gainsborough and Romney ...	462
Lines's (W. H.) Pamphlet on the Ancient Camps on the Malvern Hills ...	122
Logsdail's (Mr.) Cabinet Pictures of the Riviera ...	462
Louvre, New Jewish Gallery at the ...	201
Marlowe, Christopher, Memorial to ...	101
Merritt, Henry, Life and Literary Remains of ...	341
Meryon, Collection of Etchings by ...	20
Monuments, Ancient, in India ...	594
Mosaics in the Dome of St. Paul's Cathedral ...	21
National Gallery of British Art, Proposed Site for ...	40
National Gallery of Ireland, Report for 1889 ...	101
Nobility and Gentry, Old Alphabetical Account of ...	182
Paton's (Sir Noel) Picture of the "Vision of the Valley of Dry Bones" ...	413
Photographic Portraits, British Museum of ...	121
Prix de Rome ...	101
Reid, Mr. George, P.R.S.A. ...	140
Reynolds, Sir Joshua, The Paintings of 509 Salon du Champ-de-Mars, The ...	101
Saville's (Lord) Collection of Antiquities from the Temple of Diana at Nemi ...	61
Stapleton's (Mr. A.) Pamphlet on The Crosses of Nottinghamshire ...	141
"Turner House, The," at Penarth ...	161
Twyford, Roman Remains found at ...	161
Wallis, Mr. George, F.S.A. ...	317

CONTENTS OF THE JOURNALS.

Archaeologisch-Epigraphische Mittheilungen aus Oesterreich-Ungarn ...	222
Art Journal ...	341, 509
Art-Treasures of Italy ...	141
Building World ...	201
Ex Libris Journal ...	485
Indian Magazine and Review ...	195

THE STAGE AND MUSIC.

THE STAGE.

REVIEWS.

Adams's (W. Davenport) A Book of Burlesque ...	62
and Player ...	438
Edwards's (Raymond) Acting and the Art of Speech at the Paris Conservatoire ...	368

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

"American, The," at the Comic Opera ...	291
"Escabands and Wives," at the Comedy ...	61
"Lord Annerley," at the St. James's ...	437
"Melodrama in High Places ...	437
"Natch Girl, The," at the Savoy ...	41
"Painting of the Shrew," in French ...	510
"Chinese Raquin," at the Royalty ...	365

OBITUARY.

Vitu, Auguste ...	141
-------------------	-----

NOTES.

"David Garrick" at the Criterion ...	82
"Gloriana," at the Globe ...	138
"Godpapa," at the Comedy ...	594
"Mrs. Annesley," at the Criterion ...	41
"Planter, The," at the Prince of Wales's ...	413
"School," at the Garrick ...	563

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Armstrong's (E. J. and G. F.) Songs ...	142
Bach's (A. B.) Loswo-Album ...	141
Beale's (Wilbert) The Light of Other Days ...	162
Berger's (Francesco) The Better Land ...	223
Brooke's (A. W.) The Water Wheel ...	122
Crowest's (Frederick J.) Cherubini ...	162
De Orellana's (J. A.) Melodic Studies ...	162
De Windt's (H.) Adieu ...	122
Edwards's (Charles) This is the Day ...	142
Ehrenfechter's (C. A.) Technical Study in the Art of Pianoforte Playing ...	292
Farrell's (Richard) Water-Noster ...	142
Forrester's (J. Cliffe) Shelley-Album ...	162
Forsyth's (R. E. B.) Sonata in C Minor ...	223
Fowles's (Godwin) The Golden Harps ...	142
Greig's (John) The Tear of Repentance ...	142

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS—continued.

Heine's Wenn zwei von einander ...	122
Hipkins's (A. J.) Cantor Lectures on Musical Instruments ...	271
Holmes-Dallimore's (A.) The Chorister's Dream ...	142
Hughes's (Mrs. Watts) Voice Figures ...	162
Jordan's (C. Warwick) Come unto Me, ye weary ...	142
Kingsmill's (Leigh) The Beloved of the Lord ...	142
Liebreich's (Mrs.) Twelve Songs for Children ...	162
Love's (James) Scottish Church Music ...	162
Mallard's (F. Clariasse) Sehnsucht, Hoffnung ...	122
Matthews's (J.) The Mother to her Child ...	122
A Legend of the Woods ...	122
Sonata in C Minor ...	223
Moffat's (Alfred) Pastoral Album ...	223
Munoker's (Franz) Richard Wagner ...	271

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS—continued.

	PAGE
Organist's Quarterly Journal	192
Parson's (A. R.) Parsifal, The Finding of Christ through Art	163
Pictorial Tutor for the Pianoforte	123
Froust's (Ebenezer) Additional Exercises to "Harmony"	133
Parcell's (H.) Duke of Gloucester's Birthday Ode	223
Radoux's (F. T.) Romance sans Paroles	223
Sharpe's (Herbert F.) Ruines d'un Chateau	122
Smolian's (Arthur) The Themes of Tannhäuser	271
St. Ange's (Eugene) Classical Gleanings	142
Statham's (H. Heathcote) My Thoughts on Music and Musicians	594
Stella's (Alfred) A Lost Love	223
Talbot's (Howard) The Alexandra Gymnasium Music	163

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS—continued.

	PAGE
Tennyson's (Lord) Break, Break, Break	122
Ward's (Theo.) Lullaby	142
Wood's (Henry J.) Six Songs with Pianoforte Accompaniment	142
Miller	143

ORIGINAL ARTICLES.

"Aida" at Covent Garden	61
Autumn Opera Season, The	366, 391, 413
"Barber of Bagdad," at the Savoy Theatre	544
Birmingham Musical Festival	317, 342
Mascagni's "Cavalleria Rusticana"	201
Paris Musical and Dramatic Notes	370

OBITUARY.

	PAGE
Barrett, W. A.	366
Faccio, Franco	109
Litolf, Henri	141
Praeger, Ferdinand	202

CONCERTS, &c.

Philharmonic	21
Richter	31, 42, 63, 82
Paderewski's	63, 891
African Choir	83

CONCERTS—continued.

Royal Academy of Music
Sarasate's	366
Crystal Palace	391, 414, 436
Royal Choral Society
Monday Popular	414, 436
Messrs. Harrison's
Henschel's
Saturday Popular	462
Sir C. Hallé's
Westminster Orchestral Society
Bach Choir
Covent Garden, Italian Opera at 61, 1
Handel Festival, The
"Lohengrin" at Covent Garden & Mozart's Death, Celebration of, London
"Traviata" at Covent Garden	127
Walker's (Mr. James) gift to Aberdeen public library	140

WARD & DOWNEY'S
NEW BOOKS.

THE INSANITY of GENIUS, and the GENERAL INEQUALITY of HUMAN FACULTY PHYSIOLOGICALLY CONSIDERED. By F. J. NISBET, Author of "Marriage and Heredity." 1 vol. demy 8vo, 14s.

IN A LETTER ABOUT THIS BOOK PROFESSOR HUXLEY WRITES:—

"Genius to my mind means innate capacity of any kind above the average mental level. From a biological point of view, I should say that a genius among men stands in the same position as a 'sport' among animals and plants, and is a product of the variability which is the postulate of selection both natural and artificial. On the general ground that a strong and therefore markedly abnormal variety is not likely to be so well in harmony with existing conditions as the normal standard (which has been brought to what it is largely by the operation of those conditions), I should say that a large proportion of 'genius sports' are likely to come to grief physically any socially, and that the intensity of feeling which is one of the conditions of what is called genius, is especially liable to run into the 'fixed ideas' which are at the bottom of so much insanity."

TWO YEARS AMONGST the SAVAGES of NEW GUINEA. With an Introductory Chapter on North Queensland. By W. D. PITCAIRN, F.R.G.S. 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s. [Now ready.]

NOTES on MEN, WOMEN, and BOOKS. By Lady WILDE. 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s. [Now ready.]

ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES. By A. W. RUCKLAND, Member of the Anthropological Institute. 1 vol. crown 8vo, 6s.

"Has certainly brought together an immense wealth of facts, and besides giving us his own criticisms, he has stated the theories held by our leading authorities in paleontology, so that his book is a storehouse of information and speculation on the obscure beginnings of our race." Daily Telegraph.

UP and DOWN: Sketches of Travel in Europe. By GILBERT S. MACQUOID. With 29 Illustrations by Thomas R. Macquoid, R.I. A New Edition, 1 vol. demy 8vo, 6s.

"The record of travel is brightly written and rendered admirably attractive by Mr. T. R. Macquoid's drawings." Saturday Review.

"It is a pleasant book to read, and one that should be consulted by men whose minds are not made up as to their best mode for a holiday on the Continent."—Scotsman.

NEW NOVELS.

HUMBLING HIS PRIDE. By C. T. JAMES, Author of "The New Faith," "The Blindness of Memory Earle." 3 vols, 31s, 6d.

"Altogether the book is likely to find many interested readers."—Gentlewoman.

QUITA. By Cecil Dunstan, Author of "The County." 2 vols., 21s.

"The De Moleyns are excellent conventional Belgravians, and Saville the thick-skinned, with his 'little story about the boy you know,' is a comic wooer of the first class of the day."—Athenaeum.

KILMALLIE. By Henry Johnston, Author of "Chronicles of Glenbuckie." 2 vols, crown 8vo, 12s.

"These little volumes are real literature, and deserve to be read."—Westminster Review.

OLD CHATEAU. By K. S. MACQUOID. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"A carefully drawn picture of French country life." Gentlewoman.

FRANCO FIGGINS. By Mrs. Alfred Russel Wallace (Mary Hoppus), crown 8vo, 6s.

"A brightly written volume of more than average interest."—Literary World.

ROMANTIC RIGMAROLE of a TIME out of Town. By CHAS. T. JAMES. Price 2s, 6d.

"The story is good enough and touching enough to have been written by Dickens."—Academy.

WARD & DOWNEY, 12, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN, LONDON, W.C.

MESSRS. LONGMANS & CO.'S LIST.

THE ANNUAL REGISTER: a Review of Public Events at Home and Abroad for the Year 1890. Svo, 18s.

"A large and handsome volume, splendidly printed in large, clear-cut type, and on paper of the best kind, the 'Annual Register' for 1890 appears to us to contain a very symmetrical and clear account of the events of the year, home and foreign. Historians yet to come will find their course well marked out for them in this volume."—Daily News.

ADVENT in ST. PAUL'S. Sermons bearing chiefly on the Two Comings of Our Lord. By HENRY PARRY LIDDON, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., late Canon Residentiary and Chancellor of St. Paul's. New Edition. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. each.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME: its Foundation and Duties. By W. J. KNOX LITTLE, M.A., Canon Residentiary of Worcester and Vicar of Hoar Cross, Staffordshire. Crown 8vo, 6s. 6d.

ALRESFORD ESSAYS for the TIMES. By Rev. W. O. Newnham, M.A., late Rector of Alresford. CONTENTS:—Bible Story of Creation—Bible Story of Eden—Bible Story of the Deluge—After Death—Miracles: a Conversation—Eternal Punishment—The Resurrection of the Body. 8cap. 8vo, 6s.

AN INTRODUCTION to CUDWORTH'S TREATISE concerning ETHERNAL and IMMUTABLE MORALITY. With Life of Cudworth, and a few Critical Notes. By W. R. SCOTT, First Senior Moderator in "Logics and Ethics," Trinity College, Dublin. Crown 8vo, 3s.

ESSAYS, REVIEWS, and ADDRESSES. By James Martineau, LL.D., D.D., D.C.L., Author of "The Seat of Authority in Religion," &c. 4 vols., crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each. [Vols. I.-III. now ready.]

- I. PERSONAL: POLITICAL.
- II. ECCLESIASTICAL: HISTORICAL.
- III. THEOLOGICAL: PHILOSOPHICAL.
- IV. ACADEMICAL: RELIGIOUS.

THOMAS SOPWITH, M.A., C.E., F.R.S. With Excerpts from his Diary of Forty-seven Years. By BENJAMIN WARD RICHARDSON, M.D., LL.D., F.R.S. With Portrait. Crown 8vo, 6s. [In a few days.]

OLD-FASHIONED ROSES: Poem. By James Whitcomb Riley. Second Edition. 12mo, 5s. [In a few days.]

A TEXT-BOOK of ENGLISH HISTORY. For Use in Colleges and Schools. By OSMUND AIRY, M.A., one of H.M. Inspectors of Schools. With 16 Maps. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d.

A GUIDE for PIANOFORTE STUDENTS. By F. Davenport, Professor of Harmony and Composition at the Royal Academy of Music, and J. PERCY BAKER, Associate of the Royal Academy of Music. Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 1s.

MISS DEVEREUX, SPINSTER: a Study of Development. A Novel. By AGNES GILBERNE, Author of "Sun, Moon, and Stars," "Nigel Browning," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, 17s. "This book is described as 'A Study of Development,' and we may say that the most marked development in the story is that of the general interest it arouses, and which increases right to the end."—Academy.

HISTORIC TOWNS. (New Volume.)

Edited by E. A. FREEMAN, D.C.L., and the Rev. WILLIAM HUNT, M.A.

BOSTON (U.S.). By Henry Cabot Lodge, Author of "A Short History of the English Colonies in America." With 2 Maps, Boston, Old and New. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

HISTORICAL TALES. By A. D. Crake, B.A., Author of "History of the Church under the Roman Empire," &c., &c. New and Cheaper Edition. 5 vols., crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. each.

EDWY the FAIR; or, the First Chronicle of Æscendune. THE HOUSE of WALDERNE: a Tale of the Cloister and the Forest in the Days of the Barons' Wars.

ALFGAR the DANE; or, the Second Chronicle of Æscendune. BRIAN FITZ-COUNT: a Story of Wallingford Castle and Dorchester Abbey.

THE RIVAL HEIRS: being the Third and Last Chronicle of Æscendune.

THE SILVER LIBRARY. (New Volumes.)

	s.	d.		s.	d.
NEWMAN'S (Cardinal) CERTAIN DIFFICULTIES FELT by ANGLICANS in CATHOLIC TEACHING CONSIDERED. 2 vols. Vol. I. Twelve Lectures. Vol. II. Letters to Dr. Pusey concerning the Blessed Virgin and to the Duke of Norfolk in Defence of the Pope and Council. Crown 8vo, each	3	6	SELECTION, ADAPTED to the SEASONS of the ECCLESIASTICAL YEAR, from the "Parochial and Plain Sermons" of JOHN HENRY NEWMAN, B.D. (Cardinal Newman). Edited by the Rev. W. J. COPELAND, B.D., late Rector of Farnham, Essex. Crown 8vo	3	6
NEWMAN'S (Cardinal) THE IDEA of a UNIVERSITY DEFINED and ILLUSTRATED. Crown 8vo	3	6	FRUDES (J.A.) THE TWO CHIEFS of DUNBOY: an Irish Romance of the Last Century. Crown 8vo	3	6
NEWMAN'S (Cardinal) LOSS and GAIN: the Story of a Convent. Crown 8vo	3	6	JEFFERIES' (RICHARD) the STORY of MY HEART: My Autobiography. With Portrait and new Preface by C. J. LONGMAN. Crown 8vo	3	6

Now ready, price Sixpence.

LONGMAN'S MAGAZINE.—No. CV. July.

- THE MISCHIEF of MONICA. By L. B. WALFORD. CHAPS. XXV.-XXVII.
- ON AUTOGRAPHS. III. By Miss I. A. TAYLOR.
- A KISS. By WALTER HERBERT POLLOCK.
- THE BLUE ROSE. By E. NESBIT.
- A NEW PORT for MEXICO. By HORACE HUTCHINSON.
- COLLECTING from NATURE. By P. ANDERSON GRAHAM.
- THE THREE FATES. By F. MARION CRAWFORD. CHAPS. VII.-IX.
- AT THE SIGN of the SHIP. By ANDREW LANG.

LONDON: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE.

Contents for JULY, 1891.

1. MR. CHAINE'S SONS. Chaps. XXV.-XXVIII.
2. REMINISCENCES OF SIR RICHARD BURTON.
3. THE "AVAL" OF PUBLISHERS.
4. R.S.V.P.
5. KANE, a SOLDIER SERVANT.
6. WAYFARING by the UPPER DORDOGNE.
7. NIGHTINGALES.
8. HER NEW DRESSMAKER.
9. TO LESBIA.
10. IFTAR in a HAREM.
11. WHAT IS the BRIGHT MOVE?
12. VARIETY.
13. A PIECE OF BREAD.
14. LOVE or MONEY. (Chaps. XXIV.-XXVI.)

* * Cases for binding the volumes of "TEMPLE BAR" can be obtained of all Booksellers, price One Shilling each.

FIVE NEW NOVELS.

JUST READY.

SO NEAR AKIN.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE DUKE'S MARRIAGE."

The ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN

By JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS.

8 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION OF

AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.

Author of "The Sin of Joost Avelingh."

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Maartens writes vigorously in 'An Old Maid's Love,' and with lifelike fidelity to nature. The novel is strong both in humour and pathos."—Academy.

"To read 'An Old Maid's Love' is a real pleasure, and one which does not evaporate when the last page has been turned."—Graphic.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALASNAM'S LADY."

THE HALLETTS:

A Country Town Chronicle.

By LESLIE KEITH,

Author of "A Hurricane in Petticoats," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A country town chronicle as well written as 'The Halletts' has in itself many of the elements of a successful novel. When, added to these, the author has the simple yet graphic manner of Leslie Keith, it has a very real attraction for the lovers of wholesome fiction. The author has already shown talent for delineation of character, and in her present work Andrew Hallett, his meek wife, and Lavy Moss are clever as well as vigorous sketches."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GIRALDI."

THE UNDERGRADUATE.

By ROSS GEORGE DERING.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

At all Booksellers and Railway Bookstalls.

THOSE WESTERTON GIRLS.

By FRANCES WILSON. Author of "The House on the Marshes," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

Just ready, price 6s., the New and Popular Edition, by MARIÉ CORELLI'S

WORMWOOD.

"No one has treated the subject in more powerful style and with greater wealth of language. So long as Marie Corelli writes her tales she employs her great talents upon matters of this kind, and our heartiest wishes for her success."—Spectator.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street.

Cassell & Company's Announcements.

WORKS ILLUSTRATED BY WALTER CRANE.

FLORA'S FEAST: a Masque of Flowers. With Forty Pages of Pictures in Colours. Third Edition. Price 6s.

"This is a charming bit of fancy, of which we feel quite unable to give any adequate description in words."—Spectator.

LEGENDS for LIONEL. With Coloured Pictures. Price 6s.

WORKS ILLUSTRATED BY FRANK DICKSEE, R.A.

OTHELLO (Cassell's International Shakspeare), with a series of Photogravures from Original Drawings. 70s.

ROMEO and JULIET (Cassell's International Shakspeare), published at 70s., and advanced to £7 10s. Now out of print and scarce.

EVANGELINE, Edition de luxe, with a series of magnificent Photogravures, 70s.

THE ROYAL SHAKSPERE contains a series of Steel Plates from Mr. Dicksee's designs. Three vols., 15s. each.

NEW VOLUMES.

Just published, demy 8vo, price 10s. 6d.

RICHARD REDGRAVE, C.B.,

R.A. Memoir compiled from his Diary. By F. M. REDGRAVE. With Portrait and Three Illustrations.

"It would be difficult to meet anywhere with so many good stories and interesting reminiscences of celebrities as are comprised in the 400 pages of this volume. Across the scene are constantly fitting such men as Constable, Turner, Landseer, Lord Palmerston, Lord Granville, Lord Salisbury, Mr. Gladstone, Robert Lowe, Mulready, C. R. Leslie, Dickens, Disraeli, the Duke of Wellington, and a host of others as celebrated."—Daily Telegraph.

Third Edition, now ready, price 1s.; post free, 1s. 2d.

FOUR YEARS IN PARLIAMENT WITH HARD LABOUR.

By C. W. RADCLIFFE COOK, M.P.

What Mr. Gladstone says:—

"My only complaint is, that once opened it is difficult to close the volume. It is a happy gift to tread contested ground in a spirit which raises no ill blood; and written, as of course it is, from your point of view, I recognise in it an enviable union of fancy, humour, and good sense."

Vol. VII. now ready, price 5s.

ENGLISH WRITERS. By Prof.

HENRY MORLEY, LL.D. Vol. VII. contains FROM CAXTON TO COVERDALE.

Just published, price 5s.

NOUGHTS and CROSSES;

Stories, Studies, and Sketches. By Q. Author of "Dead Man's Rock," "The Astonishing History of Troy Town," "The Splendid Spur," &c.

Cheap Edition, 7s. 6d.

THE JOURNAL of MARIE

BASHKIRTSEFF. Translated from the French, with an Introduction, MATHILDE BLIND. With Two Portraits and an Autograph Letter.

MESSRS. SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON and COMPANY beg to announce that Mr. GEORGE RUSSELL'S Biography of the Right Hon. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P., will be published on Monday next, the 6th inst., crown 8vo, with Portrait, 3s. 6d.

The book is written from the standpoint of intimate personal acquaintance, as well as official experience, and its interest is enhanced by the fact that the author has been able to enlist the sympathy and to a certain degree the assistance of some of Mr. Gladstone's contemporaries and friends.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

AUTHORISED LIBRARY EDITION

CÆSAR'S COLUMN: a Tale of the Twentieth Century. By IGNATIUS DONNELLY, Author of "Ragnarok," "Atlantis," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By Avery MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s. "An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

A HIDDEN FOE: a Story of Love and Mystery. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "The Curse of Carne's Hold," "The Plague Ship," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"It may be read once with pleasure and interest, and even among fairly good novels, there is hardly one in twenty of which more than this can be truthfully said."—Spectator.

THE GENTLEMAN DIGGER: a Study of Society at Johannesburg. By ANNA, COMTESSE DE BREMONT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"This is a very sensational, graphic, and too true account of life in the Golden City. It is really a remarkable work."—Life.

WEDLOCK and its SKELETON KEY. By KATE HOPE HUNTLY. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The book contains carefully drawn characters, and is well managed as regards plot and action."—Academy.

WEDNESDAY'S CHILD. By Miriam ALAN. Crown 8vo, cloth, 10s. 6d.

THE UPPER TEN: a Tale of the very best Society. By SEBASTIAN EVANS and FRANK EVANS. Crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s.

NEW ADDITIONS TO LOW'S 6s. STANDARD NOVELS.

STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON! By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "A Princess of Thule," "A Daughter of Heth," "In Far Lochaber," &c. New Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

THE CONSPIRATOR: a Romance of Real Life. By Count PAUL. Edited by FRANK HARKUT. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "A very lively and even exciting romance."—Spectator.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fleet Lane.

SATURDAY, JULY 4, 1891.

No. 1000, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Archibald Campbell Tait, Archbishop of Canterbury. By T. R. Davidson and W. Benham. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

By common consent Archibald Campbell Tait was the model archbishop of the nineteenth century, as Tillotson was of the end of the seventeenth. Curiously enough for there was not much in common between them, Tillotson was the only one of his predecessors whom Tait admired. The two are the first of Laud's successors in whom even admirers could recognise any of the elements of greatness; for no one at this time of day will give Archbishop Wake credit for greatness on the strength of his interest in Christian antiquity and his painstaking endeavours to promote a Gallican schism. Of the two Tillotson was probably the more original, Tait the more powerful. From the first that great body of clergy whose chief anxiety is not to be party men trusted and revered him; the so-called Evangelicals were attracted by one whose piety, so far as it was distinctive, was of their own colour, though their exclusiveness repelled him. The small and distinguished group who, thirty years ago, still hoped to make the historic Church of England the home of undogmatic Christianity profited more than once by his courage; if they counted too much upon his sympathies, they never withdrew their stern. Even the ritualists were rather loud and hearty in their denunciations; those of them who know him valued his kindness from the first, and the rest forgave him at last for his sincere anxiety on his death-bed to keep Mr. Mackonochie out of prison. From the time of his consecration he impressed the public as a strong man and a wise man, and the impression only deepened till the end.

Perhaps the impression was rather inaccurate. Everybody knew why Wilberforce Thirlwall was a great bishop. One was a great orator, both on the platform and in the pulpit; he guided and inspired a great deal of "Church work" of an unusually satisfactory kind. The other had been a great scholar, if he was not exactly a great theologian; he could speak with an air of judicial mastery of all the theological and ecclesiastical questions of the day. It may be doubted whether Tait might upon any question, or guided or inspired any work, though he strengthened the hands of all workers impartially, and commanded the confidence of almost all, and the reverence of many. Hence it is all that before the impression has had time to fade, we should be supplied with an adequate and authentic record of what manner of man he was. In this his biographers have been successful. It is true that the two portly volumes are not easy reading. There is a distracting number of cross references, forward as well as backward. Often the story is incomplete, unless we will look out the references to the Chronicle of Convocation, a work to be found in very few private libraries. In more places than one there are deliberate blanks in the record. Tait's action was nowhere more important than in the private meetings of the bishops, one of which, it is commonly said, decided that Convocation, after receiving "letters of business" to deal with the "Ornaments Rubric," should solemnly leave it alone. Tait's diary would have been a valuable though ex parte record of what passed there and at the Lambeth Conference, and a check upon the equally ex parte reminiscences of Gray and Wilberforce. There is much to be said for their biographers: there is nothing covered that shall not be revealed; but, as Archbishop Tait's biographers think their disclosures indiscreet, it is strange that they should quote more than one passage from Tait's diaries disparaging to Bishop Selwyn, the rather that the official memorial of him was a model of discretion. Tait himself, too, was almost as reticent as his biographers. Letters are generally the most interesting part of a life. Tait, we are told, wrote no unofficial letters worth quoting except letters of condolence; it is interesting to know that he wrote so many of these, but the few specimens given are quite enough. Again, there is little or nothing of the domestic life; we are referred to Memorials of Catherine and Crauford Tait.

Still, after all allowances, any one who will read the bulky volumes through will learn to know the man. He came of a long line of bonnet lairds from Aberdeenshire, who had only just moved into the Lowlands and conformed to Presbyterianism. His grandfather did much to build up the fortunes of the family, but his father pulled them down through excessive ardour for agricultural improvements. As a child he seemed likely to be a cripple like his brother, but they were cured by a family of farriers near Rochdale; the treatment was severe, and included sleeping in tin boots. From nine to twelve he went to the High School at Edinburgh; thence to the Edinburgh Academy and Glasgow University, whence a Snell exhibition carried him to Balliol. Dr. Jenkins did not love Snell exhibitors; but he was propitiated when Tait told him at matriculation that it was part of his object in coming to Oxford to profit by the society of the college, where his curls brought on him the nickname of "Belvedere." He intended from the first to be a clergyman, and from the first his friends talked of him half in jest as a future archbishop. A Nonconformist minister and local poet, who saw him and Roundell Palmer at Seaton in 1833, predicted, on Lavator's principles, that one would be Archbishop and one Lord Chancellor. Tait was elected scholar and fellow of Balliol in due course. He distinguished himself at the Union, and was in the thick of the fray of the Unionachia, where he was called to order and fined by the future Lord Sherbrooke—the first of many indications that his temper was never quite as cool as his judgment. He fell under the influence of Oakeley before Oakeley had fallen under the influence of Newman; and the friendship lasted through life, though in the acuter crisis of the "Oxford Movement" divergence of opinion was a restraint upon intercourse: even then Oakeley took comfort in the thought that, if they could not meet without disputing, they were better off than when they used to encourage one another in their faults. His friendship with W. G. Ward was never quite so close, but its cordiality was never strained for an instant by the heated controversy over Tract XC. Tait was the best lecturer on Aristotle of his day, and the only really eminent tutor unaffected by the "Movement." He had to be dissuaded from starting a series of opposition tracts. When the storm so adroitly fanned by Golithly broke round Tract XC., he had composed a letter to the author which served as a quarry for the historic letter of the Four Tutors. Ward, always sanguine and tolerant, felt sure that its Christian and temperate tone could only do good.

Tait was soon to leave Oxford. A. P. Stanley, who was enough his junior to be his pupil, urged him to stand for the vacancy caused by Arnold's death at Rugby, though he ceased to support him when it appeared the Rugby masters did not desire him. However, he was appointed. Stanley preached the sermon at his installation, and he ruled successfully. The tone of the school kept up, the numbers went on growing: something was done to relieve the preceptors of their excessive powers, and their still more excessive sense of responsibility; an incipient breach with the whole body of masters was healed without compromising the authority of their chief. Yet, after all, it was generally felt that he was not a born headmaster; he inspired no enthusiasm in pupils or colleagues. The work was too much for him; his diaries are full of self-reproach for drowsiness, especially at his prayers. The school made up its mind to rebel against the sixth, when he lay, as all thought, upon his deathbed. Suddenly it was remembered that a rebellion at such a time would be cruel to the headmaster and his wife. When he recovered and returned to work, he found that he inspired some measure of affection as well as of esteem. His strength returned so slowly that he was not unwilling to accept the deanery of Carlisle.

He had always been eager for pastoral work; he held, when college tutor, just like Newman, that his office was a cure of souls. Not content with this, he had served the forlorn hamlet of Baldon, and made provision in Balliol for the spiritual needs of college servants—who, after all, are not shut out from parish churches. At Carlisle the old theory of a cathedral as a place where the canons and their friends hear anthems every day was peculiarly plausible, for the remains of the old cathedral are no more than a vestibule to the glorious choir. But Tait took a different view. He seems to have held that the bishop was something like the non-resident rector of his cathedral city, and the dean something like the senior curate in charge. Then the management of cathedral property at Carlisle and elsewhere needed reforming, which gave further occasion for conflict with the chapter. He had interests, too, outside Carlisle. He did not cease at once to be headmaster of Rugby, and wrote hotly to the Guardian to defend the school from being a hotbed of rationalism, appealing to a volume of prayers drawn up by Cotton. He took an active part in the first University Commission, and like many others, then and since, was chiefly interested in abortive schemes for galvanising the professoriate.

He was disappointed, rather unreasonably, that when the see of Carlisle became vacant he was not made bishop: a dean, if he is to be promoted at all, should always be promoted in another diocese. Tait had not to wait long for higher promotion. His tragic bereavement attracted the sympathy of every one, from the Queen downwards; his sister, Lady Lake, enjoyed the confidence of Lord Shaftesbury. There was, no doubt, a desire to give Blomfield a liberal successor, and Tait was appointed. He knew that he was sure to accept, and prayed that he might not act rashly. His biographers go a little out of their way to criticise Blomfield. It seems there was some danger that in his hands the Church of England would turn into a sect, the oldest, the richest, the best managed of all. Certainly Blomfield was never tempted to risk the historic endowments of the clergy, or the ornamental privileges which attest that they once played a part in secular history such as their successors cannot. On the other hand, he probably thought that the Church should be organised and worked upon the whole for Church people, that Nonconformists and unbelievers were to be allowed to go their way without meddling with what did not concern them, till, being brought to a better mind, they should be willing to conform and believe. There is, of course, a strong and general feeling that his is not enough: that a national Church belongs to the nation, in the sense that citizens who are not church-goers have a right to regulate the creed and the worship of those who are. Such a claim is not easier to understand for being clearly expressed. Tait was remarkable among English prelates for his response to this claim; he met it with a sympathy, earnest, instinctive, and, so far as the claim is intelligible, intelligent. It was also quite disinterested. Others have valued the royal supremacy because it protected the liberty of clerical speculation. Tait loved it for his own sake. He was indifferent to speculation, and this, too, commended him to the city. He was quite in earnest in pressing for the simplification of clerical subscriptions, but he took no interest in the emancipation of theology. He desired and relied upon the substantial orthodoxy of the clergy, and thought it safer without too exact tests, which generate scruples. He thought he had satisfied himself that the points which learned conservatives still defend were indisputable; he found them enough for his own religious life, and he wished all men to rest with him in fundamental truth without perplexing one another with controversial details. His view of the results of investigation was that the clergy should prove their loyalty to truth by admitting theological facts, and their practical judgment by never reconsidering theological principles. He was certainly right in believing that the clergy would not rationalise because Lord Westbury had decided that they might do so with impunity.

Tait's whole treatment of Essays and Reviews was characteristic. Like most readers, he considered the Essay on the Education of the World unobjectionable in itself; he considered the Essay on the Interpretation of Scripture unobjectionable too (most readers found it, though studiously inoffensive, more alarming than anything in the volume). He adjured the writers to separate themselves from their colleagues, or at least to give positive proofs of the orthodoxy for which he gave them credit. When the public insisted on viewing the volume as a whole, he joined without an effort in an episcopal manifesto, in which the hierarchy declared their disapprobation of the opinions denounced by the clergy of a Dorset archdeaconry. He was quite unmoved by the complaints of Stanley and Temple, though the latter actually told him that his conduct had the effect, without the intention, of treachery; he was content to remind his correspondents how much more Oakeley and Ward had borne without a strain upon their friendship. Having done this much for orthodoxy, Tait resolutely refused to do more. He concurred in Lord Westbury's judgment; he resisted synodical censures with all his might: among other reasons, he wanted to get a wasteful controversy out of the way. His action in the Colenso controversy was even more important. Like most liberal theologians he very much underrated the historical significance of Colenso's criticism, but he was sufficiently shocked to press the critic to retire from his bishopric. When the pressure proved futile, he insisted on treating its object as technically innocent till he should be convicted in the Queen's courts ecclesiastical. His protection gave time for Colenso's candour, patience, and exasperating good temper to tell upon lay opinion. It was even more important in the long conflict between Bishop Gray and the Privy Council. Though it was too late for the orthodox to stop their ears and run upon Dr. Colenso with one consent, Bishop Gray could still hope for the support of a majority of the religious world, led at first by Bishop Wilberforce, whose constancy was not always equal to his enterprise. To Tait, even more than to Thirlwall and to Thompson, is due the credit or discredit of stultifying the majority in Convocation who detested Colenso, and the majority in the Lambeth Conference who sympathised with Gray. He overawed Archbishop Longley, who was easily overawed, still more easily perplexed, and always retained his gentle dignity. His studiously kind appeal in the Times to Gray—whom he neither liked nor admired—finally extinguished the projects of consecrating Colenso's successor in Great Britain, and enabled Colenso to hold his ground in Natal while he lived. Tait's motives, as usual, were mixed and all respectable. He cared almost as much for unimpeachable secular fair play as for the supremacy of the Crown; he knew that many colonial churchmen would rather be members of the Church of England, living in the colonies, than members of autocephalous Churches in communion with England; he gave quite as much weight to their wishes as to his own sympathy with the shadowy claims of Canterbury to a world-wide jurisdiction.

His unwilling but effective patronage of Colenso was his one unqualified success. At the first entry on his work in London he had to deal with the ritual difficulty in its most perplexing form at St. George's in the East, where a well-meaning clergyman, without any popular gifts, had undertaken to obey the ornaments rubric as then understood. Tait never could or would understand the inscrutable obligation of that document, which inspired a devotion as mysterious as Tait felt for the Royal supremacy. The ritualist theory of canonical obedience is clear enough: it is needless to obey a canon until it is enforced by a bishop, or a bishop unless he is enforcing a canon. Consequently, the observance of all rubrics is more or less optional, at first; but then the mystery comes in—the observance of one rubric, when once begun, is absolutely obligatory until Convocation shall concur with Parliament in altering the alleged law. It is true that, when Tait preached deference to episcopal authority or to judicial decisions, he had hardly anything to say but what Charles I. might have said to Hampden. No doubt he had the House of Commons on his side, and Charles I. had not; but this was quite irrelevant, and he never said it. Probably the riots at St. George's, which ended in the complete victory of the rioters, led both the public to overrate the unpopularity of ritual, which was really confined to a minority, then large and still respectable, who posed as "the laity" with good effect on press and platform. Their horror of something which few of them witnessed, was imputed because the laity as a body have no right for representative self-government; they expect the clergy to find out what they should and to give it them, and to save them the trouble of speaking or even knowing their own minds. This leaves the Church un-governed, so far as it is governed at all, by an ill-defined understanding between bishops and judges. There are no better legislators than judges when they set themselves to mould custom and opinion into law, nor are there any worse when they ostentatiously limit themselves to declaring a law that needs to be made. In ecclesiastical affairs judge-made law is subject to the further disadvantage of the gross ignorance of the judges, who, if they had not the bishops to help them in putting their judgments into shape, would, as Tait asseverated, have driven out all high churchmen by one judgment, all low churchmen by another, all liberals by a third. He successfully resisted all the attempts of Wilberforce and his friends in both Houses to remove ecclesiastical judges from the final court of appeal, probably for some more substantial reason than the peril to the Royal supremacy, upon which he dilated with his usual unctiousness. Very likely Dr. Pusey was right, and the bishops arranged the Purchas judgment. When it had been once delivered, Tait spent himself in well-meant endeavours to get it respected. He had many excuses. Dr. Pusey disliked and disapproved the vestments. Bishop Wilberforce thought that the toleration of the eastward position would be accepted as a compromise (and this was conceded by the Ridsdale judgment); he could not forget that the Westerton judgment had been accepted. Canon Furse was not alone in thinking that the decision of the final court of appeal would be final. Tait chose to assume that its decisions would be more acceptable when it had been remodelled. The existence of the question annoyed almost everybody. Tait, who was always clear-sighted and often short-sighted, decided to pass the Public Worship Act as remodelled by Lord Shaftesbury, because otherwise there would have been an explosion of Protestantism, even worse than in the time of the "Papal aggression." It might have been much worse, and yet insignificant enough. However, Tait had the courage to use all his influence in the Commons to save the episcopal veto; and the Act has not been exactly barren, though the number of churches where the Mackonochie and Ridsdale judgments are disobeyed goes on increasing. Since the ritualists have been forced to pose as defenders of law against prerogative, they have confined themselves upon the whole to what they understand to be lawful. Tait had nothing of the temper of a persecutor. Like Trajan, he refused to initiate prosecutions himself; even when a private prosecutor appeared, if a clergyman could be brought to show any sign of substantial deference to his bishop, he was anxious to soothe and protect him; otherwise he was grimly content to let the law take its course. In most things he was as kind as it is possible to be without intelligent sympathy. It was a frequent direction to his secretaries: "Tell him he is a most consummate ass; but be sure to do it very kindly." For this reason much was forgiven him. The public gave him full credit for his goodwill. They were grateful for his abortive labours to relieve them of the Athanasian Creed, which is not even an apt expression of the belief of those who successfully defended it as a part of a serious and not hopeless protest against the popular view that it does not matter what kindly, upright, clean-living people believe; though no doubt this protest would be weakened by the disuse of a time-honoured and weighty form of sound words. Upon the whole, Tait's career, both as Bishop and archbishop, counted as a success, just as the foundation of the Bishop of London's Fund counts as a great work. With many helpers, he raised a sum of nearly half a million in the course of ten years. The Fund is now a permanent institution; it still raises £23,000 a year:

every year at least fifty men in the diocese make as much single-handed. He had other successes. He made peace between Bishop Copleston and the Church Missionary Society; he not only got Parliament to recognise the bishop's veto on ritual prosecutions in practice, he also got Convocation to recognise the bishop's veto on ritual innovations in theory; he carried the majority of the bench with him in voting for the Burial Act of 1880. The Dissenters had persuaded themselves that they wished their own ministers to bury them in the churchyard; the Clergy had persuaded themselves that there would be a liberation meeting in every churchyard over every Dissenter's grave. Happily, the Dissenters hardly ever use the privilege they extorted, which does not exactly vindicate the foresight of Tait. He cared about the questions for which the influential laity cared; his first charge inspired many leading articles; it dealt with the same sort of topics in the same sort of spirit, which was thought a daring attempt to grapple with the realities of life. He always seemed to be dealing sensibly and manfully with questions which he would not understand and could not decide—in the eyes of a public who wished they were not there to decide. His intellectual interests, too, were those of sensible, old-fashioned, influential men. He made a great deal of time for reading, and he spent it on standard books thirty or forty years old. The only important books he seems to have read when they were new were Haeckel, whom he easily dismissed in a spirit of sceptical conservatism; Supernatural Religion, which he did not overrate; and Philochristus, of which he missed the point, completely overlooking the suggestion that the chief priests sent by night and stole His body to cast it out with the thieves.

The book suggests some general reflections: a Lambeth Conference is very like a Polish Diet; the Anglican Communion still more like the Polish Republic, where confederations to support the Liberum Veto generally succeeded, confederations to suppress it generally failed. The modern Church of London is very like the primitive Church of Corinth; but modern Westminster is very unlike ancient Rome, for in Westminster Archbishops, Presidents of the Council, and Lord Chancellors meet constantly without a wink.

G. A. SIMCOX.

Intentions. By Oscar Wilde. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

MR. WILDE, in speaking of the methods open to the critic, well says that Mr. Pater's narrative is, of course, only criticism in disguise: his figures are but personifications of certain moods of mind, in which he is for the time interested, and which he desires to express. Now I have been wondering whether one should not, similarly, regard Mr. Wilde essentially as a humorist who has taken art-criticism for his medium, just as Carlyle was a humorist in the odd disguise of a prophet. Certainly, I am inclined to think that much of his intricate tracery of thought and elaborate jewel-work of expression is simply built up to make a casket for one or two clever homeless paradoxes. "The fact of a man being a poisoner is nothing against his prose." Mr. Wilde somehow struck that out, and saw that it was deserving of a better fate than to remain a waif of traditional epigram; so he went to work on Lamb's strange friend, Thomas Griffiths Wainwright, one of the subtlest art-critics and poisoners of his time, unearthed his curious history, made selections from his criticism, and then set his own epigram, diamond-wise, in the midst of a biographical essay. Various readers solemnly add to their historical knowledge, discuss the strange character of the man, study his criticism; but Mr. Wilde sits and watches his epigram sparkling far within. About Wainwright he cares far less than the reader, about his own epigram—far more.

Of course this is not the whole truth about these Intentions; the whole truth is a many-coloured thing about a personality so complex as that of the author of Dorian Gray. But it is the dominant tendency among many others hardly less powerful. Mr. Wilde's worship of beauty is proverbial, it has made a latter-day myth of him before his time; and yet, at least in these essays, his gift of comic perception is above it, and, rightly viewed, all his "flute-toned" periods are written in the service of the comic muse. Where he is not of malice aforethought humorous, where he seems to be arguing with serious face enough, is it not simply that he may smile behind his mask at the astonishment, not to say terror, of a public he has from the first so delighted in shocking? He loves to hear it call him "dangerous," as some men delight to be called "roué."

There will be many who will, as the phrase is, take him seriously; but let me assure them that Mr. Wilde is not of the number. It all depends what one means by the phrase; for I, for one, take Mr. Wilde very seriously as a creator of work which gives me much and various new pleasure: he is so absolutely alive at every point, so intensely practical—if people could only see it—and therefore so refreshingly unsentimental; he is wittier than is quite fair in a man of his nationality, and he often writes prose that one loves to say over for mere pleasure of ear—his own literary touchstone. The artistic temperament should delight in him, for the serious in the pursuit of literary pleasure he is as serious as every new joy must be; it is only in the domain of thought where it is rather funny to see him taken with such open mouth. Not that Mr. Wilde is not a thinker, and a very subtle one too; but it is rather, so to say, as a damascener of thought, than a forger of it, that he is to be regarded. Of course all things are relative; and to the unsophisticated Ernest of Mr. Wilde's dialogue on "The Critic as Artist" it is certain that the brilliant half-truths with which the sadder and wiser Gilbert lit up their all-night colloquy, as with weird fireworks, were "strange things" and dangerous to the younger man.

"You have told me many strange things to-night, Gilbert. You have told me that it is more difficult to talk about a thing than to do it, and that to do nothing at all is the most difficult thing in the world; you have told me that all art is immoral, and all thought dangerous; that criticism is more creative than creation, and that the highest criticism is that which reveals in the work of art what the artist had not put there; that it is exactly because a man cannot do a thing that he is the proper judge of it; and that the true critic is unfair, insincere, and not rational. My friend, you are a dreamer."

Had Ernest read Mr. Pater, to whom Mr. Wilde makes the continual affectionate reference of a disciple, or had he "with a little rod" touched what the Laureate calls the "honey-poison" of France—chanced, for instance, on a passage in which M. Anatole France says that had Ernest been twenty-five instead of presumably nineteen, or had he even at that age possessed a larger measure of the artistic temperament, that night in the Piccadilly library would have lost none of its charm, but it would hardly have been so spiritually dislocating for the poor boy. For the "autobiographical" theory of criticism is no more the secret of M. Anatole France or Mr. Pater than of Mr. Wilde: it belongs to every subtly developed temperament, and has unfortunately been practised in England all too much by men who are anything but subtle. Every small author is eager to give us "les aventures de son âme au milieu des chefs-d'œuvre;" but exquisite things happen on that quest to few—to Mr. Pater, to Mr. Henry James, occasionally to Mr. Henley, and certainly to Mr. Wilde. He himself does not take Ernest seriously. It is part of the fun of dialogue as a form for criticism, he says, that the critic "can invent an imaginary antagonist and convert him when he chooses by some absurdly sophistical argument."

"la critique est, comme la philosophie et l'histoire, une espèce de roman à l'usage des esprits avisés et curieux, et tout roman, à le bien prendre, est une autobiographie;" and continues, "Le bon critique est celui qui raconte les aventures de son âme au milieu des chefs-d'œuvre"—

One must not forget that the form is dialogue, and therefore dramatic. Otherwise, we may be inclined to resent some of Gilbert's information, besides missing the subtle pleasure of watching a young innocent soul undergoing initiation. It was for that—among other things—that Mr. Wilde wrote these two "colloquies," as they used to be called, on "The Critic as Artist"; it was not to tell us that creation is as essential a part of criticism as criticism is of creation. All the same, we are glad of the definition of criticism as "a creation within a creation," and of this clear-sighted illustration of its operation.

"The critic occupies the same relation to the work of art that he criticises as the artist does to the visible world of form and colour, or the unseen world of passion and of thought. He does not even require for the perfection of his art the finest materials. Anything will serve his purpose. And just as out of the sordid and sentimental amours of the silly wife of a small country doctor in the squalid village of Souville l'Abbaye, near Rouen, Gustave Flaubert was able to create a classic, and make a masterpiece of style, so, from subjects of little or no importance . . . the true critic can, if it be his pleasure so to direct or waste his faculty of contemplation, produce work that will be flawless in beauty and instinct with intellectual subtlety."

Mr. Wilde is speaking of criticism in its highest form, in the same sense as Matthew Arnold spoke of poetry as "a criticism of life." Of the humbler form of it known as reviewing, he makes one or two common-sense remarks—

"As a rule," he says, "the critics . . . are far more cultured than the people whose work they are called upon to review. This is, indeed, only what one would expect, for criticism demands infinitely more cultivation than creation does. . . . The poor reviewers are apparently reduced to be the reporters of the police courts of literature, the chroniclers of the doings of the habitual criminals of art. It is sometimes said of them that they do not read all through the works they are called upon to criticise. They do not; or, at least, they should not. . . . Nor is it necessary. To know the vintage and quality of a wine one need not drink the whole cask."

It belongs to Mr. Wilde's paradoxical method that he should continually play on the convertibility of terms. Thus, the whole contention of his essays on criticism is that criticism and creation are essentially one and the same, or, at least, that they necessarily dovetail one into the other; and yet towards the end of this essay we find Gilbert saying "it is certain that the subject-matter at the disposal of creation is always diminishing, while the subject-matter of criticism increases daily." Here we have the two terms crystallised once more to their hard and fast everyday meaning, while all through they have been used as convertible. This is apt to bewilder. As a rule, however, Mr. Wilde gains his effects by adhering to the concrete signification of words. This reduces some of his contentions to a mere question of terms. One often feels: Now, if that word were but changed for another, for which it really stands, there would be nothing further to say. But that, of course, would not do for Mr. Wilde, nor, indeed, for us, to whom, presumably, subject is nought and treatment is all. Occasionally, by this means, it follows that Mr. Wilde seems to beg the question; as, for instance, in his remarks on morality in art. When he says, "All art is immoral," he is using the word in its narrow relative sense; he does not mean by it the same as those who use it seriously against certain schools and forms of art: though they say "immoral" they mean "unspiritual," and that is the meaning many people will attach to the word in Mr. Wilde's phrase. They will thus be quite unnecessarily shocked by a mere quibble of words, and their real position is left unassailed; the real question at issue being whether or not there is certain art which is dangerous to the spirit, of which one should feel as Mr. Pater says in Marius: "This is what I may not look at." If life be really a struggle between higher and lower, if art is anything more than a form of sensuous indulgence, this is a question to be answered. Mr. Wilde does not leave us quite clear as to his side in the matter, though he seems to lay over-much stress on the sensuous side of art, a side which is, after all, external and impossible without an informing, formative soul. He echoes, too, Gautier's tirades against "virtue," and Mr. Swinburne's

"What ailed us, oh gods, to desert you For the creeds that refuse and restrain?"

and says hard things of chastity and self-sacrifice—really a very "young" and quite illogical position in an age which has accepted evolution. He quotes M. Renan to the effect that "Nature cares little about chastity"; but does that prove anything save that Nature is always behind the age, as Mr. Wilde tells us in another place? Surely it is by such ideals, of which, once seen, the beauty haunts him through all his sinnings, that man evolves at all, striving and failing and striving, till slowly what was once the ideal becomes the instinct.

But I am not recking my own rede, and am in danger of growing quite "heated," as they say of politicians, while Mr. Wilde is doubtless smiling in his sleeve.

Let us leave contention and enjoy. I have referred to two or three of the interesting qualities in these papers. They are so absolutely alive. Every sentence is full of brain. There is no padding, no vagueness, all is "thought out," as the painters say. One has that safe, untroubled feeling in reading that Matthew Arnold's calm dissecting method gives us—though, needless to say, the austerity of the Essays in Criticism is a very different thing from this luxuriously coloured prose: however difficult the thesis, we leave it to the writer with perfect confidence that he will speedily make all clear. Mr. Wilde has, indeed, a rare power of keeping his eye steadily "on the object." It is doubtless, too, a part of his perversity that while, as we have seen, he will, when it suits him, adhere rigidly to the fixed signification of words, he can at other times exercise a quite remarkable power of reducing them to their elements, of remorselessly forcing them to say what they really mean. "You must not be frightened by words," said Gilbert to his young neophyte; and certainly, if you set such words as "unpractical," "dangerous," or "dreamer" on to Mr. Wilde they will come in for the same summary dissection that befel the lion which attacked the strong man in Holy Writ.

Mr. Wilde's delight in words for their own sake is quite Rabelaisian. He loves so to spread them in heaps, like a child bathing its hands in rich, many-coloured beads, that sometimes he is in danger of a lack of proportion, and catalogues that remind us of the Whitmanese. But some of his tapestries in which, in a brief pageant, he shows us again the Trojan war, or Dante threading the circles of his great dream, are beautiful: and in passages such as the following his technical knowledge of artistic methods, especially handicraft, give us a sense of surefootedness, a pre-Raphaelite distinction of impression very quickening to the imagination:

"The sculptor hewed from the marble block the great white-limbed Hermes that slept within it. The waxers and gilders of images gave tone and texture to the statue, and the world, when it saw it, worshipped and was dumb. He poured the glowing bronze into the mould of sand, and the river of red metal cooled into noble curves, and took the impress of the body of a god. With enamel or polished jewels he gave sight to the sightless eyes. The hyacinth-like curls grew crisp beneath his graver. . . . All subtle arts belonged to him also. He held the gem against the revolving disk, and the amethyst became the purple couch for Adonis, and across the veined sardonyx sped Artemis with her hounds. . . . The potter sat in his shed, and, flower-like from the silent wheel, the vase rose up beneath his hands."

This comes of an almost Renaissance gift of curiosity and a power of various appreciation, which is one of Mr. Wilde's surprises, as it is one of the most robust signs about his work. His reverence for Milton means much. In fact, since "The Decay of Lying," which is here reprinted, Mr. Wilde has become quite newly significant. One hardly knows yet what to expect of him, but we may be quite sure that these essays and Dorian Gray are but preludes. At present a delicate literary affectation, which is probably irritating to most, but rather a charm to those who know what it means, a suggestion of insincerity, a refusal to commit himself, to be "the slave of his own opinions," makes him somewhat of a riddle. Will it seem too serious to remind Mr. Wilde of one of his earliest sonnets—"Is that Time Dead?" I think not.

Meanwhile, these Intentions are delightful reading, especially, as was said at the beginning, for their humour; and if I have failed to do them justice, it is but a proof of Mr. Wilde's paradox that it is impossible to do justice to anything we care about.

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

Great Commanders of Modern Times, and the Campaign of 1815. By W. O'Connor Morris. (W. H. Allen.)

THERE exists a mischievous assumption in England, that soldiers alone are entitled to write on military history and the art of war. It is true that the greatest of military historians—Caesar, Davila, Jomini, and Napier—all saw service in the campaigns of which they narrated the events; but it does not follow that civilians are never qualified to discuss military affairs. This fiction, which is bolstered up by the pretensions of the few English soldiers who contribute to literature, has caused military history to be neglected by the new school of historical students, and has had the effect of leaving it to a group of distinguished officers, who may indeed be qualified for the work by their professional attainments, but who have not trained themselves to weigh evidence with the care demanded in other departments of history. The authorities of the War Office give their countenance to the idea that military history can only be treated by soldiers, and is of little importance, by their custom of invariably appointing officers as professors of the subject at the Staff College, the Military Academy, and the Military College, for a term of five years only, and thus carefully providing that it shall not be taught by men who have devoted the whole of their time and their abilities to its study. Under these circumstances, we gladly welcome this handsome volume by Judge O'Connor Morris, who proves by it what valuable work civilians can do even on such well-worked subjects as the campaigns of Napoleon, and gives evidence on every page of careful reading and correct judgment.

The great commanders selected by Mr. O'Connor Morris for his purpose of illustrating the growth of the art of war, in its main divisions of strategy and tactics, are Turenne, Marlborough, Frederick the Great, Napoleon, Wellington, and Moltke; while an anonymous friend supplies an introduction on Gustavus Adolphus. Mr. Morris would be the first to admit that this list of names is not exhaustive; and he incidentally mentions, with true appreciation of their greatness, Condé, Luxembourg, Villars, Prince Eugène, Marshal Saxe, Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick, and Suvárof. But, for the purpose he has set before himself, the six generals he has chosen are thoroughly representative. Each marks a stage in the history of the art of war. Turenne was the first great strategist, and Marlborough the first great tactician, in modern history; Frederick was the first captain who owed more to the efficient organisation and discipline of his troops than to his own capacity as a general; while Napoleon was at one and the same time the greatest strategist, the greatest tactician, and the greatest organiser the world has ever seen. Wellington, though inferior in every military quality to the great man whom he overthrew, earns his place by the fact that he did defeat him and his armies; while Moltke, illustrating the change that has come over war by the mechanical inventions of the present age, possessed also the ability to take advantage of the new conditions and modify the old ideas. All this Mr. Morris shows with a lucidity which deserves the highest praise, and which makes his book an admirable one to place in the hands of any student who wishes to get some idea of the history of the art of war.

It would take too long to give here a detailed criticism of Mr. Morris's analysis of the chief campaigns of the generals he has selected; but it must be noted that he rightly spends most of his space in treating those of Napoleon. He gives the palm of merit to the campaign of 1796 in Italy and the campaign of Austerlitz; and he points out clearly and correctly that the failure of the invasion of Russia in 1812 was largely due to the changed character of the Grande Armée, which no longer consisted of French soldiers in the prime of life trained to war by the hardships of the early years of the wars of the Revolution and inspired by the ardour of patriotism characteristic of that extraordinary period, but of youthful French conscripts and subsidiary forces drawn from every nation on the continent. While agreeing heartily with Mr. Morris's appreciation of Napoleon as a general, we must differ from his estimate of him as a statesman. He more than once speaks of him as the author of the Code Napoléon and of the centralised administrative system of France. This is a fallacy. The ideas of a simple code of law, uniform for the whole country, and of the centralised administration which changed France from a collection of provinces into a nation, were the thoughts of the great statesmen of the Revolution. They not only conceived the ideas, but prepared to carry them into effect; whether Napoleon had ruled or not, their work would have been done, and he has received the credit which was due to others. The next most valuable study to that on Napoleon is the chapter on Moltke, not only because of the correct appreciation of Moltke's merits and demerits, but because in it Mr. Morris is the first English writer to attribute its proper significance to the campaign of Chanzu and to the skill with which that truly admirable general almost changed the fortune of the war.

It is not necessary to say much of Mr. Morris' essay on the campaign of Waterloo. He seems to have studied the literature of the subject thoroughly, and gives due credit to Napoleon's scheme for dividing the Prussian and English armies, which only failed of success through the mistakes of Grouchy and the obstinate energy of Blücher. He also takes into account the state of Napoleon's health, which was such an important factor in the conduct alike of the campaign and of the battle of Waterloo. But he should not have spelt the name of Mr. Dorsey Gardner, whom he refers to on this subject, as "Gardener."

In conclusion, may we protest against certain of the illustrations in this handsome volume? Maps of course are necessary; the portraits of Turenne, Marlborough, Frederick, and Wellington are good; but what is the use of inserting such pictures as "Seidlitz at Rossbach," "Napoleon watching the Burning of Moscow," "Ney at Waterloo," and "Wellington at Talavera"? They serve no useful purpose: they appeal to the tastes of the uneducated public who will not read Mr. Morris' really valuable book, while they will irritate students, who ought not only to read but to possess it.

H. MORSE STEPHENS.

Stray Verses, 1889-1890. By Robert Lord Houghton. (John Murray.)

THOUGH these Stray Verses are slight in construction, and occasionally trivial in subject, there is a grace of style about them that is clearly a mark of skill, while it almost suggests the possession of larger powers than should be employed on work so unimportant. One supposes that a writer who can turn a line so deftly as some of these are turned—who can give such perfect fitness of expression to a pleasant fancy or a passing thought—can also, on occasion, produce more solid work, and give to it the same quality of completeness. But is that so? Are these Stray Verses the fruit of lighter moments, while that of the writer's more serious hours is still ripening and maturing towards excellence? Or do they represent the whole of that "something attempted, something done" which is a man's life? The more favourable view is suggested as much by the title Lord Houghton gives to his book, as by the evident facility with which he writes. If these verses are the "stray" product of the couple of years indicated on the title-page, here may well be other verses that are kept n hand to be yet worked upon and brought o perfection. While a painter concentrates is energies on a great picture, he makes, it may be, many casual sketches, pictorial notes, and memoranda that litter his studio, unless he is careful enough to put them iway in a scrap-book, or kind enough to give them to his friends. It is quite possible hat Lord Houghton's Stray Verses are of a like character. At any rate, one may hope that there is something behind them, of which they are only the promise and token.

For the present, however, it is these unpretending compositions themselves that the reader and the critic are concerned with; and this at least can be said for them, that they are well done as far as they go. They are true to their adventitious origin, in the fact that they are of as many sorts as the writer's mind may have had of moods. Some of them belong to the merest gossip of what is called "Society"; others have a flavour of worldly wisdom; a few are vivid and picturesque suggestions of places and people; while one or two contain something of spiritual insight and profound meaning. The mixture is, perhaps, too miscellaneous, and some of the more trivial things—the "Echoes of the Season," for instance—might have been left out with advantage. They occur at the end of the book, which may seem the least inappropriate place for them; but in a book, as in a feast, if the poorest wine be served at the last it makes the whole entertainment seem poor. The verses suggested by Mr. H. S. Marks's picture of "The Bookworm" may be taken as an average example of Lord Houghton's light but less trivial manner. Here are three of them:

"He never read Dame Nature's book—
The finch's nest, the moldwarp's burrow—
Nor stood to mark the careful rook
Peer sidelong down the newest furrow;
He never watched the warbler dart
From stem to stem among the sedges;
But, hands behind him, paced apart
Between his tall-cut hornbeam hedges.

"And so his blameless years rolled by,
To-day the double of to-morrow;
No wish to smile, no need to sigh,
No heart for mirth, no time for sorrow:
His forehead wore a deeper frown,
Eyes grew more dim, and cheeks more hollow,
Till friendly Death one day stepped down,
And softly whispered, 'Rise and follow.'"

"But Fame, victorious maid, resists
The doom for which gray Time intends us!
Immortal titles crowd the lists
Which Mr. Quaritch kindly sends us!
'Twill Drelinecourt and Dryden thrust,
What name confronts you, lone and chilling?
The works of Gilbert Dryadust,— Quarto, 3 vols., old calf, a shilling."

The sketch is excellent. Satire and pathos mingle in it, while the literary handling is as good as the pictorial handling it interprets. If Lord Houghton were content to write vers de société, and semi-humorous character-pieces, beyond all doubt he would make his mark in that small accomplishment. But his aim is apparently more ambitious. Such a poem as "Gone" reaches a distinctly higher level. It is long, and does not admit of quotation in extracts; but it is a dramatic soliloquy of force enough to have been written by Browning. Of another kind is "The Inn," with its motto from Epictetus, and its thoughtful but somewhat dubious reflections on the wayside inns of life and the journey's end. But I prefer to quote one of the shorter poems, both because it is short, and because it appears to contain in the space of three verses matter which only a writer who is potentially a poet could have treated as happily. The poem is called "Down the Stream," and is an expansion of a passage from the Apocrypha—"And lo, my brook became a river, and my river became a sea":

"Love! It began with a glance,
Grew with the growing of flowers,
Smiled in a dreamful trance,
Recked not the passage of hours:
Our passion's flood rose ever,
Flowing for her and me,
Till the brook became a river,
And the river became a sea.

"Grief! It began with a word,
Grew with the winds that raved;
A prayer for pardon unheard,
Pardon in turn uncraved:
The bridge so easy to sever,
The stream so swift to be free!
Till the brook became a river,
And the river became a sea.

"Life! It began with a sigh,
Grew with the leaves that are dead;
Its pleasures with wings to fly,
Its sorrows with limbs of lead:
And rest remaineth never
For the wearier years to be,
Till the brook shall become a river,
And the river become a sea."

Lord Houghton bears a name already pleasantly associated with English poetry. His father was a poet and a friend of poets; and if he should himself attain a like renown, another happy instance will have been added to the few cases of inherited talent to be found in our literature.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

NEW NOVELS.

The Halletts. By Leslie Keith. In 3 vols. (Bentley.)

A Child Widow. By Mrs. F. H. Williamson. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Between Two Lovers. By Col. Rowan Hamilton. In 2 vols. (White.)

The Gentleman Digger. By Anna, Comtesse de Brémont. (Sampson Low.)

Romance by Proxy. By Evans Comyn. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

Tibby's Tryst. By Robina F. Hardy. (Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.)

Who was She? By Henry Charles Moore. (Dean.)

THE reader who turns to The Halletts for hair-breadth escapes by flood and field, or for any of those exciting and sensational incidents so much in vogue just now, will be disappointed. The story is just what it professes to be—"a country town chronicle," and Miss Keith has told it with a quiet grace of style which is very charming. There is no reason why life which is lived "far from the madding crowd" should not have its chroniclers. It had an illustrious one in Jane Austen, and it has had many others not so distinguished since. It is a relief sometimes to meet with a novel largely free from crime and bloodshed; and it is a far greater tribute to pay to a writer to say that he or she has made the homely annals of village life attractive, than to say that a work depends for its success upon a blood-curdling plot. The chief representative of the Halletts is a solicitor, who is so keen after wealth that he endeavours to inveigle Mary Kelynge, the heiress of Hallett Place, into a marriage with his son, while he so gets his brother-in-law into his toils, and then deserts him, that there is nothing left for him but suicide. By a strange freak of nature that so often happens, Hallett has a daughter, Hester, the heroine of the story, who is as noble and unselfish in disposition as her father is the reverse. There is one little mystery unfolded. Mary Kelynge only inherits Hallett Place and the estates because the real heir cannot be found. But he turns up at last in the person of one Owen Prideaux, a clever author and a fine fellow to boot. Finding Mary married, and having wealth of his own, he refuses to dislodge her, and discovers happiness for himself in a union with Hester. Although this story fills three volumes, we have not found it too long, because it is obviously an honest and a conscientious transcript of human life as led in the little town of Melchisford.

Mrs. Williamson is not a practised literary artist, but she can write a very attractive story, as A Child Widow testifies. It is impossible not to get interested in the fortunes of Nancy Bell, an unsophisticated and lovely girl of seventeen, who knows how to make a great sacrifice for love, even though so young. Leslie Wolfe, the object of her affection, has been cut off by his father-in-law, Sir Peter Cairne, to whom he was heir; and, in order to give him back his inheritance by becoming his wife later, she is persuaded out of her very love to marry old Sir Peter first. He incontinently dies; but, alas! the Bohemian artist, Wolfe, will have nothing to say to his widow, believing that she has supplanted him in Sir Peter's affection in order to gain his fortune. Such was not the fact, as the irascible Sir Peter had long before decided that, if Nancy did not marry him, all his wealth should go to some charity. Charities, by the way, are responsible for many wicked wills. But there are other complications here. Wolfe has given his heart to Nancy's sister Millicent, while the latter is also sought by a worthy young doctor, Mark Skene, who has been a true friend to the sisters in the time of their orphanhood and distress. There is a plotting villain of a valet named Jaynes, who makes a good deal of mischief on all sides. In the end Wolfe marries Millicent; and the last glimpse we have of little Lady Cairne, the child-widow, affords hope that she will become at no distant date the wife of Colonel Fayrer, as honest, brave, and manly a gentleman as her Majesty's army can boast. Though there is nothing unusually striking in this story, it may be called equal to the average.

We wish we could say the same of Colonel Rowan Hamilton's Between Two Lovers. but it appears to us a crude, jejune piece of work. The Colonel does not seem to have a thorough command either of his characters or of the English language. The girl "betwixt two lovers" is Effie Macdonald, who, having known Ned Borthwick all her life, and being looked upon as his future wife, bestows her affections upon Harry Kingscote. Effie was no doubt a charming and devoted wife, but as a poet she was decidedly mediocre. Betwixt Two Lovers is about the class of story any fairly intelligent person might write, but would probably refrain from publishing.

In The Gentleman Digger, the Comtesse de Brémont presents us with a terribly realistic picture of life in Johannesburg during the raging of the gold fever. Some of the scenes depicted, where men and women seem to lose even the semblance of humanity, may appear to be exaggerated; but the author vouches for their accuracy, and if corroboration were needed it could be found. The story covers a period of only six months, and it is specially devoted to the famine, crisis, and collapse of the share market. There is some attempt at a love plot, but it only serves as a peg for the more serious business. The Comtesse denounces, as the greatest of all evils introduced by civilisation, that of conveying intoxicants to the savage nations whom the white man conquers in his march of progress. "It is an awful crime practised without compunction against the black humanity of Africa"; and the writer, in relating one fearful episode, shows its blighting and brutalising effects. The cruel murder of an Englishman by five drunken natives and the details of the trial are facts that can be verified by the principal Johannesburg evening paper. In Johannesburg, during the thirst for greed, all classes of the community seemed suddenly to have lost their reason, and to have become mad with the lust of gold. The Comtesse de Brémont is a vigorous writer, but she has few pretensions to a literary style, and only the most rudimentary notions as to punctuation.

Romance by Proxy is a story of the Soudan War. It is fluently written and interesting enough in its way, with a double love plot as a connecting thread. We have a good deal about Cairo and the Pyramids which is not new; a chapter dealing with the "Merry Wives of Cairo"; a sketch of General Gordon at Assiout, just before he set forth on his ill-fated expedition to Khar-toum; a picture of Karnac by moonlight, &c.; and, strange to say, some discussions upon evolution and other topics. One very amusing incident is described relating to Captain Speedy, a great African traveller and a man of gigantic height, who had learnt to roar like a lion. On one occasion, while at a Cairo hotel, he made night hideous by his roarings, which brought out all the visitors, in the most nondescript styles of attire, imagining that the streets were full of lions. The principal characters in this romance are fairly well drawn, but the whole thing is much too long.

Tibby's Tryst is all about an excellent young man named Hugh Ellerslie and a good young woman named Tibby Ruthford. They were lovers, and after many crosses at length married; and if all boys and girls will only emulate Hugh's sense of honour and observe their tryst like Tibby they may "go and do likewise," and live happily ever afterwards. Miss Hardy's narrative is well told, though it is not strong.

Who was She? relates to a mysterious woman who paid a visit to a baronet when he was dying, and who seems to have spent a mauvais quart d'heure in consequence. After his death she is sought for, up-hill and down-dale, but in vain. At length it is shown that her visit had to do with the real heir to the title and estates, who turns up in the person of a supposed young gipsy. But he bravely dies in rescuing from a fire the actual holder of the title, who is then left in undisturbed possession. The telling of the story calls for no comment.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BOOKS ON PHILOSOPHY.

A Short History of Greek Philosophy. By J. Marshall. (Percival.) An honest, plain, straightforward, intelligible sketch of the history of Greek philosophy, this reminds us in its admirable transparency of Ferrier's Lectures; but it contains a good deal more than they do in the way of positive information about the successive schools. Ferrier took the central point of each view of the universe, and worked that out with pains and clearness and lucid illustration. If Mr. Marshall's pictures be at all less clear, it will be because he has put more into them—no less of philosophy, but more of the history of philosophy. They will be found not only, as he suggests, a useful companion to the Historia Philosophiæ Græcæ of Ritter and Preller, but also a handy key to the first book of Aristotle's Metaphysics. Mr. Marshall's work is simple, and not ambitious; and, if he will but expunge some of his "privy nips" for modern philosophers, it will be about as good as is possible within its modest size.

Essays Scientific and Philosophical. By the late Aubrey L. Moore. (Kegan Paul & Co.) The memoirs prefixed to this volume are perhaps the most interesting portion of its contents. Aubrey Moore is best known to the world outside Oxford as one of the contributors to Lux Mundi. He is here presented to us as a hard-working college tutor and accomplished type of the modern High Church priest, who keeps fully abreast of the most advanced scientific theories, and somehow manages to reconcile them, at least in his own mind, with the ancient Catholic faith. Never very robust, he died young, at what age we are not here informed, but apparently about forty, worn out, as may be supposed, by his multifarious duties. His personal influence was immense; and he is described as exhibiting an "extraordinary combination of learning, intellect, kindness, and religion, where each was present in the highest degree" (p. 16). "In respect of learning," according to Mr. Romanes, he "was probably without an equal in this country" (p. 29). But the enthusiastic eulogies of his friends are hardly borne out by the papers collected in the present volume, and presented to the public under a too ambitious title. Moore's "Essays" consist for the most part of short review articles contributed to the Guardian, very good of their kind, but no better than hundreds of others that the world has willingly let die. The want of lucidity which Matthew Arnold rather oddly attributed to the Salvationists might with more justice be imputed to Moore—to his thinking, that is, for nothing could be clearer than his style; and his dogmatic way of expressing himself makes this fault particularly conspicuous. Thus he held, according to Mr. Talbot, that "philosophy is nothing if it does not completely unify knowledge" (p. 25), while over the page we are told that "nothing is more clearly a part of Moore's teaching than that we must often hold truths of which we do not yet know the synthesis"; yet he does not seem to have accepted the logical consequence, that philosophy does not exist. Again, in his eloquent assize sermon on "Theology and Law," after declaring point blank that "no real student of nature will go beyond the 'is' and the 'is not' of fact," that "'must' and 'cannot' lie beyond his range, except when they are illicitly smuggled in for use against the Christian miracles" (p. 233), the preacher insists that certain analogies which he finds between theology and law—

"cannot be accidental. We say cannot, for if there be anything on which, in this age of warring words, we are all agreed, it is the elimination of chance. And all through the biological region likeness suggests kinship, and kinship a common parentage" (p. 236).

It would appear that when scientific truths can be pressed into the service of pulpit oratory, they acquire a cogency of which they were previously devoid. Altogether, in Aubrey Moore the Church seems to have lost a brilliant and versatile theologian, rather than a penetrating or accurate thinker.

Induction and Deduction. By Constance C. W. Naden. Edited by A. Lewins, M.D. (Bickers.) Miss Naden is celebrated in the world of belles lettres as, in Mr. Gladstone's enthusiastic language, one of the "remarkable additions" which have been made to the "train of Sappho." In the work before us the poetess appears as a writer on some of the most difficult problems in logic and metaphysics. The union of the poetic and philosophical faculty is exhibited in passages like the following:

"When the theory of Copernicus extended the universe by immeasurable spaces and illimitable aeons, the human race seemed to dwindle from monarchs of the world into contemptible animalculæ crawling over this insignificant sandgrain of a planet. Yet the ephemeron man may reinstate himself in far more than his former glory; for not only does the earth which he inhabits owe all its forms and colours to his creative eye, but the very spaces and aeons before which he cowered borrow their sublimity from his imagination. Eternity and immensity have no awfulness which he has not confessed. He alone is the fountain of honour."

This is the outcome of the essay on "Hyl-idealism," of which the subject and the manner recall Berkeley. But the Idealism is more material, if one may say so, than that of the good bishop. "The god within is simply the energy stored up in the thought cells." We should not do justice to this new version of "Solipsicism" without alluding to the racy and trenchant notes with which the editor has relieved the solemnity of the text. Thus, referring to the concluding passage which we have cited, Dr. Lewins writes: "No comparison is possible between a sentient and non-sentient phenomenon. The 'ridiculus mus' of the fable . . . immeasurably transcends in importance and dignity all the 'parturient mounts' on earth and elsewhere." In another place, Dr. Lewins, alluding to the "Animism" of Carlyle and other transcendentalists, writes:

"Monistic Somatism is seen to be the only alternative. No verbiage can possibly be more anti-scientific than Dr. Huxley's privative term "Agnosticism."

Prof. Tyndall does not fare better at the hands of this thoroughgoing materialist.]

"It may provoke a smile to find a professed materialist like Prof. Tyndall a zealot in this school of Agnosticism. But philosophy or logical consistency is not the forte of our genial and skilled Royal Institution Empiric. Extreme pains have been wasted in explaining to him the hylo-phenomenal theorem of existence, which he obstinately persists in confounding with absolute idealism."

But to return to Miss Naden. Her most ambitious philosophic writing is that from which the collection of essays takes its name. A great part of this piece consists of a critical review of the principal philosophers who have written about induction and deduction. It is difficult to say anything new about Plato. Miss Naden's remarks on his "disdain for particulars" appear to us just, if not original. "In themselves baseless and delusive, these doctrines yet spring from a keen sense of the value of general concepts. . . . This is the kernel of validity which lies within the fair front of Platonic Idealism." The criticisms of Aristotle's theory and practice, of which "the latter falls even lamentably behind the former," are on the same level of merit. The remarks on J. S. Mill's logic of induction are those which have most interested us. The criticisms have some resemblance to those urged by Jevons, but are more temperate, and therefore more persuasive. Yet we are not quite persuaded that "those stumbling blocks of the metaphysician, the law of causation and of the uniformity of Nature, resolve themselves into mere 'identical propositions,'" or that the law of causation

"is not gained by induction in the sense of being a summary of what has been observed in many cases stretched so as to include all cases."

Whatever doubts may remain about such questions, there can be none as to the ability of the writer. Philosophy, as well as poetry, has sustained a loss by the untimely death of Constance Naden.

Geschichte der Philosophie. Von W. Windelband. Zweite Lieferung. (Freiburg I. B.: Mohr; London: Williams & Norgate.) The second instalment of Dr. Windelband's work remains true to the ideal which inspired the first part, the determination to set forth the history of philosophy as no disconnected series of thinkers and thoughts, but as an organic whole. His work—which is of the most moderate dimensions—is singularly successful in making us see how the philosophy of any given generation postulates that which went before it and is a necessary antecedent of that which is to come after. We learn under his guidance how much schools have owed to teachers with whom they were but little in sympathy, and how great is the injustice which has been done to periods hastily condemned as useless and barren. No instance of this is clearer than his rehabilitation—more effective because not too explicit and pointed—of the great group of men, labouring with thought somewhat too great for their minds and far too great for their language, who have been called the "Schoolmen." They were struggling to extract the last atom of meaning or implication from a very limited amount of Plato and Aristotle, and beyond these textbooks and religious authorities they seldom ventured to look; but still, it is to their efforts that we owe, as Condorcet said, the re-introduction of precision and subtlety of idea and expression; and those who are most familiar with their literature know best how many modern speculations may be found anticipated among their uncouth terminology. M. Hauréau has done much in this direction of research, and the completion of Dr. Windelband's work will apparently do more. But in this second part of it we have rather the opportunity of tracing Scholasticism backward and affiliating it upon the later Greco-Roman schools. We find a survey of Epicureanism, rather scientific than moral; of Stoicism, which proves that, just as the Roman Stoic was a well-marked variety, so would the German Stoic be; and of Neoplatonism, which indicates one channel at least from which flowed the mystical tendencies of the Middle Ages. Dr. Windelband divides the later history of the Greco-Roman philosophy into an ethical period (ethico-scientific would be a better name) and a religious period. In the latter the religious instincts of man sprang and budded afresh. The plant of ancient religion had been killed down in philosophical ground, but the roots were yet alive. The death of the old faiths (in so far as they were dead, for other circles of society by no means shared the incredulity of educated men) was more like the effects of cold on vegetation than like the total disappearance of life on an exhausted planet. The growth returns, it is not rendered for ever impossible. The fall of ancient religions had been due to no general and permanent cause, to no sound teaching of physical science removing the very atmosphere of faith, but to the nipping frost of derision and the east-wind of argument. The roots sprouted again; fresh seed came from Eastern lands, and the bare rock of philosophy was overgrown with a tangle of mysticism and superstition.

NOTES AND NEWS.

We may be pardoned for calling attention to the fact that we publish to-day our thousandth number. The ACADEMY was founded in 1869 by the late Dr. C. E. Appleton, to whose memory Prof. Cheyne pays a deserved tribute in the preface to his Bampton Lectures, which appeared last week. The first number was published by Mr. John Murray on October 9 of that year. To this number Mr. Murray himself contributed the first authentic account of the burning of Lord Byron's autobiography; and among the writers—we mention those only that have passed away—were Matthew Arnold, Bishop Lightfoot, John Conington, Mark Pattison, the Rev. H. N. Oxenham, and George Waring. Until the end of 1870 the ACADEMY appeared at irregular intervals of about one month; from January, 1871, the publication was bimonthly; the weekly issue began in 1874.

THE President of the United States has issued a proclamation, dated July 1, extending the privileges of the new American Copyright Act to subjects of Great Britain (including British possessions), and also of France, Belgium, and Switzerland. His decision is based upon the fact that he has received satisfactory official assurances that our existing law permits to citizens of the United States the same benefit of copyright as to British subjects.

It will interest many of our readers, and be a surprise to not a few, to learn that another valuable work of Thomas a Kempis has lately been brought to light and authenticated. The title is De Vita Christi Meditationes. It has been translated and edited by two clergymen, and is now in the press. It is a book worthy of the pious author, and some will be glad to give it a place by the side of the Imitatio Christi.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish shortly The Young Emperor, by Mr. Harold Frederic. The book is a complete biography of the German Emperor to the present time, and will be illustrated by very recent and trustworthy portraits of the Emperor and Empress, the Empress Victoria, and the late Emperor Frederick III.

AN English edition of the Letters of Marie Bashkirtseff will be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co., probably during the course of July. Four editions of the library issue of the Journal were rapidly exhausted; the cheap edition has already been twice reprinted.

MR. ALEXANDER GARDNER, of Paisley, has in the press a treatise on Byzantine Music, by the Rev. S. G. Hatherly. After discussing the mathematical formation of the musical scale, and passing in review the Gregorian system as a western development of eastern tradition, the author gives a full description of the old Greek diatonic genus, the chromatic genus, and the mixture of the two on which the greater part of eastern music is now constructed. He also analyses upwards of fifty unabbreviated musical pieces from Greek, Russian, Turkish, and Egyptian sources.

THE fourth volume of the "Heroes of the Nation" series, to be published next week by Messrs. G. P. Putnam's Sons, will be Dr. Thomas Hodgkin's Theodoric the Goth: the Barbarian Champion of Civilisation. The book will contain a number of illustrations and maps, uniform with the other volumes in the series.

MESSRS. BELL have in the press a new edition of George Long's Translation of Epictetus. It will be uniform with the small edition of Marcus Aurelius published last autumn, and will contain the Discourses of Epictetus, the Encheiridion and Fragments, with a Life of Epictetus, and also a sketch of his philosophy.

THE first volume of Canterbury Marriage Licenses, edited by Mr. J. Meadows Cowper, is now in the press. Mr. Cowper has not quite received the required number of subscribers' names, but has decided to at once print the volume, the price of which will be raised to a guinea and a half to non-subscribers. A further volume of the series of Canterbury Parish Registers which Mr. Cowper is transcribing and editing, viz., that of the parish of St. George the Martyr, 1538-1800, is now ready for the binder, and will shortly be issued.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces a new volume of representative biography, entitled Types of the Sainly Life, by Mr. Arthur Turtenville.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will publish next week a one-volume novel, entitled A Divided Duty, by Miss Ida Lemon; and also shortly, as a new volume in their Library of Fiction, A Fatal Request, by Miss A. L. Harris.

A NEW volume of poems, by Mr. J. B. Williamson, entitled A Ballad of a Jester, will be published shortly, in a limited edition, by Mr. J. J. Riley, of Darwen.

MR. G. H. F. NYE, author of The Popular Story of the Church, will shortly issue a reprint, with notes, of a remarkable Exposition of Faith and Declaration of Roman Catholic Bishops in Great Britain in 1826. Besides abandoning all claims to the property of the Church of England, this document treats of various matters concerning faith and doctrine, adoration and worship, the attitude to be preserved by the subject to the sovereign, &c.

A FOURTH edition of Mr. Thomas Greenwood's Public Libraries is now in the press. The work has been brought down to date, and a great amount of new matter has been added.

THE forthcoming number of the Economic Review (Percival) will contain the following articles: "Why Working Men Dislike Piece-Work," by Mr. David F. Schloss; "The Destruction of the Village Community," by Prof. W. J. Ashley; "An Artisan's View of the Eight Hours Question," by Mr. James Naylor; "Some Aspects of Game-Preserving," by Canon Furse; and "Working-Class Insurance," by the Rev. J. Frome Wilkinson.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. have acquired the whole of the copyrights and stock of the works hitherto issued by Mr. Spencer Blackett. We understand that they intend to considerably develop the fiction department of their business.

MR. B. A. QUARITCH is returning from America with most of the books which he took out with him some months since to tempt the bibliophiles beyond the Atlantic. The great millionaires have no taste for books and manuscripts; but there are virtuosi among those who are less blessed by fortune. One of the pretty little volumes bound about 1600 in morocco gilt with daisies, which are usually ascribed to the ownership of Marguerite de Valois, has disappeared from Mr. Quaritch's show, having probably been annexed by some person in whom the instincts of the collector are more active than his sense of honour. Of the folio letter of Columbus in Spanish (undated, but printed in April, 1493, by Johan Rosenbach, at Barcelona), which was undoubtedly the first printed announcement of the discovery of the New World, Mr. Quaritch brings back the unique copy which it was supposed the Quatercentenarians at Chicago would have been eager to possess. This is curious, considering that a small quarto reprint, which is now universally admitted to be a modern fabrication, found a prompt buyer in New York last year, and has changed hands since at a high figure. The unique folio will probably be seen for sale in a London auction-room by-and-by.

ON Thursday of this week Messrs. Sotheby began the sale, which will last for eight days, of a large collection of books brought together from different quarters. Among them is the library of the late Derwent Coleridge, which is naturally rich on Coleridgeana, though chiefly of the generation following the poet. We observe that the compiler of the catalogue repeatedly calls Sir John Taylor Coleridge "Lord Chief Justice," and on one occasion at least "Lord." There is also the library of Mr. Arthur Cox, who seems to have acquired first editions of Lamb and letters of Lamb from the Norrises; and the library of the late Robert Charles May, which is especially rich in Dickens, Thackeray, Cruikshank, &c. Among miscellaneous lots we may mention the original MS. of Vivian Grey (wanting the first volume), which has a curious but authentic history; a Pilgrim's Progress of 1683, which is possibly unique; Coleridge's Poems (1796), together with the poet's receipt of thirty guineas for the copyright; some Bewicks, on "largest imperial paper"; and a number of first editions of English classics, printed in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries.

THE printing of the Bréviaire de Lescar is now finished. Distant subscribers are invited to give directions to M. l'Abbé Dubarrat, Aumonier du Lycée, Pau, how the volume should be sent to them. The price of the few remaining copies is raised from 20 to 30 francs.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have begun their monthly re-issue of the "Golden Treasury" with a new edition of the volume which gave its name to the series, Mr. F. T. Palgrave's Golden Treasury of the Best Songs and Lyrical Poems in the English Language; for such is the full title of this familiar book, which first appeared exactly thirty years ago to a month, and which has probably circulated more widely than any anthology in any language. Our own copy, dated 1870, calls itself "thirty-first thousand." The new edition follows, of course, the revision of last year, which we know only in a handsome crown octavo form. It can now be obtained in the old form, fitted for the pocket, at half-a-crown net, in all the glory of new type, and with a fresh device on the cover. We observe that, in the notes, the Royal George is now stated (correctly) to have sunk at Spithead, and not (as before) in Portsmouth Harbour.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

WE learn from Nature that, in response to a memorial numerously signed by leading mathematicians of the two English universities, and by eminent members of the French Académie des Sciences, the delegates of the Clarendon Press have informed Prof. Sylvester that they will be prepared to bear the expense of publishing in quarto a complete edition of his mathematical works.

AT the June Commencement, held last week, the University of Dublin conferred honorary degrees upon those personages named in the ACADEMY of last week; and on the same occasion conferred the new degrees of Doctor of Science and Doctor of Literature for the first time—the former upon Prof. Emerson Reynolds and Prof. Cunningham, the latter upon Mr. Purser.

SOON after Prof. Kennedy's death, Prof. Mayor invited subscriptions for the purchase of a bust of him by Mr. Henry Wiles, to whom Prof. Kennedy had just previously given sittings, with a view to its presentation to the University. Up to the present, only about £30 has been promised, out of a total estimated sum of £150; and Prof. Hughes, as hon. treasurer, has issued an appeal for further support. The following Greek lines have been written by Prof. Jebb, as an inscription for the pedestal of the bust:

Παλλάδι καὶ Φοῖβῳ πεφιλημένους ἔχορον ἡῶρου, καῦρος ἔων, Κάμου παρ δονάκισσι κλέος· εἰς δ' ἄνδρας τελευτᾶ σ' ἔθρρους εἶδε Σαθρίνη μᾶλλον ἀεὶ σοφίας ἄνθ' α δρεπτόμενον.
ἡραλέον δὲ πάλιν θρέπτειρὰ σ' ἔδξατο Γράντη, στέμμα καλὸν πολιάς θεῖσά σοι ἀμφὶ κόμας.

MR. LESLIE STEPHEN, Mr. Justice Romer (both of whom were formerly fellows), and Mr. William Walton have been elected honorary fellows of Trinity College, Cambridge.

THE committee appointed by the Hebdomadal Council at Oxford, to consider how the University might best assist in the promotion of agricultural education, with a special view to the needs of County Councils, have submitted a much more modest report than that which has met with approval at Cambridge. It is urged that the efforts of the University should, in the first instance, be directed to the provision of an adequate supply of persons qualified to be lecturers or teachers, who should also possess credentials of practical acquaintance with the details of farming and farm-life; and it is suggested that the duties and emoluments of the Sibthorpean professorship of rural economy, which is at present vacant, should be revised, so as to render this chair the centre of agricultural education within the University.

MR. A. A. KANTHACK, of London University, who is at present at work at Simla as one of the members of the Leprosy Commission, has been elected to the John Lucas Walker studentship in pathology at Cambridge. The managers of the fund have also granted £60 to Mr. E. H. Hankin, of St. John's College, to meet the cost of bacteriological apparatus required by him for his researches.

THE managers of the Craven fund at Cambridge have made a grant of £40 to E. F. Benson, of King's College, for excavations at Chester with a view to collecting Roman inscriptions; and also a grant of £40 to F. B. Baker, of Christ's College, for archaeological study in connexion with the British School at Athens.

TO the programme already announced for the summer meeting of university extension students at Oxford, we may add that Mr. H. Morse Stephens will give a lecture on "The Study of the French Revolution."

THE annual meeting of the Museums Association will be held at Cambridge from Tuesday to Thursday of next week. The University has specially placed at their disposal the new lecture-room for human anatomy and physiology, and such rooms adjoining as may be found convenient.

IT seems noteworthy that, out of six first classes in the honour school of theology at Oxford, two were obtained by students of Mansfield College, though not so recognised in the official list.

MR. D. G. RITCHIE, of Jesus College, has contributed an article on the teaching of political science at Oxford to the current number of the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science.

Correction.—More than one correspondent has called our attention to a bad blunder in a note in the ACADEMY of last week concerning Cambridge graduates. The figures there quoted refer to the ordinary or "poll" degree, not to the honour examinations.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

LONDON NIGHTS.

I.

Going to Hammersmith.

THE train through the night of the town,
Through a blackness broken in twain
By the sudden finger of streets;
Lights, red, yellow, and brown,
From curtain and window-pane,
The flashing eyes of the streets.
Night, and the rush of the train,
A cloud of smoke through the town,
Scaring the life of the streets;
And the leap of the heart again,
Out into the night, and down
The dazzling vista of streets!

II.

From King's Bench Walk.

THE grey and misty night,
Slim trees that hold the night among
Their branches, and, along
The vague Embankment, light on light.
The sudden, racing lights!
I can just hear, distinct, aloof
The gaily clattering hoof
Beating the rhythm of festive nights.
The gardens to the weeping moon
Sigh back the breath of tears.
O the refrain of years on years
'Neath the weeping moon!

ARTHUR SYMONS.

OBITUARY.

R. H. MAJOR, F.S.A.

WE have to record the death of Mr. Richard Henry Major, which took place at his residence in Holland-road, Kensington, on June 25. He was in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

Since his retirement, owing to ill-health, from the British Museum, in 1880, Mr. Major's name has not been much before the public, though it is stated that he occupied his later years with a work of Biblical investigation, which will shortly be published. But the best of his life was devoted to geographical research, as keeper of the maps and charts in the national collection, as one of the founders of the Hakluyt Society, and as honorary secretary of the Royal Geographical Society for sixteen years.

THE second volume published by the Hakluyt Society (1849) was Major's translation of Select Letters of Columbus, with original documents relating to the discovery of the New World, of which a second edition appeared in 1870. Two years later (1851), this was followed by William Strachey's Historie of Travaile into Virginia Britannia, edited from the original MS. in the British Museum; and, after another interval of two years (1852) by a translation of Baron Sigismund's Rerum Muscoviticarum Commentarii, being the earliest known account of Russia in the sixteenth century. In 1859, he edited India in the Fifteenth Century: a collection of narratives of voyages to India in the century preceding the Portuguese discovery of the Cape of Good Hope, from Latin, Persian, Russian, and Italian sources; in 1860, Early Indications of Australia: a collection of documents showing the early discoveries of Australia to the time of Captain Cook; in 1871, The Book of the Conquest and Conversion of the Canarians in 1492; and finally, in 1873, The Voyages of the Zeni—two Venetian brothers who penetrated to the Northern seas in the fourteenth century—which won for him the rank of Commendatore from the King of Italy. In addition, Mr. Major wrote introductions to other issues of the Hakluyt Society; and he also published two books (1868 and 1877) upon the life and discoveries of Prince Henry of Portugal, surnamed the Navigator.

THE death is also announced of Miss Anne Mozley, who edited the Letters of her brother, the Oxford professor, in 1884; and whose performance of that task so commended her to Cardinal Newman that he chose her to edit his own Correspondence while in the English Church.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Expositor for July breathes a restful spirit appropriate to the season. Dr. Plummer has a persuasive essay on the advance of Christ in sofia; "there is such a thing as presumptuous reverence" is a happy remark. Prof. Milligan continues his series of articles on the Resurrection of the Dead (1 Cor. xv. 50-52). Mr. d'Arcy, Dr. Cox, and Mr. Murphy expound various New Testament passages; and Mr. F. C. Conybeare presents to us some fragments of a pre-Hieronymian Latin version of the Bible, derived from the Quaestiones super Genesim, edited by Justinianus Genuensis at Paris in 1520.

WE would briefly call attention to the Reminiscences of Sir Richard Burton, contributed to Temple Bar by his niece, Miss Stisted, who is able to speak from continuous knowledge extending over nearly forty years. The picture she draws of him will be new to the public, though not to his friends—a sensitive nature, schooled by experience to endure disappointments, but never soured at heart, always ready to sympathise with the petty concerns of others, and "marvellously sweet-tempered about trifles."

A SUPPOSED DANTE DISCOVERY.

WE have been requested by Signor Carducci to reprint the following letter, concerning an alleged discovery of the original MS. of the Divina Commedia, which he addressed in the first instance to the Gazzetta dell' Emilia of Bologna:

"I periodici stranieri (ultimamente la inglese ACADEMY del 6 giugno) seguitano a riferire, aspettanti, una meravigliosa notizia, che i nostri giornali si affrettarono di propalare a mezzo il maggio passato: la scoperta, cioè d' un quasi originale della Commedia di Dante, d' un codice, che, per avere appartenuto alla famiglia Allighieri o essere stato scritto a istanza d' un Allighieri, devesi credere sia la copia diretta dell' originale autografo della Commedia.

"Mettiamo un po' d' acqua nel vino, in famiglia. "Il codice della Braidense di Milano, portante nel fregio della prima pagina manoscritta lo stemma degli Allighieri, uno scudetto partito d' oro e di nero con fascia d' argento a traverso, è noto, e fu già descritto dal De Batines nella sua grande Bibliografia dantesca (1845-48).

"Non è che uno dei soliti Danti del cento, cioè una delle molte copie della Commedia fatte da un Francesco di ser Nardo da Barberino, del quale si contava che con cento Danti ch'egli scrisse marito non so quante figliuole. Si chiamavano quei del cento, e Vincenzo Borghini fino dal secolo decimosesto avvertiva 'sono ragionevoli, non però ottimi.' Di quei che restano a nostra conoscenza il più in su d' età è il trivulziano, trascritto nel 1337; il più in giù, il laurenziano, del 1345. Gli studi del prof. Umberto Marchesini nel Bullettino della società dantesca hanno sparso molta luce su tal gruppo di codici.

"Ora, ripetiamo, il codice Braidense, per il sesto, per la forma della scrittura, per la lezione, appartiene alle copie di cotesto gruppo. Tra le quali una ve n' ha, il codice Riccardiano 1010, già descritto nel Catalogo della Esposizione dantesca del 1865, che presenta proprio a piede della prima pagina lo stesso stemma che è nel codice Braidense, lo scudetto, cioè, partito d' oro e di nero, con fascia d' argento a traverso.

"Dunque?
"Dunque, per cotesto benedetto stemma, d' originali della Commedia ne avremmo due. E come i codici scritti da quel di Barberino hanno tutti la stessa lezione, e come di questi codici ce n' è qualche diecina, troppa grazia, Sant' Antonio.

"Ma come e perchè uno stemma, figurato alla meglio o alla peggio in un fregio di prima pagina, deve importare derivazione dall' originale di Dante o pertinenza degli Allighieri?

"O non potè essere stato messo lì, dall' amanuense fiorentino, per corredo d' illustrazione blasonica al maggior nome della famiglia Allighieri, come, per esempio, Antonio Panizzi fece imprimere lo stemma de' Boiardi nel frontispizio ai Sonetti e Canzone di Matteo Maria Boiardo da lui riedite in Londra nel 1835? O non potè per avventura quello stemma essere anche d' altra famiglia che degli Allighieri?

"GIOSUÈ CARDUCCI."

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- CLÉDAT, Rutebeuf. Paris: Hachette. 2 fr.
DESCHAMPS, L. Histoire de la question coloniale en France. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
KRAUTH, Th., u. F. S. MEYER. Das Schlosserbuch. Leipzig: Seemann. 18 M.
LANCZKORNSKI, K. Graf. Rund um die Erde. 1868-9. Geschautes u. Gedachtes. Stuttgart: Cotta. 10 M.
PAUKERT, F. Die Zimmergotik in Deutsch-Tyrol. III. Leipzig: Seemann. 12 M.
REQUIN, L'abbé. Origines de l'imprimerie en France (Avignon, 1444). Paris: Cercle de la Librairie. 2 fr.
SCHINZ, H. Deutsch-Südwest-Afrika. Oldenburg: Schulze. 18 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- ACTA martyrum et sanctorum (syriac). Tom. II. Martyres chaldæe et persæ. Leipzig: Harrassowitz. 24 M.
DICTIONNAIRE de la Bible, p.p. F. Vigouroux. Fasc. 1. Paris: Letouzey. 5 fr.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- AKTEN, vaticanische, zur deutschen Geschichte in der Zeit Kaiser Ludwigs d. Bayern. Innsbruck: Wagner. 30 M.
COMPAIN, L. Etude sur Geoffroi de Vendôme. Paris: Bouillon. 7 fr. 50 c.
DUMAS, J. B. La Guerre sur les communications allemandes en 1870. Paris: Berger-Levrault. 7 fr. 50 c.
FICKER, J. Untersuchungen zur Erbfolge der ostgermanischen Rechte. 1. Bd. Innsbruck: Wagner. 16 M.
GAMBETTA, L'con. Dépêches, circulaires, décrets etc. de. T. 2. Paris: Charpentier. 7 fr. 50 c.
GESCHICHTSQUELLEN, tirolische. III. Innsbruck: Wagner. 6 M. 80 Pf.
HORNING, W. Dr. Johann Pappus v. Lindau, 1549-1610. Strassburg: Heitz. 6 M.
KRONKS, F. Ritter v. Aus dem Tagebuch Erzherzog Johanns v. Oesterreich 1810-1815. Innsbruck: Wagner. 4 M. 80 Pf.
MARBOT, Mémoires du Général Baron de. II. Madrid: Essling; Tours-Védras. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
MEYER, O. Zum Kirchenrechte d. Reformationsjahrhunderts. Hannover: Meyer. 5 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- GUENTHER, S. Lehrbuch der physikalischen Geographie. Stuttgart: Enke. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- BARON, Ch. Le pronom relatif et la conjonction en grec et principalement dans la langue homérique. 5 fr. De Platonis dicendi genere. 2 fr. Paris: Picard.
NEBERT, R. Zur Geschichte d. Speyrer Kanzleisprache. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 25 Pf.
SCHILD, P. Brienzer Mundart. 1. Tl. Die allgemeinen Lautgesetze u. Vokalismus. Basel: Sallmann. 2 M. 80 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TWO PASSAGES IN THE SAXON CHRONICLE.
C. C. C., Oxford: June 26, 1891.

Some time ago you allowed me to offer to the readers of the ACADEMY an explanation of the difficult word tenserie, which occurs in two MSS. of the Saxon Chronicle at the year 1056. Of the correctness of that explanation I feel tolerably confident. I wish I could feel the same confidence in the solution of another difficulty which I am about to offer.

The passage occurs in one of the last entries (A.D. 1137) of the Peterborough or Laud Chronicle (Bodl. Laud. 636), and is well known to historical students. Speaking of the aristocratic and feudal criminals of Stephen's reign, the chronicler says (p. 262 of Earle's edition): "Hi leiden gieldes on the tunes æure unwill and clepeden it tenserie"; i.e., "they laid taxes on the towns continually and called it tenserie." The difficulty lies in the word tenserie. This has been commonly regarded as a mistake for censerie, for which a definition is quoted by Thorpe from Roquefort: "Rente seigneuriale et foncière, dont un héritage est chargé envers le seigneur du fief." But the fact is that this definition belongs in Roquefort to the word cen, and not to censerie. This latter word does not exist in Roquefort at all, although he gives some fifteen or sixteen derivatives of the Latin cenarius. Of the Latin cenarius or cenaria, Ducange gives only two undoubted examples. It would seem, therefore, that we need better evidence of the existence of the word censerie before we can use it to explain the passage before us. Moreover, the words "hi clepeden it tenserie" seem to imply that the word was a special term invented by these miscreants, and not an ordinary technical expression such as censerie, if it existed, would be. I believe the only alteration which the MS. requires is to separate the word tenserie into two—tens serie, meaning tempus serenum, "fair weather," or "good time." The expression would then be a bitter gibe on the part of these robbers at the miseries of their victims, and would be an extreme instance of the tendency to disguise obnoxious taxes under euphemistic names such as "benevolences," &c. The expression tens seri in the literal sense of "fair weather" occurs in the Anglo-Norman metrical Life of Edward the Confessor (ed. Luard, p. 147, line 4330): "Quand il ad vent e tens seri"; and it was this which suggested to me the present explanation.

While on the subject of the Chronicle, I may call attention to another point. In A.D. 1040 it is said that the payment made to Hardacnut's fleet was eight marks "æt hamelan" (MSS. D and E), literally "per thole, or rowlock"—i.e., per man. MS. C reads "æt hæ"; and this is evidently regarded by Thorpe as a mere error, for he puts in the margin "Sic, MS." But just as hamela is the Icelandic hamla, a rowing thole or rowlock; so hæ is the Icelandic hár, having exactly the same signification. A compound of the word, há-sæta, lit., a thole sitter, i.e., a rower, occurs A.D. 1052, MS. E., answering to the Icelandic há-seti.

CHARLES PLUMMER.

OLD-ENGLISH "EFENEHP."

London: June 29, 1891.

Prof. Hempl's ingenious explanation of this puzzling word is excluded by the context. It is necessary for him to assume that the corn was still standing in the fields. But then the grazing of standing corn would be rather an unusual thing; and it is not clear that corn is the object of fretton, which may be here used intransitively.

It is obvious that the events here chronicled occurred late in the year—in fact, just before winter. The writer says that the Danes gathered the army in question from East Anglia and Northumbria before winter (onforan winter). Then there is the time occupied in the hurried march to Chester, with the view, apparently, of taking up their winter quarters there. The English army follow at their heels, and besiege them for two days, burning all the corn, and grazing “on ælcra efenehðe.” Now this corn could hardly have been standing so late in the year as this. The Old-English winter commenced on November 7 (see the Menologium, Berhtferð’s Handboc, &c.). The chronicler says that these events at Chester occurred “about twelve months” after the Danes came hither over sea. They left Louvain, where they had wintered in 891-2, in the autumn of 892,† and marched to Boulogne in order to embark for England (Annal. Vedast., in Pertz, SS. i. 528). As they did not move until the famine caused by the failure of the harvest abroad became felt, it was probably late in the autumn or early in the winter of 892 when they arrived in England. Indeed, so late was it in the year that the Chronicle records it as the first event of the following † year. A year from this would bring the events at Chester into the autumn or early winter of 893 (= 894 of the Chronicle). We may, therefore, take it that the corn in question was not standing corn, but was corn that they had provided for their winter provisions. This is confirmed by the first entry for 895, where we read that the Danes “soon after” the brief siege of Chester, but in this year, went from Wirral into North Wales, because they could not remain in their quarters, as they had been deprived of the cattle and corn that they had obtained in their harryings. This is undoubtedly the cattle and corn captured and burnt by the English in the preceding year; and it is, therefore, the corn that Prof. Hempl assumes to be growing on the “table-lands” or “fields,” if we can admit this evolution of meaning.

This corn must have been seized by the English outside the walls. It would probably be in the wagons wherein it had been brought.‡ If the passage means that the English fed their horses with this corn, as Prof. Hempl reads it, the meaning required for efenehð is “cart,” “wagon,” or, perhaps, “barn.” The explanations of the word as “plain” or “neighbourhood” are equally unsatisfactory; for, as the English besieged them for two days only, they could hardly have grazed all the pastures and meadows within reach. A few days grazing would scarcely render all the feeding-grounds in the neighbourhood useless for that season.¶

* Lappenberg is altogether at sea in regard to these events, ascribing the action of the English to the Danes.

† The Chronicle is a year in advance of the real date from 878 to 896 (see Steenstrup, Normannerne, ii. 74.)

‡ The year is probably reckoned from January 1. The other movements recorded prior to the march to Chester, must have taken up some considerable time.

§ In 891 the same “Normanni” surprised a convoy near Aachen, and “plurima plaustra et vehicula, in quibus alimenta exercitui deferebantur, capiunt”; Regino (Pertz, SS., i. 602).

¶ As the word is copied into the other MSS., we are precluded from suggesting that efenehð is a blundered form of some compound of hýð “spoil,” &c. This MS. writes, in 893, senno for festenne; but the other MSS. correct this.

The Latin chroniclers unfortunately shed no light upon the meaning of this word. We have lost Asser at this date, and Florence of Worcester renders the passage “segetes partim igne comburunt, partim sonipedibus distribuunt.” Henry of Huntingdon is even more useless, for he says: “ibi obsessi sunt, et tanta fame afflicti sunt quod etiam equos suos comederent.” He has evidently confused the events at Chester with the narrative concerning Buttingtun (“þá wæron hie mid metelieste gewægde, and hæfdon micelne dæl þara horsa freten”), misled, apparently, by the resemblance of freten to fretton.

W. H. STEVENSON.

London: June 27, 1891.

Prof. Hempl’s suggestion, published in today’s ACADEMY, is, I think, untenable. I cannot see any objection, either on the ground of form or meaning, to the explanation now commonly adopted; and, on the other hand, Prof. Hempl’s proposed substitute for it is unsatisfactory on both grounds. Efennehþu would be the regular abstract substantive from efenehah* (= convivius, if I may imitate Etmüller’s Latin). I am not aware that this adjective is recorded, but its existence is rendered probable by M.E. efenehæta, “neighbour.” Prof. Hempl thinks that the current explanation does not make sense of the passage. To me it appears that the rendering, “in every neighbouring district” gives just the sense required. Of course, Prof. Hempl is aware that the abstracts in -þu do not invariably retain their original abstract sense; indeed, he himself considers that the word is used concretely.

I do not think that Prof. Hempl’s hypothesis accounts satisfactorily for the double n which appears in three of the four texts. The analogy of onnettan is not to the purpose, the gemination (or the assimilation of the h) being in that case accounted for by the obvious fact that when the word was formed the prefix bore the accent, so that the n was immediately preceded by a stressed vowel. With regard to the meaning, it is not very likely that the hypothetical efenehþu* could mean “table-land” (neither ebental nor Hochebene affording any real analogy), nor that this sense, if it existed, would have developed into that of “field.” And the interpretation which Prof. Hempl manages to elicit by a chain of three unlikely hypotheses is, after all, not quite so well suited to the context as that which is arrived at by a simple acceptance of the best attested documentary form.

HENRY BRADLEY.

MR. FREEMAN’S “SICILY.”

Settrington Rectory, York: June 29, 1891.

I will reply as briefly as possible to Mr. Freeman’s letter, which would have been equally effective if it had been less prolix and more courteous.

He has obscured the main issues by the dust raised over matters of small importance. The questions of chief significance are these:

1. Were the Sicels, as he affirms, a Latin people speaking “Latin, or something which did not differ more from Latin than one Greek dialect differed from another?” This question he does not discuss, but silently surrenders it by now calling the language Opican instead of Latin. He leaves unanswered my arguments as to their race and language, and instead he attacks me at great length for a careless phrase about the Carian name of Gela. It would have been better if I had simply quoted the remark of Curtius as to “the Carian name of the River Gela.”

2. I alleged that impartiality is difficult to an historian possessed by political bias or ethnic hatreds. These he defends and glories in; so there is an end of the matter, save that his book must be used with caution.

3. He acknowledges that he uses the term “barbarian” in a sense which it does not bear in English, and which would class as “barbarous” some of the most civilised and cultured peoples of antiquity. So to misuse an English word is in technical phrase a “barbarism.”

4. He accuses me of being a lover of barbarians and a hater of the Greek demos. I am conscious of no historical loves or hatreds, but confess to being a lover of impartiality and fair play.

5. Mr. Freeman neither denies, justifies, nor retracts the serious charge of systematically representing Moloch as the name of the Phœnician deity.

6. As to his frankly expressed contempt for what he calls the -ologies, meaning, apparently, those sciences which he has not studied, nothing need be said; such contempts are not uncommon.

7. I regret that Mr. Freeman should have taken so seriously my little fancy sketch of his crusading laureate posing as an oriental sultan. The introduction of mitre and dalmatic as an appropriate and convenient costume for harem wear might have warned him that the sketch was merely a caricature of his own composite battle-scene in the “Eternal Strife,” in which a mixed company of all periods and creeds have been grouped so closely in the melée of the “Holy Crusade” as to render it difficult to distinguish between Crusader and Crusadee.

8. Mr. Freeman bids me study the opening chapters of Herodotus in order to comprehend the real meaning of the “Eastern Question” and the “Eternal Strife.” I confess I had much to learn, and I know and will carefully bear in mind that the “Eternal Cause” originated in the strife for the possession of those flighty damsels, Io, Hellen, and Europa, whom I had imagined were the mythological eponyms of Ionians, Hellenes, and Europeans. The “Cause” is indeed “Eternal” if it really began in the cloudland peopled by dawn maidens, solar heroes, wandering planets, and constellations of the zodiac sloping slowly to the west. In that case the “Eternal Strife” can only end with the decease of the deathless Spread-Eagle of the boundless West, “whose Home is in the Setting Sun.”

9. I will not occupy valuable space by answering sundry charges based on errors of the press, misquotations of my words, misconstructions of my obvious meaning, or suggestions that I secretly hold all sorts of absurd and impossible opinions. In one case, however, Mr. Freeman has made a point, though with needless vehemence. In referring to the second battle of Himera memory played me a trick, and I introduced an allusion to a third battle of Himera, fought at another of the various places of that name. I also admit that, in speaking of the first battle of Himera, it would have been more correct to say that it gave the Greeks “supremacy” rather than “dominion” in the island. For these corrections I tender my thanks to Mr. Freeman.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

A CONTRADICTION.

Salò, Lago di Garda: June 29, 1891.

A short time ago I received a copy of a newspaper called the Bazaar, Exchange, and Mart, in which, under the head of “The Literary World” I read that:

“The Queen of Roumania has a confidante in the Countess Evelyn Martinengo Cesaresco, and the pair get up at four o’clock in the morning, winter and summer alike, to write ballads and talk Shakspeare. . . . Both Queen and Countess are considerably in advance of the ordinary hobbyite, and do not drop their ideas as soon as formed. The latter has written an exceedingly clever 'Study of Folk Songs,' of which an English edition was published in 1886 by George Redway."

On my asking the editor of the Bazaar on what authority the above statement was made, he replied that he could only say that "it had appeared in a number of well-known London and provincial newspapers." More he did not know.

As I have never seen Her Majesty the Queen of Roumania in my life, I can only suppose that someone has been making free use of my name and of the authorship of my little book on Folk-songs. I wish, therefore, to give an unqualified contradiction to the whole paragraph.

EVELYN MARTINENGO CESARESCO.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, July 6, 5 p. m. Royal Institution: General Monthly Meeting.
9 p. m. Institution of Electrical Engineers: Conversazione.
WEDNESDAY, July 8, 8 p. m. Botanic: Evening Fête.
SATURDAY, July 11, 3.45 p. m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.
THURSDAY, July 9, 4 p. m. Ladies' Sanitary Association: "Progressive Sanitation," I., by Dr. W. B. Richardson.

SCIENCE.

Introduction to the History of Language. By H. A. Strong, W. S. Logeman, and B. I. Wheeler. (Longmans.)

THE present volume is a singular testimony to the popular qualities of a book written certainly with little regard for popularity—the well known Principien der Sprachgeschichte of Paul. Some three years ago a translation of the work was published by Prof. Strong, which is shortly to appear in a second edition; and now we are offered a volume of similar size and form, which professes to be little more than an exposition of Paul from the point of view of the English student—a reproduction of the same matter in less technical language, and with illustrations drawn mainly from tongues with which the English student is thought to be familiar, viz., his own, of all periods, together with Latin, Greek, and French. Paul himself has, it is true, drawn largely upon these sources, and there are accordingly considerable portions of this volume which differ only verbally from the corresponding passages in the translation; some passages, again, in which Paul deals with peculiarly German phenomena are here necessarily ignored; but the large residue of examples from German, which illustrate widespread phenomena of language, are here represented by a very rich collection of corresponding examples from English of all periods, largely derived from Maetzner no doubt, but for which cordial recognition is due to the authors, and in particular, we suppose, to Dr. Logeman, himself an accomplished Anglist, though his brother is, perhaps, better known to readers of the ACADEMY. The third author, Prof. B. I. Wheeler, whose short but full paper on Analogy is one of the best of recent contributions to the subject, has also added a valuable essay on "American-English" to Paul's relatively meagre chapter on the Schriftsprache. The book is, it is true, by no means faultless in detail, nor has it, as a whole, the power of execution which, for all his scorn of fine writing, animates the neglected periods of Paul. No scholar will substitute it for the original on his handiest shelf; but neither can he by any means afford to neglect it.

In what follows we propose to notice, in a summary way, some points which we should like to see otherwise. An important paragraph is added (p. 222) to Paul's chapter xiii. (on Verschiebungen in der Gruppierung der etymologisch zusammenhängenden Wörter) dealing with our verbs in -ate. These verbs have been satisfactorily explained by Dr. Murray as due to the equation: infinitive = adjective = participle, which gained vogue from such examples as M.E. warm by "to warm," and content, divers, from "contentus," "diversus." Hence from desolat, &c., "to desolate." While, however, admitting this to be "lucid and apparently adequate," our authors adduce another "fact which has demonstrably aided in the formation of the enormous number of verbs in -ate," viz., the existence "from the fourteenth century onward" of "such pairs as action (from 1330) to act (1384), affliction (1303) from to afflict (1393), adjection from to adject, &c.; in other words, the equation was, action: to act (&c.) = desolation: to desolate (&c.). Now, in the first place, these verbs, with the exception of "to act," are themselves formed from participles of the form "afflict," &c., and are, therefore, the result of the very phenomenon which they are introduced to explain; secondly, the verb "to act," which, as not having an extant participle act in M.E., would no doubt prove the contrary, is not entitled to the startling antiquity attributed to it, being quoted by Murray first among the Latinisms of Henryson, and then not until the playwrights of Elizabeth. Thirdly, the rash assertion is made in a note, by way of enhancing this resemblance of the forms "object," "objection," &c., that "formerly the ti in such words was pronounced as tea and not as sh." The t of such words has, however, precisely the same standing as, e.g., the b in "debt"; in other words, it is a purely "learned" spelling which no one, learned or unlearned, ever pronounced. Chaucer's spelling -cion implies -s, and its gradual replacement in the sixteenth century by -tion was merely the use of a new symbol for the same phonetic fact.

Another addition to Paul (p. 275) contains a hypothesis which, though advanced with great modesty, seems to us too plausible to be passed by. It is suggested that the common use of a preposition at the end of a sentence ("a place we have heard of," &c.) may be "a remnant of Celtic origin," and parallel to such usages in Welsh as efe yw'r ger yr ysgrienaist ato. On this, we have to remark (1) that a Celtic origin is made dubious by the occurrence of the same idiom in Danish, where it is colloquially just as current as in English: any random page of Ibsen supplies examples, e.g., in the Vildanden: "og den vildanden, som De holder så inderlig af, den vilde Deres far vri' halsen om pi." (2) The Celtic idiom is no doubt old, though it is rather Cymric than Gaelic; it is common in the Mabinogion (yr koet y daethost trwy- daw, "the wood you came through (it)," &c.; while in Irish the preposition is more idiomatically prefixed to the relative. Zeuss ('940) gives, however, a few examples of the idiom. But since the Celtic idiom requires the preposition to be followed by the pronoun (trwy-daw, at-af, &c.), it is plainly not, like the Scandinavian idiom, an exact parallel at all. (3) The development of the modern idiom can be explained from English itself. For the regular Old-English arrangement is of the type (æt sing æt ðis spell ymb is), which still remains, as an occasional poetical archaism, in Chaucer (as in "Man of Lawe," 121: "fader hath he noon that I of wot"); that is, the preposition immediately precedes the verb. The change from this to "that I wot of" was, no doubt, simply a case of the general change in English word-order by which the verb attached itself to the subject, and was therefore withdrawn from that position at the end of the sentence which was once everywhere normal in the Germanic languages, which in O.E. was still usual in the subordinate, and not uncommon in the main, sentence, and which is obligatory in the former in the German of to-day.

In some cases the German illustrations of Paul might, we think, be more fully or more closely paralleled. Thus, the important paragraph (Principien, p. 34) illustrating certain features in the treatment of loan-words, chiefly from O.H.G., is in large part ignored, as if English had nothing of the kind to show. Yet it is easy to illustrate every point from O.E. Loan-words borrowed at different periods may differ owing to intervening sound-development either in the language by which, or in that from which, they are borrowed, or in both. Thus, as to the latter case, the development of Latin v (=u) to Romance v has left traces, not only in O.H.G. win by later fers (versus), but equally in O.E. win, and Wintanceastre < Venta, by later bréftan < breviare. As to the former, the capital distinction between words borrowed before and after the H.G. Lautverschiebung has its analogue in the grouping effected by the English i-umlaut of the seventh century. Thus if O.H.G. tempal (tempium) must be younger than ziagil (tegula), so must O.E. martyr (not merthyr as in W. merthyr) or ferferfigie (not -figgie) be younger than, e.g., mylen (molina), pytt (puteus). Cf. Pogatscher, p. 126.

The dissertation on American-English in the last chapter is of great value; but some of the phenomena of dialectology may be better illustrated from the more clearly defined sound-relations of, say, Southern and Northern English. Thus, the proportional analogy which leads a Low-German when speaking High-German to say zeller for teller (Paul) or, conversely, when speaking Platt to say tinsen for zinsen (L. ensus), may be paralleled by such forms in the Anglicising Scottish of the fifteenth century as ton (for tan, taken) rhyming with gon, Sc. gan. On p. 389, the "partial assimilations of a borrowed word to its original" (Jude to Jude from Judaeus; trache to drache from draco) is not well paralleled by honor, &c., where the modification affects only the spelling, and is moreover not "partial," but complete. Cases in point are

SCIENCE NOTES.

PROF. RÜCKER will deliver one of the evening discourses during the Cardiff meeting of the British Association, and he has taken for his subject "Electrical Stress."

IN connexion with the Ladies' Sanitary Association, Dr. W. B. Richardson will deliver three public lectures on "Progressive Sanitation, Moral, Domestic, and Individual," on July 9, 14, and 21, at 4 p.m., in the hall of the Medical Society, 11 Chandos-street, Cavendish-square.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have issued a new edition of the lectures on Popular Astronomy, which Sir George Airy, the retired astronomer-royal, delivered at Ipswich forty-three years ago. As stated in the Introduction to the first edition, the object of these lectures was "to explain to intelligent persons the principles on which the instruments of an observatory are constructed (omitting all details, so far as they are merely subsidiary), and the principles on which the observations made with these instruments are treated for deduction of the distances and weights of the bodies of the solar system, and of a few stars (omitting all minutiae of formulae and all troublesome details of calculation)."

A fifth edition was published in 1866, with certain modifications and additions, made by Mr. Stirling, with the author's authority. Reprints of that edition were demanded about seven times in twenty years; and now a general revision has been made by Mr. H. H. Turner, of the Greenwich Observatory, whose principle has been to introduce as few alterations as possible, except so far as concerns the method of determining the solar parallax by transits of Venus.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE June number of the Indian Antiquary (Kegan Paul & Co.), which has arrived in this country with unusual speed, contains a paper by Prof. Kielhorn on the fragments of Indian dramas preserved as stone inscriptions at Ajmere, to which he first called attention in the ACADEMY of January 17. As he then anticipated, he has already been able to obtain some more fragments, which give the name of the author of one of the plays as Somadeva. The author of the other play is none other than the great king Vigharajadeva himself, known in history for his victories over the Muhammadans. His play is dated in the year 1153 A.D., with which date the characters of the Nagari writing correspond. The stones first discovered contained thirty-seven lines of one play and forty lines of the other; the new stones add thirty-eight lines and forty-one lines. Both plays are written, as usual, in Sanskrit, with Prakrit dialects for certain subordinate characters. According to Prof. Pischel, one of these Prakrit dialects agrees more closely with the rules laid down by the contemporary grammarian Hemachandra than in any of the known plays. Prof. Kielhorn prints a Romanised version of the two original fragments: for the others he requires further rubbings. The stones, it is curious to observe, have been built into a mosque. The same number prints the conclusion of the Gulabnama, or chronicle of Gulab Singh, Raja of Kashmir, which is interesting as giving the native version of the transactions connected with the Sikh War. Gulab Singh died just after the outbreak of the mutiny; the birth of his grandson Partab Singh, the present Raja, is here recorded as having taken place in 1850.

BARU GAUR DAS BYSACK, whose paper upon an old Buddhist monastery near Calcutta of the time of Warren Hastings was noticed in a former number of the ACADEMY, has contributed another article to the Proceedings of the Bengal Asiatic Society on the names "Kālighāt" and "Calcutta." So far as we understand his argument, he will not allow that the latter name is derived from the former, partly for phonetic reasons, and partly because "no Hindu, not even the most ignorant, will corrupt, in hasty utterance, much less in writing, the name of such an universally worshipped deity as Kālī into Kālī or Kol." Neither of these arguments, however, would apply to a European corruption, afterwards adopted by the natives. Our author prefers to look for the etymology of "Calcutta" in the aboriginal tribe of Kols. Though we are not convinced by his reasoning, he deserves our thanks for the materials he has collected, especially that derived from Bengali MSS. and family traditions. We hope that he will be encouraged to continue his topographical researches among the documents of early Anglo-Indian history.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Clermont Ganneau communicated three inscriptions, dating from the first century A.D., which have recently been discovered near Jerusalem, beyond the Damascus gate, within a sepulchral cavern hewn out of the rock. They are cut upon stone ossuaries. The first is in Hebrew, שלום = schalom. This may either be the word "peace, health," or more probably a woman's name, Salome, for the covering of the ossuary is of the triangular form which, in the East, characterises female interment. The other two inscriptions are in Greek. One consists simply of a man's name, ΚΡΟΚΟΣ; the other is composed of three words, [ΙΩ] ΣΗΠΟΥ ΠΕΝΘΕΡΟΥ [ΔΡ]ΟΞΟΥ. If the last word is rightly read Δρόσος, it may be a variant of Δροῖσος, a name borne by many Jewish personages.

IN the new part of the Archivio Glottologico Italiano (which has now reached the twelfth volume), Prof. Ascoli explains the puzzling Ital. indérno as descending from a Latin induarinus*, induasino*-s, cognate with vānus (from vās-no*-s) and vāstus, vastare, devastare. The Old French endar is explained in like manner.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

ROYAL SOCIETY OF LITERATURE.—(Wednesday, June 24.)

DR. W. KNIGHTON, vice-president, in the chair.—A paper was read by Dr. Phénic, on "Etruscan and other Italian Dialects of pre-Roman Origin," which sought to establish that traces of such pre-Roman languages existed along certain well-ascertained trade routes, and were found still remaining in this country, and to a less extent in Scandinavia. The various exchange marts for merchandise were indicated by the double names of the Etruscan diety Tages, and Bel or Baal, and the amalgamation of the two names, as well as by other examples. Many hitherto unexplained words were indicated as being identical with recognised Etruscan inscriptions. The author of the paper has been during many years past investigating the subject on the various routes described, and in the rural parts of Italy. Phoenicians and Venetians alike got assistance from Britain against the Romans, and the Iceni in Britain were probably relatives or allies of both Phoenicians and Venetians. Andros, Anderona, Anderitum, Anderida, with many other varieties, were, and still are, common on the coasts of the Mediterranean in Spain, France, Britain, and Germany; Bal, Bel, Il are in the same way common in the counties of England and the provinces of the continent.—A discussion followed, in which the secretary and others took part.

VICTORIA INSTITUTE.—(Annual Meeting, Thursday, June 25.)

SIR G. GABRIEL STOKES, president, in the chair.—The hon. secretary, Capt. F. Petrie, read the report, from which it appeared that the number of members had now risen to slightly over 1400; some of the work of the session had been of a scientific nature, and some of a special character tending to show the error of those who sought to attack religion in the name of science. The President announced that, within the last few hours, a letter had been received from M. Naville, stating that he could not leave Geneva. He had, however, asked that the Rev. Dr. Wright might read it for him. M. Naville commenced by giving an account of the written and traditional records bearing upon the Exodus; he then noted the points in the route he had identified, and the arguments founded on the records which aided in this identification. Copies of a map of the district, which had been prepared by M. Naville, were circulated in the meeting, and showed the route he had traced up to Migdol by the Bitter Lakes. M. Naville showed from geological investigations that the Red Sea at the time of the Exodus extended a considerable distance north of the spot, and concluded by referring to the miracle of the passage of the Red Sea, and described circumstances which had come under his own notice showing that the influences described in Holy Writ as having been used by an overruling Providence would bring about the event.

FINE ART.

PROF. JEBB ON THE PROGRESS OF HELLENIC STUDIES.

We quote from the Times the following report of the address delivered by Prof. Jebb, as president, at the annual meeting of the Hellenic Society on June 22:

"It is the custom that at this annual meeting reference should be made to some of the more noteworthy incidents which have marked the course of Hellenic studies during the year. The account can make no attempt to be systematic or exhaustive; its aim is rather to bring a few salient points into a single view.

"The first place in such a survey is due to the exploration of ancient sites, whether the work has been actually performed within the past twelve months, or has first been published during that period. To begin with Greece proper, in Attica the eastern and north-eastern regions are those which have furnished the principal results. At Rhamnus, on the north-east coast, the Athenian Society of Archaeology has been clearing the precincts of the two temples. The larger of these was sacred to Nemesis; it has now been shown that the smaller was a temple of Themis, as had long ago been conjectured, from the fact that a marble throne, dedicated to her, had been found there (Leake, Jemi 2, 10). At Marathon the famous mound has been further explored; and the traditional view that it was the tomb of the Athenians who fell in the battle has been placed beyond doubt by the discovery of vases belonging to that period. At Velanideza on the east coast, and at some other places, prehistoric tumuli have been found. In Athens the principal work has consisted in excavating the greater part of a large Roman stoa, on the north side of the Acropolis, near the Tower of the Winds. In Euboea, members of the American School have been working at Eretria. An interesting theatre has been laid bare; among other discoveries are a stoa, and several tombs. One of these is the tomb which Dr. Waldstein conjectures to have been the family grave of Aristotle. The belief rests partly on an inscription, which, as restored, contains the name Ἀριστοτέλου; partly on some objects found in the tomb—viz., a pen and two styli of silver, and a statuette which seems to be that of a philosopher. Chalcis, where Aristotle spent his last days, is only a few miles distant. In the Peloponnese the centre of interest has been Megalopolis, where members of the British School have continued their work. The excavation of the theatre has now been completed, laying bare the orchestra, the seats (so far as preserved), the parodi, the scene-buildings, and the part of the stoa immediately adjoining. It now appears that the restoration suggested in the Journal of Hellenic Studies of 1890 must be modified in some respects. The raised stage which that restoration supposed was a stage to which a flight of six steps led up from the orchestra. The three lower rows of these steps exist; the three upper rows were conjecturally restored. But it has now been shown that the three lower rows, whether added in the fourth century or later, did not form part of the original plan. On the other hand, two of the three upper rows, which had been conjecturally restored, have been found. Thus the fact remains that the level of the orchestra was lower than the top of the steps. This justifies the English excavators in still holding that they are right on the main point—viz., that there was a raised stage in the fourth century, though it was not so high as they first supposed. Their view is not affected by another detail in which their former restoration has to be corrected. The wall which they believed to have been the back wall of the stage, containing the thresholds of three doors, is found to be of later construction. With regard to Dr. Dürpfeld's view, that the topmost step once supported columns, the explorers hold that the evidence is not strong; but they wish to await technical advice. Even if columns had stood there, however, the existence of a raised stage would not be disproved; the difference of levels would remain unchanged. The explorers hope to have the assistance of an architect next autumn; with his aid they propose to weigh the whole evidence, and to embody it in their final publication. Meanwhile they reasonably ask that judgment may be suspended. It remains to observe that the work at Megalopolis has not been confined to the theatre. On the opposite or northern side of the river Helisson, the Stoa Philippeios, which bounded the agora on the north, has been identified, and its plan has been determined. Another building, which almost certainly enclosed the temenos of Zeus Sôtêr, has been completely cleared. The explorers may well be congratulated on the progress which they have made in their difficult and important task. It has been carried on from the first by Mr. Ernest Gardner and Mr. W. Loring, who were joined last season by Mr. Richards and Mr. Milne. We may now turn to Asia Minor. The Journal of Hellenic Studies, vol. xi., No. 2 (October, 1890), contains Mr. J. Theodore Bent's interesting account of 'Recent Discoveries in Eastern Cilicia.' Among the sites identified by him is that of Hieropolis—Castabala, with its temple of Artemis Perasia. He also copied a large number of inscriptions. Mention is due likewise to the expedition of Prof. W. M. Ramsay, with Messrs. Hogarth and Headlam, into Pisidia, Isauria, and Cappadocia, supplementing Mr. Bent's work in the Kalykadnos valley, and carrying on new and important researches in the region of the Anti-Taurus. Here we may note with satisfaction that the work of the Austrian expedition in Asia Minor is prospering. The first fruits of it have appeared in vol. i. of Lanckoronski's splendid publication, Les Villes de la Pamphylie et de la Pisidie. It has been announced that Prince John of Lichtenstein has offered to the Academy of Vienna an annual sum of 5000 florins for five years in aid of these researches. At Salamis, in Cyprus, the English committee have continued their excavations, under the direction of Mr. Munro and Mr. Tubbs. Among the objects found has been a series of terra-cotta statuettes, with drapery painted in imitation of elaborate embroidery. We may recall the fact that two natives of Cyprus, Aeceras, and his son Helicon, are recorded as having excelled in the art of embroidery (Athenaeus, p. 48 b). With regard to Egypt, mention is due to Mr. Flinders Petrie's discoveries at Kahun, and elsewhere, showing that the earliest geometrical pottery, of the Mycenae type, occurs in Egypt as early as 1400 B.C., and is followed, about 1101 B.C., by the beginning of natural designs. Mr. Petrie's summary of these discoveries appeared in the Journal of Hellenic Studies for October last. He is disposed to think that a European civilization, little indebted to Asiatic lands, may have arisen before 2000 B.C. Such are some of the more notable points in the record of exploration during the year.

With respect to the literature of Hellenic studies, it must suffice to indicate a few characteristic features. First, we may notice some great works directly illustrative of archaeology. Such are the first volume of the Berlin Corpus of Sarcophagi Reliefs; the first instalment of the Sidon Sarcophagi by Hamdi Pasha and Th. Reinach; the Grave-Reliefs published by the Vienna Academy; Furtwängler's Olympian Bronzes (vol. iv. of the official publication). In a kindred province we have had Prof. W. M. Ramsay's Historical Geography of Asia Minor, published by the Royal Geographical Society; also Humann and Puchstein's Reisen in Klein-Asien und Nord-Syrien. In other departments of literature no event has excited so much interest as the publication by the British Museum, from the newly-found papyrus, of the Treatise on the Constitution of Athens. Those who have seen either the papyrus itself or the autotype facsimile can best appreciate the difficulty of the task imposed on Mr. F. G. Kenyon, who transcribed and edited the text. Great credit is due to him for his work, as has been cordially recognised on the continent and by competent opinion at home. As might have been foreseen, Aristotle's authorship has already been questioned; but thus much, at least, is certain—this is the treatise which passed in antiquity as his, and it was written either in his lifetime or soon after his death. It will be long, perhaps, before all the questions which the book raises will have been sifted; but, at any rate, it is a valuable addition to our knowledge of an important period. Another volume, shortly to be published by the Museum, will contain other texts from new papyri—including seven poems by the iambograph Herodas; part of a hitherto unknown oration, perhaps by Hyperides; a grammatical treatise ascribed to Tryphon; and collations of papyrus manuscripts of Isocrates De Pace, parts of the Iliad, &c. When we remember that fragments of the Phaëdo and of Euripides are to be added to the newly-found texts, it is apparent that the range of literature over which new light may be looked for from new papyri is a wide one; and it does not seem too sanguine to hope that Egypt may have more such gifts in store for us. At any rate, the experience of this year agreeably reminds us that a generation, in which some head masters are doubting whether Greek is really popular enough to deserve a continuance of their support, can still feel a ripple of excitement at the discovery of a new Greek classic—such a ripple as a similar occurrence might have sent through the Italy of Petrarch. But these are not the only literary discoveries which have been published during the last twelvemonth. Mr. W. Loring has edited in our Journal the new portion of the Edict of Diocletian, in a Greek version, found on a stone at Megalopolis. The date of the edict was 301 A.D.; its object was to fix the maximum prices for various commodities. The prices are reckoned in the copper denarius, worth about one-fifth of our penny. The chief interest of the new fragment consists in the proof that gold—of which copper was then, as it is now, merely the token—was then extremely dear: i.e., the value of gold, relatively to commodities, was extremely high. Another point of interest consists in the local epithets given to commodities, showing whence they came. A kind of woollen cloak is called a βίπος Βρετανικός. It has been suggested that the epithet may mean 'Brittannian'; but if it means 'British,' then this is probably the earliest reference to an exportation of wool or woollen stuffs from Britain. Another remarkable discovery, published this year, is as yet, perhaps, less widely known. During a visit of the Emperor Hadrian to Athens—probably at his first visit, in 123-126 A.D.—an Athenian philosopher named Aristides addressed to him an eloquent Apology for Christianity. The fact is noticed by Eusebius and Jerome, but the Apology itself was not extant. In 1889 Mr. J. Rendel Harris, formerly fellow of Clare College, Cambridge, and now professor of Biblical languages at Haverford College, Pennsylvania, found a Syriac translation of this Apology at the Convent of St. Catherine on Mount Sinai. He transcribed it, and prepared to edit it, with notes and an English version. The proof-sheets of the English version were read by Mr. J. Armitage Robinson, fellow of Christ's College. Shortly afterwards Mr. Robinson happened to be reading, in the Latin version, that once famous romance, the 'Life of Barlaam and Josaphat.' Josaphat, the son of an Eastern king who persecutes the Christians, is converted by the monk Barlaam; the king, his father, thereupon lays a plot for reconverting him: an old man named Nachor, a good actor, shall personate the monk Barlaam, shall make a pretended defence of Christianity, and shall be publicly confuted by the pagan advocates. But, when the hour of trial arrives, the utterance of Nachor, like that of Barlaam, is miraculously overruled; he delivers an apology for Christianity which convinces his pagan hearers. This story was originally written in Greek, probably in the fifth or sixth century A.D. The Greek text was first printed by Boissonade, in his Anecdota, vol. iv. (Paris, 1832). Well, in reading the Latin version of this story, Mr. Robinson suddenly came on something which reminded him of Aristides, whom he had just been reading in the English version from the Syriac. He turned to the Greek text of the Life. A comparison with the Syriac version of the Aristides then showed that the speech which the author of Barlaam and Josaphat had put into the mouth of Nachor must be, at least in substance, the original Greek text of the long-lost Apology. We see at once how the author of the romance came to think of his Eastern king; he suited his plot to the Apology, which he wished to frame in it, and which was addressed to an emperor. It may be mentioned that the recovered Apology, which cannot be later than 133 A.D., contains a distinct allusion to a written Gospel. Adolph Harnack justly calls this 'a brilliant discovery.' It may serve to remind us that the Christian—we might add, the Jewish—regions of Greek literature still offer a comparatively fresh field to research. That fact is exemplified by another recent Greek book. The so-called Psalms of Solomon are believed to have been written by a Pharisee of Jerusalem about 70-40 B.C.; they were translated into Greek at some time before 40 A.D. A very complete edition of this Greek version has lately been published by Prof. Ryle and Mr. M. R. James. Students of Roman history will find in one of those Psalms the cry with which Judaea greeted the tidings of Pompey's death.

Among other works, bearing on Hellenic studies, which the year has produced, there is one which stands conspicuous, alike by the great scale on which it is planned and by the author's reputation. Mr. Freeman has given us the first two volumes of his Sicily, carrying the story down to the beginning of Athenian intervention (433 B.C.). The narrative will be continued, he hopes, to a point not earlier than the death of the great Sicilian emperor, Frederick II., in 1250 A.D. No previous writer has essayed to tell the story of Europe's central island, 'the meeting-place of the nations,' as a whole; nor has any, probably, been so well qualified to relate alike the strife of Phoenicians with Greeks, and the strife of Saracens with Normans. This year has seen also the completion of a work which may fitly receive mention here, both on account of the labours which have conspired to produce it, and on account of the wide interest which it possesses for various classes of students—I mean the third edition of Dr. William Smith's Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities, edited in the first volume by Mr. Wayte, and in the second by Mr. Marinind. Forty-three years have elapsed since the last preceding edition—the second—appeared in 1848. No one who remembers how fruitful this long interval has been in fresh materials of every kind can wonder that the new issue is almost a new book. Scarcely twenty articles remain as they stood; two-thirds have been largely altered, and one-third has been entirely re-written. One more work must be named, which has just come forth at Leyden—an addition, almost unique in its kind, to that instructive and stimulating branch of scholarly literature, the biographical memorials of illustrious scholars. It is a collection of letters written by Cobet from Italy, between November, 1840, and July, 1845—his own account of the studies which were making him what he became. The great Dutchman relates with gusto a remark which a German friend of his overheard from a person of another nationality:—'Those dreadful Germans actually work for the love of working!'

The obituary record of this year includes the names of several members whose loss we deplore. Among these are Dean Church, whom this society had the honour to number among its vice-presidents; Archbishop Thomson; Canon Liddon; Sir Robert Fowler, who had been a member of the society from its foundation; Samuel Savage Lewis, secretary of the Cambridge Antiquarian Society, a scholar of rare accomplishments, of untiring industry, and of most genial disposition; Anthony Rich, the well-known author of an excellent dictionary of antiquities; and Dr. Henry Schliemann, whose brilliant and indefatigable services had won the lasting gratitude of archaeologists throughout the world.

"In concluding this retrospect, necessarily a slight and incomplete one, I may remind you that this year is memorable for something more than the additions which it has made to the record of achievement. It has also determined the destiny of a great future enterprise—one to which scholars in all countries have long looked forward with exceptional interest. No response of the Pythian Apollo, in days when the fate of some national undertaking might hang upon his utterance, could easily have been awaited with more suspense than that which the archaeological world has lately felt, while waiting to see what nation was to have the honour of exploring Delphi. We in this country should have felt a natural satisfaction if, as seemed at one time possible, that task had been committed to the competent hands of our kinsmen. But this was not to be; and they, like ourselves, will, we may be sure, cordially recognise the worthiness of their successful competitors, the French. It may be said, indeed, that there is a certain historical fitness in the award of this privilege to the nation which was the first to establish a regular school of archaeology on Hellenic soil; and to whose archaeologists, we may add, Delphi is not new ground. We offer to the French our congratulations and our best wishes, in the full confidence that their execution of this momentous task will be marked by all those admirable qualities which we are accustomed to expect in their best work, and which recently distinguished, in so eminent a degree, their exploration of Delos."

ART SALE.

THE collection of drawings—many of them "aux trois crayons," as the phrase is in France—which had belonged to Miss James, of Norfolk-square, was sold last week at Christie's. They had been acquired in the first instance by Miss James's father, an intelligent corn factor, who had a keen eye for art, and who saw, some fifty years ago, when Academical taste reigned supreme, that Watteau was among the masters—that he was of the family of Titian, of Tintoret, of Velasquez, of Rubens. With all our admiration of the artist—designer, painter, draughtsman of supreme power and charm—we are bound to say that the drawings did not sell cheaply last week. Watteau is at last recognised.

There were about seventy drawings in all. We will give the prices of but a few of the best. "A Lady Seated, and two Figures of Ladies Standing"—one just slightly holding her gown behind—an amazingly satisfactory little thing, quite complete with the most economical employment of means—sold for £32 (Colnaghi). "A Standard Bearer"—from the Dimsdale collection—£35. "A Man playing a Guitar"—from the Denon collection, as well as the Dimsdale—£126. This fell to the bid of Mr. Agnew. For £43 there was knocked down to Mr. Deprez "A Lady Seated, with two Groups of Sculpture." "A Man with Long Hair"—turned to the right, and tuning his violin—was bought for £14 14s., by Mr. Dowle. "The Leçon d'Amour"—two sketches for the picture—reached the sum of £236 (West); "The Head of a Girl," £29 (Martin Colnaghi). Then there was "A Lady Seated," £53; "A Comedian Unmasking," £85; "A Cavalier assisting a Lady to rise—a study for an often repeated motive, found in the "Embarquement pour Cythère"—£44; a very dainty drawing of "A Lady Reclining," £45 (Salting); "A Man with a Flacon," £38 (Deprez); "A Lady Standing," £23 (Doyle). Then came one of the gems of the collection—a drawing of childhood, so sensitively observed and vivaciously executed, that even the greatest of the Italian masters has perhaps hardly equalled it. It fell to Mr. Agnew's bid of £231. It represented two little girls with heads and eyes upraised as at some passing spectacle, and with hands and arms resting on a "table," the catalogue said, but we have always imagined it to be the ledge of a private box at a theatre. A fine semi-nude, or almost wholly nude, was "A Female Dressing"—in an auctioneer's catalogue, compiled, presumably, by one who has his doubts with regard to the propriety of the nude figure, a woman, be it observed, is always a "woman" as long as she is dressed, and a "female" directly she has laid aside her clothing. This "Female Dressing" fell to Mr. Salting's bid of £63. It is a marvellous instance of modelling and solidity of work, with little apparent labour; and it is probably, what it was described as being, a study for the picture of "La Toilette," which belonged to the late Sir Richard Wallace, and is still at Hertford House. "Comedien Italien" fell to Mr. Agnew's bid of £315. "Three Studies of Ladies"—once in the collection of Mr. Esdaile—reached £220 (West); and the same purchaser bought, as the next lot, the highest-priced drawing in the sale. It was indeed an amazing sheet of heads—called "Five Heads of Women"—and the price paid for it was within a short distance of £700. Two other things only will we mention: first, the noble drawing now called "Three Studies of the Head of Madame Duclos" of the Comédie Française—it fetched £367, and is reproduced with others in the Arundel Society's book; the second is hardly less an absolute picture in completeness of modelling and indication of texture, the "Head of a Lady"—£105.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

BY the election of Mr. Frank Dicksee to full rank, the Royal Academy has added to its "upper house," so to speak, an agreeable and popular gentleman who is everywhere le bien venu, and an artist who is not the least able and ambitious of our younger painters. But having said so much, we have said all that is to be urged in favour of, or in apology for, Mr. Frank Dicksee's election. Mr. Dicksee is still young—he might well have waited. He is as yet uncertain in his aims, and sometimes even in his methods—he might well have matured. He has always been dangerously near to pleasing chiefly the uninitiated—he might well have established his claim to the vacant chair through some more years of austerer labour. Meanwhile, Mr. Henry Moore and Mr. George Boughton are prominent Associates still unmentioned to "the velvet of the sword"—one of them a more brilliant sea painter, it may be, though not a more sound one, than Mr. Edwin Hayes (who, ridiculous as it may appear, is not of the Academy at all), and the other a painter of the figure and of landscape who pursues his own line, and who has created, so to say, a genre of his own. We cannot think it well that Mr. Henry Moore and Mr. Boughton should be unsummoned among the Forty, while Mr. Frank Dicksee, who is younger, less settled in his art, and perhaps less individual to boot, attains somewhat easily the higher rank. The next question that will arise for settlement is who shall fill his place as an Associate. More than one will have to be elected before long, we presume—the first, in all justice, should be Mr. Albert Moore. After him, Mr. Stanhope Forbes has notable claims; and so has Mr. Alfred East as a landscape painter; while there are those who think it likely that Mr. Swan will be made an Associate before any long time has elapsed.

ATTENTION is to be called in parliament to the method in which the Chantry Bequest is administered. It will not be found, however, we suspect, that the administrators of the fund have gone outside the lines laid down in the testament of the sculptor for them to travel between. Nevertheless, the influence of public opinion may be brought to bear upon the council of the Royal Academy to such an extent that they may henceforth hesitate to make any purchases quite so bad as some of those that they have, during the last few years, had the temerity to announce. We make no objection whatever, for our own part, to the acquisition of important and even costly paintings by Academicians. The purchase of the Leighton picture—last year, was it not?—was eminently justifiable and even to be desired. The Orchardson picture—"Napoleon on Board the Bellerophon"—is an interesting pictorial contribution to history. "Britannia's Realm" has something besides its taking title to recommend it, among work of Mr. Brett's. And what unprejudiced critic could lift up his voice against the purchase of one of the finest things that has ever come from the brush of Mr. Poynter?—we are not sure, indeed, that the "Visit of Venus to Aesculapius" is not the very finest. Happy were the record if it ended here. Alas! the purchasers have gone further, to fare worse. Among the works of our younger painters—though Mr. Sargent, indeed, is not very young—we may much commend the acquisition of Mr. Sargent's "Carnation, Lily, Rose," and of Mr. Tuke's "All Hands to the Pumps," and of Mr. Frank Bramley's masterpiece of masculine and homely pathos, "Hopeless Dawn." But the council, in what we dare not characterise as its wisdom, bought a green farm landscape by the very greatest living master of the painting of the sea; that is how it represented Mr. Hook. It bought a Peetic that was not of the first class. It has this year bought a Calderon which but little represents the real charm which is often the painter's own, and which, to boot, has given offence to many serious people of the Roman Catholic Church.

MR. T. J. LARKIN will open next week at the Japanese Gallery, New Bond-street, an exhibition of a second series of water-colour and oil paintings of "The Land of the Rising Sun," by Mr. Henry Varley. We may also mention that Messrs. Bellman & Ivey have now on view, in Piccadilly, a number of bronzes, including reductions of works recently exhibited at the Salon and the Academy.

AN important heraldic exhibition will be opened on Monday next at Edinburgh, in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery.

THE annual general meeting of the Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt will be held on Tuesday, July 14, at 5 p.m., probably in the rooms of the Society of Antiquaries, Burlington House.

THE collection of etchings by Meryon, formed during the lifetime of the artist, by M. de Salicis, is to be sold at the middle of this month. Probably it is the last of the several collections formed during Meryon's life by those who were his friends and encouragers. There was the collection of M. Niel, of the Ministry of the Interior—no small part of it, we believe, but not all, now belongs to Mr. Macgeorge, of Glasgow. There was the collection of M. Burty, the critic. There was the collection of M. Destailleur, the architect. There was that of M. Wasset, the sort of old gentleman whom Balzac would have loved to describe—a veritable "Cousin Pons"; M. Wasset it was who made himself historic by keeping Meryon's grateful, not to say gushing, receipt for one and three-pence paid to him by this elderly inhabitant of the Rue Jacob, for an impression of the "Abside," now worth fifty pounds. And, lastly, there comes this collection of the late

M. de Salicis, a comrade of Meryon's on the high seas when Meryon was still a sailor, and one who, when the excitable genius had expired in Charenton, stood over his grave and said of him, with admirable poetic symbolism, that "sa barque à tout instant noyée, courait sans repos au naufrage." M. de Salicis possessed a noteworthy cabinet of Meryon's prints, as well as many remarkable drawings by him. The drawings are not to be brought under the hammer.

LAST week there was a gathering at the Gallery Institute in Piccadilly, when Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Caine were at home to show a set of clever "impressionist" drawings made last winter by Mr. R. W. Allan, who accompanied Mr. Caine on his late visit to India. Among the company were Mr. and Lady Constance Shaw-Lefevre, Sir W. Lawson, Sir R. Temple, Sir George and Lady Campbell, Gen. Playfair, Chief Justice Way (of Adelaide), Canon Wilberforce, Lady Chichele Plowden, and Mr. Leonard Courtney. The architectural pictures attracted the most notice; though the view of Kinchinjanga and a sunset on the Ganges were good samples of impressionist landscape.

DURING this week the mosaic by Salviati, of Venice, representing Daniel, has been placed in its position in one of the spandrels of the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral. It is designed and coloured in the style of Michael Angelo. The mosaic of Ezekiel will be placed in position in the course of the month; that of Jeremiah has already left the studio of Murano, where those of Luke and John are rapidly approaching completion. It is expected that before Christmas the great work of decorating the spandrels of the dome with mosaics representing the four Evangelists and four Prophets will be completed. The first mosaic, that of St. Matthew, was placed in the first spandril twenty years ago.

The cachet of a Roman oculist, named Sextus Flavius Basilius, has been found near Rennes. Among the eye-salves mentioned, two bear names not met with before: amethystinum, made from amethyst-powder, or possibly from a plant of that name; and trigonum, perhaps made from verbena.

THE STAGE.

We shall next week be able to give some account of the new Savoy opera, "The Nautch Girl," which was produced—with fair success apparently—too late for discussion in this week's issue.

The Vaudeville re-opens its doors this evening, under the temporary management of Mr. Harrington Bailly, with entertainments which we trust may commend it to the favour of the public.

MR. GEORGE ALEXANDER goes, as we are informed, on a provincial tour with his St. James's Company, soon after the closing of the playhouse for the season. But "The Idler" is likely to be kept in the bills in King-street for at least another fortnight.

"TOWARDS the end of the season, revive 'David Garrick'" is an axiom at the Criterion as little to be questioned as "When in doubt, May trumps." Again has Mr. Wyndham acted upon it, and Robertson's adaptation from the French of "Sullivan," is once more drawing audiences. There is no gainsaying that, interpreted by Mr. Charles Wyndham, the piece is more popular than when it was Mr. Sothorn who played it.

THERE is somewhat vague talk of an official visit of the Comédie Française to London next year. We only trust it may come to pass; for though the Française is not what it used to be, it is still, in organisation and ensemble, the first playhouse in the world, and no one of its actors is seen to so much advantage as when he is beheld in company with his own brethren of the Rue Richelieu. The arrival of the Comédie in force—and at some reasonable theatre—would in all probability revive the now languished interest in French plays in London.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

THE Handel Festival closed last Friday week with "Israel." Of course, the grand double choruses which form so striking a feature of this Oratorio can nowhere else be heard to such advantage; and if there were some weak moments in the performance, many of the numbers were produced with the usual imposing effect. It was in the opening chorus, "And the children of Israel sighed," that the choir was most at fault. The principal solo vocalists were Miss Macintyre, Mme. Belle Cole, and Mr. Lloyd. Mme. Cole sang well, and Mr. Lloyd received unmeasured applause for his rendering of "The enemy said." "The Lord is a man of war" was not sung by the "four hundred" male voices, as at former Festivals, but as a duet (Messrs. Bridson and Brereton), as Handel wrote it. This was more artistic, if not so effective for the public. Mr. Manns deserves the highest praise for the ability and never-flagging energy with which he wielded the baton during the whole of the Festival; he has once again proved himself fully equal to his responsible task. The attendance was below that of 1888, but large enough to justify one in saying that Handel has not yet lost his power to draw.

Mr. Augustus Harris gave "Lucia" on Wednesday, and "Martha" on Friday. Mme. Melba, in the former, achieved a brilliant success; and in the latter, Mlle. Mravina, as Martha, by her pleasing singing and piquant acting, excited much admiration. But even with the attraction of good vocalists these Operas no longer draw the public. Margherita and Carmen are now the reigning favourites.

Two juvenile pianists, the Signorine Rosina and Bice Cerasoli, aged eight and ten, appeared at Mr. Augustus Harris's operatic concert at the Albert Hall on Saturday afternoon. They are both extremely talented; it is to be hoped that they are in good hands, and will not get spoilt by too much public applause.

The Philharmonic series of concerts came to a close last Saturday afternoon. M. Franz Ondricek gave an artistic rendering of Beethoven's violin Concerto, and, as an old favourite, was received with enthusiasm. Mme. Pachmann played Chopin's Concerto in E minor, and made the most of a work more noted for its difficulties than for inspiration. Mr. Barton MacGuckin was the vocalist. Mr. Cowen, who conducted Grieg's characteristic Overture "Im Herbst," and Beethoven's eighth Symphony, was much applauded.

The programme of the sixth Richter concert, on Monday evening, was given in conjunction with the Wagner Society. Now, on such an occasion a programme of special interest ought to have been provided. Of the three Wagner excerpts two were from early works, and in both these, "Elizabeth's Greeting" and "Senta's Ballad," Mme. Nordica was heard to advantage; the third was the well-known "Vorspiel und Liebestod" from "Tristan," magnificently played by the orchestra. Haydn's "Clock" Symphony is a charming work, and it was particularly interesting to hear it with reduced strings; but it had no connexion with Wagner. The last and longest piece in the programme was a Symphony in D minor, No. 3, by Anton Bruckner. Speaking of performances of this work at Vienna, Mr. C. A. Barry, the able analyst, reminded us in the programme-book that "critics who formerly condemned it have recanted," and begged us to listen to it "with patience and forbearance." There are certainly works which need many a hearing before one can do them justice; but a first hearing ought at least to reveal enough to make one desire further acquaintance with the music. Bruckner's Symphony does not create that desire; it is clever, but dry, and immoderately long. Herr Richter, four years ago, produced the same composer's seventh Symphony, but it was never repeated. Bruckner is known to be an accomplished musician, and of his skill as a contrapuntist both his Symphonies give proof, but to us he lacks inspiration; and an ounce of the latter will outweigh a ton of double counterpoint. But it may be very naturally asked why was this work selected? The answer is simple, if not satisfactory: Bruckner was an admirer of Wagner, and dedicated this, his third Symphony, to the Baireuth master.

M. Paderewski gave a third pianoforte recital at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. His reading of Beethoven's "Sonata Appassionata" was dignified and poetical. Does the now popular pianist feel under restraint when he is interpreting the works of the great master? If so, this may perhaps explain the quality of the tone, which at times, though pure, lacks warmth; but the performance, altogether, was highly impressive. M. Paderewski, much to the advantage of the music, omitted the repeat in the third movement. He also played Schumann's "Carneval." We have heard him before in this characteristic work. His reading is brilliant, but too full of conceits of his own for us to accept it as a satisfactory rendering of Schumann. M. Paderewski gave a beautifully delicate performance of Chopin's Nocturne in B (Op. 62, No. 1), but in the A flat Polonaise he showed signs of fatigue. He drew an exceedingly large audience; the appearance of the hall and the enthusiasm reminded us, indeed, of the days when Rubinstein gave recitals in London. J. S. SHEDLOCK.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 8
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 3 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

THE UNIVERSITY OF ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY LL.A., Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

VOL. XL. commences with the present Number.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

- | | | | | |
|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|--------------------------|---------------------------|
| Acton, Lord | Dobson, Austin | Hicks, Rev. E. L. | Murray, George | Simcox, G. A. |
| Aitken, G. A. | Dore, J. R. | Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley | Murray, Dr. J. A. H. | Simcox, Miss Edith |
| Alexander, S. | Douglas, Prof. R. K. | Hodgkin, Dr. T. | Myers, Ernest | Simpson, W. |
| Allen, Grant | Dow, J. G. | Hodgson, Shadworth H. | Myles, Rev. W. Percy | Skeat, Prof. W. W. |
| Allen, J. B. | Dowden, Prof. E. | Houghton, Rev. W. | Napier, Prof. A. S. | Smith, G. Barnett |
| Arnold, Arthur | Doyle, J. A. | Howlett, R. | Nettleship, Prof. H. | Smith, Miss L. Toulmin |
| Axon, W. E. A. | Driver, Prof. S. R. | Howorth, H. H. | Nettleship, J. T. | Sommer, H. Oskar |
| Bain, R. Nisbet | Drummond, Rev. R. B. | Hunter, Sir W. W. | Neubauer, Dr. A. | Sonnenschein, Prof. E. A. |
| Ball, Rev. C. J. | Dryden, Sir Henry | Ingram, J. H. | Newton, Sir C. T. | Stephens, H. Morse |
| Balzani, Count Ugo | Duff, E. Gordon | Ingram, Prof. J. K. | Nicholson, Cecil | Stephens, Prof. G. |
| Barnett, P. A. | Dunlop, R. | Jacobs, Joseph | Nicholson, Dr. E. | Stevenson, W. H. |
| Bayne, Rev. Ronald | Earle, Prof. J. | Jevons, F. B. | Nicholson, E. B. | Stewart, J. A. |
| Beazeley, M. | Ebers, Prof. G. | Johnson, Lionel | Noble, J. A. | Stokes, Whitley |
| Beeching, Rev. H. C. | Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y. | Jolly, Prof. J. | Noel, Hon. Roden | Strachey, G. |
| Bell, H. T. Mackenzie | Edinburgh, The Bishop of | Jones, Rev. W. H. | O'Grady, Standish H. | Strong, S. Arthur |
| Benn, A. W. | Edwards, Miss Amelia B. | Keane, Prof. A. H. | Oman, C. W. C. | Sully, James |
| Bennett, A. W. | Ellis, Robinson | Keene, H. G. | Patterson, Arthur J. | Sweet, H. |
| Bensley, Prof. R. L. | Elton, C. I. | Kingsford, C. L. | Paul, C. Kegan | Symonds, J. A. |
| Bezold, Prof. C. | Elton, Oliver | Kirkup, T. | Peacock, E. | Symons, Arthur |
| Blind, Karl | Ely, Talfourd | Lang, Andrew | Pearson, Prof. Karl | Taylor, Canon Isaac |
| Boase, Rev. C. W. | Evans, Arthur | Lankester, Prof. E. Ray | Pelliam, Prof. H. F. | Temple, Capt. R. C. |
| Bonaparte, Prince Louis- | Field, Michael | Leach, A. F. | Peterson, Prof. | Temple, G. T. [Prof. |
| Bonar, J. [Lucien | Firth, C. H. | Lee, Miss Jane | Phillips, Claude | Terrien de Lacouperie, |
| Bradley, Henry | Fita, Padre F. | Lee, S. L. | Pinker, J. B. | Thompson, E. Maunde |
| Bradley, J. W. | Fitch, J. G. | Lee, Vernon | Pollard, A. W. | Toynbee, Paget |
| Brown, Dr. Robert | Fortnum, C. Drury E. | Le Gallienne, R. | Poole, R. S. | Tozer, Rev. H. F. |
| Brown, H. F. | Fowler, Prof. T. | Legge, Prof. J. | Postgate, Prof. J. P. | Tucker, R. |
| Brown, R., Jun. | Fowler, Rev. J. T. | Lewin, Walter | Powell, F. York | Twiss, Sir Travers |
| Browne, E. G. | Frazer, J. G. | Lewis, Prof. W. J. | Raine, Canon J. | Tyler, Thomas |
| Browne, J. W. | Freeman, Prof. E. A. | Lindsay, W. M. | Ramsay, Prof. W. M. | Tylor, E. B. |
| Browne, Prof. G. F. | Freshfield, Douglas W. | Lyll, C. J. | Rashdall, Rev. H. | Vambéry, Prof. A. |
| Bryce, Prof. J. | Friedlander, Dr. M. | Lyster, T. W. | Reid, J. S. | Venables, Precentor |
| Buchanan, Robert | Furnivall, Dr. F. J. | Macdonell, Prof. A. A. | Rhys, Prof. John | Villari, Linda |
| Bühler, Prof. G. | Gaidoz, H. | Macdonell, G. P. | Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W. | Vinson, Prof. Julien |
| Burton, Sir Richard | Gairdner, J. | Mackay, J. S. | Richards, F. T. | Wallace, Prof. W. |
| Bywater, I. | Galton, Arthur | Mahaffy, Prof. J. P. | Richards, H. P. | Wallace, W. |
| Caine, Hall | Gardiner, S. R. | Mann, J. S. | Richter, Dr. J.-P. | Warren, Rev. F. E. |
| Campbell, Prof. Lewis | Gardiner, Mrs. S. R. | Margoliouth, Prof. D. S. | Robertson, Prof. Edmund | Waters, E. Chester |
| Canton, W. | Garrod, H. B. | Markham, Clements R. | Robertson, Prof. Eric | Watkins, Rev. M. G. |
| Capes, Rev. W. W. | Gonner, Prof. E. C. K. | Markheim, W. | Robinson, W. C. J. | Watson, W. |
| Cheetham, Archdeacon | Grant-Duff, Sir Mount- | Martin, C. Trice | Roby, H. J. | Watts, Theodore |
| Chester, Greville J. | stuart E. | Marzials, F. T. | Rolph, J. F. | Wayte, Rev. W. W. |
| Cheyne, Prof. T. K. | Grant, Col. F. | Mayhew, Rev. A. L. | Rolleston, T. W. | Weale, W. H. James |
| Church, Prof. A. H. | Gray, J. M. | Merk, Rev. C. | Ruddler, F. W. | Webster, Rev. Wentworth |
| Clouston, W. A. | Greenhill, Dr. W. A. | Merry, G. R. | Rye, Walter | Wedmore, Frederick |
| Collins, J. C. | Grey, William E. | Minchin, J. G. C. | Ryland, F. | West, Dr. E. W. |
| Conway, W. Martin | Groome, F. H. | Minchin, James Innes | Saintsbury, G. | Westlake, Prof. John |
| Cotterell, G. | Hager, Dr. H. | Minto, Prof. W. | Salmon, Prof. G. | Westwood, Prof. J. O. |
| Cotton, H. J. S. | Hamerton, P. G. | Monkhouse, Cosmo | Salmoné, Prof. H. A. | Wharton, E. R. |
| Courtney, W. P. | Hamilton, J. A. | Moore, Rev. Dr. E. | Sanday, Prof. W. | Wharton, H. T. |
| Crawford, O. | Hardy, W. J. | Morfill, W. R. | Sandys, Dr. J. E. | Wheeler, Stephen |
| Crichton, Prof. M. | Haverfield, F. | Morris, Rev. Dr. R. | Sargent, Rev. H. | Wickham, W. |
| Davidson, John | Hawkins, F. | Morris, Judge O'Connor | Sayce, Prof. A. H. | Wicksteed, Rev. P. H. |
| Dawkins, C. E. | Herford, Prof. C. H. | Morshhead, E. D. A. | Sayle, C. | Wilkins, Prof. A. S. |
| De Vere, Aubrey | Hessels, J. H. | Muir, Dr. Thomas | Secley, Prof. J. R. | Wilson, C. E. |
| Dickins, F. V. | Hewlett, H. G. | Müller, Prof. F. Max | Sharp, William | Wilson, H. F. |
| Doble, C. E. | Hickey, Miss E. H. | Murray, A. S. | Shedlock, J. S. | Wollaston, A. N. |

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all News-vendors in Town and Country.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. A. Cecil, H. Standing, A. Aynesworth, F. Cape, G. Farquhar, C. Rock, and J. Clulow; Mesdames R. Filippi, E. Phelps, Harrington, and John Wood.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A MUTUAL MISTAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, DAVID GARRICK.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, W. Farren, G. Giddens, W. Blakeley, S. Valentine, S. Hewson, F. Atherley, and F. Emery; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Miller, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.20, by HEADS OR TAILS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Every Evening, at 7.45, DRINK.
Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Morgan, A. Phillips, H. Terriss, R. Power; Mesdames Jessie Millward, Ada Neilson, Mrs. Billington, Alice Kingsley, and Kate James.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Mr. HENRY IRVING, Sole Lessee.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
A REGULAR FIX and THE CORSICAN BROTHERS.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA,

Cambridge Circus, Shaftesbury Avenue.
Every Evening (except Saturday), at 8, the grand romantic Opera, IVANHOE.
The libretto by Julian Sturgis, adapted from Walter Scott's novel, the music by Arthur Sullivan.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'VLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, and every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, the new Indian comic Opera, in two acts, entitled, THE NAUTCH GIRL; or, The Rajah of Chutney-pore.
Libretto by George Dance, music by Edward Solomon, with lyrics by George Dance and Frank Desprez.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER.
This Evening, at 8.30, THE IDLER.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, C. THIBERT RATHBONE.
Proprietor, JOHN LANCASTER.
Mr. S. Herbert-Basing begs to announce that he will produce an original play, in four acts, by Wilton Jones, entitled THE SCAPGOAT, on TUESDAY EVENING NEXT, July 7. Messrs. Lewis Waller, J. Beauchamp, S. Herbert-Basing, and William Herbert; Mesdames Florence West, Carlotta Leclercq, Gertrude Warden, Adela Houston, Theodore Wright, and Annie Hughes.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDOUN.
Every Evening, at 8.40, KATTI.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Eversfield, Dagnall, Barraclough, Sidney, &c.; Mesdames Alice Atherton, Illington, Rutland, Esmond, and Bennett.
Preceded, at 8, by BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR. At 9, A COMMISSION. And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Mesdames L. Linden, L. Hanbury, D. Drummond, H. Dacre, Tyrrell, Ford, and E. Chester; Messrs. B. Thomas, Forbes-Dawson, Elliot, C. Coutts, Danmore, Branscombe, and W. Grossmith.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Under the Management of Mr. HARRINGTON BAILY.
On SATURDAY, at 8, a Drama, in one act, by Alfred C. Clamour, entitled GABRIEL'S TRUST.
At 9, a farcical Comedy, by E. Henderson, entitled THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, A. C. Calmour, Philip Cuninghame, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.
SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.
"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.
"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

POPULAR EDITION.
Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT
ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Goods carefully Rem'vd and Warehoused.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows Interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.
BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES, Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.
CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."
PURE CONCENTRATED
Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
COCOA
Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

CADBURY'S COCOA

ABSOLUTELY PURE, THEREFORE BE

The Analyst, comparing the flesh-forming ingredients in Cocoas, gives the following average:—

“Flesh-forming ingredients in Natural Cocoa Nibs	13·00
“Flesh-forming ingredients in the best Commercial Cocoa, with added starch and sugar.. .. .	6·00
“Flesh-forming ingredients in Cadbury's Cocoa, the standard English article	21·00

“The process of preparation concentrates the nourishing and stimulating principles of the Cocoa Bean.”

“Cadbury's Cocoa being Absolutely Pure is, therefore, the Best Cocoa.”

CADBURY'S COCOA

“Has, in a remarkable degree, these natural elements of sustenance which give the system endurance and hardihood, building up muscle and bodily vigour with a steady action that renders it a most acceptable and reliable beverage.”—Health.

The Editor of the Medical Annual for 1890 points out that potash is largely used in many of the so-called pure Cocoas at present sold, but that, in marked contrast, MESSRS. CADBURY supply an absolutely pure Cocoa of the highest quality; and that the name CADBURY on any packet of Cocoa is a guarantee of purity.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1001.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
LAURENCE OLIPIANT, by WALTER LEWIN	27
SAINTE-SIMON'S ESSAYS ON FRENCH NOVELISTS, by ARTHUR SYMONS	30
THE ADVENTURES OF MENDEZ PINTO, by STEPHEN WIFFELER	31
NEW NOVELS, by J. A. NOBLE	32
CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS	33
NOTES AND NEWS	34
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	34
ORIGINAL VERS: "THE FLAG OF DISTRESS," by Miss L. M. LITTLE	35
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	35
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	35
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A War of Romances II. against Mitanni and Assyria, by Prof. SAYCE; "History of the Church of England," by Canon DIXON; Notes on the Review of "Tenth," by I. GOLLANCE; "Tausie," by J. H. ROUND and PAGET TOYNBEE; The "Magnanimous Sultan," by Miss LUCY GARNETT	35
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	38
RECENT WORKS ON PHYSICAL SCIENCE	38
SCIENCE NOTES	39
PHILOLOGY NOTES	40
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Temple at Luxor, by Henry WALLIS	40
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	40
"THE NAUGHT GIRL" AT THE SAVOY, by F. WEDMORE	41
STAGE NOTES	41
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. FREDLOCK	41

ARISTOTLE ON THE ATHENIAN CONSTITUTION.

MESSRS. BELL WILL PUBLISH ON MONDAY NEXT, THE ENGLISH TRANSLATION OF THE ABOVE, BY F. G. KENYON, M.A., FELLOW OF MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD, IN THE FOLLOWING FORMS:—

- I. Small-Paper Edition, pott 8vo, printed on hand-made paper at the Chiswick Press, and bound in buckram, 4s. 6d.
- II. Large-Paper Edition, post 8vo, limited to 150 copies, 10s. net to the first applicants.

 Both Editions contain an autotype facsimile of a portion of the original MS.

LONDON: GEORGE BELL & SONS, YORK STREET, COVENT GARDEN.

Now ready, at all Booksellers.

THE LIFE OF WILLIAM II. OF GERMANY.

Crown 8vo, cloth, gilt top, with 5 Portraits, price 6s.

THE YOUNG EMPEROR:

A STUDY IN CHARACTER DEVELOPMENT ON A THRONE.

By HAROLD FREDERIC, Author of "In the Valley," "The Lawton Girl," &c.

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS:—

Full Moll Gazette: "As interesting as any novel, and is moreover an important contribution to the political history of the day."—The Daily Chronicle: "A book of considerable interest."—St. James's Gazette: "It contains a good deal of information which is specially interesting just now."—Echo: "A bright and interesting volume."—Evening News: "Fills us with admiration for its comprehensiveness, insight, lucidity, dramatic narration, and literary vigour."—Glasgow Mail: "The work is singularly modest and unpretending, but is really one of the most solid and important contributions to contemporary European history.... Exceedingly fresh and instructive."

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

WANTED, in September, an Appointment as LADY SECRETARY or AMANUENSIS. German, French, Shorthand. Type-writing—Miss H., Itchen Abbas Rectory, Abingdon, Hants.

MISCELLANEA CURIOSA.—Sale by Private Catalogues, 3l. each, returned to Purchasers.—D. T. BARRY, 19, Cathedral Yard, Manchester.

HONOURS IN NATURAL SCIENCE.—First-class OXON requires PUBLIC or PRIVATE TEACHING IN CALIBRENTS in Botany, Elementary Physics, Chemistry, Physiology, or Botany.—Apply J. W. K., Somerville Hall, Oxford.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHY. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

TO CREST HOLDERS.

COMMUNICATIONS and full PARTICULARS of CRESTS and BLAZONINGS used are REQUESTED by the undersigned, who is engaged in preparing an entirely New Edition of Fairbairn's Standard Book of Crests. Proofs of entry and sketches will be submitted for approval on application.—Prospectus on application. A. C. FOX-DAVEY, 20, John Street, Adelphi, London, W.C. Be published by C. & E. C. JACK, London and Edinburgh.

HOLIDAYS IN NORMANDY.—M.

FARBER, French Master, Glasgow Athenaeum, Examiner to Intermediate Education Board, Ireland, receives at his country residence in Normandy, during July and August, a few GENTLEMEN desirous of improving their knowledge of French by a stay in France. In a beautiful country. Terms. Every comfort. Highest references.—For particulars and prospectus apply to M. BARRIN, Ecotville par Louviers, Eure, France.

By order of the Executors of J. D. Morell, M.A., LL.D., deceased.

THE COPYRIGHTS in the well-known EDUCATIONAL and PHILOSOPHICAL WORKS of the late Dr. MORELL, formerly Her Majesty's Inspector of Schools, are offered for SALE by TEMPER.

Particulars and conditions of sale, and forms of tender may be obtained on application to Messrs. THOMAS BURNERS & MITCHELL, 4, Abchurch Lane, London, E.C. 4, and to Messrs. SCOTT & BARTLETT, Solicitors, 15, Queen Street, Queen Victoria Street, London.

Just published, price 1s.; post free, 1s. 3d.

A MINIMUM WAGE: a Socialistic Novel by ALFRED MORRIS.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill London

MANCHESTER NEW COLLEGE,

90, HIGH STREET, OXFORD.

"The College adheres to its original principle of freely imparting Theological knowledge, without insisting on the adoption of particular Theological doctrines."

PROGRAMME OF LECTURES FOR THE SESSION 1891-92.

Principal:—

Rev. JAMES DRUMMOND, M.A., LL.D.
PAULINE EPISTLES (Introduction, Criticism, and Exegesis).
INTRODUCTION TO THE FOURTH GOSPEL.
STUDY OF DOCTRINAL THEOLOGY.

Vice-Principal:—

Rev. J. ESTLIN CARPENTER, M.A.
OLD TESTAMENT. COMPARATIVE RELIGION.

Rev. C. B. UPTON, B.A., B.Sc.
MENTAL PHILOSOPHY. ETHICS.

Rev. P. H. WICKSTEED, M.A., will Lecture on SOCIOLOGY.
The College opens in OCTOBER. All Lectures are Free to the Public.
For further particulars apply to the Rev. Dr. DRUMMOND, 18, Rawlinson Road, Oxford; or to R. D. DARBESHIRE, Esq., 26, George Street, Manchester; } Secs.

or to Rev. H. ESTLIN DOWSON, B.A.,
Gee Cross, near Manchester.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

Principal:—Rev. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).

This College, first established in 1837 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusively Theological College, into which all will be admitted who are candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of 5s for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

The Committee will proceed forthwith to the ELECTION of a PROFESSOR of HEBREW and cognate Languages and the Exegesis of the Old Testament, salary £500. All applications, with Testimonials, to be sent on or before WEDNESDAY, JULY 29th, to (Rev.) R. H. MORGAN, Secretary, Menai Bridge, North Wales.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at CARDIFF, commencing on WEDNESDAY, August 19th.

President: Elect—WILLIAM HUGGINS, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., F.R.A.S.

NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are requested to give notice before August 1st of their intention to offer Papers. Information about lodgings and other local arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, Frank Buildings, Cardiff.

G. GRIVITH, Assistant General Secretary.

BIBLIOTHECA PHILIPPICA.

The Collection of valuable English and Foreign Autograph Letters and Historical Documents of the late Sir THOMAS PHILLIPPS, Bart., F.R.S., &c.—FIRST PORTION.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON, & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 15, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on WEDNESDAY, July 16, and Following Day, at 1 o'clock precisely, the COLLECTION of valuable ENGLISH and FOREIGN AUTOGRAPH LETTERS and HISTORICAL DOCUMENTS of the late Sir THOMAS PHILLIPPS, Bart., F.R.S., &c., of Middle Hill, Wiltshire, and their status published Documents on Vellum of Kings Henry IV., V., VI., VII., with fine Seals; and among other Royal Autographs, Specimens of Anne of Austria, Antoine Lavoisier, Caroline of Anspach, Charles I., Charles IX. of Sweden, Charles II. of Spain, Christian VII. of Denmark, Elizabeth, France I., Francis Emperor of Austria, Henry VII. of England, Henry VIII., Henry III. of France, James II., Louis XII., Louis XVI., Marie Antoinette, Mary Queen of Scots, Napoleon I., Paul I. of Russia, René II., William III., &c.—Also Letters of Poets, Statesmen, Authors, Actors, Generals, Admirals, &c.

The Library and the remaining Portion of the Collection of Engravings and China of the late W. F. TIFFIN, Esq., of Salisbury.

MESSRS. SOTHEBY, WILKINSON, & HODGE will SELL by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, No. 15, WELLINGTON STREET, STRAND, W.C., on THURSDAY, July 16, at 1 o'clock precisely, the LIBRARY of the late W. F. TIFFIN, Esq., author of "Gossypium in Portraits," consisting of Books relating to the Fine Arts, the Drama and some Old English Literature and Poetry. Works by Byron, Tennyson, Dickens, &c.; also the remaining Portion of his Collection of Engravings and China. May be viewed two days prior. Catalogues may be had.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For JULY, 1891, contains, among other Articles of Interest,

MR. CHAINE'S SONS. Chaps. XXV.-XXVIII.—REMINISCENCES OF SIR RICHARD BURTON.—THE 'Araç' of PUBLISHERS.—KANE, a SOLDIER SERVANT.—HER NEW DRESSMAKER.—IFTAR in a HAREM.—A PIECE OF BREAD.—LOVE or MONEY. Chaps. XXIV.-XXVI.—&c.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

NOW READY.

SO NEAR AKIN.

By M. A. BENGOUGH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE DUKE'S MARRIAGE."

The ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN

By JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION OF

AN OLD MAID'S LOVE.

By MAARTEN MAARTENS.
Author of "The Sin of Joost Avelingh."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "ALASNAM'S LADY."

THE HALLETTS:

A Country Town Chronicle.
By LESLIE KEITH,
Author of "A Hurricane in Petticoats," &c.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A country town chronicle as well written as 'The Halletts' has in itself many of the elements of a successful novel. When, added to these, the author has the simple yet graphic manner of Leslie Keith, it has a very real attraction for the lovers of wholesome fiction. The author has already shown talent for delineation of character, and in her present work Andrew Hallett, his meek wife, and Lavy Moss are clever as well as vigorous sketches."—Morning Post.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "GIRALDI."

THE UNDERGRADUATE.

By ROSS GEORGE DERING.
In 2 vols., crown 8vo.

SECOND EDITION.

BERTHA'S EARL.

By LADY LINDSAY, Author of "Caroline."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Altogether charming, the writing and the story are refined and interesting; a really delightful book such as a novel should be."—Life.
"Lord Delachaine is a well conceived and well delineated character."—Spectator.

Now ready, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, (6s.), the New and Popular Edition of Miss MARIE CORELLI'S

WORMWOOD.

"What a stir Marie Corelli's new book, 'Wormwood,' has created. Everyone is talking about it. Never before, I should say, has the subject of absinthe-drinking in Paris been gone into so thoroughly and all its effects laid bare."—County Gentleman.

Also, Now Ready,

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

Also,

THROUGH STABLE AND SADDLE-ROOM.

By Major FISHER.
A New Edition, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street.
Publisher in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. EDWARD ARNOLD'S LIST.

ANIMAL LIFE and INTELLIGENCE.

By C. LLOYD MORGAN, F.G.S., Principal of University College, Bristol, Author of "A Text-Book of Biology," &c. With 40 Illustrations, demy 8vo, cloth, 16s.

POLITICAL SCIENCE and COMPARATIVE CONSTITUTIONAL LAW.

By JOHN W. BURGESS, LL.D., Professor of History and Political Science in Columbia College, U.S.A. 2 vols., demy 8vo, 25s.

"The work may be confidently recommended to all serious students of comparative politics and jurisprudence."—Times.

A BOOK about ROSES.

By the Very Rev. S. REYNOLDS HOLE, Dean of Rochester. The Eleventh and Cheaper Edition. Now ready, price 2s. 6d.
"A perfectly charming book."—Daily Telegraph.

MY MISSION to ABYSSINIA.

By GERALD H. PORTAL, H.B.M. Agent and Consul-General at Zanzibar. A Narrative of the last English Mission to Abyssinia in 1887-1888. Demy 8vo, with Map and Illustrations. In preparation.

THE FORUM for JULY, price 2s. 6d., contains an important Article upon the Character and Policy of the Emperor William, by Dr. Goffken, Imperial Privy Councillor; also the American Copyright Law, by E. R. Dady, Hon. Sec. of the British Copyright Association.

Now ready, price 2s. 6d.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW for JULY.

FIVE YEARS OF RESOLUTE GOVERNMENT.
THE ETON JUBILEE. By ARTHUR C. BENSON.
AFTER THE GALLERIES: a Studio Talk.
POLICE WORK IN CEYLON. By Miss GORDON-CUMMING.
THE FIRST HANDEL FESTIVAL. By R. EDGAR MBE.
TO-DAY IN MOROCCO. By Captain ROLLESTON.
THE FARMER-MONK. By N. E. RAYMOND DOWLING.
MR HARRIS and MRS. OLIPHANT. By Mrs. A. PHILLIPS.
THE DIET OF GREAT MEN. By A. J. H. CRESPIER.
REVIEWS, CORRESPONDENCE, &c.

TWENTY MODERN MEN. A Second

Series of Literary Portraits from the National Observer. Ready immediately at all Booksellers, price 1s.

SCHOOL BOOKS.

AN INTRODUCTION to CHEMICAL

SCIENCE. Edited by B. P. LASCELLES, M.A., Assistant Master at Harrow School, and R. P. WILLIAMS, of the English High School, Boston. Second Edition. With 50 Illustrations. Cloth, red edges, 3s. 6d.

VICTOR HUGO'S QUATRE-VINGT-

TREIZE. Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Authorised Copyright Edition. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. 6d. net. Now ready.

FRENCH REVOLUTION READINGS.

Edited, with Helps for Composition, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham, and C. M. DIX, M.A., Assistant Master at the Oratory School, Birmingham. Cloth, crown 8vo, 2s. net. Now ready.

HENRY GREVILLE'S PERDUE.

Edited by JAMES BOIELLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Senior French Master at Dulwich College. Cloth, crown 8vo. Ready shortly.

DUMAS' MONTE CRISTO. Edited by FRANCIS TARVER, M.A., Senior French Master at Eton College. Cloth, crown 8vo. Just ready.

MODERN FRENCH READINGS.

Edited, with Helps for Composition, by A. JAMSON SMITH, M.A., Head Master of King Edward's School, Camp Hill, Birmingham. Second Edition. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. Now ready.

DUMAS' LES TROIS MOUSQUE-

TAIRES. Edited by F. C. SUMICHRABT, Assistant Professor of French in Harvard University. Cloth, crown 8vo, 3s. 6d. Now ready.

ALLEN and GREENHOUGH'S LATIN

GRAMMAR. For Use in the Higher Forms of Schools and Colleges. Revised Edition. Crown 8vo, 54s. pages, 6s.

CORIOLANUS, KING JOHN, HAMLET

and other Plays of Shakespeare. Edited with Notes and Introductions in Hudson's School Shakespeare. Each Play separately. Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD,
37, BEDFORD STREET, STRAND, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

THE BIOGRAPHY

OF THE

Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.

By G. W. E. RUSSELL.

Being the Fourth Volume in "The Queen's Prime Ministers."

Edited by STUART J. REID.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with new Photogravure Portrait, 3s. 6d.

SOME PRESS OPINIONS.

THE DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste....A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A singularly vivid and complete picture of one of the most striking figures of the Victorian era. Mr. Russell has done something to enable the English people, even where they differ most from Mr. Gladstone's policy, to understand him better, and therefore to respect and admire him more."

THE DAILY GRAPHIC.—"The intimate relations which Mr. Russell has held with Mr. Gladstone socially and officially lend to what he has to say an historical, as well as a literary, value. He has succeeded in producing within the limits of a comparatively brief sketch an eminently readable epitome of the great statesman's career."

PALL MALL GAZETTE.—"A small work devoted to so large a subject must be, to be worth anything, a marvel of condensation. We find such marvel in Mr. Russell's contribution to the 'Queen's Prime Ministers Series.' There are none of the weary commonplace of contemporary biography within its covers; it is at once well informed, concise, and judicious."

THE STAR.—"A popular biography by a competent hand. Mr. Russell devotes an interesting chapter to Mr. Gladstone's life at Eton and Oxford, and the impressions he produced on his fellow-students."

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"While giving a clear and tolerably full narrative of Mr. Gladstone's wonderful career, Mr. Russell has devoted his attention especially to two things—the early days at Eton and Oxford, and the consistency and thoroughness of the statesman's churchmanship....It may be doubted whether any one book could give a better idea of Mr. Gladstone's personality than the one before us."

NEWCASTLE DAILY LEADER.—"Moderate in his praise, he seeks to show that many features of Mr. Gladstone's character have been misconstrued."

* See also leading articles in the Times, Daily News, and Morning Advertiser of July 7th, &c., &c.

The Rural Economy and Agriculture of Australia and New Zealand.

As seen by ROBERT WALLACE, F.I.S., F.R.S. Edin., Professor of Agriculture and Rural Economy in the University of Edinburgh, Author of "India in 1887," "Farm Live Stock of Great Britain," &c. With 8 Maps, 80 Full-page Plates, and 20 Text Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, ONE GUINEA net.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA.

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"It is soothing and invigorating to turn to Mr. William Black's delightful pages."—Daily Telegraph.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.

"Its interest never flags. There is much delicious humour."—Scotsman.

AUTHORISED LIBRARY EDITION.

CÆSAR'S COLUMN: a Tale of the Twentieth Century. By IGNATIUS DONNELLY, Author of "Ragnarok," "Atlantis," &c. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By Avery

MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.
"An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 11, 1891.

No. 1001, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Memoir of the Life of Laurence Oliphant and of Alice Oliphant, his Wife. By Margaret Oliphant W. Oliphant. In 2 vols. (Blackwood.)

Personal Reminiscences of Laurence Oliphant: a Note of Warning. By Louis Leisching. (Marshall Brothers.)

JUDGING from the comments called forth by Mrs. Oliphant's Memoir, Laurence Oliphant, although a familiar name, was to most people nothing more than a name. All they know about him has been learned from Mrs. Oliphant's pages, and, with the fewest exceptions, the comments have been echoes of her opinions, and repetitions of her statements, even of her errors of fact and inference. It is, therefore, especially unfortunate that she did not qualify herself more carefully for her task. For instance, to understand Oliphant it is necessary to understand what manner of man that was who influenced him so greatly at the crisis of his life; but to Mrs. Oliphant the character and career of Thomas Lake Harris are practically unknown. Her only "definite ground" in this matter is, she says, contained in some volumes of his addresses and sermons. She sees no reason to think he was an impostor, but has not taken the pains to ascertain whether he was one or not. Surely a zealous historian would, at least, have sought out the several persons now living who were co-workers with both Mr. Harris and Oliphant at Brocton, and would have listened to what they had to say and weighed it. Even Mr. Harris himself might have been applied to, so that his version of a curious story as well as Oliphant's could have been stated. Mrs. Oliphant's manifest failure to grasp the religious principles of the Brotherhood of the New Life is more excusable; but even here her ignorance—of which she is not a bit ashamed—seems unduly great. Failing thus to appreciate some of the main influences and conditions of Oliphant's life, her work is inevitably superficial. It includes personal reminiscences—her own and others; but, dealing as it does with lives so recent, it might well have been enriched with many more. Its chief value is as a chronicle—presumably accurate—of the incidents of Oliphant's career. We look in vain for the real Laurence Oliphant in the book, but we find much about him; and it need hardly be added that the story, so far as it goes, is told with such skill and discretion as to make it—to use Mrs. Oliphant's favourite word—"delightful." It is to be hoped that people who can supply the deficiencies will now step forward, so that by-and-by someone—Mrs. Oliphant herself, for choice—will be able to prepare a new and perfected biography.

Laurence Oliphant's life divides itself into two parts, the first, terminating when he was thirty-eight years old, being the preparation for the second. He was born at Capetown in 1829; his father was then attorney-general there, a post he afterwards exchanged for that of chief justice of Ceylon. His mother was Maria Campbell, daughter of Col. Campbell, of the 72nd Highlanders. Both parents are described by Mrs. Oliphant as notable in their several ways: she "full of the vivacity and character which descended to her son," he a man of much "individual power and originality," as well as "an excellent lawyer and trusted official." It may be that Oliphant's ardour for things military descended from his maternal grandfather. Both his parents were devotedly fond of their only child, whose wishes were never thwarted, and who was saved from the moral ruin which usually befalls spoiled children only by the deep religious disposition of the father and mother, and, still more, by the freedom from vicious taint in his own character.

Oliphant was a traveller from the outset; for he was transferred from Capetown to England at a very early age, and, when twelve years old, left England again to join his parents in Ceylon. There are few parts of the habitable globe that he did not visit once or oftener during the next twenty years. In 1846, when his parents were preparing to travel for a couple of years, he convinced them, easily enough no doubt, that it would be much better for him that he should travel with them than that he should go up to the university; and the result was that, instead of becoming a graduate of Cambridge, he became, to use his own phrase, "a citizen of the world . . . from an extended knowledge of it." He called himself not inaptly "a rolling stone," but it was one which failed to verify the proverb. Mrs. Oliphant gives his adventures in considerable detail, and he has himself recorded them, still more fully, in his Episodes in a Life of Adventure. His "baptism of fire" took place when on entering Rome in 1847 he "passed cannon pointed down the streets," and a little later shared in the Revolution by joining in an assault on the Austrian Legation. Passing on with his father, he reached Messina on the eve of a bombardment, and was more than once in imminent danger of being shot. In 1860 he was again in Italy, conspiring with Garibaldi, and he was present when Victor Emmanuel received the crown.

That insatiable desire to see and to know which led Oliphant into danger when he was only seventeen years old led him afterwards, as by an instinct, into numerous other perils. Few great public movements of that time—especially few warlike movements—took place without his presence. In 1848, when at Athens, he had an adventure with a lawless soldier who wanted his watch, and being refused, nearly took his life instead. Learning from the Consul that protection from the law was not to be looked for, but that if he had shot the man nothing would have been said, he gladly entertained the proposal of a friend that they should devote themselves "to the pleasing sport of trying to get robbed" and of shooting the robbers. They would be conferring a benefit upon the inhabitants and amusing themselves at the same time, they thought; and these two did actually arm themselves with revolvers and prowl about in secluded places "in the hope of finding sport." But, happily, no one tried to rob them.

The spirit which dictated this enterprise was hardly more irresponsible and reckless than that which displayed itself in many subsequent adventures. After spending three years in Ceylon as his father's private secretary and as a lawyer pleading in the Ceylon courts, devoting his time, as he says, largely to sport as well as to law, witnessing a small rebellion in the Kandyan Province, and making an excursion into Russia, which resulted in a book on the Crimea, Oliphant, in 1854, was again in London, just when war between England and Russia had been declared. As a specialist on the subject of the Crimea, he was summoned to the Horse Guards to give what information he could about that little-known region. It had been his purpose to prepare for the bar, but the chance of fresh adventures spoiled all his zeal for study. The world at large seemed to him, he said,

"such a much bigger oyster to open than his neighbours' pockets, that he never even went to the expense of buying a wig and gown; while the absurdity of perpetually paying for dinners at Lincoln's Inn which he never ate induced him at last to disbar himself."

He was anxious to be sent in some capacity to the Crimea—whether in the service of the government or of The Times, did not matter much to him. Meantime, however, he accompanied Lord Elgin, then Governor-General of Canada, on a diplomatic mission to Washington. Then after a brief residence in Canada, he returned to London; and failing to obtain any definite appointment, but with letters of introduction from Lord Clarendon, he proceeded, with his father, to the seat of war. There he first met Gordon, and there, of course, he had adventures, which, one fancies, would have summarily ended the career of any other man. In 1856-7 he was again in America, amusing himself, among other ways, by joining Walker, the would-be President of Nicaragua, in his filibustering expedition. This resulted rather ignominiously for him; for being found by a British officer and his nationality discovered, he was sent away like a naughty boy. Ultimately Walker was hung by the Honduras Government—hanging being, as Oliphant says, the usual fate which followed failure in that country. The rumour in England was that Oliphant himself had been so treated; and accordingly, at the first party he attended after his return home—

"a very charming young person whom I was very glad to see again after my various adventures, put out two fingers by way of greeting, raised her eyebrows with an air of mild surprise, and said, in the most silvery and unmoved voice, 'Oh, how d'y'e do.' I thought you were hung.' I think it was rather a disappointment to her that I was not. There is a novelty in the sensation of an old and esteemed dancing partner being hanged, and it forms a pleasing topic of conversation with the other ones."

After an unsuccessful attempt to enter parliament at the general election of March, 1857, Oliphant joined Lord Elgin's embassy to China; but while on the voyage out, the Indian Mutiny was announced, and the course of the expedition was diverted to Calcutta, which was reached at a critical hour. Arriving in China, Oliphant took an active part of his own in the war. He accompanied the squadron which captured the Peiho Forts, and was one of those who, with Captain Sherard Osborn, scaled the walls of Tientsin. At the bombardment of Nankin he was on board Captain Osborn's ship the Furious, and while standing on the bridge with Lord Elgin, a shot "cut through a rope a couple of feet above his lordship's head." A little later, when Oliphant was leaning over the bulwarks, another shot came through them close under his arm, one of the splinters tearing out his watch chain.

Dangers as great were afforded to Oliphant when he hunted elk (i.e. deer), elephant, wild boar, and bear. All through those years he seemed to hold his life in his hand, and to carry it very carelessly. His crowning adventure was, however, at Yedo, whither he had gone in 1861 as First Secretary of Legation, in succession to Mr. de Morgan, who had been murdered. He was glad of such an opening in the diplomatic service; but his hopes were swiftly terminated by a midnight assault, prompted by the fierce native jealousy of foreigners which then prevailed, which also nearly ended his life. He was severely wounded, and when sufficiently recovered, was sent home with despatches. Owing to the weak state of his health, he was allowed to remain in England for a while, and ultimately did not return to Japan.

Other historic events in which Oliphant participated were the Polish insurrection of 1863, and the war in Schleswig Holstein in 1864. Then he returned to London and settled, or tried to settle there. On his frequent but brief visits he had always been welcome in society. One possessed of such varied information, brilliant as a writer and talker, attractive as a man and withal well-born, could not be other than welcome. His chance of a diplomatic career being closed, another not less brilliant and enviable lay before him in the sphere of politics. He was elected member of parliament for the Stirling Burghs and was regarded by his friends as the coming statesman. Had he followed the intended path, he might long ere now have held the post of foreign secretary, or almost any other post, in successive Liberal administrations; and at this moment be either in the running with Sir William Harcourt for the reversion of the leadership, or biding his time on the borderland of both parties with Mr. Joseph Chamberlain.

These things were not to be. In 1867 Oliphant "suddenly" disappeared from England, and was next heard of in the community at Lake Erie, where he had thrown in his lot with Mr. Harris, then generally known, so far as he was known at all, as a preacher of strange doctrines. The action seemed sudden to those who knew nothing of the working of Oliphant's inner life; but in reality all his preceding career had been a preparation for it. Mrs. Oliphant, like the majority of his friends, entertains doubts of the wisdom of Oliphant's action; and, as a possible explanation, it is suggested that he had a kind of double nature, each part of which asserted its supremacy by turns—one, well supplied with common sense, attracting him to society; the other overdone with cloudy mysticism and religious fanaticism. Yet, as Mrs. Oliphant herself says, "the manner of development is all involved in the product, and no man can contradict his nature" (vol. i. p. 25). No one is really inconsistent; only each moves in an orbit of his own which, to those who do not understand its course, may seem erratic.

Oliphant's life hitherto had been that of a man of pleasure—thoughtless as men of pleasure are, but not vicious. Just a hint of other possibilities is offered in his early efforts to reform the London roughs. His letters to his mother contain numerous religious allusions, but only in response to anxious questionings of hers, and they do not seem like the expression of any deep feeling of his own. That his continual absence from home caused his mother suffering is certain; but she loved him too well to ask him to sacrifice his pleasures for her sake, and it never occurred to him to sacrifice them without being asked. His delight in hunting and in witnessing battles might seem to point to a nature callous of the feelings of others. But these things, and much else that was not beautiful in his earlier life, arose from want of thought and not from want of heart. He had never been taught that there was anything for him to do in the world but enjoy himself. The faults of a man as naturally voracious as he was could not lie far below the surface.

Until he was thirty-eight years old Oliphant was, in reality, passing through an unusually prolonged boyhood. All that time, in obedience to his insatiable desire to know, he was rapidly absorbing everything that life could offer. While profoundly interested, he was as yet not serious. No sense of responsibility lay upon him. Everything he did was of the character of an escapade or prank. His life in the open world was too full of action to give him time to think. At length when it became needful to settle down, he secured his seat in parliament and began to dwell in London. Hitherto, amid all his pleasures he had been gathering knowledge; but now it seemed as if he must be satisfied with pleasures alone, which, as he quickly learned, opened up new avenues of vice leading to moral degeneration. If his life of movement and adventure had kept him from thinking, it had also kept him from going very far astray.

The political outlook was no better. He found Liberals and Conservatives struggling for office as usual, but, as he thought, with even less than the usual regard for principles. "There was no honesty on either side," he said; and, refusing to follow the leader of his party, with a few others he formed what was known at the time as the Tea Room Cave, whose object was to secure the passing of the Reform Bill, no matter which party brought it in. It became clear to him that for political success he must be prepared to smother his scruples of conscience. If he would not do this, the best he could hope for was the position of a parliamentary Ishmael. For Mayfair and Parliament alike his training had made him impossible. This "citizen of the world by an extended knowledge of it" could not settle down to the frivolous idleness of society nor to the hole-and-corner intrigue of political parties. When these things had taken the place of the active and exciting pleasure-seeking of the past, Oliphant began to inquire where he really stood—to review his conceptions of what his life was, what it was tending to become, and what it might be. Then came disillusion. The world he found was not the world he had pictured, and, whether good or bad for others, was not the world for him. He went up into a high place to survey it, and found he could have anything for the asking which it could give, on the one condition that he should give homage to the devil; and he concluded that for all its prizes it was not worth his while to comply.

Mayfair was astonished, as well it might be; for in its eyes its prizes were of all things the most desirable, while the condition attached did not seem intolerable. It is conceivable that, in cases where there was no higher call, compliance would be right and proper. And the world outside which regarded the charmed circle much as Oliphant himself had once regarded it was astonished also. But Oliphant knew his own needs best. In mere pleasurable excitement he found nothing that would compare with an elephant hunt or a revolution. Comparing it with the world as he did, it was necessarily narrow and tawdry. Himself an undoubted acquisition to Mayfair, he soon found that it had nothing worth having to give him in exchange.

With his conversion Oliphant's narrative of his life of adventure ends. In closing his Episodes he writes:

"The more I raved about the world, and took as active a part as I could in its dramatic performances, the more profoundly did the conviction force itself upon me that if it was indeed a stage, and all the men and women only players, there must be a real life somewhere. And I was only groping after it in a blind, dumb sort of way—not likely, certainly, to find it in battle-fields or ball-rooms; but yet the reflection was more likely to force itself upon me when I was among murderers or butterflies than at any other time. . . . The world, with its bloody wars, its political intrigues, its social evils, its religious cant, its financial frauds, and its glaring anomalies, assumed in my eyes more and more the aspect of a gigantic lunatic asylum. And the question occurred to me whether there might not be latent forces in nature, by the application of which this profound moral malady might be reached. To the existence of such forces we have the testimony of the ages" (Episodes, pp. 418-19).

In 1865 Piccadilly was published in the pages of Blackwood. It set forth in an uncompromising manner what Oliphant thought about the world of fashion. Already for some time he had been interested in the teachings of Mr. Thomas Lake Harris. As early as 1860 he had known something of him, and had, in all probability, listened to the discourses delivered during that year at the Marylebone Institute, which have since been published. He would be encouraged by Mr. Harris to believe in those "latent forces in nature" of which he speaks. He would be told that in some measure those forces were no longer latent, and that, in the time soon to come, they would prove more and more alive. He would find in Mr. Harris a mystic, but a mystic as actively interested as himself in the life of the present day. The mystical and the practical sides of Mr. Harris's character would equally appeal to him; and then, to use Mrs. Oliphant's words, "for the first time Laurence heard the voice which for all his previous life he had been longing to hear."

Of Mr. Harris himself, Mrs. Oliphant, as I have said, knows practically nothing, and knowing nothing evidently fancies nothing is known. She does not seem even to be aware whether he is alive or dead. To her he is an "obscure American." So far as she "can make out" he was "known only as a minister of the sect of Swedenborgians—the 'New Jerusalem' [New Church she means] as they called themselves—upon his first appearance." All her "attempts to find materials by which the character and personal power of Mr. Harris at this period could be explained have been ineffectual." She admits that she does "not feel it necessary to believe that Harris was a man of evil purpose or bad motives," which is something for his disciples to be thankful for; but then, Mrs. Oliphant is "very slow to believe in systematic imposture." Had she been better acquainted with her subject, she would probably have seen good reason to believe he was not an impostor, and would have understood that, widely as he and Oliphant afterwards differed, there is no reason why the good faith of either of them should be called in question.

Briefly stated, the main facts of Mr. Harris's career are as follows. He was born in England (not America) on May 15, 1823. His parents removed with him to America when he was three years old. His father appears to have been a man of irregular habits, and his mother a devout woman, strict in the Calvinistic faith. He received little formal education, yet attained to vast knowledge and a considerable degree of culture, a circumstance in which his disciples are inclined to see a special manifestation of the divine indwelling. In his revolt against the doctrine of predestination which he had learned from his mother, he not unnaturally reached the opposite pole of Universal Salvation, and about 1845 he became the minister of a Universalist church in New York. His discourses were brilliant and effective, but somewhat too outspoken to please his hearers, and his connexion with this church did not last long. About 1851 he joined the Rev. James D. Scott in founding the Mountain Cove Community of Spiritualists, at Auburn, in the State of New York. This community was broken up about two years later, the cause of collapse in its case, as in many another, being a quarrel about property among the members. By this time Mr. Harris had become deeply imbued with the teachings of the mystics, especially of Jacob Boehme and Emmanuel Swedenborg; and these, with modifications, were what he himself afterwards taught, and tried to apply to life, and continues to teach and to apply up to the present day.

About 1858 Mr. Harris established "The Church of the Good Shepherd," and presided over it for some time. In 1859 he was in England preaching and lecturing. In 1861 he founded his community at Amonia, in the State of New York, whence it was removed in 1867 (the year Oliphant joined it) to Salem-on-Erie, on the southerly shore of the lake. For some years between 1861 and 1867 Mr. Harris engaged successfully in banking and agriculture; and about one half of the estate at Salem-on-Erie was provided by him. This establishment was continued under Mr. Harris's governorship until the division occurred between him and Oliphant, when it fell practically into the hands of the latter. Meantime Mr. Harris himself had removed to Santa Rosa, California, where he still dwells at the head of a small community which holds his principles and accepts his leadership.

Mr. Harris has been a voluminous writer. Some of his poems—which he does not regard as his, but as of spiritual origin and given to the world through him—and a few volumes of discourses have been published; but most of his works are for circulation among persons dwelling in various lands, who regard themselves as his disciples. In the opinion of these persons he is a prophet and seer of supreme rank, and the special recipient of divine gifts. In his novel called Masollam, Oliphant had Mr. Harris in his mind when he drew the character which gives the book its name. Certain peculiarities of voice, gesture, and expression attributed to Masollam are true of Mr. Harris. But Masollam is represented as a great prophet who, in his declining years, became the victim of evil counsellors, and erred grievously, but afterwards awakened from his delusion under the influence of one of his friends, who is meant, more or less, to stand for Oliphant himself. That Mr. Harris was not converted to Oliphant's views, but thought, to the last, that Oliphant was vitally wrong, is well known; and the fact that persons of repute, who knew him earlier than Oliphant and know him still, continue to hold him in the highest esteem, goes far to justify the supposition that Oliphant misunderstood him. An impostor may indeed deceive "the very elect," but only for a time; and if the charges made public when Oliphant parted from Mr. Harris had been well founded, it is hardly conceivable that even "the elect" would have continued unenlightened until now. The fact is Oliphant came to think he was himself an appointed prophet and seer, and it was as such that he established himself at Haifa.

It is to be hoped no reader of Mrs. Oliphant's book will adopt her version of the doctrines of the "Brotherhood of the New Life." She freely admits she does not understand them. A Swedenborgian would hardly assent to her proposition that his theory "replaces the Trinity by a Father and Mother God—a two-fold instead of a three-fold unity" (vol. ii., p. 4); for in fact Swedenborgianism does nothing of the kind. It simply holds that Jesus Christ was the one and only God. As Swedenborg says: "Jehovah God himself descended and was made man." But Swedenborg did hold that God in essence was not exclusively male or exclusively female, but combined both. He furthermore held that this condition existed in humanity prior to the Fall, and that in consequence of the Fall the male and female elements became distinct, and would continue so to remain until man entered the spirit-world. This doctrine of the "two-in-one" was not peculiar to Swedenborg. Other mystics, and particularly Jacob Boehme, had expounded it long before. Mr. Harris differed from Swedenborg in this, that he believed in the possibility in the present life of that supreme regeneration which shall restore humanity to its original bi-sexual condition. He even goes so far as to say that already there are living persons whose "counterparts," having died, are now already united to them.

This much it is necessary to say, not only to give a slight explanation of the doctrine, but in order to understand the position Mr. Harris took with reference to Oliphant's marriage. It seemed strange at first sight that one who claimed to be a seer should throw obstacles in the way of a union apparently so admirable. But, on the principle held alike by Mr. Harris and Oliphant, while the marriage of "counterparts" in the present life was regarded as helpful, the marriage of persons who were not "counterparts" was a grave hindrance; and Mr. Harris's sole objection was that, in this instance, the desirable relation did not exist, so that not only was final spiritual union impossible between Laurence and Alice Oliphant, but their union with their "counterparts" was barred.

As to the other main doctrine of the "Brotherhood" which troubles Mrs. Oliphant—the "open breathing" or "internal respiration"—it is sufficient here to say that the terms used are, to a considerable degree, figurative, and stand for the transcendental idea of direct communion between God and the human soul. But, over and above this, it is maintained that at a certain higher stage an actual physical change is experienced. Swedenborg, in what would be termed his trances, is said to have lived for long periods without performing the function commonly called breathing; and it was on those occasions that he claimed to have visited the spiritual world and conversed with angels.

However mystical the doctrines of the Brotherhood may have been, the "Way toward the Blessed Life" was eminently practical. It consisted simply in living the Christian life—not the Christian life as taught in the churches, but that which was taught by Jesus himself according to the New Testament. Matthew Arnold has described conduct as "three-fourths of fe"; the Brotherhood would insist that conduct should constitute the whole life. s Oliphant, in a letter quoted in the memoir, said: "Before we are in a condition to begin the work of reform without, we have to establish it within"; and he further explained:

Our fundamental principle is absolute and entire self-sacrifice; our motive is not the salvation of our souls, but the regeneration of humanity; our absorbing study is the practical embodiment of that new commandment which those who heard it only partially understood, that ye love one another, but which is as new, in the sense of never having been up to this time comprehended or practised, as it was then" (vol. ii., p. 36).

When Oliphant left London he was eager, with all the zeal of a new convert, to sacrifice everything for his faith. Doubtless he was conscious, also, of the need of self-discipline. So the more painful or menial task that offered, the more readily did he choose it. He acted in the spirit of the saying of St. Francis that the devils run rough clothing. For a time, at least, it seemed to him that everything he desired was bad; that the fact that he desired it was sufficient reason why he should resist it. He had been ambitious to shine in parliament; therefore he would make himself a parliamentary failure. His love for his mother, even, was a thing to be sacrificed; and accordingly, for a long period, he came and went without any tokens of affection being permitted to pass between them. Mrs. Oliphant will not believe him, except in a non-natural sense, when Oliphant declares he was under no compulsion in all his, but entirely a free agent. Nevertheless, though Mr. Harris may have done much to instruct and guide him in these matters, Oliphant's declaration was strictly true. As to the work on the farm, it was imply labour requisite for carrying on the establishment, and Oliphant—unless at his own instigation—was not required to do menial tasks merely because they were menial. Mrs. Oliphant describes him as a "martyr"; but his martyrdom, if such it was, was to his own rule of life, not to any other taskmasters. Oliphant has related how Gordon, when the Emperor of China had given him in return for his services a very valuable gold medal, "fearing that the sense of gratification he derived from it might prove a snare to him, broke it up and gave away the pieces"; and it was Gordon's custom to say of a man "so and so is a very good fellow, but he would never break his medal." It was with Oliphant as with Gordon: when the time came he freely, even joyously, and in the same spirit, broke his medal; and that he never afterwards regretted what he had done, but, on the contrary, in the face of much hardship, lived an increasingly honourable, helpful, and even joyous life, is the best possible evidence that what he did was, for him at least, right.

Some time before Oliphant's final parting from Mr. Harris, points of difference had arisen between them. For instance, Oliphant and his wife had become what is termed "writing mediums," a form of spirit-communication considered by Mr. Harris to be, like table-rapping, inferior and injurious. And, as already stated, Oliphant himself was setting up as a prophet. So, whatever be the merits or demerits of either party, it is clear an early separation was inevitable. The statement that Mr. Harris tried to put Oliphant into a lunatic asylum has been denied. That Oliphant himself believed it is indicated by a similar incident introduced in Masollam. But the friends of Mr. Harris declare emphatically that the aim simply was to induce Mrs. Laurence Oliphant, before it was too late, to herself abandon the false practices just referred to, and so throw her influence on the side of Mr. Harris, in order that, not her husband's property, but his soul might be saved. Again, it has been stated that Mr. Harris's letter to Oliphant at Haifa after the death of his wife, so far from being the boast and threat of an assassin, was a final appeal to Oliphant to turn from the error of his ways; that in Mr. Harris's view, Oliphant's wife had already been sacrificed to the dangerous misuse of spiritual influences—as a person recklessly playing with electricity might be killed—and that Oliphant himself, if he continued his practices, would also inevitably succumb. It is to be hoped the letter itself will one day be published, so that a grave charge brought against Mr. Harris may be either substantiated or withdrawn. Mistakes of this kind are not surprising, for the language of mysticism is not easily understood by the every-day world. Many of the shortcomings of Mrs. Oliphant's book may be traced precisely to this cause.

As to Oliphant himself, I cannot agree with Mr. Leisching—who looks at the matter from the British Evangelical standpoint—that "Oliphant's life seems a lost one, save as a beacon to warn others." Of the two volumes of Mrs. Oliphant's memoir, the second is by far the more interesting, chiefly because it treats of the more real part of Oliphant's life. If we are to consider his life a failure, so also must we consider the lives of all men and women who faithfully follow the light they have, unless that light should chance to guide them where they can lounge in easy chairs and sleep on beds of down.

WALTER LEWIN.

Essays on French Novelists. By George Saintsbury. (Percival.)

I AM very glad that Mr. Saintsbury has reprinted the essays on French novelists which he contributed to the Fortnightly Review in 1878, and very sorry that he has included in the same volume the paper on "The Present State of the French Novel," which appeared, in somewhat different shape, in 1888. The essays on Charles de Bernard, Alexandre Dumas, Théophile Gautier, Jules Sandeau, Octave Feuillet, Gustave Flaubert, Henry Murger, and Victor Cherbuliez, were written at a time when French literature was much less known in England than it is now. They were written at a time when Mr. Saintsbury was enthusiastically interested in the subjects about which he was writing. He brought to his work what was then a refreshing independence; he was delightfully defiant of the susceptibilities which he supposed would be outraged by his praise of Madame Bovary, by his kindly notice of that lost creature Mademoiselle de Maupin. I fancy that Mr. Saintsbury, in reprinting these papers, has toned down some of his words of defiance; of course they would be quite unnecessary now, when the works of M. Zola can be discussed in ladies' newspapers. But unfortunately, with the acceptance of novelty by the public, Mr. Saintsbury's interest in what is novel has disappeared. In 1878 he was in the very front rank of those who cared for the newest things in French literature. Since then time has moved, and things, but not Mr. Saintsbury. For work done before 1878 he has much the same admiration as of old; but he can see no merit in work which has been produced or has become prominent since that fatal date. Thus, in a Preface which takes credit, much of it deserved, for many things, we read:

"The advantage of the combined study of literature is at least this, that one is less likely to mistake the ephemeral for the permanent, or to think that Hugo and Gautier are going to perish because the little schools of the day regard them as rococo and vieux jeu, compared to a Baudelaire-charge like M. Paul Verlaine, or a de-poetised Sémancour like M. Edouard Rod."

Now, if Mr. Saintsbury has read the work of M. Paul Verlaine, and can find no other epithet by which to describe the writer than "Baudelaire-charge" (not a felicitous epithet, at the best), he must have very singularly lost the critical power which he showed, for instance, in that essay on Baudelaire which is at once the first and the best, indeed the only good, essay on the subject in English. If he has not read the work which he professes to define, the question touches—what shall I say?—on ethical confines. That M. Verlaine's point de départ was Baudelaire, in conjunction with the Parnassians, no one would deny. But the influence of the Fleurs du Mal is only noticeable in the Juvenilia called Poèmes Saturniens; and to speak generally of M. Verlaine as a caricature of Baudelaire is precisely as reasonable as it would be to speak of Tennyson as a caricature of Keats.

It is in the essay on the present state of the French novel that we find most evidence of Mr. Saintsbury's curious, determined exclusiveness in regard to quite contemporary French literature. It is not necessary to be a fervent admirer of M. Zola to be quite certain that no critic has a right to dismiss the claims and disregard the position of the author of Les Rougon-Macquart as Mr. Saintsbury has done. M. Zola, to whatever extent he may or may not be great, is unquestionably a big man. It is very unwise to be quite so positive as this:

"For pass away he must, having neither of the two, and the only two, lasting qualities of literature. One of these is style, the other is the artistic presentation of matter. The first he probably could not have attained, except in a few passages, if he would; the second he has deliberately rejected, and so the mother of dead dogs awaits him sooner or later."

Such is the summing up in regard to M. Zola, while all that is said of the brothers De Goncourt is this parenthetical reference in the sentence preceding what I have just quoted :

“Also, though he is much stronger than his masters in part, les deux Goncourts, he does not possess that rather sickly, but still curious refinement of style which may possibly preserve them long after he has passed away.”

I can scarcely expect my readers to believe me when I say that this is all, absolutely all. I am reminded of a sketch of contemporary literature once contributed to the Tauchnitz series by Mr. Henry Morley, in which the only reference to the work of Mr. George Meredith was in a single clause in the midst of a crowded sentence—“the witty novels of George Meredith.”

After such treatment of M. Zola and of the Goncourts, it is not surprising to find that M. Villiers de l'Isle-Adam, who has written, together with much work that can only be called a magnificent failure, one volume of absolutely original, of absolutely unsurpassable, stories, is not so much as mentioned. M. Léon Cladel is equally ignored—an unequal writer with a style that has always something barbarous in its vigour, but a writer who has done some splendid work, as in the best of Les Van-pieds, in Ompdrailles, le Tombeau-des-Lutteurs, which is quite new of its kind. As for M. J. K. Huysmans—who is in many ways the most remarkable of the younger novelists, and certainly a writer whose position, however much it may be contested, cannot legitimately be ignored—this is what Mr. Saintsbury has to say of him :

“But of the orthodox Zolaists, who is there of whom any sane criticism can say, having read him, anything that is good? . . . Sometimes (the greatest farceur of all of them, M. J. K. Huysmans, is the best instance) they have something of their master's vigour; but none of them has anything of his occasional grasp of actual character, and all exaggerate the absurd pessimism which is the characteristic of such philosophy as he professes.”

Mr. Saintsbury must know that it is equally unreasonable to speak of M. Huysmans as a farceur or as a Zolaist. He has long ago freed himself from the yoke of M. Zola; and even in his second novel, Les Sœurs Fatard, the least discriminating critic could see in this master of style and presentment an original force, a new talent. At present he writes of naturalism thus :

“Ce que je reproche au naturalisme, ce n'est pas le lourd badigeon de son gros style, c'est l'immondice de ses idées; ce que je lui reproche, c'est d'avoir incarné le matérialisme dans la littérature, d'avoir glorifié la démocratie de l'art. . . . Quelle théorie de cerveau mal famé, quel mixte et étroit système! Vouloir se confiner dans les buanderies de la chair, rejeter le suprasensible, dénier le rêve, ne pas même comprendre que la curiosité de l'art commence là où les sens cessent de servir!”

Is this—which I take from the first chapter of Li-Bas—is this the language of a disciple? As little is it the language of a disciple as of a farceur.

I have taken up so much space in considering Mr. Saintsbury's general view of his subject in his first chapter that I shall be unable to say anything at length about the remaining essays. But it is really unnecessary to criticise them in detail. When he writes of Flaubert, of Dumas, of Murger, Mr. Saintsbury is always a pleasant and trustworthy companion. Here he is on safe ground, here he writes sympathetically. Criticism that is not sympathetic has very little value. Why, then, should Mr. Saintsbury think it necessary to write out at length the varying points of his persistent dislike of all that is newest in French fiction? I cannot see the answer to my question.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

“THE ADVENTURE SERIES.”—The Voyages and Adventures of Ferdinand Mendez Pinto. Done into English by Henry Cogan. With an Introduction by Arminius Vambéry. (Fisher Unwin.)

THIS abridgment of Henry Cogan's translation, of which a third edition was published in 1692, would have been more useful, perhaps, without an introduction by Prof. Vambéry. The space might have been better filled by reprinting either Purchas's observations on Mendez Pinto, or the “Apologetical Defence,” a paper containing much curious and interesting information. What is even more to the point, the reader would not be misled by Prof. Vambéry's extraordinary misstatements. “As regards the details,” we are told, “of the war and conquest of China by Murhachu [sic], the Prince of the Mandshu, whom Pinto calls Tartars,” the accounts given by the Portuguese adventurer are “distinctly valuable.” One can only infer that Prof. Vambéry has not read the distinctly valuable chapters. When Pinto left Asia for good, and returned to Lisbon, Nurhachu (not Murhachu) was still unborn. The Manchu prince first attacked the Chinese in 1617, some four-and-thirty years after Mendez Pinto's death. Pinto's king of Tartaria, who “fell upon the city of Pekin with so great an army as the like had never been seen since Adam's time,” was not even a Manchu; Prof. Vambéry's emendation, “Tartary, rectius Mandshury,” being altogether uncalled for. The Tartar king was no other than the famous Altan Khan, chief of the Tumed Mongols, who now live for the most part in the neighbourhood of Kuko Khoten. According to Mr. Howorth, who quotes Moyria de Maillac, Altan Khan, in the year 1544, “entered the province of Pe-chili and advanced almost to the gates of Pekin, ravaging everywhere.” The same date is assigned in Mendez Pinto's narrative to the siege of Pekin by the king of Tartaria; but, seeing that his chronology is always dubious, he may possibly be referring to some later invasion. Altan Khan went on invading China, at irregular intervals, down to the year 1571, when the Chinese emperor propitiated him with the title of Chun-i-Wang, “Just and Obedient Prince,” and a gold seal. There is not the least doubt as to his being Mendez Pinto's king of Tartaria; the only wonder is that Prof. Vambéry should have missed the identification and have fixed on one which will not bear scrutiny. Pinto and some of his companions were taken captive by one of Altan Khan's generals and carried off to Tartary beyond the Great Wall. In a passage, omitted in the reprint, we got a striking portrait of the Tartar king :

“The king was much about forty years of age, full stature, somewhat lean, and of a good aspect; his beard was very short, his moustaches after the Turkish manner, his eyes like to the Chinese, and his countenance severe and majestic; As for his vesture, it was violet colour, in fashion like a Turkish robe, embroidered with Pearl; upon his feet he had green Sandals, wrought all over with gold-Purl, and great Pearls among it, and on his head a Sattin cap of the colour of his habit, with a rich band of Diamonds and Rubies intermingled together.”

In abridging Cogan's translation, the publishers say they have aimed at preserving “the most adventurous and the most curious passages of Mendez Pinto's narrative.” Without knowing exactly what an adventurous passage may be, I may note that far too many exceedingly curious passages have been omitted. Sometimes whole chapters are left out. The numbering of the chapters has been altered. Comparing the reprint with Cogan's translation, I also find more omissions than are indicated in the text. On the whole, therefore, what with injudicious if not unwarrantable abridgment, and the blundering introduction contributed by Prof. Vambéry, this edition leaves very much to be desired.

Among notable omissions is that of the passage in which Mendez Pinto describes the embassies received by the Tartar king. One ambassador came from Xataanas, the Sophy of Persia. Xataanas, I imagine, is Shah Tamasp, Suffavi, the same who told Queen Elizabeth's envoy that he stood in no need of the aid of infidels. Another ambassador came from the Emperor of Caran, a very rich and mighty prince. In the country ruled over by this potentate, there dwelt “a certain people, fair of complexion, well-shapen, and appalled with Breeches, Cassocks and Hats, like to the Flemings which we see in Europe.” I may hazard the conjecture that Caran is Kara Tibet, and these fair-complexioned people the Shire Uighurs whom Altan Khan—I again quote Mr. Howorth's History of the Mongols—subdued in 1573. But the most unpardonable omission is that of nearly two chapters in which Pinto describes his journey from the Tartar court to the capital of Cochin China. For a considerable distance the route traversed must have been near that taken by M. Bonvalot and Prince Henri d'Orléans. That narrative is also interesting from another point of view. Mendez Pinto tells us that at a very fair town called Quanguinaw he met the “Talapicor of Eehuna” (l'Echune in the French translation), “which is their Pope, who was going then unto the king for to comfort him about the ill-success he had in China.” Now, Mr. Howorth states, on the authority of the Mongol prince-historian, Ssanang Setzen, that, in 1576, Sod nam Jamtso visited Altan Khan and received from him the title of “Diamond Sceptre-holding Dalai Lama”; and this, Mr. Howorth adds, is the first occurrence of the title Dalai Lama. Could I emulate Prof. Vambéry's fine contempt for dates, I should say that this Sod nam Jamtso, the first Dalai Lama, was no other than Pinto's Talapicor of Eehuna or l'Echuna; but it seems unlikely. On the other hand, Pinto presently came to a city called Lechuna, "the chiefest of the Religion of these Gentiles, and such it may be as Rome is amongst us." Is Lechuna Lhassa? If so, the Portuguese must have gone rather a long way round.

The fact is, Mendez Pinto's narrative is rich in puzzles and mystifications. It was not published till after his death, and from the very beginning his editors seem to have been utterly oblivious of the unities. They think little of making him arrive at his destination, after a long journey, a year or so before the date when he is supposed to have started. His topography is often incredible. At the same time it would be easy to show that the insulting epithet, "Mendax Pinto," was altogether undeserved. His wildest statements often bear a close resemblance to what are now accepted facts. His story about a vast lake from which four great rivers take their rise, one of them being the Yang-tse-kiang, is not, indeed, literally correct; but we know that the Yang-tse-kiang, the Mekong, the Salween, and the Irrawadi all have their sources on the eastern edge of the Tibetan plateau. The general credibility of Pinto's travels is fairly estimated by Samuel Purchas, who decides "that if he hath robbed the altars of truth as he did those of the Calempuy islands, yet in Pequín equity we will not cut off the thumbs (according to Nanquin rigour) upon bare surmise without any evidence against him."

What is needed to establish his reputation is a careful comparison of his book, not only with the histories and narratives of travel written by the Jesuits and others a couple of hundred years ago, but also with the works of modern travellers, including Prejevalsky, Ney Elias, Cooper, Gill, Colonel Mark Bell, V.C., and the distinguished Frenchmen, M. Bonvalot's predecessors, who have explored Further India. Pinto was one of the first Europeans to visit Nimme, where we now have a British Consulate; and his description of the place should be compared with what Ralf Fitch and Mr. Archer have told us. His account of the wars and revolutions in Burma, in the latter half of the sixteenth century, practically agrees with that given in Faria y Souza's History; but the studious reader will also inquire whether native chronicles afford further confirmation. Neither in Prof. Vambéry's introduction, however, nor in the one solitary and somewhat inane foot-note which is offered by way of elucidation of the text, will any assistance be found. Even the map, a reproduction of Van Lindschoten's, is of little use.

Regarded merely as a story-book—and the reprint is too much hacked about to be of any value in other respects—the Voyages and Adventures of Mendez Pinto are disagreeable reading. The editor, it is true, has not cut out all those marvellous, one might say inimitable, pictures of Asiatic pagantry which Pinto drew with unsurpassed skill; but the endless details of pillage and slaughter and ruthless cruelty are little short of revolting. If intended for the use of serious students, the reprint should have been a faithful transcript of Cogan's translation. If, on the other hand, the "Adventure Series" is only designed for the delectation of the young, some more edifying traveller should have been selected. From beginning to end there is hardly a single incident that could be cited as an example of courage, endurance, or devotion to a just cause. Pinto and his companions were piratical filibusters. They swagger and ruffle it bravely enough when the odds are all on their side, and are despicable poltroons in adversity. Prof. Vambéry talks of the sorry reward which fell to the lot of "this audacious Portuguese" for the miseries he endured, "all with the sole object of satisfying a curiosity which has proved so useful to posterity." It was a lust of gold that took him and others like him to the Eastern seas, and his sufferings were a fitting punishment for his misdeeds.

STEPHEN WHEELER.

NEW NOVELS.

St. Katherine's by the Tower. By Walter Besant. In 3 vols. (Chatto & Windus.)

Khaled: a Tale of Arabia. By F. Marion Crawford. In 2 vols. (Macmillans.)

A Life's Devotion. By Lady Virginia Sanders. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Quita. By Cecil Dunstan. In 2 vols. (Ward & Downey.)

Spindle and Shears: a Welsh Story. By Lewis Armytage. (W. H. Allen.)

Wounded by a Word. By C. E. Hitchman. (Digby & Long.)

Jack's Father, and other Stories. By W. E. Norris. (Methuen.)

MR. WALTER BESANT at sundry times and in divers places has said such terrible things about the sins and follies of reviewers that one may well feel rather nervous in expressing any opinion at all upon a book from the pen of so formidable a ensor censorum. One's nervousness is, however, indefinitely increased when the opinion to be expressed is by no means unreservedly favourable—when indeed it amounts to a conviction that the book under censorship is more or less of a failure; for in that case any slip that the poor critic may make is likely to be treated with more than usual severity of wholesome chastisement. This being so, I hope I may not be accused of a cowardly attempt to tamper with justice when I say that, though St. Katherine's by the Tower is in various important respects a very faulty story, it nevertheless contains some very good things. If the freedom of the city has not been conferred upon Mr. Besant he has not yet received the honour due to him, for he has discovered and described in his own delightful way a score or so of London's concealed beauties; and what he did for Bankside and its superficially unattractive vicinity in another story he has done here for the precincts of the little-known church which provides his new book with a title. Then, too, there is a less pleasant but not less admirably painted picture of the interior of Newgate as Newgate was in the bad old days at the close of the last century; and there are other capital examples of the descriptive work which Mr. Besant always does so well. But when a satisfying story of human action and passion has to be told, the best description in the world seems to go a very short way. The special story that is told in St. Katherine's by the Tower is deficient in real interest, because the actions upon which the narrative scheme depends are the outcome of morbid cerebral conditions. Indeed, there would have been no story to tell had not Mr. Besant chosen to afflict both his hero and his heroine with partial insanity, so prolonged that only in a technical sense can it be called "temporary." All the talk about the "evil eye" of the villain Richard Archer, to which so many pages are devoted, is pure padding, because there is no attempt to make the explanatory hypothesis credible to the imagination. The imaginary narrator explicitly rejects it; and therefore we have a story dominated by the conduct of two people who, not to put too fine a point upon it, go mad without rhyme or reason, and recover their senses only when all possible mischief has been done. Apart from this fundamental error of structure, St. Katherine's by the Tower is one of the fullest and briskest of its author's recent novels; and it is a pity that the reader who cannot fail to be attracted by the vivacity of isolated portions of narrative should be repelled by the obtrusive unreality of the book as a whole.

Mr. F. Marion Crawford's Arabian romance cannot, perhaps, be considered one of the most striking of his books; but it has a charming freshness of fancy, and in finish of literary workmanship it will hold its own with any of its predecessors. It has certainly one important element of general popularity, inasmuch as it provides the reader with plenty of story—much more, for example, than was to be found in its immediate forerunner, the narrative substance of which could have been given in half a dozen pages. The opening takes us back into the imaginative atmosphere of The Thousand and One Nights, for Khaled is one of our old friends the genii who, for a deed which has gained favour in the eyes of Allah, receives from him the boon he desires. He is to become a man, and to have for wife the beautiful Princess Zehowah, who, though indifferent to him as to all other men, will give him her hand in marriage. Should he succeed in conquering her coldness and winning her love, he will win with it a human soul and the gift of immortality; but, should he fail in this, his doom will be the death which is annihilation. For all his centuries of pre-human experience, Khaled is but a neophyte in affairs of love; and the schemes which seem to his innocence so full of serpentine wisdom are destined to result in disastrous failure. He first tries to dazzle Zehowah by feats of arms; but, though admiration and respect are freely given, the warmer emotion is withheld, and his wife persists in regarding his yearning for love as an incomprehensible whim. Foiled here, he endeavours to touch her heart by arousing her jealousy; but the quick-witted Zehowah sees through his simple wiles, and laughingly tells him that she has found him out.

In his well-meant flirtation, Khaled, however, has been playing with edged tools. With all his endeavours he has failed in winning the love of his wife, but he has unwittingly won the love of that "glorious devil," the slave Almasta; and when the girl discovers that Khaled has but been using her for ends in which she has no concern, and that his heart can never be hers, the craving of desire gives place to a not less fierce lust for revenge. How her traitorous scheme leads up to the dénouement must not be told here, but the story will be read with genuine interest in Mr. Crawford's pages. The movement never drags; the book has both pathos and humour; and it would not be surprising were Khaled to prove one of its author's most popular novels.

"His very faults," wrote George Eliot of her earliest hero, Amos Barton, "were middling—he was not very ungrammatical. It was not in his nature to be superlative in anything; unless, indeed, he was superlatively middling." What the Reverend Amos was as a man A Life's Devotion is as a book. A critic who is disposed to be genial may say that it is rather good, while a critic who is disposed to be severe may say that it is rather poor; but no one will say that it is "very" anything, except, perhaps, very ordinary. The characters are not specially natural, but they are not obtrusively the reverse; the story told is hardly probable, yet not conspicuously improbable; the style is destitute of striking merits, but free from striking defects; the novel, as a whole, is not very interesting, but it would be unfair to say that it is very dull. A Life's Devotion is, in short, an utterly unremarkable specimen of that familiar article of commerce, the circulating library novel.

Mr. Cecil Dunstan's Quita is admirably written, and the heroine is a thoroughly well individualised character; but it is hardly natural that a girl so sensible, so capable, and so wholesomely human in every way should persist in wearing the willow and dooming herself to perpetual maidenhood for the sake of a man who has shown himself to be, not only utterly heartless, but a thorough cad into the bargain. Of Leslie, the cad in question, it can only be said that he is altogether unsatisfactory, not only morally, but artistically. At first he is presented as a chivalrous gentleman who seems intended as a foil to the self-satisfied snob Saville, and the reader is mentally congratulating Quita upon her discrimination in disdaining the pinchbeck and choosing the gold, when, all at once, without any reason that we are clever enough to discern, Leslie "rounds" upon himself and makes a revelation for which no hint had prepared us, and which most readers will rightly think is obviously untrue to the observed facts of human nature. This is bad; and it is all the worse because Leslie is indispensable, for if he were left out of the story there would be left no story to tell.

Scotland and Ireland have long been happy hunting grounds for the novelist, but Wales has been comparatively neglected; and therefore, in virtue of its Welsh background alone, Spindle and Shears achieves a pleasant effect of freshness. Apart, however, from this semi-adventitious attraction, it is a story of real power, picturesqueness, and strong human interest; and if it be Mr. Lewis Armytage's first attempt in fiction it must be regarded as at once a performance and a promise. Eudea Morgan, Lord Senghenydd's illegitimate daughter, with her beautiful face, her wonderful voice, her cold heart, and her overmastering envy and avarice, is one of those strongly-painted portraits which testify to a by no means ordinary power of imaginative conception and presentation; while the vengeful grandfather, Idris Morgan, and the drinking rector, Duncan Fraser, who knows the Earl's secret, are figures which, though less prominent, are hardly less impressive. Spindle and Shears belongs to the school of Wuthering Heights; and though no one would think of putting the books side by side, there is in the new story a sombre force of the same kind as that which makes itself so startlingly manifest in Emily Brontë's Yorkshire romance.

The characters, conversations, situations, and incidents in Wounded by a Word are so grotesquely ridiculous that the book ought to be amusing; but instead of being amusing it is dull with a dullness only to be characterised by some hyperbolic superlative invented expressly for the purpose. The reviewer hereby issues a warning that any person desirous of verifying this statement must undertake such verification at his own risk.

Everybody knows what admirable work is to be found in Mr. Norris's three-volume novels; but it may be doubted whether any one of them is so perfect, in the sense of being flawless, as are two or three of the seven short stories in his latest volume. I myself think that the title-story is a masterpiece of reticent pathos; but as I believe that some people think Jack impossible, or, if possible, a fool with whom sympathy is out of the question, I will not press its claims. But the handling in "Mysterious Mrs. Wilkinson," "A Queer Business," and "Clever Lady Sophia," at once so delicate and so firm, so admirably effective and yet so free from the exaggeration of mere "effects," must silence even the most resolute carper. If anyone wishes to convince the world that Mr. Norris is our greatest living master of light satire, he will find plenty of good matter for his plea in Jack's Father and its companion stories.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

CLASSICAL SCHOOL BOOKS.

Seyffert's Dictionary of Classical Antiquities. Revised and edited by H. Nettleship and J. E. Sandys. (Sonnenschein.) This large and handsome volume is based on Dr. Seyffert's well-known Lexicon der Altertumskunde, and professes to give all that the student requires to know about mythology, religion, literature, and art. In scope, therefore, it is a good deal wider than a book like Dr. Smith's large Dictionary of Antiquities, including as it does accounts of legends, biographies of painters, and so forth—almost everything, indeed, except history pure and simple, and geography. In minuteness of treatment it is, of course, with its 700 pages far behind Dr.

Smith's elaborate work, and it does not profess to do more than satisfy the student's needs. Sometimes, perhaps, it goes a good bit further; we have, for instance, accounts of Remmius Palamon, Panyasis, Papiinianus, Pappus, Parthenius, and many more literary or artistic personages, a knowledge of whom seems hardly required by those who would use nothing bigger than this book. The standard of the work is excellent, the additions of Prof. Nettleship and Dr. Sandys are judicious and valuable, and the illustrations are almost uniformly first-rate, though mostly reproduced from other works. On the whole, we have a most useful book for "school and college use."

Herodotus, Book VI. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and Maps, by J. Strachan. (Macmillans.) Prof. Strachan's work will take a high place among the numerous editions of single Books of Herodotus which have appeared of late years. Made very complete with maps and illustrations of coins, it contains also a good general introduction and a specially thorough account of the dialect of Herodotus. It is probable that without the editions of Stein and Abicht the book could not have been written; but Prof. Strachan has added a great quantity of his own work and no mean skill in explanation. Nearly everything is in his notes, and only in a few instances could we wish the information given more explicitly or fully. As to the text, "an attempt has been made to bring it into harmony with the evidence" about the Ionic dialect which can be drawn from inscriptions and poetical literature. C. 122 is omitted as spurious. The volume ends with two appendices (1) on Marathon, (2) on the Polemarchi and Strategi, in which the new Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία is laid under contribution. There is one passage, at least, on which we must join issue with Prof. Strachan. It is about the escape of the Persian ships from Marathon. In C. 115 the editor translates ἐξακρουσάμενοι, "backing their ships away from the land." Now, C. 107 looks as if the ships had never been drawn up on land at all (and so Prof. Rawlinson understands); and if so, there is nothing to show whether their sterns or bows pointed to the shore, whether they were got away by backing or otherwise. But, if they were pulled up on the beach, they probably had, according to ancient custom, their bows pointing to sea, and then they would not need any "backing" to get away, they would be simply run out. That they were so arranged (in spite of C. 107) seems proved by C. 114, in which we find Kynegiros able to lay hold τῶν ἀφάλατων, of the stern ornaments. In C. 125 we have known junior students greatly troubled by the oi of l. 18, on which the editor has no note.

Herodotus VII. With Notes. By Agnata F. Butler. (Macmillans.) The Seventh Book of Herodotus, to which the fine epigram of Phacennus on Leonidas is here very fitly prefixed, is one of varied interest. The enumeration of the tribes who followed Xerxes, with their dress and arms, may interest alike the school-boy and the anthropologist, while the defence of Thermopylae appeals to that downright love of hand-to-hand fighting which seems instinctive in all successful races. Here, too, occurs for the first time the famous phrase about the "wooden walls." Though the Book is but a section of Herodotus's History, it is tolerably self-contained, and, lastly, it is not too easy. Chapter 36, with its intricate account of Xerxes's two bridges, has withered up many a candidate for honours before now; but Mrs. Butler gives a clear and, on the whole, a successful commentary on it. The words κατὰ λόγον, however, in line 21, are not sufficiently explained by "in proportion." In proportion to what? "The flaxen (cables) were the heavier," says Prof. Rawlinson, evading the difficulty altogether. Herodotus must have meant that they were heavier than papyrus cables in proportion to either their length or their number (two of flax, four of papyrus); and perhaps the former is more likely to have been in his mind. At the end of c. 168, the note on διεκοῦσαντο τοὺς Ἕλληνας is merely "evaded." But what did the Corcyreans evade? Was it the expectations of the Greeks or their reproaches? Mrs. Butler must beware of over-brevity. A note on chap. 211, line 20, requires re-wording — "παλαβεῖν, 'gain.' τῆς ἐσόδου with both παρ. and περιόμενοι"; for παλαβεῖν does not govern a genitive case. The Introduction is short and business-like; there is a useful appendix on the dialect of Herodotus, and the notes contain, in a convenient and compendious form, most of what has been written on Book VII. To sum up, it must be said that this edition is marked, not by any striking originality, but by much of plain sense.

Homeri Ilias XXII. By G. M. Edwards. (Cambridge: Pitt Press.) Mr. Edwards has produced a scholarly little edition of one book of the Iliad, with an admirable introduction which is, philologically speaking, adequately modern, except in respect to "assimilated" forms like μηχανῶνται. The notes are brief and to the point, though we do not see why the editor should descend to such a remark as, "Dr. Leaf points out that τόσον (c. 452) is our colloquial 'so far.'" This is steam-hammer nutcracker with a vengeance.

Commentar zu Cäsar's Denkwürdigkeiten, für den Schulgebrauch. Von Johann Schmidt. (Wien: Tempsky.) Wörterverzeichnis zu Homeri Ilias A—Δ. Von A. Scheindler. (Wien: Tempsky.) These two aids for the education of the Austrian schoolboy belong to a series of school-books recently put forth at Vienna, and noticed several times already in the ACADEMY. They may interest English scholars because of their total unlikeness to the familiar "Schul-ausgaben," or our own Clarendon Press or Pitt Press manuals. In spite of the difference in title, the plan of the two books is nearly identical. They do nothing but translate words and phrases arranged in the order in which they occur in the text, and add a few references to grammars. Beyond this there is nothing, no long grammatical notes or various interpretations or historical disquisitions or parallel passages or any of the other abominations with which it is the fashion in England to deck out the school-book and disgust the schoolboy. The level for which the books are intended is apparently the "Quarta."

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. CASSELL & COMPANY are early in taking advantage of the new American Copyright Act. They have for some time past been making arrangements with authors in England and America, among whom may be mentioned:—Mr. R. L. Stevenson, Mr. Clark Russell, Dr. Conan Doyle, the Rev. Baring Gould, Mr. Frank Barrett, Mr. Frank Stockton, Mr. Stanley Weyman, the author of "Dead Man's Rock," Mrs. Elizabeth Stuart Phelps, Mrs. Molesworth, Mrs. L. T. Meade, Mrs. Parr, and Mrs. Alexander. Works by these and other writers will be published during the autumn by Messrs. Cassell & Company in England, and by the Cassell Publishing Company in America.

WE hear that Mr. C. P. Lucas, of the Colonial Office, author of the series of excellent volumes entitled "The Historical Geography of the British Colonies," has in hand a new edition of Sir George Cornwall Lewis's Government of Dependencies, which has been out of print for some years. It will be published by the Clarendon Press.

THE large-paper edition of Hedda Gabler will be ready in a day or two, but we understand that it is almost entirely exhausted by advance subscriptions. It contains, in addition to a portrait of the author, portraits of Miss Robins as Hedda Gabler and of Miss Marion Lea as Mrs. Elvsted. There is also a small vignette of Miss Robins on the cover.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN announce a novel by the now famous author of "Mademoiselle Ixe"; it will be entitled The Exorcism of Cecilia.

SUBSCRIBERS to the Roxburghe Ballads will be glad to hear that Mr. Ebsworth has just ready for issue to them a new Part, consisting of nearly three hundred pages. This will be Part XXI., leaving only one part remaining to complete the series.

THE next volume in the series of "English Men of Action" will be Montrose, by Mr. Mowbray Morris.

MR. HEINEMANN has received the following letter from Mr. Gladstone—

"Mr. Gladstone, with his compliments, begs to thank Mr. Heinemann for Mr. Hall Caine's small but interesting book on the Isle of Man. He is inclined to hope that, when it goes to a second edition, a chapter may be added on the laws and administration of the island."

Mr. Hall Caine, who is still unwell, has intimated to the publisher his intention of adding the chapter which Mr. Gladstone suggests, as soon as his health permits. The Little Manx Nation is already in its second thousand.

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER & Co. will publish immediately a reprint of Prof. Ogilvie's essay on "The Right of Property in Lands with Respect to its Foundation in the Law of Nature; its Present Establishment by the Municipal Laws of Europe; and the Regulations by which it might be rendered more beneficial to the Lower Ranks of Man-kind." The essay, which originally appeared in 1782, is now issued with the author's own notes, as well as with copious biographical notes by the editor, Mr. D. C. Macdonald.

MR. CHARLES F. RIDEAL has in the press two little books of character sketches, entitled Young Ladies of to-day, and Young Gentlemen of to-day, illustrated by Crow. They will be published by Messrs. Dean & Son.

A VOLUME of tales by Mr. H. Kaines Jackson, entitled Stories of Sentiment, is announced by Mr. Elliot Stock for immediate publication.

MESSRS. HEINEMANN & BALESSTIER have now published at Leipzig the first volume of their new "English Library," which is intended only for continental circulation. It is Mr. Rudyard Kipling's The Light that Failed, in the latest or Macmillan version. The format closely resembles the familiar quarto of Tauchnitz, though the printing and paper are English. Among the forthcoming volumes in this series, we notice the titles of three as yet unpublished books by Mr. R. L. Stevenson.

WE are informed that a copy of Poems by Two Brothers was sold for £15 10s. at a book sale at Louth on July 2.

DURING Wednesday and Thursday of next week, Messrs. Sothely will be engaged in selling the first portion of the autograph letters and historic documents collected by the late Sir Thomas Phillipps, of Middle Hill and Cheltenham. They include a series of unpublished documents, with the seals of Henry IV., V., VI., VII., and VIII., and Elizabeth; a letter of Sir Thomas Lucy, of Charlcoate, the supposed original of Shakspeare's "Justice Shallow"; a letter from James II., when Duke of York, to the Jesuit confessor of Louis XIV., developing a project for bringing back England to the Catholic faith, together with the reply; a letter of George Villiers, Duke of Buckingham, relating to the marriage of Charles I. and Henrietta Maria; a letter of Chatterton to Dodsley, the publisher, showing that he attempted to impose "perhaps the oldest dramatic piece extant, wrote by one Rowley, a priest in Bristol," upon Dodsley, before he ever addressed Horace Walpole; four long letters by Junius; and a letter by Tom Paine, giving an account of an interview with Fox.

AT the annual meeting of the Swedenborg Society, held on June 30, it was stated that £707 had been received in dividends, subscriptions, &c.; from legacies £700, and from books sold £239. The number of volumes delivered was 4525, which includes some in German, Italian, French, and Latin; 6300 volumes have been reprinted. Public libraries have received 1139 volumes; 100 volumes are being offered gratis to ministers at Melbourne, and the theological works have been presented to the public library instituted in honour of the Queen's jubilee at Perth, West Australia. Arrangements are being made for a translation of Heaven and Hell into the Hindi language, for circulation in India. In Italy, a further distribution of Heaven and Hell and Divine Providence has been made to the extent of 50 volumes.

EMMY VON DINKLAGE, one of Germany's best novelists, died suddenly last week at Berlin of heart-disease. She particularly excelled in novels with a local colouring, her speciality being descriptions of the Emsland.

THE Clarendon Press has published this week a new Part of their New English Dictionary on Historical Principles, namely Part i. of Vol. iii., being the first that bears on its title-page the name of Mr. Henry Bradley. It begins the letter E, but does not quite finish it, stopping at the word "every." From the Prefatory Note we learn that it contains altogether nearly ten thousand words, of which 6842 are main words; of these last 25 per cent. are marked as obsolete, and 4 per cent. as alien or imperfectly naturalized. This portion of the English vocabulary is remarkable for the extremely small proportion of native English words, as compared with the large number of words adopted from French and of derivatives from Greek and Latin. It is also remarkable for the unusual abundance of technical terms belonging to modern science. So far as possible, words of this class have been traced back to the authors by whom they were formed; and the inventor's own statements as to the etymology and the reason for which the name was given have, when it seemed necessary, been quoted. Mr. Bradley is careful to say that Dr. Murray is not responsible for any of the faults that may appear in this Part, though few of the pages have not been improved by the adoption of his suggestions. It is also stated that Dr. Fitzedward Hall has furnished many hundreds of important quotations, carrying back the history of words to an earlier date, or exemplifying senses and constructions not sufficiently illustrated. We hope to review the Part at length hereafter.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

IN accordance with general expectation, Prof. Andrew Seth, now at St. Andrews, has been elected to the chair of logic and metaphysics at Edinburgh, vacant by the retirement of Prof. Campbell Fraser. Mr. Seth graduated at Edinburgh in 1878; and was for sometime professor of philosophy at Cardiff, until he succeeded Spencer Baynes at St. Andrews. His Balfour lectures on Scottish Philosophy are well known. Meanwhile the chair of Humanity at Edinburgh, which has been vacant since the death of Prof. Sellar in October of last year, still remains unfilled. The competition for it is said to be very keen.

THE Conington prize at Oxford has been awarded to Mr. F. Haverfield, of New College, for a dissertation on Roman Britain, partly epigraphical. We understand that on this occasion three other dissertations of merit were sent in. The prize has only once previously been awarded—in 1882, to Prof. Cook Wilson, for an Aristotelian dissertation.

MR. FRANCIS GOTCH, of London University, who has been for some years assistant in the physiological laboratory at Oxford, has been appointed to the chair of physiology in University College, Liverpool, recently endowed by Mr. George Holt with £10,000.

WE may mention here that the Rev. C. H. H. Wright, of Trinity College, Dublin, has been appointed vicar of St. John's, Liverpool.

THE University of Cambridge will give an official reception on Saturday, August 15, to delegates from the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, which will be held in London at that time.

THE Oxford Historical Society proposes to issue—in addition to the late Prof. Thorold Rogers's Oxford City Documents—two more volumes for 1891, both of which are now in course of printing: a History of the three neighbouring villages to the north—Kidlington, Yarnton, and Begbrooke, written by the Hon. Mrs. Stapleton; and Reminiscences of Oxford, by Oxford Men, selected and edited by Miss L. Quiller Couch. The volumes for 1892 will probably be the Grey Friars in Oxford, by Mr. A. G. Little; and the first part of the Life and Diaries of Antony a Wood, by the Rev. Andrew Clark. Arrangements have also been made for the Cartulary of St. Frideswide, Place Names of Oxon, Berks and Bucks, Berkshire Wills, and Oxford and the Neighbourhood during the Civil War. Meanwhile, Mr. C. E. Doble is still working at his collections of Thomas Hearne, of which three volumes have already appeared.

THE current number of the Eagle—a magazine supported by members of St. John's College, Cambridge—prints the commemoration sermon preached in the college chapel on May 6 by Prof. J. E. B. Mayor, from which we make the following quotation:

"If each Johnian would endeavour, wherever he goes, to inquire for books published by members of the college, or for records of their lives, and would send his acquisitions to our librarian, in a few years our stores would be of priceless value to the historian of letters. For many years I have sent books to the libraries to which they by birthright belonged, whether our public library, or the Bodleian, or college libraries, or Stonyhurst, or Protestant Nonconformist institutions."

NUMBER forty-two of the Bibliographical Contributions issued by the library of Harvard University consists of a list of the orators and poets of Phi Beta Kappa, Alpha of Massachusetts—we quote litteratim et punctatim—by Mr. W. H. Tillinghast, assistant librarian. The list begins in 1782, and is henceforth continuous down to 1890. In the eighteenth century we find such familiar names as Lowell, Quincy Adams, Emerson, Dana Ward, Quincy, and Bigelow; and also one Thomas Paine, who subsequently changed his Christian name to Robert Treat. Edward Everett was poet in 1812, and orator in 1824 and again in 1833. William Cullen Bryant was poet in 1821, and George Bancroft in 1823, though his contribution cannot be identified in his little volume of Poems published in that year. Longfellow was poet in 1833, and Ralph Waldo Emerson in the following year; but neither of them ever published their poems. Oliver Wendell Holmes was poet in 1836, W. W. Story in 1844, Bayard Taylor in 1850, G. H. Boker in 1865, Francis Bret Harte in 1871, Waiter Mitchell in 1875, E. C. Stedman in 1877, R. H. Stoddard in 1878, Edgar Fawcett in 1880, C. G. Leland in 1881, and R. W. Gilder in 1890. Perhaps the only name absent that we should have expected to see is that of Mr. J. R. Lowell. The orators comprise (with the same omission) all the foremost representatives of American literature—with the addition of Prof. R. C. Jebb, in 1884.

IN the fourth note under this heading, in the ACADEMY of last week, we stupidly wrote "Trinity Colledge" for "Trinity Hall."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

THE FLAG OF DISTRESS.

TO E. N. P.

(See ACADEMY, May 2, 1891.)

Over the Ocean of Being,
Till the wind fails,
Fast on their venturous voyage
Speed the white sails!
But from the ships that have foundered,
Labouring slow,
Hardly abreast of the billows,
The rough rafts go.
Thereon the stranded from shipwreck
Painfully lie,
Lead seem the waters around them,
Brazen the sky.
Cruel the ships that in safety
Steadfastly speed,
Cruellest souls that aboard them
Reck not nor heed.
Nay! for across the wan water
No appeal fails!
Nay! for the tiniest signals
Stay the white sails!
Some from the ship will come speeding
Eager to save,
Heirs to one glory of living
Heirs to one grave.
But if the bearers of succour
Find not the track?
If to the hail of the helpers
Nothing come back?
What if the wash of the waters
Drown the heart-throb?
If the wild winds in their courses
Stifle the sob?
Say, shall the true hearts of comrades
Vainly be stirr'd?
Thou who so sorrowest, answer!
Someone has heard!

L. M. LITTLE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

WE have received the first number of the Journal of the Ex Libris Society (A. & C. Black), which has been founded, after the precedent of the Philatelic Society, to encourage the systematic collection of book-plates, the description of examples of special merit or rarity, the classification of the various styles, and the publication of lists of engravers, dated specimens, &c. A council has been formed, of which the chairman is Mr. John Leighton; while Mr. W. H. K. Wright, of the Plymouth Public Library, has undertaken the honorary but onerous duties of secretary and general editor. This first number consists mainly of reprinted articles, together with several illustrations, of which the most interesting are those designed by Mr. John Leighton himself. There are also reviews of recent books on the subject in German and Swedish; and we notice that two members of the society are engaged on a revised bibliography. The annual subscription is half a guinea.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- AGNELLI, G. Topo-cronografia del Viaggio Dantesco. Milan: Hoepli. 15 fr.
- BIRÉ, Edmond. Victor Hugo après 1830. Paris: Didier. 7 fr.
- BOLIN, W. Ludwig Feuerbach, sein Wirken u. seine Zeitgenossen. Stuttgart: Cotta. 6 M.
- DEL LUNGO, I. Beatrice nella vita e nella poesia del secolo XIII. Milan: Hoepli. 4 fr.
- DESCHAMPS, L. Histoire de la question coloniale en France. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
- KRAUS, E. Das bühmische Puppenspiel vom Doktor Faust. Breslau: Koebner. 3 M.
- LAIGLE, Alph. L'éducation au point de vue de la lutte pour la vie. Paris: Lecène. 3 fr. 50 c.
- LECLERC, M. Choses d'Amérique: les crises économique et religieuse aux Etats-Unis en 1890. Paris: Plon. 3 fr. 50 c.
- LICHTENBERGER, H. Le poème et la légende des Nibelungen. Paris: Hachette. 7 fr. 50 c.
- RICCI, C. L'ultimo rifugio di Dante Alighieri. Milan: Hoepli. 32 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- DOLLINGER, I. v. Akademische Vorträge. 3. Bd. München: Beck. 6 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- CORRESPONDANCE du Marquis de Croix, Capitaine général des armées de S. M. C., Vice-Roi du Mexique 1787—1788. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 15 fr.
- GRAF, J. H. Das Leben u. Wirken d. Physikers u. Geodäten Jacques Barthélemy Micheli du Crest aus Genf, Staatsgefängener d. alten Bern v. 1736—1766. Berlin: Wvss. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- HANBACH, W. Untersuchungen üb. Adam Smith u. die Entwicklung der politischen Oekonomie. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 9 M.
- JELINEK, B. Materialien zur Vorgeschichte u. Volkskunde Böhmens. 1. Thl. Wien: Holder. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- KORZENIEWSKI, I. Excerpta ex libris manu scriptis archivi consistorialis romani 1189—1590 expeditionis romanæ cura a. 1887 collecta. Cracov: Gebethner. 4 M.
- MATHES V. BILABRUCK, C. Ritter. Taktische Studie üb. die Schlacht v. Custoza im J. 1866. Wien: Sidel. 4 M.
- MÉMOIRES de la duchesse de Gontaut gouvernante des enfants de France pendant la Restauration 1773—1836. Paris: Plon. 7 fr. 50 c.
- ROUX, Xavier. La Révolution en Dauphiné. Grenoble: Baratier. 40 fr.
- SCHMIDT, R. Die Affatomie der Lex Salica. München: Ackermann. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- ULMANN, H. Kaiser Maximilian I. Auf urkundl. Grundlage dargestellt. 2. Bd. Stuttgart: Cotta. 14 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- BAILLON, H. Histoire des plantes: monographie des labiées, verbénacées, cricacées et ilicacées. Paris: Hachette. 12 fr.
- BOLTZMANN, L. Vorlesungen üb. Maxwells Theorie der Electricität u. d. Lichtes. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Barth. 5 M.
- CLAUS, C. Ueb. Goniopelte gracilis. Wien: Holder. 6 M.
- DERUYTS, J. Essai d'une théorie générale des formes algébriques. Paris: Hermann. 5 fr.
- DUREN, P. Cours de physique mathématique et de cristallographie. T. 1. Théorèmes généraux, Corps fluides. Paris: Hermann. 14 M.
- GROBEN, C. Ueb. den Bulbusarteriosus u. die Aortenklappen der Lamellibranchiaten. Wien: Holder. 3 M.
- PHILIPPSON, A. Der Peloponnes. Versuch e. Landeskunde auf geolog. Grundlage. 1. Abtlg. Berlin: Friedländer. 45 M. (complete).
- SCHNEIDER, C. C. Untersuchungen üb. die Zelle. Wien: Holder. 6 M. 40 Pf.
- STURANY, R. Coaxaldrüsen der Arachnoiden. Wien: Holder. 6 M.
- ZACHARIAS, O. Die Tier- u. Pflanzenwelt d. Süßwassers. 1. Bd. Leipzig: Weber. 12 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- AUFRECHT, Th. Catalogus catalogorum. An alphabetical Register of Sanskrit Works and Authors. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 36 M.
- BAUER, A. Literarische u. historische Forschungen zu Aristoteles' Ἀθναίων πολιτεία. München: Beck. 3 M.
- GEDHARD, F. Gedankengang Horazischer Oden in dispositioneller Uebersicht, nebst e. kritischexeget. Anh. München: Lindauer. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch. 12. Bd. 4. Lfg. Verhöbner-Verleihen. Bearb. v. E. Wülcker. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.
- RÖMSTEDT, H. Die englische Schriftsprache bei Caxton. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 50 Pf.
- TEXTE, irische. Mit Uebersetzung u. Wörterbuch hrsg. v. W. Stokes u. E. Windisch. 3. Serie. 1. Hft. Leipzig: Hirzel. 6 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A WAR OF RAMSES II. AGAINST MITANNI AND ASSYRIA.

Queen's College, Oxford: July 4, 1891.

Mr. Howorth has lately questioned the military character hitherto ascribed to the long reign of Ramses II. I think he has forgotten the very imperfect nature of our records; it is almost an accident that any of his campaigns are known to us at all. To these it is now possible to add another.

Last winter M. Grébaud continued the disinterment of the Temple of Luxor, and laid bare a broken line of wall on which Ramses II. has recorded a campaign in the previously unknown "land of Situna." A large number of mutilated geographical cartouches accompany the reference to the campaign. Among those on the left are the names of the "countries" of [A]qupta and Her-aztum, which are known to have lain to the north of Arvad, probably in the neighbourhood of the Gulf of Antioch, as well as the "country" of Mit(a)n[u] or Mitanni. On the right many of the names are followed by the determinative of "coast" or "island," instead of the more usual determinative of "country." One of them is Assur; above it is Mit(a)na; at its side is Balnu. To all of them the determinative of "borderland" has been attached, and the mutilation of the first two characters in the name of Mitana or Mitanni has made its reading difficult. Balnu appears among the conquests of Seti I., and is identified by Brugsch with "Balaneae north of Arvad."

The newly-discovered wall at Luxor thus informs us of a campaign of Ramses II. in the north-west, of which we had no account previously; and unless the Pharaoh has claimed victories which did not belong to him, his armies must have contended against both Mitanni and Assyria either at the time of his campaign in Situna or during his wars with the Hittites.

A. H. SAYCE.

"HISTORY OF THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND,"

Warkworth Vicarage, Northumberland: July 4, 1891.

Mr. Galton in his review of the new volume of my History of the Church of England, published in the ACADEMY of June 27, says:

"Something that goes very near to vulgarity often spoils the interest and the pleasure, and cannot fail to diminish the permanent value of Canon Dixon's laborious but slovenly, discursive, and eccentric histories."

If it be vulgarity to have conceived the ambition of being numbered among the historians of England, and to have pursued this ambition for more than twenty years amid great difficulties without looking for any present recognition; to have spent endless pains in ascertaining truth; to have undertaken a neglected subject, partly on account of its own dignity and importance, partly to show that the most difficult matter may be brought under style, and to give some example of the art of extended composition—if this be vulgarity, then I admit the imputation. If not, I am unaffected by it.

R. W. DIXON.

NOTES ON THE REVIEW OF "PEARL."

London: June 29, 1891.

I fully appreciate the honour Dr. Morris has done me in subjecting my edition of Pearl to minute criticism; and I am most grateful to him for the kind way in which he has spoken of my work as a contribution to English scholarship. A review, by its very nature, must contain aliquid amari; and when this essential element is infused by so distinguished an authority as Dr. Morris, one would prefer to be silent, lest comment should seem ungracious.

Dr. Morris's criticism is chiefly directed to eight passages in the poem as interpreted by me. I beg most respectfully to submit to my reviewer the accompanying notes on each of these:

1. "He lavez hys gyftez as water of dyche,
Other gotez of golf that never charde;
His franchise is large that ever darde
To hym that macz in synne rescozge;
No blyse bezz from him reparde;
For the grace of God is gret inoghe."

51, 8-12.

(a) Dr. Morris, in the first place, objects to my rendering of the second line of this passage, "Or streams of the deep that never turn." He is of opinion that charde does not signify "turn," but rather "has turned aside, ceased, stopped." I am aware of the fact that charde is a past tense; but it is a past tense that can only be translated by a present in modern English, being what is termed in grammars a frequentative aorist. I prefer, too, the literal and simple meaning of charen, "to turn," to the secondary sense suggested by Dr. Morris, "to stop." The idea of the line is "streams of the deep that flow on and on without turning": cp. raykande aryght, stanza 10, l. 4.

(b) In the second place, Dr. Morris objects to my rendering of ll. 3-6 of this passage:

"Large is man's franchise, when he hath feared
Him that maketh a rescue in sin;
No bliss shall be denied to him."

In place of my version he proposes something to this effect:

"God's liberality, which has ever been hid [i.e., has been unsearchable], is large;
To the man who makes a rescue in sin [i.e., repents]
No blessing shall be withdrawn from him."

(i) Franchise may, of course, apply either to God's magnanimity or to man's freedom. There is, I think, strong reason for taking it in the latter sense in this passage. Wiclif uses the word in its technical sense of "freedom from impost, immunity"; and our poet conveys by it "the sense of freedom" that a righteous believer enjoys after death. I would note, too, the great gain from a rhythmical point of view in the change of subject, coming at the beginning of the closing quatrain of the stanza.

(ii) That ever darde to hym. Dr. Morris cannot forgive me for comparing the phrase "to dare to" with the Scottish "to dare at," i.e., "to fear a person." Although dare occurs elsewhere in the poem in the sense of "to tremble in fear," he prefers a metaphorical meaning, which cannot, I think, be paralleled in Middle-English poetry, and which gives a crude sense to the whole passage. Discarding for the nonce my Scottish phrase, I beg leave to explain the process by which I arrive at my rendering, "that ever feared Him (i.e., Christ)." To dare = "to lurk," "to be concealed"; used metaphorically, it is equivalent to "to dare for drede," i.e., "to lurk in dread," i.e., "to fear"; the full phrase occurs frequently; "to dare" is thus a synonym for "to dread," "to stand in fear of." Now, in Old-English, the preposition "from" frequently follows the verb "to dread," e.g., hie alle from him ondredon, "they all dreaded them." Had our poet written of those that fear Satan, I have little doubt his phrase would have been "dared from him," &c.; but, as he is referring to that fear which is devotion, he has, with true poetical acumen, used "to." Literally, the phrase, as I interpret it, means—"he that hath ever been humble by reason of his fear towards Him," &c.

(iii) That macz in synne rescozge. Dr. Morris is of opinion that "He that maketh a rescue in sin" is "the man who makes amendment for sin." In my judgment the line is a poetical periphrasis for "the Rescuer," "the Saviour." The technical sense of "rescue" applies in a special way to Christ as the rescuer of souls from Limbo (cp. O.F. rescouste = "l'action de delivrer un prisonnier qui l'ennemi emmène." My reviewer's rendering would not only destroy the beauty of the poetry, but would make the poet guilty of an anacoluthon (to hym . . . from hym), the only instance in the whole poem. I am glad to see that Dr. Morris now abandons his emendation of dared into dard and of rescozge into no scozge; he accepts my reading, though he does not agree with my interpretation. Some day the original of the passage will be found—I feel sure it is a quotation—and then, perhaps, if not before, Dr. Morris will withdraw his criticism on these lines. I shall feel obliged to any theologian who is able to point out the source of the lines under discussion. Meanwhile I would illustrate my rendering from Cardinal Newman's "Dream of Gerontius":

"SOUL OF GERONTIUS.

"I feel in me
An inexpressive lightness, and a sense
Of freedom, as I were at length myself,
And ne'er had been before.

"ANGEL.

"It is because
Then thou didst fear, that now thou dost not fear.

"FIFTH CHOIR OF ANGELICALS.

O loving wisdom of our God!
When all was sin and shame,
A second Adam to the fight
And to the rescue came."

2. "Hymself ne wroghte never yet non,
Whether on hymself he con al clem."

69, 9-10.

= "Yet He Himself wrought ne'er one sin, though he laid claim to all."

Dr. Morris objects to my rendering of the second line. "This word clem," he says, "cannot be rendered 'claim,' because in Middle English it would be clime, and could not, therefore, rhyme with drem, ben," &c. A quotation is more valuable than an argument, and I beg to submit the following lines to Dr. Morris's consideration:

"Yf a chylde be dede bore
And receyve nat the bapteme
Of hevене may hyt never clem."

R. Brunne, Hand. Synne.

The words whether on hymself he con al clem are a paraphrase of Isaiah liii. 6, "posuit Dominus in eo iniquitatem omnium nostrum." In the ordinary way the poet would have written "laid"; but, for the sake of rhyme, he has expressed the idea by con clem, i.e., "claimed as His right." From this point of view there is nothing remarkable in the syntax of "on hymself"; it is ultimately due to the "in eo" of the Vulgate. I do not think we need have recourse to the A.S. clæman, "to smear," in order to explain the line.

3. "About under the lord to marked tocz"
= Toward noon the lord to the market goes."

43, 9.

Toz in this line caused me much difficulty; Dr. Morris, printing the word toz, had originally taken the verb as connected with tolen, "to peer," and lexicographers have followed him. It is quoted under "tolen" even in the new edition of Stratmann's Middle-English Dictionary. I pointed out, for the first time, I think, in a note on the word, that there existed in Middle-English a verb ton = "to go," side by side with the more usual ten. I showed that we have here an instance of the 3rd person singular, and that the t in the word is not part of the root, but due to the scribal mannerism of writing tz for the z sound. Dr. Morris evidently agrees with me so far. In my note I quoted, as an instance of the simple infinitive to, "to go," a line from "Gawain and the Green Knight":

"For hit was negh at the terme that he to schude"
= It was near the time that he should go.

Dr. Morris takes me to task for this. "To," he says, "is a preposition, and that . . . to = 'to which.'" I am mystified; one does not usually "go to Time" (even with a capital T). Our discussion calls to my mind a famous symposium recorded in modern English literature. The strange part of the whole matter is that Dr. Morris himself, in his edition of "Gawain," took to in this very line as an infinitive, but proposed to change it to te.

1. "Lorde! quo schal klymbe thy hyghe hylle,
Other rest withiune thy holy place?"
Hymself to on-sware he is not dylle:
'Hondelyngez harme that dyt not ille,
That is of hert bothe clene & lyght' . . .
57. 6-10.

"That takez not her lyf in wayne." 58. 3.

Dr. Morris has here made a curious mistake in referring to Psalm xv., instead of Psalm xxiv., as the original of these passages. Wiclif's version of Psalm xxiv. 4, runs as follows, "who took not his soul in vain"; Dr. Morris's suggestion, "who taketh not their neighbour's life away wantonly," is entirely due to his wrong reference.

I take the whole of l. 57, 9, hondelyngez harme that dyt not ille, to be a paraphrase of innocens manibus; hondelyngez is an adverb and not a noun, and means "with his own hands"; no instance of hondelyng in the sense of "a hireling" occurs in English. The word puzzled me until I found a capital illustration of its adverbial use in Anglo-Saxon:

"Nis he him geried ðæt he handlīga ænigne man sœwalde."—"It is not read of him [i.e., Paul] that he killed any man with his own hands."—Ethric's Homilies, ed. Thorpe, i., 386 (Homily on Paul).

Harme is not an adj. "poor," but a subs. "injury," and the literal meaning of the line is: "He that with-his-own-hands did no injury through evil intent." Ille is not a pleonasm, as might be supposed, but brings out the full sense of the original.

5. "I hoped the water were a devyse
Bytwene myrthez by merez made."
12, 7, 8.

Dr. Morris suggests merchez, i.e., "marches" for myrthez. It will interest scholars to learn that I am now able to restore, by a simple transposition, the text of this strange passage. What the poet in all probability wrote was:

"Bytwene merez by Myrthē made."

The lines mean: "I trowed that the stream was due to some mechanical contrivance, a device between two lakes [e.g., a conduit], made by Mirth." Now, Sir Mirth is the Lord of the Garden in the Romaunt of the Rose, and is fully described as the planner and architect of that wonderful abode. Those acquainted with Chaucer's translation (or rather that portion of the extant version which is his) will remember how important a part Sir Mirth plays in the poem. His French name is "Deduis." I beg leave to point out the very lines that the author of Pearl had in mind. The remarkable fact to which I would call attention is that the lines are evidently due to Chaucer's rendering of the Romaunt and not to the original. The parallelism in expression cannot otherwise be explained. We know that Chaucer's Romaunt belongs to his early years; it may be dated 1360-70. Pearl also belongs to about the same years. I have little doubt that the poet of Pearl, who was a reader of the Romaunt in the original French, was among the earliest readers of the English version by "the new poet" of the day. I quote Chaucer's lines and the French original of the passage in question, adding a few of the French lines for a reason that will presently appear:

"In places sawe I welles there
In which there no frogges were,
And fayre in shadowe was every welle;
But I ne can the nombre telle

* See Alice's Adventures in Wonderland, chap. vii., p. 191.

*Of stromys smale that by devyse
Myrthe hable done come through condyge:*
Of which the water in remynge
Gan make a noyse full lykynge."

"Il ot par leus cleres fontaines,
Sans barbelotes et sans raines,
Cui li arbres fesoient ombre;
Mēs n'en sai pas dire le nombre,
Par petis tuiiaus que Dēduis
Y ot fet fere, and par conduis
S'en aloit l'iaue aval, fesant
Une noise douce et plesant.
Entor les ruisians et les rives
Des fontaines cleres et vives;
Poignoit l'erbe freschete et drue:
Aussine y poist-l'en sa drue
Couchier comme sur une coite."

Mēon, 1391—1403.

6. "Quen strothe men slepe."—10. 7.

Dr. Morris feels disposed to connect strothe with A.S. strōdan. This seems to me altogether untenable. I suggested the Scand. strōð, "strown"; I could not see how the Icelandic strōðinn, a very plausible source of the word, could apply here; its meaning is "lewd" or "licentious," in a special sense. I venture now to suggest that strōðinn may after all explain the word; and, if so, the original of the line will probably be found in the Romaunt, in some such passage as the last lines of the French quoted above. "Quen strothe men slepe" would then mean "when mortals sleep in one another's embraces." It may be more than a coincidence that "strothe men" occurs among many reminiscences from "Clopingel's clene rose."

7. "Deme dryghtyn ever hym adyte."
"Let God decree; let Him ordain."—30. 1.

"Adyte," says Dr. Morris, "is a romance form, not derived from adilhten"; he compares dyt (contrives, 57. 9), "which may, however, be an error for dyght." In the whole range of Middle-English ransacked by lexicographers I find no such romance form recorded, and the syntactical peculiarity of the phrase is so thoroughly English that I can see no reason for supposing that this word is anything but the well-known A.S. adilhten. Dr. Morris has evidently made his statement in order to account for the spelling of the word; he expects adyght, and cannot understand why I ignore the guttural. He would probably reply to me that adyte, if written for adyght, cannot rhyme with myte, flyte, byte, &c. But the poet does rhyme quyt (= "white") with tyght (stanza 85). The spelling adyte is due to the scribe's (or the poet's) desire to produce an "eye-rhyme," as well as an "ear-rhyme." The same thing occurs frequently in the poem. An exact parallel is to be found in stanza 54, where plyt is written for plyght, to accord with the rhymes as tyt, delyt, &c. Dr. Morris compares dyt (57. 9), though he thinks it possible that this word may be an error for dyght. I take it that dyt is neither the one nor the other, but simply the past tense of "do"; dyt = dyd, as abate = abade (52. 5), rest = revid (50. 3), kyntly = kyndly (58. 6), lordship = lordship, &c. The poet's mannerism of using t for d has helped me to understand many puzzling passages and words in the poem.

8 "He . . . corounde me quene in blysse to brede."
35. 7.

Dr. Morris objects to my rendering "to revel in bliss," and suggests "to be nourished or nurtured," representing A.S. brōdan, "to nourish." Though I am aware that the New English Dictionary quotes this passage (with a query) under the verb "breed," I still venture to connect it, not with A.S. brōdan, "to breed," but with brōdan, "to be developed, to blossom forth, to flourish"; it is simply an intransitive use of brōdan, "to broaden."

I. GOLLANZ.

"TENSERIE."

London: July 4, 1891.

Having devoted special attention to this word in the course of my researches on the reign of Stephen, I can throw some light on the question raised by Mr. Plummer (ACADEMY, July 4). Dealing with the passage in the Chronicle (1137): "Hi leiden guildes on the tunes aune unwile and clepeden it tenserie," (which Mr. Thorpe, in the Rolls Series, took upon himself to alter to censerie), he suggests that we should read "tens serie, meaning tempus serenum, 'fair weather' or 'good time' . . . a bitter gibe on the part of these robbers at the miseries of their victims."

It is difficult enough, as Mr. Plummer sees, to connect these exactions with that tens seri which occurs in the Metrical Life of the Confessor, and lingers on the lips of a Valencian sereno; but, in any case, he starts from the erroneous impression that tenserie was a nickname only used in 1137. He has made, in fact, the converse mistake of Mr. Freeman, who was led into error by his strange delusion that the "Evil Neighbour" ("Malveisin") which William Rufus constructed over against Bamborough was a generic name, and not, as was the fact, a sobriquet—like Richard's famed "Matte-griffun," or the "Accursed Tower" of Acre. For tenserie, it can be shown, was a generic name for certain irregular exactions, both in Latin and in Norman-French, with a verb corresponding with the noun. Pope Lucius II., in one of his letters, strangely confirms the accuracy of the Chronicle, writing that "quidam etiam sub nomine tenseriurum villas et homines suos spoliant"; while the great judicial iter of 1194 had for one of its chief objects an inquiry "de prisit et tenseriis omnium ballivorum," etc. (R. Hooveden iii., 267). As for the Norman-French form, it is employed by Jordan Fantosme, who, writing of the barages of Northampton (1174), tells us that David of Scotland "ne pot tenserie de eus aver." He also illustrates the use of the verb when he describes how the Earl of Leicester, landing in East Anglia, "la terre vait tensant . . . E ad tens la terre cum il en fut bailli." "Tensare" was the verb in Latin, as shown by the records of the Lincolnshire eyre in 1202 (Maitland's Select Pleas of the Crown [Selden Soc.] 19), where it is used of extorting toll from vessels as they traversed the marshes. A reference to the closing portion of the Lincolnshire survey in Domesday will show the very same offence presented by the jurors of 1086, who seem to have anticipated the action of the Broads Preservation Society.

J. H. ROUND.

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: July 4, 1891.

Perhaps I may be allowed to suggest that the word tenserie, in the passage from the Laud Chronicle ("Hi leiden guildes on the tunes aune unwile and clepeden it tenserie"), quoted in this day's ACADEMY, is susceptible of a more simple explanation than the somewhat fanciful one proposed by Mr. Plummer.

From Low Latin tensare, "to protect, defend" (whence O.F. tenser, in same sense—of which several examples occur in the Chanson de Roland and in Garnier's Vie de Saint Thomas—and mod. tancer, with change of meaning), was formed the term tensamentum, which Du Cange explains as "pensitatio quae a vassallis et subditis domino pro protectione exsolvebatur."

This tensamentum, which was often paid in kind, was, like the gailles above mentioned, frequently levied on towns, and was evidently a source of handsome profit to the feudal lord, witness the following extract from a Charter dated 1232 given by Du Cange:

"Ego Simon dominus Rupisfortis et Pusati et Vicecomes Carnot, etc. Noverint universi, quod ego vendidi et in perpetuum quitavi religiosis viris Abbati et monachis Bonevall. pro quat. mille libris Turon. omnia tensamenta, que ego habebam . . . in villa Bonevall. et in aliis villis . . . in quibus tensamenta percipere consuevi; et unum servientium proprium in villa Castriduni de burgensibus ejusdem ville ad colligendum tensamenta liberum et immunem ab omni tallia et qualibet alia exactione in anno, in quo colliget tensamenta."

A number of other terms used to express the same thing as tensamentum are given by Du Cange; among them he mentions tensura and tenseria. Under this last head the following passages are cited:

"Concilium Tarouense ann. 1163. cap. 10: De Coemeteriis et Ecclesiis, sive quibuslibet possessionibus ecclesiasticis, tenseria dari prohibemus, ne pro Ecclesiae vel Coemeterii defensione, fidei suae Clerici sponsonem interponant, etc."

"Concilium Londin. ann. 1151. cap. 1: Sancimus igitur, ut Ecclesiae et possessiones ecclesiasticae ab operationibus et exactionibus, quas vulgo tenseria sive tallagias vocant, omnino liberae permanent, nec super his eas aliqui de caetero inquietare praesumant."

This word tenseria also occurs in a quotation from Hoveden, given in Stubbs's Select Charters, p. 255 ("inquisitio de prisit et tenseriis"), in the Glossary to which it is explained as "a tax."

There can be hardly a doubt, I think, that the tenserie of the Laud Chronicle is identical with tenseria in the sense given above. At any rate, this explanation, which postulates no alteration of the MS., may claim to be less far-fetched if not more rational than the "fair-weather" theory propounded by Mr. Plummer, who may find plenty of instances of the use of tenseria in Godefroy's Dictionnaire de l'ancienne langue française (s.v. 2 Seri), but none, I am afraid, that in any way countenances his attribution of nineteenth-century slang to the barons of King Stephen's reign.

Of course, if my explanation be correct, the words "hic lepeden it tenserie" need no longer be regarded as implying that the word was "a special term invented by these miscreants, and not an ordinary technical expression." On the contrary, I should suppose it to be precisely because it was an ordinary technical term (and that it was so seems proved by the quotations in Du Cange), applied to a recognised system of levying imposts, that the feudal lords employed it in order to give a legal colour to their exactions; and, that being so, there would be nothing very remarkable in the mention of it by the chronicler.

I may add that the French word tenserie is given in Du Cange's Glossarium Gallicum, with a reference to tensura (in the sense of "praedari, exilare"). The Latin form is tenseria, which is explained as meaning "robbery." Under this heading an extract is given from a charter dated 1356, which speaks of "rebellions, monopolies, tenseries, et autres malefaçons." We have thus a choice between two words, which probably merely describe one and the same thing looked at from opposite points of view. What the feudal lord chose to style "protections" we may well believe to have been looked upon as "depredations" by his unfortunate vassals. Unless, however, we are to assume that Stephen's barons were so unblushing in their villainy as openly to qualify their own impositions as "robbery," we may suppose the word tenserie in the passage in question to be used in the sense of tensamentum as explained above.

I submit this suggestion of mine with all diffidence; for I see Mr. Plummer speaks of the passage as being "well known to historical students," and says, further, that the word tenserie, in which the difficulty lies, has been "commonly regarded" as a mistake for tenseria, thus implying that others besides himself have been puzzled by it, and have presumably attempted to solve the difficulty.

Is Du Cange's Glossarium Mediae et Infimae Latinitatis a sealed book to historical students?—it is not so to Mr. Plummer, for he looked out in it tenseria, though it does not seem to have occurred to him to look for tenseria itself—or has my suggestion been made before, and been dismissed as unsatisfactory? If so, I must apologise for having needlessly occupied so much of the ACADEMY'S valuable space.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

THE "MONOGAMOUS" SULTAN.

London: July 3, 1891.

My attention has only just been called to a review in the ACADEMY of June 13 of The Sovereigns of Europe and Their Courts, by "Politikos." The one quotation relating to the Sultan of Turkey contains no fewer than nine mis-statements. (1) The Sultan is by no means "practically a monogamist," though he has, properly speaking, no (2) "legal wives." (3) He is presented by his mother with a "beautiful slave," not "on his birthday and on twenty other days of the year," but on the feast of Kaulil Gulgessi only. (4) This "young lady" does not become at once a "harem dame with a household of her own," but an upper servant. Nor are there (5) "three hundred of these establishments," but ten or a dozen at the most; the Valide-Sultana or Empress-mother, the mothers of the imperial children, and one or two Ikbals, or Favourites, alone enjoy this privilege. When slaves are married from the palace, they receive as a wedding portion not (6) "£10,000," but a few hundred pounds at the outside; and their husbands are under no obligation (7) "to make a present of a slave to keep up the staff of the seraglio." (8) Not even the meanest subject, and much less "every cabinet minister and pacha," would, or could, "pass his daughter through the Sultan's harem, as a simple means of securing her a marriage portion, with the title of Salide;" such a transaction would be not only illegal, but impossible. And (9) the "title of Salide" does not mean "princess"; the only "title" acquired by passing through the Serai is that of Seraili.

LUCY M. J. GARNETT
(Author of The Women of Turkey).

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, July 14, 4 p.m. Ladies Sanitary Association: "Progressive Sanitation," II., by Dr. W. B. Richardson.
5 p.m. Society for the Preservation of the Monuments of Ancient Egypt: Annual General Meeting.

SCIENCE.

RECENT WORKS ON PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

A Treatise on Analytical Statics. By E. J. Routh. Vol. I. (Cambridge: University Press.) Numerous generations of Cambridge mathematicians will welcome this first volume of Dr. Routh's Treatise on Statics. It will recall to many busy men the hours spent in the classroom at Peterhouse, when they find the old familiar problems of gig-wheels and ladders transferred from white on black to black on white. Herein lies, we think, the great merit of Dr. Routh's Treatise—it constitutes a wonderful collection of Cambridge problems in Statics, with most valuable hints for the solution of great numbers of them, often by most suggestive analytical processes. So long as the Cambridge mathematical school remains theoretical and analytical, Dr. Routh's problems must be almost indispensable to the would-be wrangler. But there are signs that Cambridge is at length aroused to the need of some touch with the practical and geometrical side of Mechanics. Useful as Dr. Routh's work must be for the education of wranglers, it is not the volume which Prof. Ewing's students will require for the future engineering tripos. The chapter devoted to Graphical Statics is far too slender to be of practical value; while the draughtsmen who are accustomed to making real use of the line of pressure would perforce smile over the two-page treatment of it at the fag-end of this chapter. In the last chapter of the volume we have our old friends the steelyards, the planes, and the pulleys, just as they were two centuries ago, entitled the Machines; and we are told that it is usual to regard the complex machines as constructed of certain simple combinations of cords, rods, and planes. Usual in the Senate House, perhaps, but not where engineers do congregate. Prof. Ewing will have to fight an up-hill battle before he gets Cambridge teachers to publish books like Burmester's Kinematik, or Maurice Lévy's Statique Graphique; but this is what must and will come about if the Cambridge engineering School is to profit by all the excellence of Cambridge mathematics. Such books as those we have referred to are no less accurate and theoretically instructive than Senate House Statics; but they bear, in a manner which the latter do not, upon the needs of one of the most scientific and indispensable of professions. Lastly, a word as to Dr. Routh's first chapter, which is entitled "The Parallelogram of Forces." This seems to us to bring out very forcibly the illogical and unphilosophical condition at the present time of our definitions and axioms with regard to Force. The facts are firmly enough established, but the method of looking at the fundamental concepts is strangely obscure. This method is due to Newton; and, perhaps, his name and authority, some will say, ought not to be questioned. But as we have practically given up Newton's method of dealing with the motion of the moon, so it does not seem unreasonable to reconsider his statements as to Force and Matter. Dr. Routh, wisely, we think, takes the conception of Force based upon motion as the first foundation of Statics; and for us this is the only legitimate conception. In the latter part of the chapter he deals with the foundations of Statics on statical axioms; and here we should be inclined to dispute the possibility of any real proof of the parallelogram of forces being based on the two principles of independence and transmissibility of force. Duchayla's proof is at best only a juggle, and we are sorry to see it still appearing in any text-book of Statics. We have been speaking of the Cambridge tendency in mathematics, and of the need for overhauling the fundamental concepts of Statics, rather than of Dr. Routh's volume; but those who know his Rigid Dynamics—and what mathematical students do not?—will be sure of the excellency and accuracy of what it provides, and will insert for themselves the needful adjective "theoretical" before the "Statics" of his title.

Lessons in Applied Mechanics. By James H. Cotterill and John Henry Slade. (Macmillans.) This is an excellent little book for first year engineering students, chiefly based on Prof. Cotterill's well-known treatise, but expanded and varied in a number of points. The large number of exercises will be of real use to both teachers and students. Perhaps the portion of the book which we should feel the greatest inclination to criticise would be the part dealing with the strength of materials, especially the articles on resilience. This is the weak point, we think, of the larger volume. It cannot be too often insisted upon that the energy of an impulse absorbed by a structure is not distributed uniformly, and that Tredgold's for-mulæ, which Prof. Cotterill cites, often lead to stresses only a third or a half the maximum as given by the more accurate calculations of Saint-Venant.

The Elements of Statics and Dynamics. By S. L. Loney. Part I., "Elements of Statics." (Cambridge: University Press.) We believe that the ACADEMY was alone among the reviews when we said we were not satisfied with Mr. Loney's Treatise on Elementary Dynamics or with the Cambridge Press for publishing it. However, we consoled ourselves with the fact that we had read the book from first page to last, which we had reason for doubting whether all our co-reviewers could have done. We have precisely the same objections to the present volume. The first chapter on Force, Mass, Weight, &c., does not seem to us at all clear and satisfactory. The author does not seem to have realised the difficulties students meet with at the very outset in the consideration of these ideas. To be told that "Force is anything which changes, or tends to change, the state of rest or uniform motion of a body," and then without any further discussion to hear that "Two forces are said to be equal when, if they act on a particle in opposite directions, the particle remains at rest," is the height of obscurity. The definition of Force given would cover Will or a Cataclysm for aught that is said to the contrary, and how do I know what, if any, "direction" these have? Weight, again, we are told is an idea familiar to everyone; but, on the next page, we find the attraction which the earth has for every body is called its weight. Is the weight of the moon the attraction of the earth upon it, or the attraction of the earth on a particle equal in mass to the moon placed at the surface of the earth? If the former, is the idea of weight really familiar to all? One last sample from the final pages of the book:

"No elastic string will, however, bear an unlimited stretching. When the string, through being stretched, is on the point of breaking, it is said to have reached its limit of elasticity, and its tension then is called the breaking tension."

Such a statement as this ought not to appear in a book published by the Cambridge Press, and intended for Cambridge examinations.

Geometry of Position. By Robert H. Graham. (Macmillans.) The compiler of this volume is known as the author of a rather unsatisfactory treatise on Graphic and Analytic Statics. In the present volume he practically reproduces various investigations in the geometry of position which he has himself arrived at as a means of interpreting Culmann's Graphical Statics. We cannot commend his investigations to the young engineer. The geometry of position is treated far more methodically and luminously in Cremona's work, published in translation by the Oxford Press; and a study of selected portions of this latter work would be far more instructive to the student than Mr. Graham's pages. Geometry of position occupies, however, only the first two chapters of the work. The third chapter deals, we think in an unsatisfactory manner, with reciprocal figures. We agree, however, with Mr. Graham's defence, in his preface, of Maxwell's claim to have been the first to treat these figures scientifically. Why Mr. Graham should not translate Möbius' Nullpunkt by "nullpoint" we cannot imagine. Chap. iv., on "Centres of Gravity," and chap. v., on "Ellipses of Inertia and Kerns," are very insufficient. The latter chapter is based upon the cumbersome methods of Culmann. We must protest, however, against the use of the word "kern." What Clifford termed the "core" was a discovery of Bresse years before Culmann wrote his Graphical Statics, and it was termed by him the noyau central. Neither the theory nor the use of the "core" is German, and there is no reason whatever for adopting a German term for an idea the origin and discussion of which is peculiarly French. The last chapter of the volume deals with "The Elastic Line." The graphical method of dealing with the elasticity of beams is one of very great power; and we believe that Mr. Graham is the only person who has yet given us any, if a very insufficient and somewhat clumsy, account of it. His pages are largely a translation of the elementary portions of W. Ritter's tract—not, we think, the best of treatments. Mr. Graham concludes his discussion with the remark:

"The graphic method is not only shorter and more direct, but also stricter and more elegant, than that based on the theory of three moments, which it is destined ultimately to supersede."

How the method can be stricter when it is based on the same hypotheses we do not understand. Our experience, based on several years' teaching of both methods, is that a careful draughtsman will never obtain the support moments in the customary systems of loading with less than 2 or 3 per cent. error, while calculation gives them as accurately as one pleases and in a very brief space of time. The advantage of the graphical method lies in the power it gives us of verifying the results of calculation, and in its application to certain cases where calculation would be impossible or terribly laborious. On the whole, we are sorry to be unable to congratulate Mr. Graham on his volume.

"HEINEMANN'S SCIENTIFIC HANDBOOKS."—Heat as a Form of Energy. By Robert H. Thurston. (Heinemann.) We recently had to review another work by Mr. Thurston on Carnot, and that unfavourably. We regret that the present Manual seems to us equally slovenly and unscientific. This severe criticism demands at least justification; and it will be found in the following extracts with regard to Rumford, in which the italics are our own:

"He first showed the amount of heat produced by a definite and measured amount of mechanical work, and derived a result which was extraordinarily exact" (p. 35).

"Rumford had not made this measurement [that of the mechanical equivalent of heat] with any great degree of exactitude, and very probably did not at that early date appreciate its enormous importance" (p. 39).

"The value of the mechanical equivalent of heat as deduced by Rumford from his experiments accords well with later determinations. Reducing it to the now standard system of comparison, thermal units and footpounds or calories, the accuracy of his work seems remarkable. He states that the work was that of one horse-power, though two horses were employed. The engineer's horse-power is the equivalent of 23,000 footpounds of work per minute; but this exceeds the actual power of an ordinary horse, as shown by direct experiment, and Rankine gives for the ordinary draught-horse the figure 20,920 footpounds per minute. This is somewhat higher than the average Bavarian horse gives, probably, and we may take as the fairest value 25,000 footpounds per minute as the real value of the horse. This is 432 per second on Rankine's basis, or a trifle less on the last assumed figure, making the mechanical equivalent, as deduced from Rumford's experiments, 784 footpounds to the thermal unit, or only one and a half per cent. more than the figure 772 determined by experiment by Joule fifty years later, and accepted by the world of scientific men. This is not only sufficient to entitle him [presumably Rumford] to the highest distinction, but it indicates an original discovery of the most extraordinary and fruitful character" (p. 34).

Now all Rumford tells us is that two horses caused a tank of water to boil in two hours and a half; and he adds "one horse would have been equal to the work performed, though two horses were actually employed." To attempt, in Mr. Thurston's method, to ascertain the mechanical equivalent of heat from Rumford's experiments with "remarkable accuracy," may be termed science in Sibley College; here a schoolboy would term it "cooking the answer." Further comment is needless.

Encyclopädie der Naturwissenschaft. Handbuch der Physik. 6 u. 7 Lieferungen. (Breslau: Trewendt.) These two parts deal with Akustik, and are contributed by F. Melde. They differ very considerably from the earlier portion of the Handbuch, in being mainly experimental, and containing little or no mathematical developments. References to some standard mathematical treatises—notably, Lord Rayleigh's—would have increased the value of the discussions on rods, membranes, plates, &c. On p. 736 the astounding statement is made that the problem of the circular plate had resisted all attempts at its solution before Kirchhoff's in 1850. Herr Melde either is ignorant of or vastly underrates Poisson's researches on plates of twenty years earlier. The section on Sound, considered as a purely physical treatise, is, on the whole, good. The pages on Bells are interesting, if somewhat insufficient. We may, perhaps, hope to know more when Lord Rayleigh's third volume appears. The researches of König and Kundt on the velocity of sound in gases enclosed in pipes are clearly reproduced, and there is a very ample discussion on beats and the combination of tones. Perhaps the most interesting chapter is that entitled "Viboscopic and Vibrographic," where a very full account is given of the methods of Young, Wheatstone, Lissajons, and König, and of flame-vibrosopes. For the sake of historical completeness, some reference at least ought to have been made to the researches of Antoine and Montigny. On the whole, Herr Melde writes at a higher level than F. Auerbach, if with less mathematical development. The first volume of the Handbuch der Physik closes with Lieferung 7, which contains a by no means complete name and subject index.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE first volume of Messrs. Whittaker's new "Library of Popular Science" will be an Elementary Introduction to Astronomy, by Mr. G. F. Chambers, whose larger works on the subject are well known. It is meant especially for readers who have no previous acquaintance with practical astronomy; and in this, as in other volumes of the series, considerable attention will be paid to efficient illustration and explanatory diagrams. The volume will be ready in the course of a few weeks, and will shortly be followed by others.

AT the general monthly meeting of the Royal Institution on July 6, the special thanks of the members were returned to Miss Jane Barnard, Dr. J. H. Gladstone, the Rev. A. R. Abbott, Mr. T. F. Deacon, Mr. A. J. Blaikley, and others, for the loan of the collection of Faraday memorials shown in the library on the occasion of the two lectures given in commemoration of the Faraday centenary; to Sir Frederick Abel, for his present of an Certling balance; and to Mr. Ludwig Mond for his donation of £100 towards expenses connected with the Faraday centenary.

THE International Society of Entomologists will meet this year at Munich on August 25 and 26. The society number now over 1300 members. In connexion with this year's meeting, a general congress will be held, to which all friends of entomology are invited.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

A MAP of the Distribution of the Germans in Europe, edited by the late Prof. Nabert, with the co-operation of Dr. R. Böckh, has just appeared (Glogau: Karl Fleminning.) It is drawn up on a vast scale, and is manifestly the result of most laborious and painstaking research, as well as of a close study of official sources—German, Russian, Swiss, and Belgian. Prof. Nabert, who undertook many journeys, between 1844 and 1887, for the purpose of this investigation, had the satisfaction of being able to hand over the whole of his important work for publication, though he did not live to see it in print. The two sections of the map at present issued, which will soon be followed by the remainder, comprise, besides northern Germany, the domain of the Low German (Dutch and Flemish) tongue, which reaches into the northern parts of France close up to Boulogne. In eastern Germany, the remnants of Wendish and other Slav populations are set out in special colour, with the fullest exactness. So is the scattered German population in Russian Poland, which appears remarkably numerous. In Russian Poland the Jewish element, too, is indicated by patches of a particular tint; and its diffusion appears equally great. From Calais to the Volga and the Caucasus, the outlying linguistic islands and settlements of the Teutonic stock, as well as the vast bulk of the German nation, are defined. The losses experienced by the Teutonic tongues in the west, south, and east, are also the subject of treatment. It would be difficult to give a clearer picture, at a glance, of the distribution of races and languages than is afforded in this excellent map.

THE last number of the Journal of the Straits Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society (London: Kegan Paul & Co.) contains several articles of interest. Mr. W. E. Maxwell, C.M.G., resident at Selangor, prints the Romanised text of a Malay ballad, which he found in the Raffles Library at Singapore. It commemorates an unsuccessful attack upon the Dutch settlement of Malacca, towards the end of the last century, by a Malay hero named Raja Haji. Mr. Maxwell also gives two contemporary Dutch versions of the affair. He does not attempt to translate the ballad, because the character of Malay poetry is such that it is almost impossible to make pauitens readable in English dress. The story is carried on in the third and fourth lines of each stanza only, the first two lines being either mere tags on which to hang the rhyme, or, at the best, some figurative statement, a kind of background against which to set the picture. To read ninety-five stanzas like the following would give little idea of the effect of the original:

- "Near the house of Mehe Sabtu
The siyakap fish from the sea of Banca.
The corpse was cast into a cleft of the rocks
Of him who had boasted he would take Malacca.
- "The siyakap fish from the sea of Banca
Si Tuah runs away with the tray.
His intention was to take Malacca,
Little aware that his life would be lost.
- "Si Tuah runs off with the tray.
Wood is turned by Si Naga Wangsa.
Little thought he that his life would be lost
The body was removed by the Governor of Malacca."

The literary merit of the poem is not great; but it is of considerable historical interest as the work of some local bard of the last century, who celebrated, in the best language he could command, the repulse of the raid attempted on his native city. We may also mention the conclusion of a translation of Valentyn's account of Malacca, from 1640 to 1725, together with a facsimile of Valentyn's map; a summary of the now obsolete law relating to slavery among the Malays, which differed from the Muhammadan law in several particulars, notably in recognising debt-bondage; an account of legal customs in Negri Sembilan; and short papers on plants, insects, &c. The number ends with a valuable bibliography of Malaya, from January, 1888 to July, 1890, compiled by Mr. C. Davies Sherborn. By "Malaya" is meant that part of the Archipelago enclosed in a line drawn round the north of Siam and the Philippines, through Macassar Strait between Lombok and Bali, round the outlying islands of Java and Sumatra, and to the east of the Nicobars and Andamans. This bibliography fills just eighty pages; it is specially rich in Dutch publications, and in papers that have appeared in the Transactions of learned societies. We have said enough to show that this outlying branch of the Asiatic Society, which numbers only 160 members, is doing good work. It is to it that we owe the republication of four volumes of Miscellaneous Papers relating to Indo-China, which were edited by Dr. R. Rost for "Trübner's Oriental Series" (1886, 1887).

FINE ART.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TEMPLE AT LUXOR.

July 7, 1891.

An Egyptian correspondent writes to me that two of the columns west of the granite colonnade of Ramses II. at the Temple of Luxor, and behind the great Pylon, have recently fallen to the ground.

This is only what I, along with many others who visited Luxor last winter, expected would happen. It is also probably only the commencement of a disaster to the Egyptian monuments which may exceed any other of the century. Excavations were conducted on a large scale at Luxor during last winter and the present spring, and, incredible to relate, without Government supervision, and not directed by an engineer! Everyone knowing Luxor will remember that the set of the stream is against the ground (loose earth) on which the Temple stands. It has been so perilous for the adjacent houses that for the last two or three years the occupiers have, on some occasions at high Nile, sat up all night, fearing their houses would be swept away.

Without entering into the details of the late excavations, I may say that columns have been exposed in the northern courts and the earth removed from the western wall of the south portion of the Temple, so as to leave an embankment between the river and the town and Temple of palpable weakness, which is still further weakened by one end of it touching the entrance of a canal, at a point where the stream has great force. Moreover, the whole of the embankment has to stand the set of the current from the opposite side of the river.

Unless immediate steps are taken to secure the embankment, there is serious danger that, should the forthcoming inundation be exceptionally high, the whole foundations of the Temple will be washed away. And with these will certainly follow a portion of the town, entailing a possible destruction of human life frightful to contemplate.

Besides strengthening the embankment the set of the stream should be permanently changed. For many years past the land has been making on the west bank of the Nile, and being washed away on the eastern bank, whereon Luxor stands. It would be no great feat of engineering to remedy this, on which depends the preservation of so many important monuments.

To add to the indignation which we must all feel on hearing of this last Luxor escapade, there is the knowledge that it has been perpetrated from the proceeds of a tax ostensibly levied for the repair of the monuments. When the tourist-tax was proposed it was pointed out, both at home and in Egypt, that in imposing such a tax the Government was acting contrary to the principle accepted in this country, but only after many years of agitation—that it is desirable that public monuments and museums should be open free to all. It was also suggested that, in levying blackmail of this nature, we were giving point to the sarcasms respecting the "hypocrisis Britannique" and the "nation of shopkeepers." Further, it was stated that money so collected would be certainly misapplied. As to this point, so free have officials made with the fund that, when the Khedive visited Luxor last winter, it was dipped into to pay for a road, constructed solely for his convenience.

HENRY WALLIS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆAEOLOGY.

A MEMORIAL from men of science and others, on the subject of the proposed site for the National Gallery of British Art, has been forwarded to the City Corporation through Sir H. E. Roscoe. They state that, having heard that there was a possibility of the City of London finding a site on the Embankment for the gallery which a munificent donor had proposed to build, they approach the Corporation with an earnest request that they would observe the very great importance of giving effect to the proposal. The memorial already presented to the Prime Minister would have made the Corporation aware of the many strong objections from a scientific point of view to the site suggested for the gallery in the first instance. The greatest city in the world must be the first to suffer if from any cause the proper presentation of science and means for its study by its citizens were in any way crippled. By affording a site on the Embankment, the Corporation would be the means of preventing this lamentable result, and would earn the gratitude of all interested in scientific progress, as well as confer a great boon on the art-loving public. The memorial is signed by the president of the Royal Society (Sir W. Thomson), the secretaries (Lord Rayleigh and Prof. Foster), the treasurer (Dr. Evans), and nearly all the members of the council. Among other signatures is that of Lord Tennyson.

THE programme of the approaching congress of the British Archaeological Association at York has been roughly prepared, the date of the meeting having been fixed for August 17 to 23. The Marquis of Ripon will preside; and the vice-presidents will be the Bishops of Ripon and Wakefield, Lord Herries, the Dukes of Norfolk and Cleveland, and the Marquis of Bute. The first two days, Monday and Tuesday, will be devoted to an inspection of the minster, the city walls, the city churches, and the remains of St. Mary's abbey, with its ancient hospice, and its museum of Roman antiquities. One day will be spent in a visit to Beverley minster and Hull; another to Ripon and Fountains abbey; and two days will be devoted to Selby abbey church, the abbeys of Rievaulx and Byland, and the collegiate church of Howden. On the Monday evening the party will be entertained at a conversazione at the mansion-house; and on each of the other evenings meetings will be held in the new guildhall for the reading of papers, to be followed by discussions. On Sunday the members of the congress will attend service in the minster; and Monday, August 24, will be spent in a railway excursion to Scarborough, where the party will visit the old Norman castle and the parish church of St. Mary's.

THE youngest artist to receive a medal at the Paris Salon is Mr. Harry Vander Weyden, who received the honour for his picture "Un Soir d'Été." He is a descendant of the old Flemish master of that name, and son of Major Vander Weyden, the well-known photographer.

M. JULES TOUTAIN, of the Ecole française de Rome, has discovered near Tunis, on a hill called Bou Kournein, what appears to be a temple of Baal of Roman times. His excavations have already produced a number of inscriptions, one of which reads "Saturnus Balcaranensis * * Augustus * * Dominus * * Deus magnus," while others supply new consular dates.

THE university of Pennsylvania has in its museum, now open to students, a collection of about 700 cuneiform tablets, which have been acquired by the Babylonian Exploration Committee outside its operations in Turkey, and none of which have yet been published.

THE STAGE.

"THE NAUTCH GIRL" AT THE SAVOY.

ARE Messrs. Gilbert and Sullivan really to point the moral of the French proverb "Il n'y a pas d'homme nécessaire?" Are Messrs. George Dance and Edward Solomon to prove that they can step quite easily into the shoes of the creators of a singularly original form of dramatic entertainment? It is a hard saying—and these are questions we cannot confidently answer. Or rather, the net result of "The Nautch Girl" production and performance is to show how "necessary" Gilbert and Sullivan have actually been to librettist and composer, if not to the public. Something has been brought out—and brought out with success—which would never have been what it is but for the illustrious series of bright musical dramas due to the collaboration of Mr. Gilbert with Sir Arthur. Mr. Dance, the librettist, has been more especially indebted to his forerunner. There is something of Sullivan—yet not so very much of Sullivan in Mr. Solomon's music. There is all that there can possibly be of Gilbert in Mr. Dance's dialogue. The same order of satire, where that is attainable; the same order of cynicism; the same turn of thought and of style; the same useful literary tricks and manner of writing—the sharp and short Saxon alternating as before, in effective contrast, with the long Latinity which is a weapon too, in its way.

As regards the satire, there is, of course, nothing quite so admirable as the manner in which, in the play of "The Gondoliers," Socialism was held up to derision, and "the Lord High Coachman on the Box" assured of equality with the Lord Chief Justice on the Bench. Still, some well barbed shafts are directed to certain gratuitously exposed bosoms. The stupid enthusiasm over the traveller who returns—the traveller who is "dined" and married and then left upon the shelf, that some other social idol may be cherished and extolled—this craze of every London season receives its due rebuke. The egotistical twaddle translated from the Norse—when only the "bitterness of balked individuality" has to be remembered, and duty must be dutifully forgotten—into the heart of this nonsense the barbed arrow flies. Yes, there is fun and to spare; and it may be hypercritical to object to it that the method of Mr. Dance's humour copies Mr. Gilbert's too well—that it owes its existence to the existence of "The Gondoliers," of "The Pirates," of "The Mikado," and of "Patience." A man who can fall into the method of another with so complete a flexibility must have much cleverness, which includes, no doubt, at least a little originality, ready to be produced when the occasion demands it. For the present, in the production of "The Gondoliers," I look upon Mr. Dance in the light of an "under-study." Mr. Gilbert could not play his part; Mr. Dance was called upon to play it for him. And it is the business of an "under-study" to reproduce the effects of his principal.

Here is a pretty and Gilbertian little duet, for Indru and Chinna—the lady in the most modern of fashions, discovers, be it said, an "affinity" with many men, many are the occasions on which "her heart goes out to meet them."

This is the old, old story! Jack is in love with Jill; Jill doesn't care for Jacky, but deeply adores Bill; Bill worships dainty Dorothy—Dorothy, trim and tall,

Is pining and burning for Dick, who is yearning For Cis, who loves no one at all.

There is a very pretty lyric,

"When all the world was bright, love,
And every night was day."

Pretty things are plentiful from beginning to end—in the second act more especially—and it would be ungracious and unseemly were I to insist again upon the source whence they, like most of the humour, comes.

"The Nautch Girl" is mounted with nothing short of magnificence, and it is extremely well played. A word in detail on these matters. Mr. Rutland Barrington is the Rajah. There are some who disapprove of his voice; there cannot be any who disapprove of his method. When he intends to be pompous, Mr. Sapsea could never have been more impressive. His geniality and tolerance are alike admirable. The truth is, Mr. Barrington is an essential part of a Savoy performance, and Mr. Arthur Roberts himself has no greater right to be measured and fitted with a part. Mr. Frank Thornton is entertainingly disagreeable as the Grand Vizier. Mr. Donny, as the famous Idol, is all the part demands; and Mr. Courtice Pounds, as the son of the Rajah—the youth who is in love with a dancing girl, and who would willingly sacrifice caste to be her lord—plays with conviction and sings charmingly. Now, before we come to the ladies—to whom for the most part lesser rôles are given—must we forget Mr. Wyatt, the enterprising proprietor of a Nautch troop, which, on its travels, will be equipped for the performance of the bolero in Spain, and for that of a pleated-skirt dance in an English drawing-room up to date. The particular Nautch girl for whom the Rajah's offspring suffers love, and whom the Rajah himself regards with an eye of not wholly paternal favour, is represented very capably by Miss Lenore Snyder, a new-comer to the Savoy—a handsome and engaging person who gains upon you as the evening proceeds. What rejoices one most in the ladies' parts, however, is the performance of Miss Jessie Bond—excellently provided for in the new opera—and, from the beginning to the end of her representation, bright and artistic, light and flexible. Miss Annie Cole makes quite the most of a small part, and deserves, indeed, a better one.

Then as to the mounting, dresses, scenery, processions, stage crowds, stage effects—well, Mr. Charles Harris is answerable for his share. The stage direction has been in his accustomed hands. Mr. Percy Anderson has designed the dresses. Gorgeous and beautiful in themselves, they have no fault but that here and there they conceal the figure too completely. Mr. Harker must be credited with the better of the two set scenes, which represents, with all splendour of decoration and detail, the courtyard of the Rajah's palace. This is Indian atmosphere and Indian colour—colour most deftly combined—a blaze of red, a flash of gold and of white-pink alabaster; and these beheld in the sunniest of lights, against a steady background of unbroken blue.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

STAGE NOTES.

MR. F. C. PHILLIPS and Mr. Percy Fendall have collaborated in a piece called "Husband and Wife," which has—while we write—been brought out at the Comedy Theatre, and of which we shall have something more to say.

"MRS. ANNESLEY," a play by Mr. J. F. Cooke, was brought out at a matinee at the Criterion last week. It is a story of love, of jealousy, and of poisoning, told not without power, and not without sympathetic touches. It is, indeed, notwithstanding the sensational elements with which it deals, both healthy and interesting, and it is written with sufficient vigour and point. The matinee-attending audience has generally claims made upon its patience. As regards the performance of "Mrs. Annesley"—a play which will assuredly be heard of again—such claims were of the fewest. The piece was well interpreted, Mr. Bassett Roe, Mr. John Beauchamp, Mr. William Herbert, Mr. Charles Allan, and Mr. Frederick Harrison—the latter in a sympathetic part, which he played with great effectiveness and ease—being engaged in the performance. Miss May Whitty, who is clever and capable, was not seen perhaps to such advantage as we have before seen her. Miss Beatrice Lamb, on the other hand, has rarely looked or acted better. There was subtlety, as well as style and charm, in much that she did. It is ridiculous that a young actress of Miss Lamb's decided gifts and distinct individuality should be seen upon the London stage so seldom in parts that are worthy of her.

THE experimental re-opening of the Vaudeville does not appear to have been attended with any great success. The theatre is to be let from August 1 until Christmas. Mr. Thorne and his company will meanwhile be on tour.

"KATTI," with Mr. Willie Edouin and Miss Alice Atherley in the principal parts, is now being played nightly at the Strand.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

BETHOVEN'S "Fidelio" has not been heard for some time in London, and we are surprised that there was not a larger audience last week when it was performed at Covent Garden. Mme Tavary is an ear and dramatic singer, and appeared to great advantage in the part of Leonora. She was particularly good in the second act. M. Plançon as Rocco greatly distinguished himself. It would indeed be difficult to conceive a better rendering of the part (either vocally or histrionically). Signor Ravelli commenced his dungeon scene tamely, but afterwards was good, if not great. The "Fidelio" Overture was roughly played, but the "Leonora" went extremely well. Signor Randegger was the conductor.

An African native choir appeared at the Princes' Hall last Thursday week. They have come over to collect funds for technical colleges in South Africa; and the praiseworthy object of their visit, together with the novelty of the performance, will no doubt secure for them substantial success. Some of them have been trained at Lovedale College, South Africa, which is so full, that hundreds of applicants have had to be turned away. The choir now in London numbers from fifteen to twenty women, men, and children, representing seven distinct tribes. They have been trained by Mr. J. H. Balmer, formerly a pupil of Garcia's, and they sing with remarkable precision and refinement. The programme included genuine native and modern music, the former being, of course, of special interest to musicians; some of it is exceedingly quaint in tonality and form. The tonality in one or two pieces was Lydian in character, while the bold consecutive fifths between the extreme parts recalled the good old days of Hucbald. There was an uncomfortable mixture of secular and sacred music. As the latter is one of the choir's specialities, it would be advisable in future performances, to devote the first part of the programme solely to it. We wish all prosperity to this Kaffir choir.

Mr. and Mrs. Henschel gave an extra vocal recital at St. James's Hall on Friday, July 3. Mrs. Henschel sang with much charm Lieder by Mozart, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn; she was, however, particularly successful with Massenet's light and graceful "Serenade de Zanetto." She also sang a dainty "May Song," by Mr. A. Hervey, and a clever setting of "O Sun that waken'st," by Mr. F. Corder; and both were well received. Mr. Henschel sang some songs of his own from the "Trompeter von Säckingen"; they are excellent compositions, though at times the influence of Schubert is strongly marked. There were many other numbers of interest on the programme, but it will suffice to say that everything was enjoyed by the large audience. Mr. Henschel's accompaniments were, as usual, admirable.

The programme of the seventh Richter concert on Monday evening included two Wagner excerpts. The first was the scene from the second Act of "Götterdämmerung" in which Hagen calls together the vassals to welcome Gunther and his bride Brynhilde. This is a most impressive scene on the stage, but it makes too much noise with too little effect in a concert room. The other was Sachs's address to Walther and the closing chorus from "Die Meistersinger"; and these are quite enjoyable though torn from their imposing surroundings. Mr. Max Heinrich sang with taste and dramatic power, while the Richter choir displayed much energy. Mlle. Clementine de Vere, a new soprano vocalist, made a first appearance. Her voice is clear and bright. Her rendering of the Aria "Gli angui d'inferno" was not altogether successful, but she sang in an artistic and expressive manner an air from Dvorák's neglected Oratorio, "St. Ludmila." The programme included Cherubini's fine "Medée" Overture, and Beethoven's C minor Symphony, to both of which the orchestra did full justice.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

STANFORD'S TOURIST MAPS.

EUROPE.—STANFORD'S PORTABLE

MAP, showing the Railways, &c. Scale, 106 miles to an inch; size 33 in. by 30. Coloured and mounted in case, 10s.

CENTRAL EUROPE—DAVIES'S MAP

containing all the Railways and Stations. Roads, Rivers, and Chief Mountain Ranges are clearly delineated. Scale, 24 miles to an inch; size, 47 in. by 38. Mounted in case, 10s.

NORWAY.—WILLSON'S HANDY

MAP OF NORWAY SOUTH OF TRONDHEIM. Scale, 20 miles to an inch; size, 14 in. by 21. Coloured and folded for the pocket, 2s.

BRITISH ISLES.—DAVIES'S NEW

RAILWAY MAP OF THE BRITISH ISLES AND PART OF FRANCE. Scale, 22 miles to an inch; size 31 in. by 38. In case, 9s.

ENGLAND & WALES—STANFORD'S

LONDON ATLAS RAILWAY and STATION MAP. Scale, 10 miles to an inch; size, 40 in. by 48. Coloured and mounted in case, 12s. 6d. The Four Sheets can also be had separately—size of each, 22 in. by 26. Coloured and mounted in case, each 5s.

ENGLAND & WALES—STANFORD'S

PORTABLE MAP, with the Railways very clearly delineated. Scale, 15 miles to an inch; size, 32 in. by 28. Coloured and mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ENGLISH LAKE DISTRICT—TOURIST'S

MAP. With all the Roads and Paths marked and Heights given. Scale, 1 inch to a mile; size, 27 in. by 32. Price, with Roads and Lakes Coloured, folded in cover, 2s. 6d.; full-coloured, 4s. 6d.; mounted in case, 7s. 6d.

ISLE OF WIGHT—TOURIST'S MAP.

Scale, 1 inch to a mile; size, 27 in. by 21; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s.; coloured, 1s. 6d.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

NORTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP.

Scale, 3 miles to an inch; size, 34 in. by 27; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

SOUTH WALES.—TOURIST'S MAP.

Scale, 3 miles to an inch; size, 34 in. by 27; and descriptive VISITOR'S GUIDE. Folded, plain, 1s. 6d.; coloured, 2s.; mounted, 5s.

LONDON.—COLLINS'S STANDARD

MAP. Scale, 4 inches to a mile; size, 34 in. by 27. With an illustrated GUIDE. Coloured, in case, 1s.; extended size, 34 in. by 34 in. and full-coloured, 1s. 6d.; mounted, 3s. 6d.

LONDON.—DAVIES'S BRITISH

METROPOLIS. Scale, 3 inches to a mile; size, 36 in. by 25. Coloured and mounted in case, 7s. 6d.; or with continuation southward beyond the Crystal Palace, 11s. Other Maps at 8s. and 5s. 6d.

LONDON ATLAS MAPS.

The following Maps, selected from STANFORD'S LONDON ATLAS, can be had separately, mounted in a convenient form for the pocket, price 5s. each:—

EUROPE.
ENGLAND.
SCOTLAND.
IRELAND.
DENMARK and ICELAND.
SWEDEN and NORWAY.
GERMANY, WEST.
" EAST.
AUSTRIA-HUNGARY.
SWITZERLAND.
NETHERLANDS.
COUNTRIES round the MEDITERRANEAN.
FRANCE.
SPAIN and PORTUGAL.
ITALY, NORTH.
" SOUTH.

GREECE.
PALESTINE.
INDIA, NORTH.
" SOUTH.
BURMAH.
CEYLON.
CHINA.
JAPAN.
BORNEO.
AFRICA.
CENTRAL AFRICA.
SOUTH AFRICA.
MANITOBA.
BRITISH COLUMBIA.
VICTORIA (AUSTRALIA).
NEW SOUTH WALES.

LONDON: EDWARD STANFORD,
26 AND 27, COCKSPUR STREET, CHARING CROSS, S.W.

HURST & BLACKETT'S PUBLICATIONS.

NEW WORK BY THE REV. A. G. L'ESTRANGE.
Now ready, in 1 vol., demy 8vo, 12s.

LADY BELCHER AND HER FRIENDS.

With Portrait of Lady Belcher.

By the Rev. A. G. L'ESTRANGE,

Author of "The Friendships of Mary Russell Mitford," &c.

"Mr. L'Estrange has given a pleasant account of a clever and genial woman, well known in society till her death only last year. There is thus scarcely a name distinguished during the early years of her life but finds some mention in these pages. Many of the anecdotes have the charm of novelty as well as freshness and render the book eminently readable and attractive."—Athenaeum.
"Mr. L'Estrange's account of Lady Belcher and her Friends is likely to prove acceptable to all who love anecdotes about well-known people."—Globe.

THIRD AND CHEAPER EDITION.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BENCH and BAR; Reminiscences of One of the Lost of an Ancient Race. By Mr. Serjeant ROBINSON. With Appendix and Portrait of the Author.

UNDER THE ESPECIAL PATRONAGE OF HER MAJESTY.
Sixth Edition, 1 vol., royal 8vo, 31s. 6d., bound, gilt edges.

LODGE'S PEERAGE and BARONETAGE for 1891. Corrected by the Nobility.

NEW NOVELS.

NOW READY AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

A MOORLAND IDYL. By Algernon GISSING. Author of "A Village Hampden." "Both of this Parish," &c. 3 vols.

HAYTHORNE'S DAUGHTER. By PAUL WARREN. 3 vols.

A HARVEST OF TARES. By Vere CLAVERING. Author of "A Modern Delilah," "Barcaldine," &c. 2 vols.

"A Harvest of Tares" may be recommended as likely to amuse and interest the lover of light and entertaining literature from start to finish.—Saturday Review.

A LIFE'S DEVOTION. By Lady VIRGINIA SANDARS. Author of "A Bitter Repentance." 3 vols.

"Among the modern novels Lady Virginia Sandars' 'A Life's Devotion' is one of the most pleasing."—Morning Post.

THE HERMITS of CRIZEBECK. By HENRY CRESSWELL. Author of "A Modern Greek Heroine." 3 vols.

"The work has more lines of interest than the main one. It is well written throughout, and deserves to be widely read."—Scotsman.

A LADY of MY OWN. By Helen PROTHIERO LEWIS. Author of "Her Heart's Desire." 3 vols.

"The author is an eminently pleasing novelist, who has, moreover, the gift of natural and unaffected pathos."—Morning Post.

A RAINBOW at NIGHT. By M. E. LE CLERC. Author of "Misses Beatrice Cope." 2 vols.

"This novel contains some capital character sketching, and is written in an exceptionally attractive style."—Glasgow Herald.

KINSFOLK. By Mary Deane, Author of "St. Brivalde's," "Quatrefoil," &c. 3 vols.

"There are to be found in 'Kinsfolk' many of the features of a good novel. As literature, in the strict sense of the word, it is excellent; the writing is that of a cultivated woman with a natural gift of expression; some at least of the characters are both lifelike and realisable; and at times the story has real narrative interest."—Manchester Examiner.

THE PHILADELPHIAN. By Louis JOHN JENNINGS, M.P., Author of "The Millionaire," &c. 3 vols.

A SELECTION FROM

HURST & BLACKETT'S

STANDARD LIBRARY.

EACH IN A SINGLE VOLUME, PRICE 5s.

BY THE AUTHOR of "JOHN HALIFAX."

JOHN HALIFAX, GENTLEMAN.	CHRISTIAN'S MISTAKE.
A WOMAN'S THOUGHTS ABOUT WOMEN.	A NOBLE LIFE.
A LIFE for a LIFE.	HANNAH.
NOTHING NEW.	THE UNKIND WORD.
MISTRESS and MAID.	A BRAVE LADY.
THE WOMAN'S KINGDOM.	STUDIES from LIFE.
	YOUNG MRS. JARDINE.

BY THE AUTHOR of "SAM SLICK."

NATURE and HUMAN NATURE.	THE OLD JUDGE; or, LIFE in a Colony.
WISE SAWS and MODERN INSTANCES.	TRAITS of AMERICAN HUMOUR.
	THE AMERICANS at HOME.

BY DR. GEORGE MAC DONALD.

DAVID ELGINBROD.	ALEC FORBES.
ROBERT FALCONER.	SIR GIBBIE.

BY MRS. OLIPHANT.

ADAM GRAEME.	LIFE of IRVING.
LAIRD OF NORLAW.	A ROSE in JUNE.
AGNES.	PHOEBE, JUNIOR.

IT WAS A LOVER AND HIS LASS.

LONDON: HURST & BLACKETT, LIMITED.

THE CLASSICAL REVIEW.

Vol. V. JULY. No. 7.

Royal 8vo, 54 pages, Double Columns, 1s. 6d.
CONTENTS.

- A. E. HOUSMAN.—ADVERSARIA ORTHOGRAPHICA.
- E. SEYMOUR CONWAY.—ORIGIN of the LATIN GERUND and GERUNDIVE.
- J. P. POSTGATE.—LATIN FUTURE INFINITIVE in TURUM.
- F. T. TARBELL.—GREEK DELIBERATIVE SUBJUNCTIVE in RELATIVE CLAUSES.
- E. S. HWENKE.—APPARATUS CRITICUS on CICERO DE NATURA DEORUM.
- EURY'S NEMEAN ODES. J. E. SANDYS.
- MEREY'S EDITION of the BIRDS. R. Y. TYRRELL.
- SHORTER NOTICES.
- GREEK ELEGIACS. L. CAMPBELL.
- 'Αδριανός Π. Αδριτία.
- RECENT LITERATURE F. G. K.
- A REPLY to PROFESSOR GOMPERZ. H. RICHARDS.
- FURTHER NOTES by H. RICHARDS, W. WISE, E. S. THOMPSON, E. POCOCK.

- NOTES.
- MONTHLY RECORD.
- CORRESPONDENCE.
- ARCHAEOLOGY.
- SUMMARIES of PERIODICALS.
- BIBLIOGRAPHY.

NOTE.—THE CLASSICAL REVIEW for March, April, May, and June contains a full list of all the Emendations on the Text of the Αδριανός Π. Αδριτία scattered throughout the various philological journals of England and the Continent, together with notes on the same and discussions on philological and historical points raised by the newly-discovered work attributed to Aristotle. These numbers are indispensable to any student of the new Aristotle.

THE JEWISH QUARTERLY REVIEW.

EDITED BY I. ABRAHAM and C. G. MONTEFIORE.

Vol. III. JULY. No. 12.

Price 1s.; Annual Subscription, post free, 10s.

CONTENTS.

- CRITICAL PROBLEMS of the SECOND PART of ISAIAH I. By THE T. K. CURRIE.
- THE LITERATURE of the JEWS in YEMEN. By Dr. A. NEUBACHER.
- ATTEMPTIVE CATALOGUE of BIBLICAL METAPHORS. By C. G. MONTEFIORE.
- THE QUOTATIONS from ECCLESIASTICS in RABBINICAL LITERATURE. By Prof. S. SCHEER.
- THE SABBATH LIGHT. By M. FRIEDMANN.
- WHAT IS the ORIGINAL LANGUAGE of the WISDOM of SOLOMON? By J. ERDMANNO.
- THE LAW and RECENT CRITICISM. By Prof. S. SCHEER.
- CRITICAL NOTICES.—Pseudo-Aristoteles über die Seele, by Dr. A. NEUBACHER.—Mishnah-Tehillim, by Dr. A. NEUBACHER.—Censur und Confession hebraischen Bucher in Kirchensenate, by Dr. A. NEUBACHER.—Judentum und Christentum: ihre Zukunft, by C. G. MONTEFIORE.
- NOTES and DISCUSSIONS.—Three Centuries of the Hagin Family, by Joseph Jacobs.—Judeo-Christian Polonies in Zohar, by W. BONGER.—A Contribution to the History of the Term "Massarah," by W. BONGER.

DAVID NUTT, 279 and 271, Strand.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 245, will be published on WEDNESDAY, JULY 15th.

- I. MEMOIR of JOHN MURRAY.
- II. PLAUTUS and HIS IMITATORS.
- III. SIR ROBERT PEEL'S CORRESPONDENCE.
- IV. LINCOLNSHIRE.
- V. TALLEYRAND.
- VI. THE MAKING of GERMANY.
- VII. MEDIEVAL ATHENS.
- VIII. THE LATER JANSENISTS.
- IX. GIOVANNI MORELLI.
- X. CONFLICT BETWEEN CAPITAL and LABOUR.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE LEADENHALL PRESS,

50, LEADENHALL STREET, LONDON, E.C.

CORNERED. By Norman Porritt. London, The Leadenhall Press, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 2s. 6d.

THE DEVIL'S ACRES. Illustrated by Kenneth M. Skeaping. London, The Leadenhall Press, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 3s. 6d.

LAYS of a LAZY LAWYER. By Al-So. London, The Leadenhall Press, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 1s.

CURATICA; or, Leaves from a Curate's Note-book.
MY FIRST CURACY. By the Rev. Sydney Mostyn. London, The Leadenhall Press, 50, Leadenhall Street, E.C. 2s. 6d.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1898.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £100.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
242, 248, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Goods carefully Rem ved and Warehoused.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c.; of Portraits by Hall, R.A., Oudess, R.A.; Pictic, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

so remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

ARTS, CRAFTS, and LOAN EXHIBITION, KENDAL, WESTMORLAND.

To be OPENED by H.R.H. THE PRINCESS LOUISE, at the end of AUGUST, 1891.

ARTISTS wishing to EXHIBIT PICTURES or DRAWINGS on SALE, are invited to communicate at once with the undersigned, who will supply forms of entry, and all necessary information and particulars.

THEODORE DE ROSE, Hon. Sec. (Section II.), 21, Stramogate, Kendal.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.

PROCEEDINGS of the GENERAL MEETINGS for SCIENTIFIC BUSINESS of the ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON, for the Year 1891. Part I., containing the Papers read in January and February, with 14 Plates, price 12s.

TRANSACTIONS of the SOCIETY. Vol. XIII., Part II., price 21s., containing the following Papers:— Prof. W. K. PARKER, F.R.S., on THE MORPHOLOGY of a REPTILIAN BIRD OPISTHOCOMIS CRISTATUS. With 4 Plates.
Prof. F. JEFFREY BELL, F.Z.S., CONTRIBUTIONS to our KNOWLEDGE of the ANTI-PATHARIAN CORALS. With 2 Plates.

These Publications may be obtained at the Society's Office (5, Hanover Square, W.), at Messrs. LONDONSON'S, the Society's Publishers (Paternoster Row, E.C.), or through any Bookseller.

MR. HERBERT SPENCER'S NEW WORK.
Now ready, in One Vol., 8vo. Price 8s.

JUSTICE: being Part IV. of the PRINCIPLES of ETHICS, by HERBERT SPENCER. WILLIAMS & NORGATE, 14, Henrietta-street, Covent Garden.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH. THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THEATRES.

COURT THEATRE,

Every Evening, at 9, THE LATE LAMENTED. Messrs. A. Cecil, H. Standing, A. Aynsworth, F. Cape, G. Farquhar, C. Roek, and J. Clulow; Mesdames R. Filippi, E. Phelps, Harrington, and John Wood. Preceded, at 8.15, by A MUTUAL MISTAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM. Every Evening, at 9. DAVID GARRICK. Messrs. Charles Wyndham, W. Farrow, G. Giddens, W. Blakeley, S. Valentine, S. Howson, F. Atherley, and F. Emery; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Miller, and Mary Moore. Preceded, at 8.20, by HEADS OR TAILS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, AUGUSTUS HARRIS. Every Evening, at 7.45, DRINK. Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. C. Gonney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Morgan, A. Phillips, H. Terriss, R. Power; Mesdames Jessie Millward, Ada Neilson, Mrs. Billington, Alice Kingsley, and Kate James.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER. This Evening at 8.15. LA CIGALE. Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER. This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE. Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OYLY CARTER. Every Evening, at 8.30, and every Saturday Afternoon, at 2.30, the new Indian comic Opera, in two acts, entitled, THE NAUTCH GIRL; or, The Rajah of Chutnypore. Libretto by George Dance, music by Edward Solomon, with lyrics by George Dance and Frank Desprez.

S.T. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER. This Evening, at 8.30, THE IDLE.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. ON CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows Interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSROFT, Manager.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."

Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW PUBLICATIONS.

No. II. NOW READY.

Published Quarterly, price 2s.; Annual Subscription, 5s. 6d.

The London and Middlesex Notebook.

An Illustrated Magazine devoted to the Local History and Antiquities of the Cities of London and Westminster and the County of Middlesex.

EDITED BY

W. P. W. PHILLIMORE, M.A., B.C.L.,

CONTENTS OF NO. II.

LORD MAYORS and SHERIFFS temp. JAMES I. CHISWICK STREET and PLACE NAMES.

THE CROMWELLS of EALING and FELTHAM.

LONDON and MIDDLESEX WILLS.

A LONDON COM. of OYER and TERMINER in 1659.

GUNNERSBURY.

ON a PALÆOLITHIC IMPLEMENT of PECULIAR FORM from OXFORD STREET.

THE FEATHERS, HAND COURT.

LONDON and MIDDLESEX GENTRY in 1673.

THE SAINTLY MRS. GODOLPHIN.

MONUMENTAL BRASSES in the CITY.

MARGARET DELY.

QUERIES and REPLIES.

PARKER STREET, W.C.

BOOK NOTICES.

NEW VOLUME OF THE BOOK-LOVER'S LIBRARY.

Edited by HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

In fcap. 8vo, cloth, price 4s. 6d.; on hand-made paper, Roxburgh, 7s. 6d.; Large Paper, 21s. each net.

The Story of the Imitatio Christi.

By LEONARD A. WHEATLEY.

The preceding Volumes in this Series are—

STUDIES in JOCLAR LITERATURE. By W. C. HAZLITT.

NEWSPAPER REPORTING in OLDEN TIME and TO-DAY. By JOHN PENDELTON.

HOW to CATALOGUE a LIBRARY. By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

FOREIGN VISITORS in ENGLAND, and What They Thought of Us. By EDWARD SMITH.

THE BOOK of NOODLES: Stories of Simpletons; or, Fools and their Follies. By W. A. CLOUSTON.

THE ENEMIES of BOOKS. By WILLIAM BLADES.
THE STORY of SOME FAMOUS BOOKS. By FREDERICK SAUNDERS.

GLEANINGS in OLD GARDEN LITERATURE. By W. C. HAZLITT.

THE DEDICATION of BOOKS. To Patron and Friend. By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

MODERN METHODS of ILLUSTRATING BOOKS.

THE LITERATURE of LOCAL INSTITUTIONS. By G. L. GOMME, F.S.A.

OLD COOKERY BOOKS and ANCIENT CUISINE. By W. C. HAZLITT.

HOW to FORM a LIBRARY. By HENRY B. WHEATLEY, F.S.A.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

IMPORTANT NEW BIOGRAPHY.

LIFE OF JANE WELSH CARLYLE.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND.

With Portrait and Facsimile Letter. Small demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

[July 15.]

A NEW ADVENTURE BOOK.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE FOUNTAIN of YOUTH. By Erasmus Dawson,

M.B. Edited by PAUL DEVON. With 2 Illustrations by Hume Nisbet.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES.

ST. KATHERINE'S BY THE TOWER. By Walter

BESANT, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. With 12 Illustrations by Charles Green. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Mr. Walter Besant's latest novel is a spirited and eminently interesting study of demoniac possession. The story is written with great power, and sometimes with almost tragic intensity."—Daily Telegraph.

"'St. Katherine's by the Tower' is as good a story as Mr. Besant has written, and shows his characteristic gifts at their best. It is admirable work throughout; and the story soon takes a strong hold upon one's interest, and maintains it to the end."—Scotsman.

BELL BARRY. By R. Ashe King, Author of "The Wearing of the Green," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo.

"Bright and pungent narrative, a fine sense of humour, animated dialogue, and living and lovable characters. Altogether, 'Bell Barry' is a novel of unusual and, in some points, powerful interest."—Freeman's Journal.

A CHILD WIDOW. By Mrs. F. H. Williamson.

3 vols., crown 8vo.

"There is not a lay figure in the book. Mrs. Williamson's style is always eloquent, often pathetic, and invariably in good taste. The book is distinctly a book to be read."—Vanity Fair.

"Promises to become very widely popular. Mrs. Williamson, in a very original and intensely interesting story, has drawn firmly but with great delicacy the portrait of a sweet young girl upon whom high fortune has fallen unsuspected and almost unawares. Thoughtful readers will be struck with many passages. Some show a fine poetic feeling, others a strong sense of beauty in nature."—World.

NEW THREE-AND-SIXPENNY NOVELS, &c.

THE WORD and the WILL. By James Payn.

"A story which is filled with all Mr. Payn's skill in construction and felicity of touch. A field of observation which is all sunshine of humour and flowers of fancy."—Daily News.

MY SHIPMATE LOUISE. By W. Clark

RUSSELL.
"One of the best stories Mr. Clark Russell has ever written; its interest is never for a moment allowed to flag."—Leeds Mercury.

SUNNY STORIES and SOME SHADY

ONES. By JAMES PAYN. With a Frontispiece by Fred. Barnard.
"An excellent book."—Glasgow Herald.

THE HOLY ROSE. By Walter Besant.

With a Frontispiece by Fred. Barnard.
"A delightful volume."—Glasgow Citizen.

THE WONDERFUL ADVENTURES of

PHRA the PHOENICIAN. By EDWIN LESTER ARNOLD. With 12 Illustrations by H. M. Paget.
"An admirable piece of work."—Academy.

THE BISHOPS' BIBLE. By D. Christie-

MURRAY and HENRY HERMAN.
"An ingenious and touching story, and well told. It is full of good characters."—World.

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "A SOCIAL DEPARTURE."

AN AMERICAN GIRL in LONDON. By Sara Jeannette Duncan, Author of

"A Social Departure." With 80 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.
"It is a brilliant book, and deserves to be read widely."—Speaker.

A NEW HUMOROUS TRAVEL BOOK.

TWO GIRLS on a BARGE. By V. Cecil Cotes. With 44 Illustrations by

F. H. Townsend. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

[Shortly.]

HENRY HERMAN'S NEW BOOK.

A LEADING LADY: a Story of the Stage. By Henry Herman, joint-Author of "The Bishops' Bible," "One Traveller Returns," &c. Post 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The story is vividly written, has some clever sketches of character, and is well worth reading."—Stage.

DR. A. WILSON'S NEW SUMMER BOOK.

GLIMPSES of NATURE. By Dr. Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. With 35 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

"Readers of the Illustrated London News will recognise in the genial author of many a picturesque column of 'Science Jottings' an old and agreeable friend. Dr. Wilson, in a bright informal way, discourses in this accurate and entertaining book on sea-acorns, dandelion down, and other aspects of popular science."—Speaker.

NEW TWO-SHILLING NOVELS.

BROOKE FINCHLEY'S DAUGHTER. By MARY ALBERT.

FOR FAITH and FREEDOM. By WALTER BESANT.

THE TENTS of SHEM. By GRANT ALLEN.

BETWEEN LIFE and DEATH. By FRANK BARRETT.

BLIND LOVE. By WILKIE COLLINS.

THE LEGACY of CAIN. By WILKIE COLLINS.

THE LAWTON GIRL. By HAROLD FREDERIC.

A FELLOW of TRINITY. By ALAN ST. AUBYN. With a "Note" by OLIVER WENDELL HOLMES.

A NOBLE WOMAN. By HENRY GREVILLE.

SOWING the WIND. By E. LYNN LINTON.

THE DEAD MAN'S SECRET. By J. E. MUDDOCK.

PAUL JONES'S ALIAS. By CHRISTIE MURRAY and H. HERMAN.

GUILDEROY. By OUIDA.

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY. By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

TINKLETOP'S CRIME. By G. R. SIMS.

SELECTIONS from the WORKS of CHARLES READE. With an Introduction by Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND, and a Steel-plate Portrait. Crown 8vo, buckram, 6s.

"Decidedly a happy thought. Every phase of Reade's literary work is, we think, adequately represented."

Leeds Mercury.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1002.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
Mrs. SUTHERLAND ORR'S LIFE OF BROWNING, by the Hon. ROBERT NOEL	47
MILES'S CORRESPONDENCE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, by Mrs. S. R. GARDINER	49
SANSENSCHEIN'S THE BEST BOOKS, by the Rev. J. OWEN	50
ERIC MACKAY'S NERO AND ACTEA, by Miss E. D'ESTERRE KEELING	51
NEW NOVELS, by G. SAINTSBURY	52
SOME SEASONABLE BOOKS	53
NOTES AND NEWS	54
THE FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES	54
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	55
ORIGINAL VERSE: "COR CORDIUM," by SIDNEY T. WHITFORD	55
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	55
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	55
CORRESPONDENCE:— A Few more Words on "The Court of Love," by Prof. Skcat; Mr. Isaac Taylor on Syllabus History , by E. A. Freeman; A Lost Book by Marat , by J. B. Bailey	56
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	58
TWO CLASSICAL TEXTS	58
SCIENCE NOTES	58
PHILOLOGY NOTES	59
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	59
THE EDINBURGH HERALDIC EXHIBITION, by J. M. GRAY	59
THE TOMBS OF BENI HASAN, by F. LL. GRIFFITH	60
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	60
"HUSBANDS AND WIVES," by F. WEDMORE	61
MUSIC OF THE WEEK, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	61

NEW CLARENDON PRESS BOOKS.
NEW PART JUST READY.
A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.
Founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society.
JUST PUBLISHED.
VOLUME III. PART I. [E—EVERY.] Imperial 4to, price 12s. 6d. Edited by HENRY BRADLEY, Hon. M.A. Oxon., President of the Philological Society. With the co-operation of Dr. MURRAY.
ALREADY PUBLISHED.
VOLUME I. A and B. Complete, imperial 4to, half-morocco, £2 12s. 6d.
Part I. [A—ANT.] 12s. 6d. Part III. [BATTER—BOZ.] 12s. 6d.
Part II. [ANT—BATTEN.] 12s. 6d. Part IV. Section I. [BRA—BYZ.] 7s. 6d.
VOLUME II. Part IV. Section 2. [C—CASS.] 12s. 6d. Part V. [CAST—CLIVY.] 12s. 6d.
Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, Hon. M.A. Oxon., LL.D., &c., formerly President of the Philological Society.
The Remaining Parts of the Second Volume are in active preparation.
NEARLY READY.
Part VII. [CLO—CONSIGNER.] 12s. 6d. Edited by Dr. MURRAY.

Just published, fcap. 8vo, bevelled boards, price 8s. 6d.
SYNOPSIS OF OLD ENGLISH PHONOLOGY. By A. L. MAYHEW, M.A., Author of "A Concise Dictionary of Middle English."

Just published, 8vo, cloth, price 16s., with Frontispiece, Map, and 32 Wood Engravings.
THE MELANESIANS: Studies in their Anthropology and Folk-lore. By R. H. CODRINGTON, D.D., late of the Melanesian Mission, sometime Fellow of Wadham College, Oxford.

Third Volume just published, 8vo, cloth, with Four Collotypes and a Lithograph, price 16s.
STUDIA BIBLICA ET ECCLESIASTICA: Essays chiefly in Biblical and Patristic Criticism. By MEMBERS OF THE UNIVERSITY OF OXFORD.
[Already published:—Vol. I., 10s. 6d.; Vol. II., 12s. 6d.]

Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, with numerous Diagrams, price 7s. 6d.
AN INTRODUCTION to the MATHEMATICAL THEORY OF ELECTRICITY AND MAGNETISM. By W. T. A. EMtage, M.A., Pembroke College, Examiner in the School of Natural Science, Oxford.
FULL CATALOGUES POST FREE ON APPLICATION.
LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.
Just ready, SECOND EDITION, in 2 vols., 8vo, cloth, price 30s. net.

THE LIFE OF ARCHIBALD CAMPBELL TAIT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY. By RANDALL THOMAS DAVIDSON, D.D., Dean of Windsor; and WILLIAM BENHAM, B.D., Hon. Canon of Canterbury.
TITLES.—The book is valuable and interesting, a clear and authoritative account of the manner in which Tait impressed his own character upon the Church history of his time.
STANDARD.—"The biography is one which must be read by everybody who wishes to understand the history of a most important period."

ABRIDGED EDITION OF BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S "APOSTOLIC FATHERS."
Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 16s.
THE APOSTOLIC FATHERS. Comprising the Epistles (genuine and spurious) of Clement of Rome, the Epistle of St. Ignatius, the Epistle of St. Polycarp, the Martyrdom of St. Polycarp, the Teaching of the Apostles, the Epistle of Barnabas, the Shepherd of Hermas, the Epistle to Diognetus, the Fragments of Papias, the Reliques of the Elders preserved in Irenaeus. Revised Texts, with short introductions and English Translations. By the late J. B. LIGHTFOOT, D.D., D.C.L., LL.D., Lord Bishop of Durham. Edited and completed by J. R. HARMER, M.A., Fellow of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, some time Chaplain to the Bishop. Published by the Trustees of the Lightfoot Fund.
The Introductions throughout (with the exception of those which deal with the text, and the short prefatory note to the Fragments of Papias) were either written by Dr. Lightfoot for this work or are derived from his larger work referred to above.
The translations of the Epistles of Clement, Ignatius, and Polycarp, and of the Martyrdom of Polycarp, are reprinted from the larger edition. The rest of the translations are based upon rough notes found among his papers.

CONCLUDING VOLUME OF THE LATE BISHOP LIGHTFOOT'S SERMONS.
Just ready, crown 8vo, 6s.
SERMONS ON SPECIAL OCCASIONS. By Joseph BARBER LIGHTFOOT, D.D., late Bishop of Durham.
Previously published, uniform in size and price.
LEADERS in the NORTHERN CHURCH. ORDINATION ADDRESSES and COUNSELS to CLERGY.
CAMBRIDGE SERMONS. SERMONS PREACHED in ST. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL.
Just published, New Edition, crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

ON A FRESH REVISION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.
By the SAME AUTHOR. To which are appended Letters to the Guardian on the LORD'S PRAYER.
THE LATELY DISCOVERED WORK OF ARISTOTLE.
Just published, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

ARISTOTLE ON THE CONSTITUTION OF ATHENS.
Translated by E. POSTE, M.A., Fellow of Oriel College, Oxford, Editor of the "Roman Law by Gaius," &c.
As the discovery of this important addition to classical literature excited so much interest when first made known, it has been thought that a translation prepared for the unlearned, as well as for the learned reader, might be received with favour, and enable English readers to form an opinion for themselves on the substantive character and interest of the work.
MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

WANTED, in September, an Appointment as LADY SECRETARY or AMANUENSIS. German, French, Shorthand, Type-writing.—Miss H., Ithen Abbas Rectory, Abbeville, Hauts.

CATALOGUES.
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large dates and editions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

TO CREST HOLDERS.
COMMUNICATIONS and full PARTICULARS OF CRESTS and BLAZONINGS used are REQUESTED by the undersigned, who is engaged in preparing an entirely New Edition of Fairbairn's Standard Book of Crests. Proofs of entry and sketches will be submitted for approval on application.—Prospectus on application.
A. C. FOX-DAVIES, 29, JOHN STREET, ADELPHI, LONDON, W.C.
To be published by T. C. & E. C. JACK, London and Edinburgh.

NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.
TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION ACTS, 1889-91.
THE COUNTY EDUCATIONAL COMMITTEE OF THE COUNTY OF NORTHAMPTON require a competent Person to act as ORGANISING and GENERAL SECRETARY to the Committee, who will be required to devote his whole time to the work, and to enter upon his duties on the 1st September 1891.
The appointment will be for six months certain, and before the expiration of the first three months the Committee will decide whether the gentleman to be appointed is to act for a further period of six months.
The remuneration will be after the rate of £25 per annum, besides travelling and other out of pocket necessary expenses.
The applicant is to send to me on or before the 25th inst. his age and qualifications, and at least two references. No testimonials required.
H. P. MARRHAM, Clerk to the County Council.
County Hall, Northampton, July 14th, 1891.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W.
THE NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at CAMBRIDGE, commencing on WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 19th.
President-Elect—
WILLIAM HUGGINS, Esq., D.C.L., LL.D., F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., F.R.A.S.
NOTICE TO CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS.—Authors are requested to give notice before August 1st of their intention to offer Papers. Information about lodgings and other local arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, Bank Buildings, Cardiff.
G. GRIFFITH, Assistant General Secretary.

1s. 6d.; KEY, 1s. 8d.
Just published in improved type.
HALL'S FIRST FRENCH COURSE, and FRENCH and the FRENCH, with valuable additions to Grammar and Reading Lessons.
London: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT, & Co., Limited.

For School and College Advertisements, see page 62.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME
to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr.
DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown
8vo, £2 6s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.;
Vol. III., 10s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Caesar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICK-
SON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.
From the German of Professor MAX MÜLLER. By
EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

THE FIFTEEN DECISIVE BATTLES of the WORLD. By Professor CREASY. Library Edition. Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Popular Edition. Crown
8vo, 6s.

THE HISTORY of the RISE and PROGRESS of the ENGLISH CONSTITUTION. By Sir EDWARD CREASY, late Chief Justice of Ceylon.
Fourteenth Edition. Crown 8vo, 6s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK, late Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JUXON.
12 vols., demy 8vo, £9. Each separately (with the exception of III. reprinting, IV., VI., and VII.), 15s. The
New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE HISTORY of JERUSALEM:
Ancient, Mediæval, and Modern. By WALTER
BESANT, M.A., and E. H. PALMER, M.A., late Professor of Arabic, Cambridge. A New Edition, large crown 8vo, with Map, 7s. 6d.

THE HISTORY of the GREAT
FRENCH REVOLUTION. From the French of
M. THIERS. By FREDERICK SHOBERL. With 41
Fine Engravings, and Portraits of the most Celebrated Personages referred to in the work, engraved on Steel by William Greatbatch. 5 vols., demy 8vo, 36s.

THE PRIVATE LIFE of MARIE
ANTOINETTE, QUEEN of FRANCE and NAVARRE.
By JEANNE LOUISE HENRIETTE CAMPAN. First Lady-in-Waiting. With Memoir of Madame Campan, by M^{lle}. BARRIÈRE and MAIGNE. New and Revised Edition, with additional Notes and Portrait. Crown
8vo, 6s.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.
From the French of M. GUITOT. By ANDREW
SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By
ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

THE FRENCH HUMOURISTS, from the TWELFTH to the NINETEENTH CENTURY. By WALTER BESANT, M.A., Christ's Coll., Cam. Author of "Studies in Early French Poetry," &c. 8vo, 15s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON & CO.'S LIBRARY EDITION OF POPULAR NOVELS BY AUTHORS OF THE DAY.

In cloth, gilt top, 2s. 6d. each.

The Guardian says:—"Messrs. Hutchinson's Popula Library is really a most promising and remarkable sign o the times. Here we have the old-established novel docked of its superfluous spaces and margins, and offered to the reader neatly bound, nicely printed, comfortable to handle, with plenty of matter and interest, and all for the modest sum of 2s. 6d."

By MRS. RIDDELL.
Austin Friars.
Too Much Alone.
The Rich Husband.
Maxwell Drewitt.
Far above Rubies.
A Life's Assize.
The World in the Church.
Home, Sweet Home.
Phemie Keller.
Race for Wealth.
The Earl's Promise.
Mortomley's Estate.
Frank Sinclair's Wife.
The Ruling Passion.
My First and My Last
Love.
City and Suburb.
Above Suspicion.
Joy after Sorrow.

By FLORENCE MARRYAT.

Mount Eden.
Gerald Estcourt.
Love's Conflict.
Too Good for Him.
Woman against
Woman.
For Ever and Ever.
Nelly Brooke.
Veronique.

Her Lord and Master.
The Prey of the Gods.
The Girls of Fever-sham.

Mad Dumaresq.
No Intentions.
Petronel.
Miss Harrington's Husband.
[Just Ready.]

By JOSEPH HATTON.

Clytie.
The Tallants of Barton.
In the Lap of Fortune.
Valley of Poppies.
Not in Society.

Christopher Kenrick.
Cruel London.
The Queen of Bohemia.
Bitter Sweets.
By Order of the Czar.
[Just Ready.]

By J. SHERIDAN LEFANU.

Checkmate.
All in the Dark.
Guy Deverell.
The Rose and the Key.
Tenants of Mallory.
Willing to Die.
Wylder's Hand.

By F. W. ROBINSON.

Christie's Faith.
Carry's Confession.
Under the Spell.
House of Elmore.
Milly's Hero.
Mr. Stewart's Intentions.
No Man's Friend.
Wild Flowers.
Poor Humanity.
Owen, a Waif.
Woodleigh.
A Woman's Ransom.
Mattie, a Stray.
Slaves of the Ring.
One and Twenty.

By G. A. SALA.

Quite Alone.
By SIDNEY S. HARRIS.
The Sutherlands.
Rutledge.
Christine.

By ANNIE THOMAS.

On Guard.
Walter Goring.

By M. BETHAM EDWARDS
Love and Mirage.

By JOHN COLEMAN.

The White Ladye of Rosemount.

By SIR JULIUS VOGEL,
K.C.M.G.

A.D. 2,000; or,
Woman's Destiny.

By HELEN MATHERS.

Sam's Sweetheart.
[Just Ready.]

By IZA DUFFUS HARDY.

The Girl he did not Marry. [Just Ready.]

LONDON: HUTCHINSON & CO.,
25, PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NEW BOOKS.

NOW READY AT ALL BOOKSELLERS

THE BIOGRAPHY

OF THE

Rt. Hon. W. E. Gladstone, M.P.

By G. W. E. RUSSELL.

Being the New Volume in "The Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with new Photogravure Portrait.

Price 3s. 6d.

THE WORLD.—"Written in the manly and independent spirit which we should expect in one of his lineage..... An honest book."

THE SATURDAY REVIEW.—"Mr. Russell's book is enriched by the recollections of some of Mr. Gladstone's most eminent contemporaries, and by records which they have placed at his disposal."

THE SPEAKER.—"Mr. Russell's clear and able sketch of one whom he is justly proud to call his friend."

THE DAILY NEWS.—"Mr. Russell has done his work with sound judgment and in excellent taste.... A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH.—"A singularly vivid and complete picture of one of the most striking figures of the Victorian era. Mr. Russell has done something to enable the English people, even where they differ most from Mr.
Gladstone's policy, to understand him better, and therefore to respect and admire him more."

&c. &c.

* * * A limited Large-Paper Edition of the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series is in preparation. Orders taken only for the complete set at FOUR GUINEAS net.

PROSPECTUS ON APPLICATION.

The Rural Economy and Agriculture of Australia and New Zealand.

As seen by ROBERT WALLACE, F.I.S., F.R.S. Edin.
Professor of Agriculture and Rural Economy in the University of Edinburgh, Author of "India in 1887,"
"Farm Live Stock of Great Britain," &c. With 8 Maps, 80 Full-page Plates, and 20 Text Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, ONE GUINEA net.

"Professor Wallace gives, as the result of personal observation, a very complete and very instructive account of the agricultural methods and appliances in use throughout the principal Australasian colonies."—The Times.

FOUR WELSH COUNTIES :

A Holiday Book about Brecknock, Carnarvon, Merioneth, and Pembroke.

By E. A. KILNER.

With Illustrations, crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

AT ALL THE LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c.

3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenæum.

"Its interest never flags. There is much delicious humour."
Scotsman.

"It is soothing and invigorating to turn to Mr. William Black's delightful pages after wandering for a time through the longings of dreary commonplace of less gifted writers....
A brisk and picturesque story."—Daily Telegraph.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, JULY 18, 1891.

No. 1002, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Life and Letters of Robert Browning. By Mrs. Sutherland Orr. (Smith, Elder & Co.)

Mrs. SUTHERLAND ORR, the intimate friend of Robert Browning, and author of that Handbook to his works which is by far the most helpful aid to the understanding of them known to me, has now produced also a valuable biography of the poet. Not that I think that she has made us know the man so completely as she has made us know the works, but that is hardly her fault. Publicly and privately Browning assured us that he did not wish to be known. If Shakspeare "unlocked his heart with a sonnet key," "the less Shakspeare he," exclaimed Mr. Browning in "Pacchiarotto," evidently with disapproval of such unlocking; though he at any rate does reveal himself in his work. And then there are the surviving friends to be considered. The adequate biography of a man lately living cannot be written by anybody who has good taste, even if he have the necessary information. And this book is in excellent taste, as well as in admirable English. Moreover, it does add to our materials for understanding the man, and is extremely interesting. But the author would not pretend under the circumstances that she has written, or could have written, an ideal biography, one to be placed in the same category as Boswell's Johnson, Hogg's Shelley, Froude's Carlyle, or the autobiographies of Benvenuto Cellini and Rousseau. Browning would in his own great semi-dramatic poetry analyse you a man, or make him analyse himself, down to the very minutest mental or moral wart; but he for his part refused to be so represented: he would remain rather a vast, mysterious source, whence issued these Denner-like photographed introspective personalities.

But assuredly the use of a biography is to make a man known, so that an expurgated one cannot be so lively or lifelike as an unexpurgated. You do not want, of course, a lot of irrelevant gossip about people with big names, around whom your planetoid revolved obeisant. But you do want incidents characteristic of the personality, however minute and trivial, if the person be not so commonplace, and deprived of angles in Mrs. Grundy's social mill, as to be unworthy of any record at all. And if the result of giving these, good and bad, beautiful and ugly, without unfairness and with graphic force, be that you dislike the subject portrayed, at least you get the presentment of a human creature, not of a shadow. The fault probably lies in the reader, who may be a Philistine or a Puritan of narrow type, a valet to whom no hero would be heroic because of the trivialities, or weaknesses, which may yet be even lovable on the nihil humani principle, if you have eyes to see behind them, a human heart to tolerate, and some breadth of human wisdom to interpret. Froude's Reminiscences interested me in Carlyle far more than I was interested before: if they showed me his rugged excrescences, they also showed me his tenderness, his affectionate remorse. Therefore, much as I care for Mrs. Orr's Life, I am not sorry that we have Mr. Sharp's little book too, which gives several good stories and picturesque details. But so does Mrs. Orr, where she has a free hand, and can speak out—where she is dealing with the poet's childhood, for instance. Upon these one seizes with avidity.

Delicious is the anecdote of the poet as a very little fellow doing his best to punish an old maid, Aunt Betsy by name, who, in alluding to a certain so-called "lovers' walk," had laid a contemptuous emphasis, as some old maids are apt to do, upon the word "lovers." The child was too small to know exactly what a "lover" meant, but he took the word to indicate some sort of human occupation or pursuit; and being indignant (out of his universality of human sympathy) that any human function should be thus branded, he determined to show the old lady that there was something worse even than a lover—so he slipped out of bed one night when she and his mother were taking tea, and rushed in, clawing the air, in full uddress, with a paper tail fastened on behind to represent a devil!

This is the version of the story I have heard on good authority, though it is given a little differently by Mrs. Orr. His power of invention was remarkably precocious; and he gave his mother, in the course of the first walk he was considered old enough to take with her, a minute topographical description of his possessions in houses. He was devoted to his mother, and when he went to his first school felt sure he could not survive the parting with her. Over a leaden cistern there, which he imagined might be his sepulchre, he would wave his hand when he passed, chanting, "In memory of the unhappy Browning!" He was then passionately religious, as were his parents, especially his mother, who is said to have been a very saintlike person, though not intellectual. But his energies as a child were turbulent and destructive. In later youth we are told that the young man, who was educated at home and never sent to a public school, became somewhat bumptious and aggressive, feeling his own intellectual superiority, and not mixing much with companions of his own age. For this kind of energetic boy, with fairly good health, the school life would probably have been salutary. And this was, perhaps, the only instance of defective judgment in the training he received; it was in other respects wise and unusually sympathetic. His father was a man of remarkable power, whose own tastes were very similar to those of his more gifted son, to whom he gave wise counsel, much liberty for self-development, and plenty of opportunities for reading, the young man's tastes in that direction being omnivorous. But neither was the education of his bodily powers neglected.

A very curious story is told of the poet as a small child sidling round his bedroom in his nightgown, lest the reflection of him, half-dressed, should be seen in a mirror, which stood there, through the open door from outside—which things are an allegory of his reticence in later life. But this self-consciousness was probably produced in the precocious boy by his Puritan training. He was devoted to animals. His mother used to read Croxall's Fables to him and his sister; but the story in it of a lion who was kicked to death by an ass affected him so painfully that he buried the book between the stuffing and the woodwork of an old dining-room chair, where it lay for lost. And he cried so bitterly over the parrot who died of cold and hunger that a different ending had to be invented for the story. He kept owls, monkeys, hedgehogs, an eagle, and a couple of large snakes; once he brought in a lacerated cat to his mother, who sewed up and healed its wounds. As he grew older, he was permitted by his parents to choose his own walk in life, his decided choice being literature; and circumstances did not oblige him to adopt a more lucrative profession, either outside letters or among those lower branches of them which the public and the publishers are good enough to pay for. On the whole, nothing could be more favourable and prosperous than the external circumstances of this poet's career, and he had inherited a sound physical constitution. Saving for the death of his parents, and that of his wife—if we except also the long delay in the recognition of his genius—he had few of the trials and difficulties to contend with that so often fall to the lot of artists exceptionally gifted.

He was of mixed German, Scotch, and Saxon race; whether there was Creole blood in his veins seems a vexed question. From all this we should have expected what we find, a combination of robustness, moral and intellectual, with the affectionate and sensitive temperament of the poet, and a sturdy, unflinching optimism which refused to be ruffled by ugly, staggering facts, or by the sinister, menacing expression upon that enigmatic countenance of the World-Sphinx. On the whole he was strong within, and well treated by circumstances; so that, though not orthodox, he could keep the essentials of his early faith up to the last. He is rather the poet of human Will than the poet of Destiny.

Mr. Browning married the woman of his choice; and we are left with the impression as of a marriage made in heaven. He and his wife were both poets, and appreciated one another's genius. The man was chivalrous and of a constant nature; the woman was a true woman, before all a wife and a mother, her rich artistic flower growing out of her humanity. No other kind of artistic flower is, indeed, of any permanent value. Browning unfeignedly spoke of her poetic genius as greater than his own. Both adored their gifted child, educating him wisely; and Mrs. Orr tells an anecdote very characteristic of "Aurora Leigh"— how when a trunk was lost containing a smart dress of the child's, and also the MSS. of "Aurora Leigh," she cared a great deal more for the loss of the former. Mr. Browning proposed to her the first day of his introduction to her on the invalid couch. This may have been rash; but he knew her nature from her books, and he said that pity entered largely into the feeling with which he had done it. She at first refused him; but he insisted. One can scarcely wonder at her father's anger when the young poet took the sick girl surreptitiously away from his house, though one may wonder at his implacability afterwards; for, while it was a great responsibility for him to assume, she actually received a new lease of life, as well as much enlargement both of mind and outlook upon the world. To the depths of the poet's feeling for his wife, let "Prospice" testify, and the beautiful "O lyric Love!" To me Mrs. Orr's suggestion that many of the traits in Pompilia—surely the most beautiful character in his gallery of women-portraits—were derived from his recollections of his lost wife, notably the motherliness of Pompilia, is most interesting. And if his Pompilia becomes a little over-intellectual for such a simple girl, may not these recollections have in this respect confused him? Mrs. Orr's book is fully as interesting for the fresh light it throws on the character of this delightful woman and fine poet, as for the information we derive from it about her husband. Her letters make one long for more; though one can fully sympathise with Mr. Browning in his anger at the intrusive person who wanted to make money by printing private letters of hers which got accidentally into his hands; as also in his anger with Fitzgerald. Why, he used to kiss the doorstep of the church where they were married when he passed it! A certain hardness and over-intellectuality, of which his work sometimes gives the impression, was evidently balanced by very deep feeling; and one is grateful to Mrs. Orr for having emphasised that, though indeed it might have been distinctly inferred from his poetry. How could a man devoid of strong feeling have painted Caponsacchi and Pompilia, or written "Colombe's Birthday"? The one point on which husband and wife differed seriously, and which even made a "little rift within the lute," was Spiritualism; and here I am free to avow my conviction that Browning showed less subtlety and delicacy of insight into the obscurer trend of the currents of modern thought than did his wife. "Sludge" is an over-clever piece of writing—prose, not poetry—but it does not express the whole truth; and even so splendid a poem as "Paracelsus" suffers, as I have remarked elsewhere more at large, from the obscuration of this poet's vision in those regions of thought we call "occult." Beautiful and tender is his letter to Miss Haworth after his wife's death. Thenceforward, after a miserable and lonely interval, Miss Sarianna Browning, his sister, became his almost inseparable, most congenial housemate, and his fellow traveller.

We have a glimpse here, but no more, into some of the poet's warm friendships with men, and also into his still warmer friendly relationships with women. He was more expansive and confidential with them. But obviously not much can be told about the latter relationships, if only because there were so many. Mrs. Orr justly deprecates, indeed, a comparison that had been made between the subject of her biography and Shelley or Byron, implying similarity; but the men were not much alike, either in their work or in their life. Browning was more constant in his affections, and he was not a poet of revolt; he was more conventional, with a good deal of respect for the world's opinion. His nature was better balanced, morally stronger; he was not the slave of passion, which perhaps corresponds to the fact that he was rather an objective than a subjective poet. Not that he was often carried quite away from himself, as conscious centre, by the inspiration, by the Divine Madness of which Plato speaks. He earnestly regarded and contemplated others with a view to analyse their motives, interpreting these by his own very introspective, self-analytic nature, and by the aid of a potent catholic imagination. I remember meeting him at a party of ordinary people years ago, and thinking how much more that piercing glance of his could see behind the almost impenetrable armour of vacuity worn by commonplace folk at a "crush," and symbolised appropriately by the ugly regulation uniform of swallow-tail coats or the prettier fashion-plate frocks. He was semi-dramatic rather than dramatic—though, indeed, that is hardly true of some of his shorter pieces, like "My Last Duchess," and the "Soliloquy in the Spanish Cloister."

Yet I think Mrs. Orr seems a little over-anxious to vouch for her hero's excessive respectability. She rather resents Mr. Sharp's assertion that he consorted with tramps and gypsies at one time; and she insists that, except on one occasion when he went with a friend to a Bohemian dinner, during his married life he never dined away from home. There is Aristophanes' Apology, and the apologetic self-sophistication of his Don Juan in "Fifino" to be accounted for; there is "Any Wife to any Husband." All this may be dramatic; an objective writer puts himself into such a mood, and imagines how one might justify himself, to whom it was habitual. Of course, in a merely literary artist, who well arranges all his best wares behind plate-glass in his front shop-window, there is very little beyond; there is not a much greater depth of nature to be sounded; but in Browning, our most Shaksperian poet since Shakspeare, the work gives you the idea of issuing from a full-blooded individuality. And even Praxiteles must have had a model—could hardly, not being pure German, evolve a camel or a Cupid altogether out of his inner consciousness. The Dryasdust absurdly supposes that Shakspeare must have been a cobbler, if he has ever described the cobbler at his trade—allowing nothing for imagination and insight. But you may go too far the other way. Could Shakspeare have painted Falstaff if he had never gone in for a drinking bout with those other good fellows at the Mermaid? Could Goethe have painted Faust and Wilhelm Meister, or Byron Don Juan, unless their lives had been very much what we know from authentic records that they were? and though Browning has not painted such persons quite as objectively, but more from his own Browningite point of view, with an eye on the lesson to be learned; still, he has given us a sufficiently lifelike portrait of them to make it probable that he was not altogether unfamiliar with their prototypes in real life, or congenial passages in his own experience. When Wordsworth said that he could have written Shakspeare "if he had had a mind to," the retort of Charles Lamb was obvious; but Wordsworth, indeed, wanted more than the "mind," he wanted the life also. And as a matter of fact, I suppose that a man, even if he have some odd holes and corners, backyards and dustbins, about his house, is not in the habit of taking his lady friends, dressed in their Sunday best, into all of them. While as for the Many-headed Beast, it certainly would not be encouraged by one like Browning to look about, and open all the cupboards. Remember the little boy sidling round the walls of his bedroom, lest his reflection should be seen in the glass from outside! As has been truly said, the superficial effusiveness of his talk about trivial things covered a profound reserve. Often Browning seemed to me to talk as he wrote, one sentence rather tripping up the other, as it were—with no end of hyphens and parentheses.

Certainly Browning was no Bohemian. In fact, his method, not being that of Shakspeare or Scott, Balzac or Dumas, did not require a viveur so much as a closet metaphysico-psychological analyst, who mixed enough with various men and women to know something of their lives and motives. He was a man of the world, and disliked posing as poet or superior person. In short, he was not, as Mr. Lockhart remarked, "like a damned literary man." But yet he "knew a hawk from a heronshaw." The lines on Shelley show how high was his estimation of genius, and a private letter in this book proves that he resented the long neglect inflicted upon his own. In print, he tells us with dignity that he "stood on his achievement." Indeed, the man of genius who should not know when he has done good work would be somewhat foolish; nor are such extremely humble men very often to be met about in real life. When Browning was with his little boy in Paris he made him touch Béranger, who was passing in the street, that the child might be able to say when he grew up that he had touched a great poet. His heroes and heroines are rather complex-cultivated men and women, than primitive sons and daughters of nature, of the people. And with the former he mixed freely. As to Browning's so-called "message," let the aesthetes who deny that the poet ought to have one settle their controversy with the greater poets of the past, in whom there is always a fundamental brain-work as well as emotion, sensuous perception, and sound. But too nakedly intellectual in his latest work he often was, to be quite poetical.

One would like to hear a little more of the poet's opinions about the elder literature and about his contemporaries; also, whether he was generous to writers of merit struggling, as he himself had struggled, in the cold shadow of neglect; seeing that he blamed Carlyle for not saying publicly concerning himself what he had said privately: high praise from such a man would have done him service. But the public schoolboy who has been much bullied as a junior sometimes enjoys "taking it out" of his juniors when he rises high in the school—though not always. One would like to hear. The name of Fox, at any rate, should ever be honoured by lovers of poetry, for as Mrs. Orr pithily puts it, "many persons have discovered Mr. Browning since he has been known to fame; one only discovered him in his obscurity." Fox reviewed his early poem "Pauline" very appreciatively, and next to Fox in this respect stands John Forster. These remained among his dearest friends. With old Landor Browning and his wife became intimate at Florence, ministering to the veteran's needs; while the words of Landor connecting the younger poet with Chaucer will always endure as among the most memorable eulogiums he received.

One final word about the Browning Society, which Miss Emily Hickey, herself a fine poet, established in conjunction with Dr. Furnivall. Whatever the bilious newspaper anonymuncle may say, we learn from Mrs. Orr—what indeed I remember Mr. Browning telling me—that he warmly and gratefully appreciated the tribute thus paid to his genius, knowing how it had conduced to a largely increased study of his poetry, to wider reputation, respect, and gratitude, and also to that which he could not afford to despise, a very much enhanced sale.

RODEN NOEL.

The Correspondence of William Augustus Miles on the French Revolution, 1789-1817.
Edited by the Rev. Charles Popham Miles. In 2 Vols. (Longmans.)

THESE two volumes of correspondence contain much that is of historical interest. There can hardly be another man now living who can say like the late vicar of Monkwearmouth, their editor, that his father visited America before the Declaration of Independence, held diplomatic posts on the Continent before 1789, numbered Lafayette amongst his friends, conversed with Mirabeau, and sat shoulder to shoulder with Robespierre in the Jacobin club.

William Augustus Miles was born in 1764, and thus was thirty-five years of age when the States General met in 1789. In 1787 he was entrusted by Pitt with a confidential mission to the Prince Bishop of Liège, and during 1788 was residing at Brussels, a witness at the head-quarters of the insurrectionary movements which disturbed Liège and Brabant. His sympathies were entirely with the insurgents, both because he was a sturdy supporter of the principles of representative government, and because he saw an opportunity of strengthening the interest of England in the Low Countries against France. The policy which Miles advocated was, however, far too bold to find favour with his employers at home. In February, 1790, he returned to London the bearer of proposals from the insurgents, that Liège and the Austrian Netherlands should be converted into an independent Republic under the guarantee of Great Britain, Prussia, and Holland. The Low Countries, Miles urged, would then form a formidable barrier between Holland and France, and would themselves be saved from invasion in case of a rupture between France and the Emperor, a contingency, he remarked, which was certain soon to occur. The Duke of Leeds, after listening to his arguments, "observed a profound silence for several minutes," and then remarked that "it would be going great lengths." Miles declared it to be the only measure which could prevent the Low Countries from falling under the protection of France, and the conference terminated. Miles, no doubt, was right, as events proved; but he was before his time. While in 1790 a prolonged possession of Belgium by France already appeared to him a certainty, to Pitt and the Duke of Leeds the mere conquest of Belgium by France was merely a highly improbable contingency.

In August, 1790, Miles was sent on a secret mission to Paris, with the object of inducing the French to annul the Family Compact with Spain, or at least to engage them to remain neutral in case of hostilities arising between England and Spain. He remained in Paris till April, 1791; and though, unfortunately, all his letters addressed to Pitt during this period have disappeared, a large number written to other persons are preserved. The mission on which Miles was sent was one to his mind. He earnestly desired that England and France should stand in friendly relations to one another; he had lauded Pitt's commercial treaty, and was now buoyant with hope that the minister intended to complete his work by the formation of a political alliance between England and France which should hold in check the other European Powers. The march of the Revolution only made Miles more intent on the carrying out of this policy; for while he had the strongest sympathy with the efforts of the French to establish a constitutional form of government, he was fully alive to the ever-increasing danger of mob-rule, and regarded an alliance with England as the best means by which stability could be obtained. The influence exercised by demagogues he ascribed to a pervading fear of foreign interference as early as December, 1790, when he assured Lord Buckingham that even a declaration of neutrality on the part of England would do much to quiet men's fears and tend to the restoration of order. But Miles was doomed to disappointment. Pitt, content with having averted war, had no thought of allying England with revolutionary France, and turned a deaf ear to the assurances of Miles that the leaders of the National Assembly, Mirabeau, Lafayette, Barnave, and others, would, for the sake of an alliance with England, readily undertake to annul the Family Compact between France and Spain.

Miles was never again employed in any diplomatic service by Pitt. He had too decided views of his own, and thought too well of his own opinion, to render him serviceable to a minister who required an agent content with merely securing the object immediately in view. It is likely enough, too, that Pitt considered Miles to be as much at fault in his representation of events in France as in his foreign policy. If so he made a complete mistake. Miles's judgments, alike of individuals and events, given in the heat of the moment, are often singularly correct. From him at least Pitt had ample forewarning of what the outcome of the Revolution would be. Unlike most foreigners, Miles was aware that what was passing in France was no mere temporary movement, and that the gain to that country in material resources alone would be in the end enormous. Unlike most Frenchmen, he foresaw that political liberty would not for the time result from the Revolution, but foretold the reign first of anarchy, then of despotism. Like Mirabeau, Miles early foreboded ill of the fate of the royal family, and saw in Robespierre the man of the future when Robespierre was still held by his own countrymen of slight account. Miles, moreover, reveals in his letters no special liking for any political party, but deals hard blows all round, sparing neither the National Assembly, nor the Court, nor the nobility, nor the Jacobins, nor the mob, but exposing how the conduct of each concurred to produce the general result of anarchy, distrust, and violence. Of no party, not even of the Jacobins, does Miles write more severely than of the nobility and upper clergy. The following is one passage out of many:

"The aristocrats, no less cowardly than stupid, take measures so ill-conceived, combine so poorly and act so ineffectively, that it is impossible they can succeed: pour chaque pas qu'ils s'avancent ils en reculent dix. They have neither talents, virtue, nor courage; nor is there about the person of the hapless monarch an individual who would not desert him if he could thereby acquire the popularity of Mirabeau or de Lafayette. The spirit of low and profligate intrigue, in which parentage, friendship, truth, and honour are sold, bartered, or sacrificed to personal interest or favour, reigns as much as ever; all is as much as ever espionnage et trahison" (p. 251.)

Miles became a member of the Jacobin Club, with the object of lessening the prejudice which was entertained against the English government. In spite of the tumultuous character of its proceedings and the motley assemblage of which it consisted—"a piebald crew of nobles, beggars, thieves, and assassins"—Miles was flattered by the readiness with which he could obtain a hearing, and by the fact that Mirabeau—"the best informed man in France and possessed of a very considerable portion of intellect"—asked his opinion on the subject of the Assignats. These words are the most favourable which Miles in the letters here published bestows on Mirabeau, of whom he knew little, and whose unscrupulousness and immorality excited his disgust and scorn. Though a personal friend of Lafayette, Miles was alive to the weak points in the character of the general, whom he describes as "a man rather of pleasing and conciliatory manners with great personal courage than of vigorous mind and great resources." But Miles's warnings that popularity was fleeting fell on deaf ears.

"M. de Lafayette, with whom I often dine, is in an awkward and, I think, a dangerous situation. The Orleans party vote him to destruction, and will accomplish it should a commotion ensue. The royal party pay court to the Marquis, and his vanity, flattered by attentions, will probably accelerate his fall. This is what he may well fear, mais aveuglé par l'amour propre, il ne voit rien" (December 24, 1790).

Three months later, in March, 1791, Miles prophesied that Santerre would succeed Lafayette, though "a blind security conceals from Lafayette the ruin that will certainly befall him." Meanwhile, Mme. de Lafayette lived in fear.

"Mme. de Lafayette leads a wretched life. She is one of the best wives and best mothers in the world. Her alarm for her husband, who never appears at table until the second course is served, is sometimes so visible that I could not help sympathising with her. She would then recover, and seem shocked at her fears being discovered. Yesterday at dinner, when I was lamenting the horrible excesses of the people, she remarked that I could not go to England without crossing the Channel, that the Channel could not be crossed without the risk of meeting storms, and that, in like manner, the storms attendant on all revolutions would soon subside, and therefore she had no fears. Yet fear alone possessed her. Would to heaven that she had no need" (p. 237).

Another woman Miles also deeply commiserated, the Queen. In the year 1790 he made an offer through Mme. de Tarente to take her safely to England.

"I am sure that Her Majesty is ill-advised, and that her ambition, mortified not humbled, seeks to recover the stupendous height from which she has fallen. She soars at impossibilities. I am sure that she will rue the facility with which she listens to weak and wicked minds, who imagine it is as safe and as easy to climb a precipice as to fall from it. Mark my words, she will fall a victim in the attempt and perish in the midst of tumult and general carnage. . . . Mme. de Tarente executed her mission without delay, and delivered to me at the Duc d'Artemberg's the following answer from the queen:—'Her Majesty is fully sensible of the generosity and magnanimity of your offer; but as she is resolved to share the fate of the King and never to separate herself from him, Her Majesty is under the necessity of declining your offer, while thanking you at the same time for the interest which you take in her safety'" (p. 175).

Miles repeated his offer in March, 1791, when it was again rejected.

The following remarkable passage, written in March, 1791, exhibits Miles at his strongest as a judge of character.

"The man held of the least account in the National Assembly by Mirabeau, by Lafayette, and even by the Lameths and all the Orleans faction, will soon be of the first consideration. He is cool, measured, and resolved. He is in his heart Republican, honestly so, not to pay court to the multitude, but from an opinion that it is the very best, if not the only, form of government which men ought to admit. Upon this principle he acts, and the public voice is decidedly in favour of this system. He is a stern man, rigid in his principles, plain, unaffected in his manners, no foppery in his dress, certainly above corruption, despising wealth, and with nothing of the volatility of a Frenchman in his character. I do not enter into the question of the forms of government; but I say that Robespierre is bona fide a Republican, and that nothing which the king could bestow on him, were His Majesty in a situation to bestow anything, could warp this man from his purpose. In this sense of the word, that is, in his heart meaning well, as to the destruction of the monarchy, he is an honest man. I watch him very closely every night. I read his countenance with eyes steadily fixed on him. He is really a character to be contemplated; he is growing every hour into consequence, and, strange to relate, the whole National Assembly hold him cheap, consider him as insignificant; and, when I mentioned to some of them my suspicions, and said he would be the man of sway in a short time, and govern the million, I was laughed at" (p. 245).

In April 1791 Miles returned to England. He held communication with the agents sent by the French Government to England in the autumn and winter of 1792-3, striving his utmost to prevent the outbreak of hostilities. His notes and letters of the time give additional rather than new evidence upon the causes of the war between the two countries. The editor has prefaced the two volumes by a long and valuable introduction, and has appropriately dedicated them to his grandchildren, the children of Mme. Richard Waddington.

BERTHA M. GARDINER.

The Best Books: a Contribution towards Systematic Bibliography. By W. Swan Sonnenschein. (Sonnenschein.)

THE note of triumph with which Mr. Swan Sonnenschein commences the Preface to this second edition of his Best Books is amply justified. To a publisher who is also an author no appreciation of his dual function could possibly be more gratifying than the rapid sale of their united product. Probably he would value that as a higher attestation of its merits than any number of laudatory notices. But, whatever justifiable glorying he may derive from the speedy disappearance of his first edition, we may venture to prophesy that this new edition will command a still wider popularity, and therewith a yet more rapid exit from the publishers' warehouse; for there can be no question of its immense superiority as a careful and extremely well-edited Bibliography. Not only is the arrangement of the book immensely improved, but its contents have been increased twofold. To all who take an intelligent interest in literature and its progress it ought to be an exhilarating thought that Mr. Swan Sonnenschein's Best Books now comprise some 50,000 works; and if we were permitted to add to these the numbers of those which might conceivably be described as "good" and "better," with their naturally increasing ratios, the sum total would amount to a figure which the imagination recoils from contemplating.

Undoubtedly, Mr. Swan Sonnenschein is right in thus limiting the scope of his Bibliography; and however much the author who fails to find his own productions among his Best Books may demur to the bibliographer's taste or doubt the accuracy of his standard, the public at large will not complain of a book-catalogue which, while being for ordinary purposes sufficiently full, aspires also to be a selection. No one knows better than a publisher—except it be a reviewer—what tons of unspeakable trash are poured forth from publishers' offices during the course of a single year. In restricting himself, therefore, (1) to books that are in print and (2) to books that possess merit, Mr. Swan Sonnenschein has established two limits which, as a matter of prudence and practical utility, he will find it useful to observe in future editions of his work. Like the late Mr. Mudie, the library he catalogues is "select"; and selection implies, as a matter of course, rejection. More than once the proprietors of Mudie's have had to encounter the indignation of aggrieved authors for refusing to be purveyors of the inanities or imperfectly veiled obscenities which they chose to indite; and Mr. Swan Sonnenschein must also be prepared to face the anger of those authors whose works are inferentially classed by him as inferior. Any inconvenience of that kind he may be destined to meet will, however, be effectively neutralised, partly by the undeniable catholicity of his tastes, partly by some judicious "hedging" as to the meaning he awards to the word "best." On the latter point he says:

"My intention has not been to include any very large number of books in each section, but to record only such as are "best," employing that word in its most catholic sense, not necessarily even as the superlative of "good," but rather as that of "useful." . . . The very "best" books I have asterisked, but even here "best" is to be taken cautiously. A book may be "best" in one department, or from one point of view, "best" for one class of reader and not for another, "best" as regards one part of it only, though perhaps of no great value as regards the rest. Other books are, as Dr. Johnson said, "good in vain," inasmuch as the reader will not read to the end, or a second time, on account of their dulness, and in spite of their goodness."

The most important feature in Mr. Swan Sonnenschein's book is its classification, or, as I may put it, its arrangement of book-subjects into genera and species, families and sub-families, divisions and sub-divisions, to the very extreme of literary divisibility. How difficult—I was going to write, how impossible—it is to produce a thoroughly methodical and yet satisfactory arrangement of books by way of subjects and classes every book-lover well knows. The difficulty is not only that the field is immense, and that so many sections admit of so great a variety of principles and objects of classification, but that almost every subject overlaps into the next. Taking, e.g., such large sections as Theology and Philosophy, it is clear that the divisions of which either is susceptible are almost as numerous as the books which have been written of or concerning it. The most perfect arrangement of any important branch of literature would of course be—borrowing the term which Jussieu applied to his classification of plants—the natural order, i.e., the subordination on critical and philosophical principles of every sub-section to the main stock to which it is naturally affiliated. Unfortunately, however, ideal modes of classification, even when they can claim the consensus of competent critics, are not necessarily characterised by extreme simplicity, nor by practical utility. Mr. Swan Sonnenschein, I think wisely, bases his own arrangement on no more recondite principles than common sense and facility of reference; and though, I believe, his arrangement might on some subjects be amended, I feel bound to confess that, on the whole, he is thoroughly successful, and that he evinces a talent for bibliographical classification which is extremely rare. I had marked down one or two sub-sections in order to give my readers some idea both of their ingenious arrangement and exhaustiveness, but I find they would occupy too great space. Among the smaller sub-divisions I may, however, take the following example. Under the main heading, e.g., of Social Economy we come on the sub-division, Temperance and Intemperance. Under this we have the following classification: History, consisting of seven books, three of which are American; Biography, three books, one described and criticised; Miscellaneous, fifteen books; Blue Ribbon Movement, one book; Medical Aspects, three books, one described; In Praise of Ale, three books, one described; Drinking Songs, three books. Apart from the fact that all the books thus enumerated are works of some vogue and merit, the list taken together is surely sufficient to satisfy any ordinary inquirer into the subject.

Such a topical classification as is here given us is not, of course, wholly new. Two volumes of Watt's well-known Bibliography are arranged according to subjects. The last edition of Lowndes has a few indexes and lists partly on the same lines. Allibone's Dictionary, which, by the way, Mr. Swan Sonnenschein rightly describes as "not wholly trustworthy," has indexes of subjects. Among the best Continental Bibliographies, Ebert, in the original, does not possess a subject index, though I believe Gracse's Treſor is supplied with them. The best that I know is the Table Méthodique in the sixth volume of Brunet's Manuel, though the value of this is largely historical. Of course, the omission of a book in a list of "best" books cannot be said to invalidate the fundamental principles of the catalogue. And though I have submitted Mr. Swan Sonnenschein's book to specialists of various kinds, such as those most conversant with Hebrew Literature, Canon Law, the Jesuits, English History, &c., the result has been that few gaps have been discovered, and even these not of primary or crucial importance; yet I have alighted on one omission of a really "Best Book," and that, too, in Mr. Swan Sonnenschein's own field of bibliography. He has not catalogued a bibliography to which I can truly say I have never yet referred in vain, though I do not invoke its aid till the other Bibliographies have failed me. I allude to the Allgemeines Gelehrten Lexicon of Jöcher, which such a notorious bookworm as Sir William Hamilton consulted more frequently than any other Bibliography, and of which Mr. Hill Burton, in the second edition of his Book-Hunter, gives the following emphatic commendation:

"As to bibliographies of the present century aiming at universality, the Allgemeines Gelehrten Lexicon of Jöcher, when accompanied by Adelung's Supplement, which is its better half for scholarship and completeness, casts into shade anything produced either in France or here. It is a guide which few people consult without passing a compliment, either internally or aloud, on the satisfactory result. That it contains an account of every, or nearly every, book is at once contradicted by its bulk; yet it is often remarked that no one appeals to it in vain—a speciality which seems to have arisen from the peculiar capacity of its editors to dive, as it were, into the hearts of those likely to seek their aid."

I have completed the quotation from Mr. Hill Burton because it enables me to add that Mr. Swan Sonnenschein also seems to be gifted with the same "peculiar capacity" of divining the needs of the ordinary reader. I have no doubt he will find room in a future edition for mention of Jöcher, as well as for some other omissions of books that are really "best." Mr. Swan Sonnenschein will hardly claim omniscience, though I do not know any branch of human culture in which its utility would be so great as in bibliography.

JOHN OWEN.

Nero and Actea: a Tragedy. By Eric Mackay. (Heinemann.)

THE author of the Love Letters of a Violinist and A Lover's Litanies is to be congratulated on his new work. To make Nero, whose name has become synonymous with monster, enlist first our interest and finally our sympathy, while he is frankly put before us in all his astounding wickedness, while to the soul of him the Emperor is stripped, till the liar and the coward stand out plain—to have done this, and yet to so work upon our patience that in the end we do not turn indignantly from Actea when she falls weeping on the body of dead Caesar, is to have shown oneself a worthy follower of those Elizabethan poets whose morality was so high that to them none that walk the earth were without the saving touch which shows that men, even the worst among them, are not in a world created by God in the likeness of Satan. A lawyer may speak of criminals and a hypocrite of villains; but the quality of mercy, which is not strained in poets, will ever make them see mad men, not bad men, in the world's great wrong-doers.

Mr. Mackay was brave, it may seem to some, to make Nero the subject of his first tragedy. To most of us one Nero is familiar: the nursery Nero who, years ago, rolled his eyes and flourished a dinner-knife. Through all life afterwards that Nero is unforgettable; and we read with a strange interest whatever historians have to tell of the tyrant, the last of the hereditary Caesars, beautiful, gifted, and mad, who for fourteen years made Rome a scene of shame, then died by his own hand. I have in my memory a statue of him which is to be seen in the Louvre. The face of the Roman tyrant is the face of Napoleon, only less patient and less pitiless. The chin is not Napoleon's: not cruelly square like his, but round, like the round mouth that speaks the sensualist.

The brow is not the brow of Napoleon: not unashamed like that, but troubled, emotional, and very full above the eyes—the brow of an excellent musician. A theme this, indeed, for a poet, and the poem of Nero and Actea will delight many.

The dialogue in it is blank verse throughout. Some relief is afforded in Act I. by two songs, one of which, the one that "least did weary" Poppaea, is charming. There is no prose. Mr. Mackay, whose method is otherwise Elizabethan, is in this matter no follower of the greatest of our dramatists. There are in this play soldiers, citizens, slaves; but they do not add the offset of their prose to the poetry of the emperor and those surrounding him. Given a poem so beautiful as Nero and Actea, it seems ungracious to complain. But in the case of a Roman play which opens, like the too finest Roman plays in our language, in a street, it is with disappointment we find that we are not listening to the talk of commoners, those sullen murmurs swelling to loud anger which preceded the fall of the last of the Caesars no less than they preceded the fall of the first—murmurs, some of them finding expression in words no doubt uncouth enough, but assuredly containing good home-thrusts.

We are given in the first act a picture of Nero as husband and as lover; as husband, courteous to the woman who is betraying him; as lover, ardent but not unkingly. There is humour in the dialogue between Nero and the empress about Actea, the Grecian slave and "new-found masterpiece." In Act II. there is an assignation between Poppaea and Glaucus, after which Glaucus receives with assumed tranquillity the command from Nero to slay the empress. He again meets her; and Nero, who witnesses all unseen, kills his wife, then casts the blame of her death upon the young patrician. Hearts begin to burn very hotly; the clouds which gathered in Act I. grow suddenly dense, and in Act III. the "great conspiracy" is in full swing. I must not further anticipate the reader's pleasure, and will only say that the scene in Act IV., in which Nero permits Actea to be Caesar for an hour, and then bows to the girl-emperor's decrees, is exquisitely conceived, and that the picture which we are given of Nero in the outer shrine of the Temple of Bacchus, for the moment carried away by what is indeed a terror, but a terror of remorse, is truly fine. As regards its dramatic structure, the poem is so admirable and effective that we may reasonably hope to see it soon mounted where Londoners look for the best mounting of what is good.

A word on Mr. Mackay's diction. It is now and again perhaps too plainly modelled on Elizabethan diction, as when to Pyrrhus's remark: "These are sudden news," Lysanias answers: ". . . they'll soon o'ertop themselves." But far more often the note struck in the poem is one which is altogether the poet's own, though it has been thought not quite unlike the note of Keats. So far I have quoted nothing from the play. We wander—if I may borrow some of Mr. Andrew Lang's happy words, and use them for my own purposes—as in a world full of flowers: we cannot gather all, nor observe all. The following lines, from speeches given to Nero, may be cited, not as the best contained in the poem, but because they give some notion of Mr. Mackay's Nero. (The woman alluded to is Actea.)

"She hath the light of summer in her eyes,
And in her throat a nest of singing birds.

* * * * *
A golden-haired, sweet syren, welkin-eyed,
And girt about with glory like the sun."

"The setting sun has burnt up half the sky,
And through the far-off windows of the west
I see strange things."

"Ah me! Ah me! How memory finds us out
When we would shirk its thrall!"

"The world's gone wrong. There's no such thing as peace,
For what we do, when done, will trip us up,
When we least think it."

"Is't, O ye gods! so much to be alive
When we must pay a pang for every smile,
And for the joys we snatch, a world of tears,
And for a moment's gain an annual loss . . ."

ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING.

NEW NOVELS.

Donald Ross of Heimra. By William Black.
In 3 vols. (Sampson Low.)

Footsteps of Fate. By Louis Couperus.
(Heinemann.)

The Crims of Sylvestre Bonnard. By Anatole
France. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

A Leading Lady. By Henry Herman.
(Chatto & Windus.)

Jack Skeffington. By Guy Gravenhil. In
2 vols. (Chapman & Hall.)

Only Clärchen. By Isabel Don. In 2 vols.
(Eden, Remington & Co.)

Violette Mérian. By Augustin Filon. (Paris: Hachette.)

A Romance of the Wire. By M. Betham-
Edwards. (Spencer Blackett.)

MR. WILLIAM BLACK has again served up to us "of his ordinary" in Donald Ross of Heimra; and, indeed, we do not quite know why he should not, for the brew is undoubtedly excellent of its kind, and the public likes it. This time we have a Desdichado heir, all of whose possessions on the mainland have been sold to the Saxon, while he retains only a barren island a little way off shore, whence he sails forth in a yacht, and (a detail which Mr. Black has not made quite credible in the case of such a person as Donald Ross) smuggles brandy on a great scale for amateur and charitable purposes, and for the benefit of the old clansmen of his house. When the reader is informed, at the very outset of the story, of these facts, and of the further fact that the Saxon intruder has deceased and left the property to his young and charming English niece, there is, of course, no more to be said in point of plot. The vicissitudes interspersed between the beginning and the inevitable end present themselves as the author's sole appeal; and Mr. Black has managed this appeal very well. His wicked factor, Mr. Purdie, the "little red dwarf" of his victims, the tenants, is, perhaps, somewhat overdrawn; for a south-country Scotch Writer of anything like his shrewdness would have taken the measure of his new mistress pretty soon and have seen that he could hardly gain, and would almost certainly lose, by trying to indulge his old grudge against Ross. But he is human and probable, unlike the astonishing log-roller or gorilla who was Mr. Black's villain in his last novel. And the other figures—Fred Stanley, the heroine's brother, with his youthful impetuosity and full belief in all the stories told to Ross's discredit; the good-natured sheep-farmer, Watson; the smooth-spoken Free Kirk minister; the Highland Land League delegation, and so forth—are very good fun; while the gillies and fishermen, innkeepers and police, are, of course, all right. Mr. Black's stock-cask (to use the language of his country) of that liquor has the tap set high; and however much he draws off or pours in, "ye'll aye get old whusky." We think, indeed, that he has made a mistake in making Mary Stanley fling herself so persistently and so hard at young Donald's head. The reader, we believe, never likes this, on principles explained long ago by the eminent Adam South at great length, but reducible to the simple fact that it is not at the reader's own head that the flinging takes place.

Mr. Gosse has done well to select a specimen of the new Dutch school as a number of Mr. Heinemann's "International Library." The young Dutchmen are, it seems, "Sensitivists" (no young man of letters on the Continent who respects himself but is something in "ist"); and Sensitivism refines on the brutality of Naturalism by adding a good deal of psychology and a little romance proper. 'Tis well; but we own that we care for results more than for recipes in these matters, and that Footsteps of Fate seems to us a less interesting result than we gather it does to Mr. Gosse. The story is of two young Dutchmen in London, one of whom acts the part of good Samaritan and more to the other, being repaid by a plot on the part of his guest which breaks off his marriage, the said guest fearing expulsion from his comfortable quarters. When the thing is discovered, poetical justice manifests herself in strange and sanguinary ways, which need not be here revealed. The book appears to be well written—Mrs. Bell's translation certainly is—and the guileless generosity of Frank Westhove, the hero, though somewhat improbable, is managed without making him a mere nincompoop. His English love and her father are things of shreds and patches, and the catastrophe is muddled up with some hypnotism and other cut-and-dried devices de circonstance which are very weak. The central point, however, in the book, and that by which it must stand or fall, is, undoubtedly, the villain, Robert van Maeren; and here it is that we fear M. Couperus fails. This Bohemian-Sybarite is not a live man at all; he is only a pastiche, after French models chiefly, drawn with less extravagance, but for that very reason with less force, and bearing all over him traces of that fatal substitution of study of books for study of life, which is the curse of most literature and of not a little life itself nowadays.

A very different book, it is hardly necessary to say, is M. Anatole France's exquisite Crime de Sylvestre Bonnard, which ought to need no introduction to the readers of the ACADEMY. It is very strange that it should not have been translated before. The present version, by "Lafcadio Hearn," is, we suppose, American, and is not impeccable, but will do fairly well. Nor was it, indeed, in the power of any translator to spoil a story the charm of which lies not merely in the writing (though M. France has not six superiors among his compatriots at that), but in the character, the scheme, and the general substance and canvass of the tale.

Mr. Gravenhil's book, like one which we reviewed not long ago by Sir Randal Roberts, is a revival of the good old sporting novel, but this time of the sporting-undergraduate, not the sporting-Bohemian type. It has thus a double appeal, for we not only get the fine old runs, long or short, hard or sticky, successful or fruitless, and the simple and amiable love-making of the ancient world; but we may wander free in sacred chestnut groves of academic legend, and may muse how first we picked up the shining fruit, while other nuts and wine did warm the heart of youth. There is no thing of beauty that answers to Keats's definition like the Oxford chestnut. We disclaim all intention of insulting "the other shop"; but it is as certain as strange that, as one of their own prophets said, the Cambridge chestnut "makes no figure on paper" compared with the Oxford one.

Mr. Gravenhil is not more uncompromisingly sporting and Oxonian than Mr. Herman is uncompromisingly theatrical, as, indeed, the very title of A Leading Lady rightly honestly suggests. The story is roundly carried off, and not long enough to bore as most special or "shop" novels do. Sybil Collier, a pretty débutante, succeeds Miss Northcote, an old stager, as "leading lady" in a theatre where all is going to ruin, is plotted against, but ineffectually, by her rival, and made love to (almost effectually) by the manager. Accident, however, rather than fortitude or real fidelity on her part, keeps her faithful to her lover, a rich young person named Miller, who has helped to run the theatre in return for her engagement. Whence it would appear that it is not wise to encourage the desires of a stage-struck betrothed in this way—a moral which, perhaps, is something musty.

Miss Isabel Don's novel of German and Hungarian life or of English life in Germany and Hungary is a little amateurish, but by no means unpleasant. It would be better without the wicked Count Franz Janacs: your wicked count is so aged a wildfowl as to be gentle and not fearful. But it is, as we have said, a pleasant book on the whole, and a ladylike-word of scoffing to some but not to wise ones.

M. Augustin Filon's Violette Mérian begins in England, and the reader of Amours Anglais may think that the author is going once more to draw on his English experiences. This, however, is not so, and the action of the book passes abroad. It is well written, and we should expect from M. Filon, and the best passages in it are those which touch on literature. The young man who in his poems "cursed women, knowing none except his sister" (she had paid for the publication of the said poems), who "descended into the sombre abysses of his interior psychology," and who "completed his poetic cargo with a few blasphemies," is an old friend, but well touched off in this new book. The book has, moreover, the merit of being very much unlike other books, though whether its merits will or will not be too "quiet" for readers we cannot say.

As we expect to meet M. Filon on English ground, so we expect to meet Miss Bethlam-Edwards on French, and in this case we are not disappointed. It may be that a local critic might pick some holes in her picture of life in the Indre; the wise critic who is not local avoids such hole-picking if he can. And, besides, it is really unnecessary, in the case of A Romance of the Wire (telegraph wire, in which M. Ludovic Lanier, the hero, was terribly lavish), a very agreeable story of its kind. Only we are bound as pedants (for every critic is a pedant) to observe that "forceps" is not a plural word: it is unsafe to assume that everything that ends in "s" is.

GEORGE SAINTSBURY.

SOME SEASONABLE BOOKS.

MR. W. MARTIN CONWAY has issued a second part of his Climbers' Guide to the Pennine Alps (Fisher Unwin), covering the eastern portion, from the Theodul Pass to the Gamser Joch, and thus including such well-known peaks as the Breithorn, the Lyskamm, Monte Rosa, Cima di Jazzi, the Rimpfischhorn, the Alphubel, the Dom, with all the alternative routes and minor passes upon which our author loves to dwell. The book—it may be as well to insist—is not intended for the ordinary tourist, to whose prejudices Mr. Conway will make no concession. His sole object has been to collect, in a condensed and therefore portable shape, the facts which the genuine climber wants to know, reducing the art of guide-book writing to scientific concision. The public demand for such work, like that for scientific etymology, must always be extremely limited; but we are surprised to learn that Mr. Conway has not received sufficient encouragement from the Alpine Club to continue his series. Guides to the Lepontine and Ticino Alps, which have been already prepared by Mr. Coolidge and himself, will remain in MS. "under present conditions," though we are told that an excellent pocket-book to the Mont Blanc region, in French, may be expected in time for the climbing season of 1892. Meanwhile, the committee of the Alpine Club have undertaken to publish a new edition of the late Mr. John Ball's Guide—which will not by any means satisfy Mr. Conway's exacting requirements.

The Stream of Pleasure: being a Month on the Thames. By Joseph and Elizabeth Robins Pennell. Illustrated. (Fisher Unwin.) We are glad to find that the Pennells found their voyage down the Thames more pleasant than their attempted walking-tour in the Highlands. Almost everything is now good in their eyes, except a party of "flanelled record-breakers" at Wallingford, and some boats "marked with monograms repeated on every scull and paddle" near Weybridge. They make no complaint of the river-side inns, and even approve the Sunday crowd in Moulsey Lock, the brightness of which they compare with a Venetian fête. This continuous enjoyment forms the keynote of the book; for otherwise, it must be admitted that the daily incidents recorded, with some superfluity of detail, are of a commonplace order. If every happy pair were to publish "a narrative of a journey on the Thames from Oxford to London," even the British Museum could hardly contain the volumes that might be written. In the present case, the justification is to be sought in the illustrations, which are of a more varied and elaborate character than in former books by the Pennells. Not only do we have the usual process-cuts, which reproduce so admirably the lines of Mr. Pennell's graceful pencil; but there are also plates, to which photography seems to have lent its aid both before and after, and which simulate most successfully the effects of impressionist landscape. We should like, however, to have been told something about the methods adopted.

Cricket. By W. G. Grace (Bristol: Arrow-smith). This is not the first time that the champion cricketer has written about the game. But he has here brought together into one volume everything that he has of interest to say—his own juvenile reminiscences, and notes upon the matches he has played and the cricketers he has known. A friend has added a full measure of those statistics, which to many are the most interesting columns of figures in the world. There are also numerous illustrations, representing both former and contemporary heroes of the cricket-field, one of whom—George Parr—has passed away almost as we write. A not unpleasing egotism pervades the pages, such as may be pardoned, and even welcomed, in the case of one recording historic events quorum ipse pars maxima fuit. Not less agreeable is it to notice the kindly goodwill everywhere expressed towards others; for it is notorious that rivalry in the cricket-field has sometimes led to very different feelings. Altogether, the book will add a fresh leaf—if that be possible—to the wreath worn by the most popular man of our time.

The Naturalist of Cumbræ: being the Life of David Robertson. By the Rev. T. R. R. Stebbing. (Kegan Paul & Co.) No apology was needed, as its author hints, for this short account of a long life happily not finished. Mr. Smiles has made us familiar with the story of Thomas Edward and Robert Dick, and, after his fashion, has made these men famous. David Robertson stands in need of no such biographer, and the plain, uncoloured presentment of his life by Mr. Stebbing is certainly to be preferred to any narrative of the moving kind. If ever there be needed an example of the natural-born gentleman in humble life who, by his own effort, has made himself the cultured and accomplished hero of scientific exploits—of a man in whom singleness of heart has been combined with diligence in business—this shining example may be found in David Robertson. He was born in humble circumstances and reared in privation, so far as education and a "modern standard" of comfort is concerned. His early life was that of many other boys then and now; and without doubt Robertson himself would be the last man to think of it with gloom. He certainly made the best of it. When he entered upon a self-supported medical training he succeeded in it—a man of endless resource, who made light of struggles. After years of scientific training, when (with the choice open to him) he deliberately preferred a business to a professional life, he showed his capacity for the life as a matter of course. He began it with slender resources in the way of capital (fifty-six of the proverbial half-crowns); but in a comparatively short time diligence, open eyes, and a shrewd head enabled him to acquire a sufficient store of wealth for his own needs. He then retired, and has spent many years of happiness in the pursuit of natural history—not as a mere amateur, a recorder of plants and animals for a district; but a naturalist who can speak with Germans in the gate, the kindly and hospitable friend of all who go down to the deep with dredges. His excellent anatomical and scientific training stood him in good stead, and saved him at the outset from the want of thoroughness so commonly shown by the "retired" amateur. In telling the story of this interesting life, Mr. Stebbing suffers from a lack of knowledge of the surroundings of Robertson's early life, and from the power of duly measuring them: it is ignorance rather than want of sympathy to which the baldness of his narrative is due. The account of trifles takes the place of chapters in his subject's development. Those who know David Robertson will, nevertheless, be grateful for this plain and simple account of his life, though it will hardly impress the public with the lessons of it—surely of many times more value than reminiscent twaddle by the proselytes of literature and art.

A Cruise on the Friesland Broads. By the Hon. Reginald Brougham. (Ward & Downey.) There seems to be no doubt that the author of this book and his companion enjoyed their cruise on the Friesland Broads very much; but one may be an accomplished yachtsman without much power of making one's experience interesting by means of words. Travels in foreign parts, or even at home, generally furnish enough material, if properly used, to make a book of pleasant reading; but there are exceptions, and this is one. Indeed, the writer seems to have carefully avoided seeing or doing anything which he could not as well have seen and done at home; and, but for a few Dutch names of localities, he might as well have taken his cruise on the Norfolk Broads or even the Regent's Canal. A typical, an even more than typical, Englishman, he shut himself up in his boat by night as well as day, avoiding as far as possible all contact with the "natives," of whose habits he has nothing hardly to record except the disagreeable tricks of little Dutch boys. If it had not been for the necessity of buying bread and getting through locks, the cruise would have been even more barren of incident. Nor does "literary merit" disguise the blankness of the narrative, which is relieved here and there only by such valuable reflections as "What hogs some people are to sleep!" The book, however, may be of some use to those who wish to take a similar cruise. The true virtue of it lies in the appendix, which contains a variety of useful information as to boats, cooking apparatus, &c., on which subjects the Hon. Reginald Brougham appears to be an authority.

Buckinghamshire Sketches. By E. S. Roscoe. With illustrations by H. R. Bloomer. (Cassells.) The author has evidently taken pleasure in recording his visits to some of those comparatively little-known spots in the county of Bucks which are associated with literary or historical interest—such as Beaconsfield, Hampden, the Chalfonts, Chenies, Bulstrode, &c. If they encourage any readers to follow in his steps, he will meet with his best reward; for there is little fear that any of these quiet, old-world scenes will readily become vulgarised. We write as one who has preceded Mr. Roscoe in nearly all his pilgrimages, and who can therefore appreciate the fidelity of his simple descriptions. Only on one point do we feel disposed to criticise. Surely the tombstones of Penn and others at Jordans are a very modern addition.

The Rights of Fishing, Skooting, and Sailing on the Norfolk Broads. Considered by Walter Rye. (Jarrold.) Mr. Walter Rye, as a Norfolk antiquary, here places some of his black-letter learning, and also of his local experience, at the service of those who have undertaken to defend the rights of the public over the Broads. It is a big question, and more than one hard battle will have to be fought before it is settled; for difficult questions of law are involved, and the circumstances vary in different cases. Mr. Rye has himself collected a mass of evidence with regard to Wroxham Broad, which is at present the most pressing issue. On the general question, he has come to the following conclusion:—

“That all the visiting outsider may do is sail to and fro from village to village, staithe to staithe; but that he may not shoot at all, and can only fish ‘as he go.’ As to the right of mooring, I think all, whether on business or pleasure, may make fast and lay alongside anywhere for one tide.”

We may also mention here that the same publishers have brought out an eighteenth edition, revised and enlarged, of Mr. G. Christopher Davies's Handbook to the Rivers and Broads of Norfolk and Suffolk.

Phillips's Handy-Volume Atlas of London. (George Philip & Son.) This is really what it professes to be—a large-scale street plan of London, subdivided into sections so as to form a convenient volume. The scale is three inches to the mile, just half that of Stanford's Library Map. The number of sections is fifty-five, and the area covered is so extensive that one of them includes no places of more importance than Mottingham and Hither-green. We leave it to the incurious Londoner to find out where these obscure places may be. The map-maker is not infallible; in the district we happen to know best we have noticed several mistakes. The worst of these, and the least defensible, is that the footpath crossing from Kensington to Notting-hill is marked much too wide, and is called “Holland-road,” instead of “Lord Holland's-walk,” leading to the inevitable confusion with the real Holland-road, a little further west. We doubt, also, the name of “Bishop of Bedford's Walk,” attributed to a lane that leads into this footpath. Mr. Loftie, in his Kensington Picturesque and Historical, calls it “The Duchess of Bedford's Walk,” though he does not explain the name. Was there a Bishop of Bedford before the present decade? But we should not like to leave the impression that the work is generally inaccurate. Great pains have evidently been expended upon it. At the beginning is a directory of public institutions, and at the end an index of streets, &c. There are also special maps of Richmond and Epping Forest, and plans of the Zoological and Kew Gardens, of Windsor Park, and of the Thames up to Oxford. Finally, the book is clearly printed and stoutly bound.

In order to commemorate the jubilee of their firm, Messrs. Thomas Cook & Son have had compiled (by Mr. W. Fraser Rae) a volume entitled The Business of Travel, which presents a readable account of the origin and development of their business—from July 1841, when they first engaged an excursion train for the twelve short miles from Leicester to Loughborough, down to the present year, when their facilities for booking extend over nearly two million miles of railway, road, sea, and river. There is also given a sketch of the lives and labours of the founder of the firm, and of his son, who has been sole managing partner since 1878, as well as a detailed description of the manner in which the business is conducted, both in London and in every quarter of the globe. The book is not published for sale, but is distributed free.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DURING the late Canon Liddon's visit to Egypt and Palestine in 1889, he was accompanied by his sister, Mrs. King, who wrote a series of letters descriptive of the tour. These letters are now in the press, and will be published by Messrs. Longmans during the autumn.

MR. GORE's Bampton Lectures for this year will be published shortly by Mr. John Murray, under the title of The Incarnation of the Son of God.

MESSRS. LONGMANS have in the press a new volume of essays, addresses, and reviews, by Prof. Tyndal, to be entitled Fragments of Science.

WE understand that the collection of Mr. Rudyard Kipling's tales which Messrs. Macmillan will shortly publish is to be entitled Life's Handicap: Stories of Mine Own People.

THE New South Wales Government is defraying the cost of republishing Threlkeld's Australian Grammar, with his translation of the Gospel of St. Luke into native Australian. The work, which is of value both to philologists and to students of the lower races of man, will be edited by Dr. John Fraser, of Sydney, who contributes a philological introduction.

THE title of the work which Prof. Duff is preparing for the press is Old Testament Theology; or, the History of Hebrew Religion from the Year 800 B.C. Vol. i., which follows the history down to Josiah, 640 B.C., is now complete, and will appear early in autumn. Vol. ii., already in a forward state of preparation, will cover the period ending with the Exile. The third volume will lead up to Alexander, and the fourth to the beginning of the Christian era. The publishers are Messrs. A. & C. Black.

MR. ARTHUR J. JEWERS has in preparation an important work on the monumental inscriptions and heraldry of Wells Cathedral. Every inscription will be given line for line, with genealogical annotations, extracts from wills, registers, &c. The arms will be correctly described, with plates of most, and additional heraldic evidence given from seals, &c. Thus, the tomb of Bishop Droknesford is identified from a seal among the chapter archives; and the arms of Bishops Harewell, Bubwith, and Stillington are recorded for the first time. The book will be published by subscription through Messrs. Mitchell & Hughes.

MESSRS. J. E. GARRIATT & Co. announce a new facsimile of the first folio of Shakspeare, reproduced by the Dallastype process of photographic engraving from a copy in the British Museum. The size will be imperial octavo, and the paper has been specially selected to suit the appearance of the letterpress. The mode of publication is to be in fifty-seven parts of sixteen pages each, the whole to be issued within two years. Advantages are offered to early subscribers.

A NEW novel by Mr. Somerville Gibney, entitled The Trial of Parson Finch, will shortly be published by Messrs. Ward & Downey. The same publishers also announce, as nearly ready, England and the English in the Eighteenth Century, by Mr. W. Connor Sydney.

MESSRS. T. & T. Clark have arranged to publish the Lectures of the late Prof. Duff, of Edinburgh, on the Early Church. The volume will be edited by his son, the Rev. David Duff.

A THIRD edition, with considerable omissions and additions, of Lapsus Calami, by J. K. S., will be published next week by Messrs. Macmillan and Bowes, of Cambridge.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will issue immediately a fifth edition of Mr. Nye's Popular Story of the Church of England, with illustrations. This edition contains some fresh matter, and all statistics have been brought up to date.

THE long-delayed Chaucer Concordance has at last reached a possibility of being finished. The work of slip-writing has steadily progressed since it was resumed in 1888; and Dr. Ewald Flügel, of Leipzig (who has now completed the heavy work upon his own German-English Dictionary), has kindly undertaken to edit it.

MANY readers of the ACADEMY will be interested to know that it is proposed to establish a prize for English literature at Trinity College, Dublin, in memory of the late Dr. R. F. Littledale. The movement was started by Prof. Harold Littledale, of Baroda (care of Messrs. H. S. King & Co., Cornhill), who has himself given £150; and subscriptions from others are now invited.

MESSRS. T. & A. CONSTABLE, of the University Press, Edinburgh, ask us to state that the firm of Archibald Constable & Co., lately established in London, is that of a relation of their own, to whom they wish all success, but with whom they are not associated in business.

AFTER an interval of about ten months, a second edition of Prof. Alfred Marshall's Principles of Economics has been called for (Macmillans). The author states that the present edition differs from the first only in points of detail and in arrangement:

“The most important alteration is the fusion of the old Books V. and VI., together with some additional matter, into the present Book V. [entitled “The Theory of the Equilibrium of Demand and Supply”], the chief purpose of the change being to throw further light on the position held by the element of time in economics, and to show more clearly how time modifies the reciprocal influences of the earnings of workers and the prices of the goods made by them.”

The other changes are similarly pointed out in a careful preface.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

THE August number of Murray's Magazine will contain an article by Miss Balfour, narrating her experiences on the West Coast of Ireland during the official tours of the Chief Secretary and the Countess of Zetland.

THE next number of The Library will contain some verses by Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, which were sent to the editor, Mr. MacAlister, together with a presentation copy of “Over the Teacups.”

THE forthcoming number of the English Historical Review—now edited by Mr. S. R. Gardiner—will contain the following articles: “The Introduction of Knight Service into England,” by Mr. J. H. Round; “Did Henry VII. Murder the Princes?”—a reply to Mr. Clements Markham—by Mr. James Gairdner; and “Count Lally,” by Mr. Sidney J. Owen, reader in Indian history at Oxford.

A NEW monthly, entitled the Review of the Churches, is announced, of which the first number will appear on October 15. The special editors will be—Anglican, Archdeacon Farrar; Presbyterian, the Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser; Baptist, the Rev. Dr. John Clifford; Congregationalist, the Rev. Dr. Alexander Mac-kennal; Methodist, Mr. Percy Bunting; while the general editor will be the Rev. Dr. H. S. Lunn. The Review will contain, in such brevity as is needful in order to obtain a hearing, a monthly account of what is going on in the leading Churches, both at home and abroad, in the spheres both of thought and of practical activity; and it will not neglect those general movements—political, social, or philosophical—which affect the progress of religion at large. A series of special papers on the future of the principal religions of the world is in preparation.

EARLY in September will be published a new monthly, styled the Welsh Review, edited by Mr. Ernest Bowen-Rowlands. Although it will devote special attention to Welsh matters, it will also deal with other questions of interest, literary, political, scientific, &c.

AN interview with Captain Shaw will appear in No. 408 of Cassell's Saturday Journal, to be published on July 22, together with an illustration showing him in his official room at the headquarters in Southwark.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

MR. H. C. GOODHART, fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge, who took his degree in 1881, has been elected to the chair of humanity at Edinburgh, vacant since the death of Prof. Sellar last October. We understand that Mr. Goodhart is engaged upon an edition of the eighth book of Thucydides for Macmillan's Classical Library.

ARCHBISHOP MACLAGAN and Prof. A. W. Ward, principal of Owens College, have been elected to honorary fellowships at Peterhouse.

THE universities committee of the Privy Council, consisting of the Lord President (Viscount Cranbrook), the Earl of Selborne, Lord Monk Bretton, Lord Basing, and Lord Sandford, gave their decision, on Monday last, on the petition of Kings and University Colleges for the grant of a charter for the establishment of a teaching university for London. The Earl of Selborne said that, with regard to the opposition of the existing University of London, some of the objections made might be treated as disallowed. It had been understood by their lordships that a minimum course of two years' study at the new university would be required. If that was so, their lordships were satisfied, and would say no more upon the point. The objections put forward by the medical faculty were generally disallowed. The word "London" would have to be omitted from the charter, but the University might be called either "the Albert University" or "the Metropolitan University." With regard to the suggestion that ten members of the faculty of medicine should be elected to the council, their lordships were of opinion that the medical schools should fill five places upon that body, or, if it were preferred, that each school should elect one member for the medical board of study. If the Royal Colleges and the medical schools agreed to come in together, however, the number of members on the council might be raised. Their lordships did not approve of the proposed strength of the council, and thought that four of the places might be accorded to the faculty of law. Teachers in any branch of science, their lordships considered, should be admitted as members of the science faculty, and the six places on the council which it was proposed to give to the Royal Colleges should be supplied according to the 29th paragraph of the Royal Commissioners' report. If the medical schools and colleges declined to come in at first, provision ought to be made to allow them to do so in the future. Their lordships thought that a place upon the council might be given to the Apothecaries' Society, but they were not disposed to insist upon that being done. The view of their lordships upon the question of honorary degrees was that no such degrees should be granted in medicine, and that the holding of an honorary degree should be no qualification for election to the council. The dins y degree in medicine should not be granted until the whole of the prescribed conditions had been fulfilled.

THE Oxford Historical Society has just issued to subscribers a volume for 1890-91, entitled Oxford City Documents, Financial and Judicial, 1268-1665, selected and edited by the late Prof. Thorold Rogers. A preface, by the Rev. C. W. Bouse, summarises the contents, and adds a brief sketch of the editor's life. We have here a list of the contributors to the historic poll-tax of 1380-1, which led to Wat Tyler's insurrection. The list is limited to lay persons over fifteen years of age; and thus excludes members of the university, and also monks and friars. The total number is about 2,000, from which Prof. Rogers calculates that the whole population of Oxford, academic and civic, amounted to from about 5,000 to 5,500. Passing over intermediate documents, we have a list of those assessed to the hearth-tax of 1665, from which Prof. Rogers infers that the population had risen, in two centuries, to from about 7,000 to 7,500. The names in this list, we may add, ought to be compared with those recorded for the city of Oxford in the new edition of Boyne's Traile Tokens Issued in the Seventeenth Century. Another curious set of documents are the records of coroners' inquests from 1297 to 1322. Prof. Rogers points out that a considerable number of the earlier culprits are Irish clerks; while it is noteworthy that a large proportion of the scholars murdered by the townspeople in the fray on Saint Scholastica's Day (February 10, 1354) were also Irishmen. One record will interest schoolboys. A certain Johannes de Neushom, "clericus et doctor puerorum," was found drowned in the "Charewelle." He had gone out to get rods for chastising his boys, and, while climbing a willow for that purpose, had overreached himself and fallen into the water. It remains to mention the index, compiled by Mr. George Parker of the Bodleian, which, with all its various headings, extends to no less than 100 pages.

WE may mention here that the handsome Calendar of Ely Episcopal Records, compiled by Mr. E. Gibbons, contains some documents, though, perhaps, not quite so many as might have been expected, relating to the University of Cambridge. There are numerous proceedings on appeal to the Bishop of Ely, as visitor of St. John's, Peterhouse, and Jesus, chiefly relating to disputed elections to fellowships; and an illuminated MS. of the statutes of Trinity, signed by Edward VI. In the transcripts of parish registers from 1599 there are also numerous entries of the burials of members of the university. Thomas Hobson, "caryer," preserved to fame by Milton, was interred in the church of St. Benedict in 1630-1.

DR. MAURICE BLOOMFIELD, hitherto associate-professor, has been raised to the rank of professor of Sanskrit and comparative philology at Johns Hopkins University.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

COR CORDIUM.

WATER, Earth, Fire—each for a little space
Held Shelley dead; each with the other vied,
Marring and wasting, till the fierce embrace
Of all-transforming Fire left purified
For Earth some relics: ashes, and that part
Of all the mortal frame most fit to be Spared for a peaceful tomb—the unchanged heart—
Which was himself, such full surrender he Had to its mastery made. A place of rest,
By Nature's kindest influences blest,
His ashes consecrate; but where is now
The impassioned singer? Lives he? Knows he how Earth echoes yet his song? Or, while we keep
His memory green, does he oblivious sleep?

SIDNEY T. WHITEFORD.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE Theologisch Tijdschrift for July opens with a defence of the unity of the Book of Habakkuk, by Dr. H. Oort, who thinks it not impossible to refer both Ps. lxxxiv. and the ode of Habakkuk to the closing years of the Jewish state. Dr. H. Brandt, author of a very thorough treatise on the Mandaean religion, examines the life and tenets of Priscillianus, Bishop of Avila, who was condemned as a heretic about 385 A.D. Friedrich Paret, a repentant at Tübingen, has lately contributed much to the fair consideration of this subject, and Dr. Brandt to a great extent accepts his conclusions. Another elaborate article, by Dr. W. C. van Manen, is devoted to the Fourth Gospel, the subject-matter of which is still far from having been exhaustively studied. One of the peculiarities of the book is that words which are meant by the speaker in one sense are, quite naturally and with grammatical plausibility, understood in another sense by the hearers; hence much of the fascination and also of the difficulty of this Gospel. Dr. van Manen's essay takes us down to John iv. 31-38. Among the books reviewed we are glad to notice vol. ii. of Studia Biblica, which receives an appreciative, though perhaps too exclusively descriptive, notice by Dr. van Manen. The same reviewer finds fault with Holtzmann for what some historical students will reckon one of his chief merits—viz., that in his popular commentary on the Fourth Gospel he recognises an element of genuine personal recollection. Must we, then, really be induced to choose between the old-fashioned view of the strict historical character of the Gospel and the theory that it is a mere Tendenzschrift, written about the year 140? It would almost seem as if the Dutch liberal critics had made common cause with our own learned conservative theologians.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ASCHENBERG, H. Sir David Lindsay's Leben u. Werke. 1. Sein Leben. Leipzig: Fock. 80 M.
- BAYE, le Baron J. de. Les bronzes émaillés de Mostchina (Russie). Paris: Nilsson. 8 fr.
- BROCKHAUS, H. Die Kunst in den Athos-Klöstern. Leipzig: Brockhaus. 20 M.
- COLLECTION d'éventails anciens des XVII^e et XVIII^e siècles. Paris: Ferrard. 125 fr.
- FORSCHUNGEN, italienische, zur Kunstgeschichte, hrsg. v. A. Schmarsow. Breslau. 8 M. 50 Pf.
- FUMI, L. Il duomo di Orvieto e i suoi restauri. Milan: Hoepli. 40 fr.
- GOLDBECK-LOEWE, A. Zur Geschichte der freien Verse in der deutschen Dichtung. München: Buchholz. 2 M.
- GRABRELIEFS, die attischen. Hrsg. v. A. Conze. 2. Lfg. Berlin: Spemann. 60 M.
- GURLITT, C. Andreas Schlüter. Berlin: Wasmuth. 8 M.
- JENSEN, Ch. Die nordfriesischen Inseln Sylt, Föhr, Amrum u. die Halligen vormals u. jetzt. Hamburg. 12 M.
- LOTT, P. Le Livre de la pitié et de la mort. Paris: Calmann Lévy. 3 fr. 50 c.
- PAUST, A. Kirchen-Möbel d. Mittelalters u. der Neuzeit. 1. Lfg. Frankfurt-a.-M.: Keller. 6 M.
- SCHANZ, M. Quer durch Süd-America. Reise-Skizzen aus dem J. 1890. Hamburg: Mauke. 2 M. 50 Pf.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- SILBERNAGL, J. Der Buddhismus nach seiner Entstehung, Fortbildung u. Verbreitung. München: Stahl. 3 M.
- STOLPE, F. Das Martyrium der thebaischen Legion. Breslau: Müller. 1 M. 60 Pf.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- BELLESHEIM, A. Geschichte der katholischen Kirche in Irland. 3. Bd. von 1693-1890. Mainz: Kirchheim. 17 M. 40 Pf.
- BESWILWALD, E. et R. CAGNAT. Timagd: une cité africaine sous l'empire romain. 1^{re} livr. Paris: Leroux. 10 fr.
- CORRESPONDANCE du Chancelier Axel Oxenstierna. Paris: Nilsson. 45 fr.
- HAMEL, ERNEST. Histoire de la seconde République, Février 1848-Décembre 1851. Paris: Jouvet. 10 fr.
- HISTOIRE du Gouvernement du Général Légitime, président de la république d'Haïti. Paris: Leroux. 7 fr. 50 c.
- KNORRFLER, A. Die Kelchbewegung in Bayern unter Herzog Albrecht V. Ein Beitrag zur Reformationsgeschichte d. 16. Jahrh. München: Stahl. 6 M.
- ORTNER, F. Konkursrechtliche Grundbegriffe. 1. Bd. Die Gläubiger. Stuttgart: Enke. 15 M.
- SCHMIDT, R. Staatsanwalt u. Privatkläger. Zur Gesetzgebungskritik. Leipzig: Duncker & Humblot. 3 M. 20 Pf.

- SCHREIBER, W. Geschichte Bayerns in Verbindung m. der deutschen Geschichte. 2. Bd. Vom Österreich. Erbfolgekrieg bis auf die Gegenwart. Freiburg-i.-B.: Herder. 8 M.
- STERN, F. Die akademische Gerichtsbarkeit in Deutschland. Leipzig: Hirschfeld. 3 M. 60 Pf.
- STRANDBERG, AUG. Les Relations de la France avec la Suède. Paris: Ollendorf. 6 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- HILFBRAND, F. Die neuen Theorien der kategorischen Schlüsse. Eine log. Untersuchung. Wien: Holder. 2 M. 40 Pf.
- KENT, J. Die Lehre Hegels vom Wesen der Erfahrung u. ihre Bedeutung für das Erkennen. Christiania: Dybwad. 1 M. 65 Pf.
- OPPEL, A. Vergleichung d. Entwicklungsgrades der Organe zu verschiedenen Entwicklungszeiten bei Wirbelthieren. Jena: Fischer. 7 M.
- STOCKL, A. Geschichte der christlichen Philosophie zur Zeit der Kirchenväter. Mainz: Kirchheim. 6 M. 40 Pf.
- TROSCHEL, F. H. Das Gebiss der Schmecken, zur Begründg. e. natürl. Classification untersucht. 2. Bd. 7. Lfg. Berlin: Nicolai. 20 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- BARTHÉLEMY-SAINT-HILAIRE, J. Les Problèmes d'Aristote. Paris: Hachette. 20 fr.
- D'ARBOIS DE JUBAINVILLE, H. Les Noms gaulois chez César et Hirtius de Bello Gallico. Ire Série. Les composés dont -rix est le dernier terme. Paris: Bouillon. 4 fr.
- HANDSCHRIFTEN-VERZEICHNISSE, die der k. Bibliothek zu Berlin. 9. Bd. Verzeichniss der arabischen Handschriften v. W. Ahlwardt. 3. Bd. Berlin: Asher. 28 M.
- KLOETZER, R. F. J. Die griechische Erziehung in Homers Ilias u. Odyssee. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 25 Pf.
- KUHLMANN, H. Die Konzessivsätze im Nibelungenliede u. in der Gudrun m. Vergleichung der übrigen mittelhochdeutschen Volksepen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A FEW MORE WORDS ON "THE COURT OF LOVE."

Cambridge: July 11, 1891.

I think it a matter for regret that, in vol. v. of his valuable work on English Writers, Prof. Henry Morley has not seen his way to admit, what everyone else must admit who has studied the matter, that the "Court of Love" is no more Chaucer's than it is Sackville's. I say Sackville's because that would be nearer the mark.

It is astonishing that the argument from rhymes has not been apprehended by him. He speaks as if there were only one or two rhymes in this poem unlike Chaucer's. It is quite the other way. The number of rhymes in this poem which vary utterly from Chaucer's practice is at least seventy. This estimate is considerably under the mark, and can be safely made now that the Chaucer Society has published the "Rhyme-Index to the Minor Poems." The idea that Chaucer managed to put seventy or ninety false rhymes into one poem is supremely ridiculous. Some of them are terrible, such as affencioun, began, 921; opinioun, begunne, 1063; wys-e, thry-es, 536; eke, like, 561; and so on. Rhymes such as eke, like, betray a pronunciation far later than Chaucer's time; we find such in Hawes. So, again, when we find contrarie rhymed with fantasye, gye, 1251, we see at once that the author said contrarje; but Chaucer said contraire or contrarie. I am ashamed to urge this argument further.

I am, in particular, much surprised by Prof. Morley's argument (vol. v., p. 126) that "a skilful copyist of later times would have no difficulty in making the lines run without a final e." This is a sad begging of the question. The fact is, of course, that he would have had a great difficulty in conceiving the notion that the lines needed filling up, except in occasional instances. It is notorious that the old printed editions of Chaucer attempted nothing of the kind. As a rule, they did not care a button about the matter. In the black-letter edition of 1550 I find the essential word in dropped in the sixth line of the Canterbury Tales; for dropped in l. 14, that in l. 18, go instead of wenden in l. 21, and so on. The scansion of these lines is ruined; but what did our ancestors care for that? Read Dryden's ideas on the scansion of Chaucer's lines.

Moreover, if words, according to this theory, were put in to fill up, they would be unessential, and could easily be detected and struck out again. I find few or none of this character. Take l. 21: "That langage rude my mater not deface." Chaucer makes langag-e trisyllabic, rud-e dissyllabic, and matr-e trisyllabic. How is such a line to be reduced to his standard?

In a note at p. 127 is this unlucky sentence:

"Prof. Skeat suggests that the Galfrid in l. 11 is Geoffrey Chaucer, so invoked by a later poet, who, one might think, would be as little likely to call him Galfrid as we should now be to call Shakspeare Gulicmus."

The answer is that Chaucer is here denoted by Galfrid, because Galfrid and Geoffrey were convertible forms. It is a simple question of fact. Lydgate's evidence is unimpeachable, and here are two of the references:

"Noble Galfride, chefe Poete of Brytayne."
(Siege of Troye, bk. ii., ch. xv.; ed. 1557, fol. K2, col. 1).

The same man is called "My mayster Chaucer" a few lines above."

"My mayster Galfride, as for chiefe poete."
(Id., bk. iii., ch. 25; fol. R2, back, col. 2.)

He was so called, in fact, because it was his name.

Still more amazing is the statement that, in spite of non-Chaucerian grammar and rhymes, we must still believe in this dull and stupid poem "on the evidence of its contents." The "contents," to my mind, afford clear evidence in the other direction. The poem constantly refers to Chaucer's works, and imitates them as it can. Its author has not "the craft of Galfrid," l. 11, and says he is "not cunning"; and this I allow. It refers to Alcectis and the Daisy, l. 104; Anelida, l. 235; the Death of Pity, l. 701; Troilus, l. 872; the Legend of Cleopatra, 873; and it winds up with a poor parody of the Parliament of Fowles. If Chaucer wrote it, when did he write it? It must have been later than 1385, by the allusions to the Legend; and by that time he really knew better.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

MR. ISAAC TAYLOR ON SICILIAN HISTORY.

Somerset, Wells: July 6, 1891.

When I wrote my letter of June 15, I had no idea that my History of Sicily would have been honoured with a third notice by Mr. Isaac Taylor on June 27. If I had looked for such a thing, I should have waited. As it is, that notice and Mr. Taylor's letter, published on July 4, constrain me to say something more.

In my former letter, among smaller points, I noticed three special things in which Mr. Taylor, in trying to correct me, had fallen into amazing blunders.

First, the well-known history of Hannibal, son of Giskon, the destroyer of Himera at a time when there was no tyrant in Sicily, was changed by Mr. Taylor into a statement that Hannibal was "welcomed to Sicily by the Greeks as their deliverer from the most odious of Syracusan tyrants." For this astonishing statement I asked Mr. Taylor for chapter and verse, giving him the chance of having studied Phoenician authorities of which neither I nor Diodoros knew anything. Mr. Taylor's nearest approach to chapter and verse is to say that "in referring to the second battle of Himera, memory played me a trick, and I introduced an allusion to a third battle of Himera, fought at another of the various places of the name." This last puzzled me, as there is only one known town of Himera, unless Mr. Taylor has made something out of the words of Stephen of Byzantium: Ἱμέρα· πόλις Σικελίας· ἔστι καὶ Λιβύης. After some thought, I saw that Mr. Taylor's memory must have wandered from Hannibal's destruction of the town of Himera in B.C. 408 to the battle between Agathoklès and Hamilkar by the southern river Himeras—on the other side of Sicily from the town of Himera—in B.C. 311. It is rather a dangerous memory which plays such a trick as this. It is safer to look in one's Diodoros, as I have just done yet again.

If Mr. Taylor will only wait for things till he gets to their date, he will find that the gradual change from such a Punic leader as the Hannibal of 408 B.C. to such a Punic leader as the Hamilkar of 311 B.C. is one of the most remarkable things in the story.

Secondly, Mr. Taylor, in his first notice, said "Mr. Freeman notes that he has come across a river Gela in Caria." As this was meant to prove a good deal, I answered that I had said no such thing, and quoted at length the passage of Stephen of Byzantium, which contains all that we know about the matter. There, instead of Mr. Taylor's imaginary river Gela, was a town called Sougela. All that Mr. Taylor can say is that I "attack him at great length for a careless phrase about the Carian name of Gela." In correcting others, above all things, it is better to avoid "careless phrases," and to copy from the book. Moreover there is no "Carian name of Gela." There is a Karian word which Stephen writes γέλαρ, and which Curtius seemingly thinks may have had a hand in the naming of Gela.

Mr. Taylor complains that I "have left unanswered his arguments as to the race and language" of the Sikels. It is perhaps more profitable to deal with Mr. Taylor's statements of fact than with his arguments, and I do not think that the ACADEMY would give me room for another note as long as that on "Sikans and Sikels" at the end of my first volume. To come again to facts, Mr. Taylor says that I "surrender the question by calling the [Sikel] language Opican instead of Latin." I do nothing of the kind; I nowhere call it Opican. I only quote Stephen. Mr. Rhys, if no one else, has taught me to mind my p's and q's, and to distinguish Latin and Opican. Neither Stephen nor Greek writers much earlier and better than Stephen had gone through that discipline.

Thirdly, Mr. Taylor, master of numismatics, ended his first article with the strange statement that "the legends on the early coins of Segesta are in the Phoenician character." I, "amateur" in numismatics, ventured, on the authority of other masters, to answer that there are no coins of Segesta with Phoenician legends. On this point Mr. Taylor does not confess either to a trick of memory or to a careless phrase.

After this, it is a small matter that Mr. Taylor should allow that it would have been better if he had said that the first battle of Himera gave the Greeks the "supremacy," rather than the "dominion of Sicily." Of course it gave them neither the one nor the other. The Phoenician and Elymian places, and a great part of the Sikans and Sikels, remained independent of any Greek authority. In truth, the three cases that I have quoted are quite enough to teach us what any historic statement made by Mr. Taylor is worth. These wonderful mis-statements, it must be remembered, are not casual slips; they are all deliberately made by Mr. Taylor in his self-assumed office of correcting and reproving another. What I have said is perhaps enough; but Mr. Taylor's way of looking at things is such a curious study that I cannot help speaking of a few more things in his third notice and in his letter. I will stick to facts, and not touch matters of taste or opinion. But, as I said at the beginning, I cannot undertake to answer everything. From such a store as Mr. Taylor offers it is enough to pick a few chief gems.

There is something very amusing in the way in which Mr. Taylor seems unable to throw himself into the position of anybody else, and the way in which he assumes that everybody needs Mr. Taylor as his teacher on every point. In vol. i. p. 251 I made the harmless remark that one whose work lay more among printed books than among carved stones was "startled" at turning from the printed text of Pindar to the inscription on Hieron's helmet. Mr. Taylor seems to infer from this that I had never seen or heard of uncial letters before, and kindly explains that Hieron was not likely to use "minuscules." Yet I had referred to several uncial inscriptions before I came to this of Hieron. And though Mr. Taylor implies that I am "helpless in face of a Greek inscription," he does not charge me with having misread or misapplied a single inscription. Only he despises one who is "startled." And it almost seems that he despises one who, speaking on a subject which he knows that many people understand better than himself, speaks a little modestly. But as to "startled," is it possible that a master of epigraphy may sometimes be startled at "minuscules"? Did Mr. Taylor, in referring to the text of Stephen, where the type of the "minuscules" in the most accessible edition is certainly not very clear, read the puzzling letters Σουίγελαι πόλις into Γ'λα ποταμός? If so, one may let him off on one count.

It is more serious when he twice charges me with having neglected certain Phoenician inscriptions which he holds to be of great importance. This charge is partly untrue, partly off the point. I have noticed one of these inscriptions at vol. i., p. 280. But I ought not to have noticed it, because it does not belong to the time dealt with in my two volumes. Those of the others which are of importance I shall notice when their time comes. Mr. Taylor again is in such a hurry for things. He wants me to talk of an inscription from Lilybaion long before Lilybaion was founded. He wants me to talk of another Phoenician inscription at Eryx before the time when Eryx definitely passed under Phoenician dominion. So he wants me to call Akragas or Agrigentum Girgenti ages before any Saracen had cut the name short. I think it better, as other scholars have done, to use each name in its proper turn. Mr. Taylor shall have everything in reason that he can want, if he will only bide a while. But I cannot promise him any pictures, not even of the inscription which proves only that a certain man worshipped Baal, or of the other inscription in which several alephs seem to run playfully about among a few other letters. In this last a master of epigraphy may find some deep meaning; an amateur finds it too hard. But I must still think that maps of the Athenian siege of Syracuse and of the dominion of Dionysios will be of more use in illustrating my next volumes than facsimiles even of the Greek inscription from Halacsa and Tauromenion.

The man in the inscription, whom I will not venture to transliterate, was a worshipper of Baal. It is not said that he was a worshipper of Moloch. Let us hope that he did not pass through the fire. Mr. Taylor twice tilts at me for having done the Phoenicians wrong in the matter of Moloch. The last form that the charge takes, in the letter, is a singular one. I "systematically represent Moloch as the name of the Phoenician deity." I had always thought that there were more than one Phoenician deity; I have even spoken in the plural of "Baahim and Ashtaroth." Will the master of Semitic lore here explain to the amateur, as he has explained so many things, whether this was wrong? But all that I have really done in the matter is to point out in more than one place, notably in vol. i. p. 305, that the feature of Phoenician worship which most struck the Hebrews in one age, and the Greeks in another, was the burning of human victims to the deity whom the Hebrews called Moloch and the Greeks Kronos. Mr. Taylor also calls on me to remember that human sacrifice has been practised by Aryans as well as by Semites. I had remembered it without Mr. Taylor's help in vol. i. p. 367.

About the bow of Hēraklēs, Mr. Taylor and I are both quite wrong. Mr. Taylor says, "The attribution to Heracles of the lion's skin, the club, and the bow originated in the East, rather than in Sicily, as Mr. Freeman suggests." He refers to vol. ii., p. 152; he does not refer to the Appendix, p. 508. I nowhere suggest that the attribution was made in Sicily; I do, on p. 151, suggest that it was made "under barbarian teaching," a statement which, in my language, is really the same as Mr. Taylor's. What Mr. Taylor mistakes (as so often) for my "suggestion" is the statement of Athēnaios, which I have quoted (in minuscules) at p. 508, that the attribution was made by Stēsichoros, but not necessarily in Sicily. But Athēnaios is, in some sort, wrong; so therefore am I; only Mr. Taylor is much more wrong in what he says about Peisandros. Peisandros, according to Mr. Taylor, "gives him, doubtless from ancient monuments, the lion's skin, the club, and the bow." Mure (ii. 464) says, much more truly, "of his bow, for expertness in which he was celebrated by Homer, Alcides was deprived by Pisander altogether." The case is this. In the Iliad (v. 393), Hēraklēs has the bow; in the Odyssey (viii. 225; xi. 616-619), he has bow and sword; in the Hesiodic Shield (60, 133-138, et seq.) he has the arms of a Homeric warrior and the bow too; he had also the bow on the chest of Kypselos (Paus. v. 17. 11). It was Peisandros (Strabo xv. 1) who, in opposition to ancient monuments (τὰ δ' ἀρχαία ἔδωκα οἱχ ὄντων διασκευάσται) gave Hēraklēs the club and lion's skin, and (Paus. viii. 22. 4) took away the bow. Stēsichoros, according to Athēnaios, kept club and skin, but restored the bow. So much for Mr. Taylor's attempts to correct me or anybody else. What Athēnaios says is literally right; what I say is not literally wrong. But I ought to have said something about the Homeric and Hesiodic use. Anybody therefore that chooses has a right to crow over me, except only Mr. Taylor.

Mr. Taylor says that I have misunderstood Mr. Head—on Holm he does not venture—about the use of Sikel weights and measures by the Sikeliotis. As usual, I have not misunderstood Mr. Head, but Mr. Taylor has misunderstood me. Because I did not feel called on to enlarge on Aiginetan and Euboic standards (see vol. i. p. 509), Mr. Taylor thinks I have never heard of them, and again kindly explains the whole matter. Only, as usual, he brings in a mistake or two of his own. He says that the Naxians first used X for Ξ, and changed the letters when they changed from the Aiginetan to the Euboic or Attic standard. In fact (see Head, Historia Numorum, 99, 139, 140), they kept the X a good while after they changed the standard. But all these are matters in which I take very little interest, and they had no great bearing on my subject; I therefore did not enlarge on them. But the adoption of the uncia, libra, and the rest had everything to do with my subject, and on that I did enlarge. Mr. Taylor, while finding fault with me for not talking about certain other things, does not say one word, good or bad, about this most important point, on which I really did talk.

My way of writing Greek names, or rather, not my way, but the usual way of German scholars, is a point fairly open to controversy. Some approve; some disapprove; Mr. Taylor is the first to misunderstand. What I mean by writing "Greek fashion" is that I represent each Greek letter as nearly as another alphabet will allow. I write Thērōn as representing Θήρων in a way which to write Thero or Terone does not represent it. If I write Thērōn and Hērōn, anyone who knows Greek can turn the words back into Θήρων and Ἡήρων. This cannot be so certainly done with Thero and Hiero, Terone and Gerone. If I wished to do what Mr. Taylor seems to fancy that I am trying to do, I must write the Greek word Θήρων itself and nothing else. Mr. Taylor then goes on, very kindly, to teach me how, "on my principles," I ought to write Phoenician and Persian names. "On my principles" I ought to write them as I do. For the few that I have occasion to use come under the same head as Philip, Athens, and Corinth. They have English forms. If I should ever dive deeper into Phoenician or Persian matters than my present work called for, I shall consult Phoenician and Persian scholars.

Mr. Taylor thinks that I should be the better for a "sound study of orthography and some knowledge of the history of the alphabet." Of the latter Mr. Taylor at least ought to be master. As such, he blames me for writing "Sikels," and says that, if I mean to "write Latin fashion," I ought to write "Sicels." I grant that "Sikel" is not written Latin-fashion: I took it from Grote as the received name. But "Sicel" is no better Latin than "Sikel." It should be "Sicul," if anything. Has Mr. Taylor really never seen the form "Siculi"? And the master of the alphabet goes on to say that "k was not a Latin letter." I expect that, notwithstanding Mr. Taylor, I shall go on to the Greek Kalends believing that there were such people as Kaeso Fabius and Kaeso Quinctius and that the earliest Latin form of Carthago was KARTAGO.

Most of the numbered points in Mr. Taylor's letters I have dealt with, so far as there is anything in them to deal with. "Ethnic hatreds" sounds grand; if "ethnic" means "national," and not "pagan," one may find a specimen in Mr. Taylor's picture of the "unspeakable Greeks"—a phrase seemingly translated from the "Graeci non dicendi" of the old Southern Lombards. I expressed no "contempt for the ologies." To say that I leave them to Mr. Taylor is surely not contemptuous. And the only two that I spoke of at all I spoke of with the deepest respect.

Lastly, Mr. Taylor, at the end of the third notice, gives me some doubtless good advice, if I could only follow it, as to "literary graces." Only somehow I changed between the first notice and the third. When Mr. Taylor began to write about me, my "style was clear and forcible." When he left off, I lacked "the supreme merit of lucidity." "Lucidity" was Mr. Matthew Arnold's pet word; an American admirer of his improved it into "luminosity," which sounds finer still. But when Mr. Taylor counsels me to cease to be myself and to become somebody else, whether Mr. Taylor himself or any other, I can only say that the laws of nature forbid the change, and that in this case I do not repine against the laws of nature. EDWARD A. FREEMAN.

P.S.—As I had no proof of my former letter, a few misprints crept in; but I think any reader could correct them. Only the change of "arguing" into "crying" in the second paragraph was a little funny.

A LOST BOOK BY MARAT.

Royal College of Surgeons of England: July 14, 1891.

In the ACADEMY of September 23, 1882, Mr. Morse Stephens described the only known copy of a medical tract written by Jean Paul Marat during the time he was in practice in Church-street, Soho. The tract was published in 1776; in the previous year, however, Marat had published another tract, of which neither Mr. Morse Stephens nor any other writer on Marat has ever been able to find a copy. It may therefore interest readers of the ACADEMY to know that at last the earlier pamphlet, An Essay on Gleets, has come to light, and is now in the possession of Dr. Payne.

These two pamphlets are so rare that it has been decided, with the kind permission of the present owners, to bring out a reprint of them in one volume by subscription. The volume will be issued by Messrs. Percival & Co. early in the autumn of this year.

JAS. B. BAILEY.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

TUESDAY, July 21, 4 p.m. Ladies Sanitary Association: "Progressive Sanitation," III., by Dr. W. B. Richardson.
SATURDAY, July 25, 3.45 p.m. Botanic: General Fortnightly Meeting.

SCIENCE.

TWO CLASSICAL TEXTS.

The Histories of Tacitus. With Introduction, Notes, and an Index. By W. A. Spooner. (Macmillans.) Oxford may look with no small gratification upon the work bestowed by her sons on Tacitus. Mr. Spooner's edition of the Histories is worthy to stand beside Mr. Furneaux's edition of the Annals I.-VI. It has clearly been a labour of love; and the result, if not beyond all criticism, is a solid and accurate piece of work. There is a specially full Index, and the editor has followed Tacitus' own precedent in giving us a survey of the condition of the Roman provinces. The text followed is that of Orelli (partly amended by Meiser), and the editor makes but little allusion to the readings of Hahn, though these often (as, e.g., in III., 72) point a way out of a difficulty. Nor does he seem to know the useful small edition of Wolff, or the very ingenious commentary of W. H. Simeon. That of Heraeus he has employed often, though not to the exclusion of his own work. Mr. Spooner will, we are sure, value criticism more than mere praise, and so we go on at once to some of the points which have struck us in the perusal of his book. What proof is there that (p. 39) the "Batavian auxiliaries refused to accompany" the fourteenth legion back to Britain? Tacitus does not say so in II. 66. The statement of Galba's names on pp. 64, 103, is inconsistent with that on p. 234. Again, is it certain that the classarii, whom Galba cut down, were unarmed (p. 67)? and did the people really shudder at the bloody spectacle? Tacitus' contemporaries were not given to shuddering at any spectacle, and Plutarch contradicts Tacitus by giving the men swords. In II. 54 (where jam goes with adulantes) why should L. Vitellius have "laid himself out to gain" the flatteries of the senate? They were gained already; and offerebat se surely means only that Lucius came forward to accept them in the absence of his brother the emperor. In II. 77, inter nos non idem prosperarum adversarumque rerum ordo erit, Mr. Spooner translates, "our relations will not be the same in prosperity and adversity." But we understand that Mucianus meant rather to say that he and Vespasianus will not divide good or bad luck (which ever they get) in the same way; for danger and toil they will share equally, while of honours Mucianus will receive only what Vespasianus likes to grant. In III. 61, ac reliquum perfidiae certamen, ac seems to us more than "and." It marks a climax (as probably in I. 27, II. 64); "and so all that was left was —." On III. 71, we have the note "Destruc is just as we say 'to the right';" what then is its construction?

The word Romano in III. 60, requires some elucidation; does it belong to sanguine or to populo? The editor has perhaps missed a point in III. 63, at paucis ultro libertum suum Vitellius jubet. The note is "to secure not only his being disbelieved, but his punishment as well." But did not Tacitus mean to express surprise that any emperor was found actually to punish his own freedman? However, it is no doubt impossible for anyone to see all Tacitus' points. Indeed Tacitus did not see, or did not care to make, all the points of his own stories. He probably did not stop to ask what the navata militum seditio (II. 51) was about; at all events he has not told us. He seldom makes his account of military movements precise enough to be useful (and this is a matter on which Mr. Spooner does not give the reader any great aid). He sometimes omits the gist of a story; III. 69, speaking of the movements of Sabinus' party, he leaves out the important fact that they took up arms; luckily we recover it from c. 78. He runs things confusedly together; III. 74 mixes up Domitianus' three means of escape, and II. 91 (Sed — adfectavit) fuses two popular measures of Vitellius into one incoherent sentence. The fact is that Tacitus is always a rhetorician; a rhetorician with a passion, if you like, for a certain sort of morality, which saves his rhetoric from utter hollowness; but thinking first of effects of language, not of perfect distinctness and lucid explanation. His wonderful manner was not entirely of his creation, any more than his Latin was. The common original whom he and Plutarch used must, from similarity of phrases, have had something of a like taste or even of a like ability; and new or firsthand evidence too was acceptable to Tacitus, as the Letters of Pliny show us. But, whatever he got, he worked it up and improved it in his own way, into a series of unequalled word-pictures, but not into a clear history, telling fully its own story. And here we come to our greatest disagreement with Mr. Spooner. We cannot admit that Tacitus' "work shows throughout unmistakable signs of a careful and trustworthy investigator." It bears signs of a careful polisher, and not much more. His carelessness on antiquarian matters was, we thought, notorious, and distrust of his authority about more recent facts grows on us with reading. We do not suspect of intentional dishonesty one incorruptam fidem professus; but we see in him a determination that his writing shall tell, even at the cost of probability and consistency. Piso's speech (I. 30) contains a matter which Piso could not possibly know, but which, omitted, would have left the speech poorer by one telling antithesis. Tacitus was too, very probably, a genuine pessimist; but at all events he knew well that no point sticks like a cynical phrase: Facilius de odio creditur. Nor, with all his taste and genius, did he always remember manum de tabula tollere. The speech of Mucianus (II. 76-7) is over-elaborate for its occasion. It is likely that Tacitus would be pleased to see an edition which should take his work to pieces, exhibit its refinements and ingenuities, and show how good (from his point of view) it is. Minute investigation has been bestowed on his Latin, but the use which he made of his Latin has never, so far as we know, been sufficiently analysed. Mr. Spooner has chosen to bestow his labour on other matters. But what he has done he has done well.

Plato Gorgias. Edited on the Basis of Deutsche-Cron's Edition by G. Lodge. (Boston, U.S.A.: Ginn; London: Arnold.) It is curious that a study like rhetoric, so singularly barren of positive rules and results, should have so great a fascination for acute minds. If it really held out a promise of power to the possessor, well and good. But the student must soon discover that an art of rhetoric can do very little for him. Like the art of conversation, its precepts are chiefly negative: Don't be confused; don't do this, because it is an irritating trick; don't put matters that way for fear of treading on people's toes. All this sort of advice is good and valuable so far as it goes; but it goes such a very little way, and there is a dearth of direct advice as to what you should do. Rhetoric is a warning against blunders, rather than a secret of excellence. Yet it had a wonderful career of old, and we find Gorgias and Polos still brought before us to-day as figures of interest. Interesting they certainly are, if only from the banter of Plato and from the way in which he has shown us all round their doctrine, revealed its seamy side, and indicated its points of dangerous connexion with other theories. Mr. Lodge, in admitting his debt to the fourth edition of Deutsche-Cron, claims at the same time for himself some originality of treatment. The commentary, he says,

"will be found to differ materially from the German, especially in grammatical matters. The editor has not thought it advisable to deviate from the line of literary interpretation adopted by the German editor; but the exact study, which has been bestowed of later years in the United States upon the subject of Greek syntax, has rendered it possible to make this part of the book, to a certain extent, American."

The volume begins with a clear-cut introduction upon the historical beginnings of rhetoric, and upon the life and activity of Gorgias, in which the results of the work of Blass and Volkmann are excellently summarised. It is, however, hardly sufficient to suggest that rhetoric concerns itself with "practical skill in the employment of language" or "the means through which speech might attain its greatest power." Which employment of language? and what kind of speech? Is it speech employed in teaching or in arguing? Certainly not. Then, as it is not all employments of speech, we want a differentia given to tell us which it is. Next comes an analysis of the Dialogus, which is naturally much the same as one may find in Bonitz or in the small edition of A. Th. Christ. The strength of Mr. Lodge's own work lies, therefore, in his notes, which are careful, scholarly, and clear. If they have a fault, it is that they are addressed to two very different strata of students—to those who are advanced enough to care whether ὄν or ὄντι be the proper form, and to those who are backward enough to need telling that with ἐν ποθίον they must supply ἐπὶ. Information meant for the former seems sometimes to have excluded what would have been useful for the latter—e.g., a note on the full force of ἄλλω in 482 V, and a hint to distinguish δὲ ἑχέως in 501 A. from ἀνεχέως.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MM. J.-B. BAILLIÈRE ET FILS, of Paris, have added to their "Bibliothèque Scientifique Contemporaine" a volume of essays, by Prof. T. H. Huxley—not Th. H., as both on title-page and at end of preface—entitled Les Sciences Naturelles et l'Éducation. As the title implies, this is a collection of essays, &c., published in different quarters, dealing generally with the place that science ought to occupy in education. Three of them come from the volume of Critiques and Addresses (1873); one, at least, from American Addresses (1877); and others from Science and Culture (1882). But it is interesting to note that the first place has been given to two magazine articles, in which Prof. Huxley discusses the respective claims of the two French philosophers, Descartes and Comte. Since these two articles were written, he says in his Preface,

"la réflexion n'a pas modifié ma conviction, que si Auguste Comte a exercé une influence négative ou même facheuse sur les sciences physiques, René Descartes est le père véritable de la pensée moderne."

We may add that translations of three other works by Prof. Huxley appear in the same series.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE July number of the Classical Review (David Nutt) again devotes a good deal of space to the newly discovered treatise on the Athenian Constitution. F. G. K. himself notices several foreign articles on the subject, remarking that

"by a curious inversion of traditional tendencies, the sceptical view, which refuses to attribute the work to Aristotle, has found most favour with the English scholars who have as yet expressed themselves in print, while the leading scholars of the Continent have declared themselves in favour of Aristotelian authorship."

He further states that the British Museum is now issuing a new edition of the facsimile, the first issue having been insufficient to meet the demand. Several of the plates have been re-photographed, in the hopes of obtaining more satisfactory results, and in some cases with success. Moreover, the fragments on plates 19 and 20 are now arranged, as nearly as may be, in their true order. Mr. Herbert Richards and Mr. W. Wyse continue their critical comments upon particular passages; while the former also contributes a rejoinder to a paper by Prof. Gomperz, in the Proceedings of the Vienna Academy, which was itself a reply to English criticism on the un-Aristotelian character of the style and language. Among the other articles, we may specially mention some Adversaria Orthographica, by Mr. A. E. Housman, which are exceedingly ingenious, if not convincing; an elaborate theory of the origin of the Latin gerund and gerundive, by Mr. R. Seymour Conway; and two sets of Greek elegiacs, translated and original, by Prof. Lewis Campbell. The next number of the Classical Review will not be issued until October.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

THE BRITISH SCHOOL AT ATHENS.—(Annual Meeting, Friday, July 3.)

LORD JUSTICE BOWEN in the chair.—Mr. G. A. Macmillan, hon. secretary, read the annual report, which, after referring to the excavation of the theatre at Megalopolis, gave the names of the students admitted or re-admitted in the School in the course of the session, and stated that Miss Eugenie Sellers, who was well known in London as a lecturer on archaeology, had been admitted as the first lady student. Messrs. Schultz and Bamsley, who had returned to England in December, had continued during the past session their valuable work on Byzantine architecture. They might possibly return to Greece in the autumn. The report concluded by referring to the finances of the School, and recommending a large increase in the number of annual subscribers, as there was no adequate endowment. The chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said: We may venture, I think, this afternoon to indulge in the belief that the fortunes of the British School at Athens are steadily, although slowly, progressing. I recollect that when, some few years ago, that distinguished representative of English scholarship, Prof. Jebb, first brought before the world the plan of such an institution, he indicated two sources from which its friends might reasonably expect support. One was the kindness of our universities. It cannot be unnatural to hope that they will extend confidence and sympathy to this work. The colleges of the United States have done much for their American institution; and the universities of Great Britain and Ireland will, I am sure, sooner or later feel themselves directly concerned in the welfare of the English Athenian School. Till a somewhat late period it was on the side of archaeology and local investigation that Greek scholarship among us was weakest. And it seems to be generally conceded that the teaching of our universities and public schools still requires much strengthening in this direction. To the educational bodies of the future it will seem an essential qualification for a Greek professor or lecturer that he should have studied the language, literature, history, and art of Greece by the light of modern archaeology. The best context by which to read a national literature is that furnished by the skies under which it flourished and the soil from which it sprang. To the absence of accurate acquaintance with this natural context may be attributed something of the narrowness of the grooves in which Greek scholarship amongst us seemed fated, some little time ago, to run. But the borders of English scholarship have been broadening. The Hellenic Society and the British School at Athens are two welcome products of the new movement. And the spade is revolutionising the classical curriculum as completely as, thirty or forty years ago, under Todleben, it revolutionized the science of war. Out of the funds of our English universities one can readily understand that it is difficult to ask for much aid. But though the hands of the University authorities at Oxford and Cambridge are somewhat tied, the individual colleges and their governing bodies have ample power of encouraging and assisting the British School at Athens. Among the academical events of the last year there is one which deserves special mention this afternoon, as affording an instalment of generous sympathy from the side of one of our universities which we may hail as an auspicious omen. In order to enable Mr. Ernest Gardner to continue his services to the cause of archaeology and of classical study as director of the Athens School in the chair first filled by Mr. Penrose, Caius College has re-elected Mr. Gardner to a fellowship for a renewed term of three years. Is it too much to trust that other colleges at Oxford and Cambridge will come to the rescue also by treating work done or to be done at Athens for the British School as worthy of special encouragement and privileges? Among those present to-day there must be several who have the means of securing that this point of view shall be seriously considered and weighed by the common rooms of Oxford and of Cambridge. But there is another source from which succour might reasonably be expected—namely, the generous sympathy and assistance of some of those lovers of learning and of art of whom in England there are so many. Possibly those who are always ready to further a good cause will accept the assurance of English scholars, such as some of those I see around me, that the British School at Athens is an object well deserving of their attention and their goodwill. France, Germany, and America are even ahead of us in what they have done. Their schools at Athens started in front of yours and rest on a more solid pecuniary foundation; yet it is this year a pleasure to be able confidently to say that the English work at Athens has begun to make itself felt, and is likely to continue to do so. The completion of the excavations at Megalopolis, in particular, furnishes us with a matter for just congratulation. If fortune is propitious, we may regard these explorations as the first of a series of happy enterprises over which your director will, I hope, be called upon to preside. To all whose personal tastes lead them in the direction of similar adventures the British School at Athens affords an invaluable basis of operations. To have the assistance, upon the spot, of the wisest advice, of the best local experience, and the best books is an advantage not to be despised. I hoped to see this afternoon Sir Charles Newton among us, with whom all such enterprises as ours are so intimately connected. I trust that his absence is not due to any failure in his restoration to health and strength. I am sure his name will never be forgotten by the friends of such an undertaking as this. I will not detain you by further observations, but will conclude what I have to say by at once moving the adoption of the report.—Lord Lingen seconded the adoption of the report, and observed that a new and living interest would be given to the old classical studies by more intimate acquaintance with the birthplaces of the noble literatures of Greece and Rome. He hoped that as a British School had been established at Athens, other Schools would be set up at the great centres of antiquity in the way in which the French had established a school of painting at Rome.—The report was unanimously adopted.—Mr. Ernest Gardner then read the report of his work during the last year, and expressed his gratitude to Mr. Penrose for so kindly taking his place at Athens during his absence last year at Cambridge, and to his college for re-electing him to a fellowship. He then gave an account of the lectures and the work of excavation which had been going on. They had been able to continue the work at the theatre at Megalopolis, and the decision of the committee to continue the excavations had produced very satisfactory results. After giving a detailed account of the work accomplished, Mr. Gardner expressed the belief that there still remained valuable discoveries to be made; and he was glad to say that any misunderstanding which might have existed between Dr. Dörpfeld and himself and colleagues had been removed, and that they were now all working together in harmony. As to the difference of opinion on matters of detail between Dr. Dörpfeld and the British School, he would ask for a suspension of judgment until a later date.—Mr. Penrose then gave a short account of his work at Athens, which was mainly devoted to the site of Megalopolis.—Prof. Lewis Campbell, in moving the election of officers of the School, said that he had visited Athens this spring, and was glad to bear testimony, not only to the good work done by the School to its own students, but also to the kindness which Mr. Gardner and the members of the School extended to all visitors who had any interest in classical studies. He had also realised the admirable work which was being done at Megalopolis. For himself, he could not dig, but for such a cause he should not be ashamed to beg.—Dr. Perry, in seconding the motion, expressed regret that this country should be so far behind continental countries in the maintenance of such work as was now being carried on by the British School.—Prof. Jebb, in moving a vote of thanks to Lord Justice Bowen, said that, notwithstanding the duties of his high office, they felt sure that Lord Justice Bowen would accede to their request that he should preside on that occasion if he could possibly do so. The invitation was, in fact, most readily and gracefully accepted. Sir C. Bowen had worthily continued the tradition of which this country was justly proud—of the union of high professional eminence with distinction in the pursuits of literature. The Lord Justice had recently, by his translation, added fresh charms to the old Roman poet; and if they would turn to Conington's edition of Virgil they would find a brilliant passage cited from the Arnold Prize Essay on "The Oracles at Delphi," which came from the pen of their chairman.—Sir George Bowen seconded the vote to his distinguished namesake, and said that when he was a scholar of Trinity, in the generation before the Lord Justice was a scholar of Balliol, the well-known tutor familiarly known as Tommy Short used to call him Βοην ἀγαθός. He was sure they might with truth say their chairman was Βοην ἀγαθός.—Lord Justice Bowen, in acknowledging the compliment, said that he must take all the kind things which had been said of him with a grain of Attic salt.

FINE ART.

THE EDINBURGH HERALDIC EXHIBITION.

THOUGH various extremely rich exhibitions illustrative of Heraldry in its antiquarian and artistic aspects have been held on the continent—notably the Berlin Exhibition of 1882 and the Ghent Exhibition of 1889—that now open in Edinburgh may claim to be the first general heraldic exhibition held in Britain; for the collection brought together by the Society of Antiquaries in 1862 concerned itself exclusively with documents and manuscripts.

The exhibition now open in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery has been organised by an Edinburgh committee, under the chairmanship of the Lyon King of Arms, aided by an influential London committee, greatly in view of the visit of the Royal Archaeological Institute, next month, to the city. It may be remembered that, on the occasion of the last meetings of the Institute in Edinburgh, in 1856, an especially interesting archaeological loan museum was brought together, the catalogue of which still forms a standard work of reference on the subject with which it deals; and the present collection will also doubtless add materially to the attractions of the city for its antiquarian visitors. The nobility and gentry of Scotland have contributed liberally to the display; many interesting exhibits are the property of English and Irish collectors; and from abroad there come a few items, among which may be named, as especially interesting to Scottish students, the letters patent by Philip IV. of Spain, conferring the order of the Golden Fleece upon Archibald, seventh earl of Argyll. It seems doubtful, however, whether this nobleman was ever installed a knight of the order, as in later lists of its members his name is wanting. It has been suggested that he may have been excluded as a Protestant; but there is every reason to believe that he joined the Church of Rome at the instigation of Anne Cornwall, his second countess.

The collection of Scottish armorials is particularly complete and interesting, ranging from the famous MS. of Lord Lyon, Sir David Lindsay of the Mount, completed in 1542, and approved by the Lords of Privy Council in 1630. The series includes various armorials hitherto unknown to heraldic students, notably one of Queen Mary's time, lent by Mr. and Mrs. Hamilton Ogilvy of Briel, remarkable for the curiously varied metals and tinctures employed in the mantlings of its shields, and for the divergence in its series of full-length effigies of Scottish monarchs and their queens from the commonly accepted type, which is visible in such works as the Workman MSS. of the Lyon Office and of the Advocates' Library, and in the Scottish armorial of the Lambeth Library, all of which are now exhibited. Many other interesting MSS., illuminated with heraldic decorations, are also shown, some fine examples being contributed by the Advocates' Library and from the Laing Collection in the Edinburgh University Library; while Lord Bute sends his thirteenth-century Murthly Book of Hours, including miniatures of the previous century, in one of which—the "Watching at the Sepulchre"—the shields of the Roman guards display heraldic charges, probably the first appearance of definitely heraldic bearings in Scottish art.

Scottish patents of arms are far rarer than English documents of the like nature; and the earliest that have been secured for the exhibition are the grants of arms to Sir James Balfour of Pittendrich, so well known for his connexion with the murder of Darnley and other tragic deeds of Queen Mary's days, and to John Maxwell, Lord Herries, the devoted adherent of the same queen—the former dated 1566, the latter in the next year. These are followed by various seventeenth-century grants and confirmations, most of them by the Lyon King, Sir Charles Areskine of Cambus, including the confirmation of the arms of Sir James Dalrymple, afterwards Viscount Stair, and author of the Institutes. The English grants open with one of the very earliest and most beautiful of known examples, the grant to the Tallow Chandlers' Company of London, dated 1454, supplemented by their grant of supporters, issued in 1602; and a particularly fine series of eight grants, ranging from the sixteenth to the beginning of the eighteenth century, is lent by Mr. F. A. Crisp.

Two important Scottish family-trees figure prominently in the exhibition—the very elaborate Douglas tree, lent by Lord Home, and the "Glenorchy" tree of the Campbells, a signed work by Jamesone of Aberdeen, lent by the Marquess of Breadalbane.

A typical and representative collection of casts of Scottish seals has been selected by Dr. Dickson, of the Register House, and a similar series of English seals is lent by the Society of Antiquaries, London. Among original impressions may be named those of the exquisite thirteenth century seals of the Count of Gueldre and his wife, the widow of a son of Alexander III. of Scotland; and the original protest of the Bohemian nobles against the burning of Huss and Jerome of Prague, 1415, with nearly a hundred seals appended, lent by the Edinburgh university; while the metal matrices include the gold seal of Joan Beaufort, queen of James I. of Scotland, the bronze seal of William, Lord of Douglas, son of "the good Sir James," and that of William, Bishop of Kildare, 1432.

The few surviving examples of early Scottish heraldic glass are well represented in the exhibition, in some cases by the actual examples, but more commonly by coloured drawings, among which may be specified admirable full-sized copies, by Mr. W. Graham Boss, of the heraldic windows in the Magdalene Chapel, Edinburgh, almost a unique example of pre-Reformation glass in Scotland. The shields that appear in the Trinity College altar-piece, now in Holyrood—probably the work of Hugo Vander Goes, who designed the heraldic decorations for the wedding of Charles of Burgundy and Margaret of York at Bruges in 1468, and among the most decorative examples of heraldic art in Scotland—are also represented in particularly faithful and spirited full-sized copies in oils. The exterior heraldic sculptures of old Scottish mansions and castles are recorded in an extensive series of drawings by Mr. T. Ross, Mr. R. Brydall, and others. Mr. T. Bonnar sends a series of water-colours of interior panel decorations of a similar nature; and some fine wood-carvings of arms are contributed by the University of Aberdeen, Sir Noel Paton, and Mr. A. Heiton. The Lord Chamberlain exhibits a series of the jewels and decorations of the various English orders. South Kensington has lent delicate examples of mediæval heraldic embroidery; and from the Museum of Science and Art come several noble pieces of Hispano-Moresque ware with arms, and also an interesting series of rubbings from brasses, mainly English, while similar transcripts of the few heraldic brasses that still exist in Scotland are lent by local contributors.

The smaller of the rooms devoted to the exhibition contains a series of coloured reproductions from the armorials of Zürich, the armorial de Gelre, the Grunenberg armorial of Constance, and the equestrian armorial in the Arsenal Library in Paris; a series of about a hundred engraved portraits of heralds from the collection of Mr. Vicars, of Dublin, a liberal contributor to the exhibition; a curious collection of heraldic playing cards, of various European nationalities, lent by Mr. G. Clulow; and several interesting cases of heraldic bindings, lent by Lord Stair, the Lord Justice General, Sir John Stirling Maxwell, Sir William Fettes Douglas, and others. J. M. GRAY.

THE SEASON'S WORK OF THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

I.

THE TOMBS OF BENI HASAN.

The following is Mr. Newberry's summary of the work done under his superintendence at Beni Hasan, and of the results obtained:

"Copies of all the inscriptions in the twelve inscribed tombs have been made. The wall-paintings in the tombs numbered 2, 14, 15, 17, 21, and 23 have been traced in outline; and facsimile drawings in colour have been executed by our special artist, Mr. M. W. Blackden, of some of the most interesting scenes, hieroglyphs, musical instruments, implements, &c. A large number of unpublished and hitherto unknown inscriptions have been brought to light. Among these are several of particular historical interest. One records that a certain Khnumhotep was installed as prince of Menat-Khufu by Amenemhat I.; this prince was undoubtedly the maternal grandfather of the celebrated Khnumhotep, the son of Nehera, whose magnificent tomb is the chief feature of interest at Beni Hasan. Another inscription gives the name and remarkable titles of the elder Khnumhotep's wife and the name of his mother. Several other inscriptions relating to the same powerful family have also been discovered; so that we can now trace its history through no less than five generations, from the time of Amenemhat I., through the reigns of Userseten I. and Amenemhat II., to the sixth year of the reign of Userseten II. The group of Semites in the tomb of Khnumhotep II. finds a parallel in that of his grandfather of the same name. The scene here represents seven persons being led by an Egyptian officer. Three of the seven figures are warriors with yellow skin, blue eyes (now turned to green), and thick and matted red hair, in which are stuck five or six ostrich feathers. They are clothed with red garments fringed at the bottom; in the right hand they carry ostrich feathers; in the left a curved club. The remaining four figures of the group represent women. They also are fair-skinned and blue-eyed, and have light brown or red hair. Two of them carry children in a basket slung over their shoulders, and two carry a red coloured monkey on their backs. These peculiarities point to their being Libyans. A facsimile of the group has been made by Mr. Blackden.

"I may add that I have found evidence which proves that the majority of the tombs in the Southern group (namely, the tombs of Baq', Kheti, Remushenta, Baqta I. and Baqta II.) date from the XIth and not the end of the XIIth Dynasty, as has been before generally supposed."

The harvest of small unpublished inscriptions is a very abundant one, and several corrections of the first importance have been made in the great inscriptions that have been already published many times. From every point of view Mr. Newberry is to be warmly congratulated on the results of his first venture in the field of exploration. His determination of the age of the Southern group at length makes it possible to trace the development of tomb architecture during the Middle Kingdom, from the Heracleopolite tombs at Siut down to those of the XIIIth Dynasty at El Kab.

Mr. Fraser, who has been engaged in clearing and planning the tombs, has not yet arrived in England. He has obtained a large quantity of stone chisels, found scattered among the debris formed by the original excavation of the tombs.

Mr. Newberry is now preparing a complete publication of the scenes and texts accompanied by a full explanation. This letter will include transcriptions into Roman characters and translations. The examination of the Southern group will be completed next season.

F. LL. GRIFFITH.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE annual meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute will take place at Edinburgh in the week between Tuesday, August 11, and Tuesday, August 18. Earl Percy is the president of the Institution; but the president of the meeting will be Sir Herbert Maxwell, and the members of the council of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland will act as a local committee. Among the vice-presidents are the Hon. Hew H. Dalrymple, Archbishop Eyre, Gen. Sir Murdoch Smith, Dr. Cameron Lees, and Mr. J. Balfour Paul, Lyon King of Arms. Mr. John Evans, president of the Society of Antiquaries, will preside over the antiquarian section; the Bishop of Carlisle over the architectural section; and Dr. T. Hodgkin over the historical section. The sectional evening meetings, at which papers will be read and discussion invited, are to be held in the rooms of the National Portrait Gallery. Among the places to be visited during the week are the Royal Palace of Holyrood, the Castle of Edinburgh, Stirling Castle, Dunblane Cathedral, Linlithgow Palace, St. Andrews, Dunfermline, Rosslyn Chapel and Castle, Borthwick Tower, Crichton, and Hawthornden; a day will be devoted to the caves of Fife, and another to the Roman wall, near Glasgow.

On Wednesday the Mayor of Nottingham formally opened the collection of antiquities which were discovered by Lord Savile in the course of his excavation of the temple of Diana at Nemi, and which have now been presented by him to the public museum in Nottingham Castle. Probably such a representative collection, from a single site, does not exist elsewhere in England, apart from the British Museum. One of its special features is the large number of votive offerings, many of them of a very crude character, but some highly artistic. There are also numerous sculptured fragments, personal ornaments, domestic and sacrificial utensils, inscriptions, and a long series of coins, from the æs rude upwards. An excellent Catalogue has been compiled by Mr. G. Harry Wallis, curator of the museum, to which Lord Savile has himself prefixed an introduction, giving an account of his excavations and of the archaeological importance of the results. With reference to a certain archaic inscription with the name "Diana," we would suggest that "Greek" (on p. 9, l. 9) is a misprint for "Latin" (see p. 45).

The weekly review, L'Art dans les Deux Mondes, which was founded last November as the organ of the Impressionist school, has somewhat suddenly ceased to appear. The freshness of its articles, and the excellence of some of its illustrations, have apparently failed to keep it alive in the face of the fierce competition that exists in Paris.

The municipal council at Paris has authorised the erection of a statue to Balzac in the Place du Palais Royal.

THE STAGE.

"HUSBANDS AND WIVES."

NOTWITHSTANDING the disadvantage of a second act—of a middle act—not so strong, dramatically speaking, as it ought to be, the play of "Husbands and Wives," by Mr. F. C. Philips and Mr. Percy Fendall, at the Comedy Theatre, is, frankly, a success; which is perhaps the more remarkable since, in saying that it has a not quite adequate second act, we really have not mentioned the only disadvantage under which it labours. And having made the charge, we must, in some sense, prove it. Well, then, "Husbands and Wives" is one of those farcical comedies which are denied the fascination of the d' propos. It is no large movement of the moment—no very widespread fad—that is satirised in its scenes. What is satirised is the attitude of mind of the wholly unattractive and the unconvincing, of those who need not be seriously considered, of visionary prudes and emasculate philanthropists—it is their attitude of mind on the marriage question, on what is narrowly called "morality," on the relations of men and women in fine, which is the subject of the two hours' traffic of the stage at the Comedy Theatre. This attitude of mind exists, but it is not important. There will, of course, always be some people who will be willing to hold that the wisdom of the world is somehow concentrated upon angular and self-assertive women—women whose noisy inexperience suffers them to dictate where they may, but can never permit them to charm. But to the end of time, fortunately, the number of people will be very limited who are prepared to believe in the plenary inspiration of the ungainly. The sagacity of the excessively ill-informed—of those who, for the most part, only skirt life—will not long or much impose upon the world. Hence "Husbands and Wives"—with its association of silly women bent upon asserting their sex's power of government and the inferiority of men—has, in truth, no great subject. Nevertheless, it manages, thanks to the humour of its writers and the vivacity of its actors, to entertain greatly. A career at the worst only a little less prosperous than that of "Jane," at the same play-house, is in store for it.

Yes, it is acted happily and briskly, with a certain English directness and obviousness—not at all with the subtlety, with the delicate, the just-perceived intention, which distinguishes a French performance of a piece of this sort. Compare Miss Lottie Venne with Mme. Chaumont, for instance. The art of Mme. Chaumont is by no means infinite; the quickly reached limits of her physique forbid it to be so; but it has a variety which Miss Venne's is without—Miss Venne whom we admire for her cheerfulness and good humour, for the pleasant acidulation which she puts into all her words. She plays to her audience in what is called the "English" fashion; but, gracious goodness! does not Mme. Chaumont do so too! Miss Venne, at all events, holds the stage. She plays with authority, and people are merrier when she is before the footlights. The lady, we ought to add, is not herself a representative of the austere association of womankind which the piece satirises. She is a youthful widow—a very temporary widow—sunny and tolerant. Mr. George Giddens and Mr. W. F. Hawtreys—especially perhaps the former, who has the better part—give a great deal of character, and all the naturalness of which farcical comedy is capable, to the roles of two gentlemen who, in time past, have been a little hen-pecked—nay, are hen-pecked still in the first act of the piece, but who, with more or less courage, prepare to assert themselves, and do effectually assert themselves as the piece proceeds. The comedy of both these gentlemen is kept within bounds—as much the unctuous comedy of Mr. Giddens as the drier comedy of Mr. Hawtreys. The men are all good: even the players of the smallest parts—the waiters, for instance, never so subdued of manner as when a high old time is in prospect for their betters; never so solemn and so meditative as when they lay upon the supper-table the just opened bottles of a festive amber drink. From their faces, they might be engaged, at the moment, with the Pensées of Pascal. But the only remaining actor who needs to be specially mentioned is Mr. Charles Brookfield, whose comedy as Sir George Muddle—a metropolitan police magistrate of most humane temperament, richly endowed with the capacity to appreciate attractive witnesses—is altogether excellent. On Miss Venne we have pronounced already. No small part of the success of the piece belongs to her, and something of the success is due too to the well-devised severity of Miss Vane Featherston—who, like Miss Ada Murray, exemplifies a rigidité de mœurs which almost passes belief—and to Miss Kenward and Miss Ethel Matthews, each, in her own way, engaging and helpful to a piece which will run into next year—next year, unquestionably, so merry and acceptable is it and its interpretation, whatever be its faults.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

MUSIC.

MUSIC OF THE WEEK.

ON Tuesday Verdi's "Aida" was produced at Covent Garden with Mme. Nordica in the title rôle; and she gave a good, though not ideal, rendering of her part. Mile. Guercia (Amneris) has a fine voice, and considerable dramatic power. Signor Ravelli was an earnest Radamès, and M. Devoyod an excellent Amonasro. The mise en scène was good, but the trumpets on the stage in the triumphal entry were much out of tune. Signor Bevignani was the conductor. Wednesday evening was again devoted to the Italian composer. After one or two unavoidable postponements, Mr. Augustus Harris was at last able to produce "Otello." The performance was a brilliant one. Mme. Albani was in excellent voice, and, as is her wont, threw herself thoroughly into her part (Desdemona). M. J. de Reszke, as Otello, sang exceedingly well, but his impersonation of the Moor lacked the fierce earnestness displayed by Signor Tamagno two years ago at the Lyceum Theatre. M. Maurel was again the Iago, and again proved the most striking personage of the drama. "Iago," indeed, would be a more suitable name for the opera. We wrote at length about the work in 1889. It is full of interest, and undeniably a wonderful achievement for the veteran composer who wrote his first opera more than half a century ago. There are fine dramatic moments in it, effective contrasts, and striking orchestration. The work is conceived in a Wagnerian spirit, although the character of the music is purely Verdian. It was a pity that neither M. Maurel nor M. J. de Reszke was able to resist the encore. As great artists, they might have followed the composer in his serious attempt to give a music-drama rather than an Italian opera; for in the former encores are insufferable. The chorus sang exceedingly well. Signor Mancinelli conducted with much ability.

Miss Liza Lehmann gave a vocal recital last Friday week at Princes' Hall, when the programme was one of great interest and variety. On this artist's singing there is no need to dwell; she not only sings with charm and refinement, but shows much discretion in the choice of her songs. She obtained her chief success in a pleasing old English melody set to Moore's "When love is kind." Mr. Plunket Greene sang with much effect Lully's quaint and expressive "Bois épais"; but still more interesting was his rendering of three old Hungarian melodies arranged by F. Corbay. The music is fresh and characteristic, and the pianoforte accompaniments are exceedingly clever. The third, "Shepherd, see thy horse's foaming mane," was vociferously encored. Herr Von zur Mühlen sang the "Liebeslied" from the "Walküre" with intelligence and passion, but at times with too much sentiment; and he was h to advantage in Massenet's "Le sais-tu? There were also some vocal duets, and altogether the concert proved successful.

M. Paderewski gave a Chopin recital at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon. Since the Rubinstein recitals no pianist has ever drawn such a large audience. The programme was a long one, and included the grand Sonata in B flat minor. Of the first movement the pianist gave a really imposing rendering. The Scherzo was good, but less striking; and the lovely melody of the "Piu Lento" had not the true ring about it. The same thing was noticeable in the Trio of the Funeral March. The "Finale" was taken at a prodigious rate; and the technique was very fine, yet M. Paderewski does not produce the weird-like effect which Rubinstein obtains by a skilful use of both pedals. In the Ballade in A flat there was a tendency to emphasise the sentimental side of Chopin's music. That is, indeed, the fault which we find in most of the pianist's readings. There are exceptions, but he often makes us feel that he is more occupied with the manner than with the matter. We are, of course, judging him by the highest standard; for the simple reason that he is an artist of immense ability. But with regard to Chopin's music the interpretations of Bülow, Rubinstein, and Pachmann have made one somewhat exacting. M. Paderewski's renderings are clever, brilliant, effective, but not in every case ideal. He was much applauded, and gave some encores.

At the eighth Richter concert on Monday evening, the "Charfreitags-Zauber," from "Parsifal," was performed; and only by this one excerpt was Wagner represented in the programme. Beethoven's "Coriolan" Overture was splendidly played, but the same master's "Ah! Perfido," suffered somewhat from the hard and rough singing of Mme. Katherine van Arnhem. Grieg's "Peer Gynt" Suite was indeed a novelty at these concerts; and it was curious to see the conductor, whose name is specially associated with the mighty music of Beethoven and Wagner, wielding his bâton to the delicate and fantastic strains of the Scandinavian composer. The first three movements were well rendered, but one missed the peculiarly romantic effects of tone and time which Grieg knows so well how to produce from his orchestra with his own music. The finale of the Suite was given with extraordinary spirit, and was loudly applauded, but Dr. Richter wisely declined the encore. The concert concluded with Schumann's Symphony in E flat, but the performance was not of the best: the Scherzo, however, was rendered with finish and charm.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS
TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

James R. Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.'s
NEW BOOKS.

CRITICISM and FICTION. By W. D. HOWELLS. With Portrait. 16mo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. [Ready this day.]

LORD ARTHUR SAVILE'S CRIME, and other Stories. By OSCAR WILDE. 16mo boards, Ornamental, 2s. [Ready this day.]

A GROUP of NOBLE DAMES. By THOMAS HARDY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. The Queen says:—"Full of grace, charm, and reality, it is impossible not to pay a hearty tribute to all the noble dames."

COLONEL CARTER of CARTERS-VILLE is a Novel. By F. HOPKINSON SMITH, Author of "A White Umbrella in Mexico." Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d. "The humour of Colonel Carter is irresistible. . . . A most piquant and readable book."—Saturday Review.

STORIES of OLD NEW SPAIN. By THOMAS A. JANVIER, Author of "Colour Studies." With Frontispiece. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 5s. "There is a rich Southern glow in the plots and back-grounds here. Some are humorous in a subdued way, and all are pathetic."—Saturday Review.

ON NEWFOUND RIVER: a Novel. By THOMAS NELSON PAGE, Author of "In Ole Virginia." 16mo, cloth, 2s. 6d. "As pretty and natural as any one could wish a love story to be. It is not tame either."—Anti-Jacobin.

A NOVEL BY A NEW AUTHOR.
JERRY: a Novel. By S. B. Elliott. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "Jerry" is a book which will be interesting to English readers for its novelty. The book is really the romance of a gold mine in the Far West.—Saturday Review.

OSCAR WILDE'S ESSAYS.
"INTENTIONS." By Oscar Wilde. Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d. "These 'Intentions' are delightful reading, especially for their humour; and if I have failed to do them justice it is but a proof of Mr. Wilde's paradox that it is impossible to do justice to anything we care about."—Richard Le Gallienne in the Academy.

A NEW ENGLAND NUN, and other Stories. By MARY E. WILKINS. Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s. "Written with a feeling of sweet human sympathy, gilded by pleasant touches of humour."—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

STRANGERS and WAYFARERS. By SARAH ORNE JEWETT. 16mo, cloth extra, 5s. "Miss Jewett has a gift of quiet pathos and of its correlative, equally subdued humour."—JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

LONDON: JAMES R. OSGOOD, McILVAINE & Co., 45, Albemarle Street, W.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

The Committee will proceed forthwith to the ELECTION of a PROFESSOR of HEBREW and cognate Languages and the Exegesis of the Old Testament. Salary £500. All applications, with Testimonials, to be sent on or before WEDNESDAY, JULY 23rd, to (Rev.) R. H. MORGAN, Secretary, Menni Bridge, North Wales.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES, BANGOR,
(Incorporated under Royal Charter.)
Principal—H. R. REICHEL, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford

DEPARTMENTS.

I. Arts.
Greek	Subjects. W. Rhys Roberts, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.
Latin	Subjects. E. V. Arnold, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
French and German	Subjects. Frederic Spencer, M.A. (Camb.), Phil. Doc. (Oxford).
English	Subjects. The Principal.
Philosophy	Subjects. Henry Jones, M.A., late Clark Fellow of Glasgow University.
Mathematics	Subjects. G. B. Matthews, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
Welsh	Subjects. Lecturer—J. Morris Jones, B.A., late Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford.

II. Science.
Physics Andrew Gray, M.A., F.R.S.E.
Chemistry J. J. Dobbie, M.A., D.Sc., late Clark Fellow of Glasgow University.
Biology R. W. Phillips, M.A. (Camb.), B.Sc. (Lond.), late Scholar of St. John's Coll., Cambridge.
Zoology Lecturer—G. J. White, M.B. (Edin.).
Agriculture Lecturer—Douglas A. Gilchrist, B.Sc. (Edin.).
With ASSISTANT LECTURERS and DEMONSTRATORS.
The next Session opens on September 16th, 1891. Inclusive Tuition Fee, £10 a year. Registration Fee, £1 1s. Laboratory Fees additional, on the scale of £1 is. per term of six hours a week. The College possesses extensive and well-equipped Laboratories in Physics, Chemistry, and Biology.
The College Courses include the Subjects for Degrees of London University in Arts and Science. The Chemistry, Botany, and Zoology Courses are recognised for Medical Graduation in the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and Students can make one Annum Medicus at this College. The Science Courses are recognised for two years of the three years' degree course of the University of Edinburgh. Special provision is made for Electrical Engineering.
The average cost of living (including College tuition fees) at Bangor for the Session (25 weeks) is from £30 to £40. A list of registered Lodging-houses is kept at the College. A Hall of Residence for Women was opened in October, 1888. For detailed information as to Courses Entrance and other Scholarships, &c., apply to the Registrar, Bangor, July 1, 1891. W. CADWALADR DAVIES.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.

The SESSION 1891-92 will begin on 8th OCTOBER. The College supplies for persons of either sex, above the ordinary school age, the means of continuing their studies in Science, Languages, History, Literature, and the Theory of Music. The Chemical, Physical, Electrical, Engineering, Geological, and Biological Laboratories are open daily. The Engineering Department includes Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering, Surveying and Architectural Work; and special arrangements for practical work have been made with various Engineers in and near Bristol. Several SCHOLARSHIPS are tenable at the College.

ENGINEERING EDUCATION.
Professor J. RYAN, M.A., LL.M. (Camb.), D.Sc. (Lond.).
UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, BRISTOL.—Courses of Civil, Mechanical, Electrical, and Mining Engineering. Mineralogy and Applied Geology for Civil and Mining Engineers. Facilities are offered in the way of College Scholarships, Engineering Works Scholarships, and special arrangements for entrance into professional life. CALENDAR containing full information, price 1s. (by post, 1s. 3d.). There will be about 15 vacancies in October. Applications, with references, should be made as early as possible to the Secretary, from whom Prospectus and particulars of residence in Clifton may be obtained.
JAMES RAFTER, Secretary.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

PRINCIPAL—Rev. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).
This College, first established in 1857 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusively Theological College, into which at 17 will be admitted whether candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of £5 for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

The WORKS of HEINRICH HEINE. Translated by Charles G. Leland (Hans Breitmann).

Mr. Wm. Heinemann begs to announce that the first volume of the above, containing the "FLORENTINE NIGHTS," "THE MEMOIRS of HERR VON SCHNABELEWOPSKI," "THE RABBI of BACHARACH," and "SHAKESPEARE'S MAIDENS and WOMEN," will be ready at all Booksellers early next week, price 5s.

Volumes 2 & 3, being PICTURES of TRAVEL, in Two Volumes, are in the press.
* * * Prospectus on application.

LONDON: 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Messrs FREDERICK WARNE & CO. announce that an Original and Powerfully Written Story, entitled "A DIVIDED DUTY," by Miss
IDA LEMON, is now ready, in 1 vol., price 6s.

LONDON: BEDFORD STREET, STRAND; AND NEW YORK.

READY.
ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 16 inches, half-bound in morocco.
Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.
Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH
Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations
Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.
The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.
Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

THE SCOTTISH REVIEW.

- JULY, 1891.—CONTENTS.
- I.—THE ORIENTAL JEWS. By Major C. R. CONDER, D.C.L., LL.D., R.E.
 - II.—A PUBLISHER and his FRIENDS.
 - III.—PHILOSOPHY of RELIGION. By R. M. WENLEY, D.Sc.
 - IV.—THE LEGEND of ARCHANGEL LESLIE. By T. G. LAW.
 - V.—MINERAL LEASES and ROYALTIES. By BEN TAYLOR, F.R.G.S.
 - VI.—CERTAIN NATIONAL NAMES of the ABORIGINES of the BRITISH ISLES. By Prof. JOHN RUIJS, M.A.
 - VII.—GOETHE'S FAUST and MODERN THOUGHT. By M. KAUFMANN.
 - VIII.—LAURENCE OLIPHANT.
 - IX.—THE SCOTCH PLAUGHMEN'S UNION and its REFORMS. By J. G. DOW.
 - X.—SUMMARIES of FOREIGN REVIEWS.
 - XI.—CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
- ALEX. GARDNER 26, Paternoster Square, London.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE
DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.
The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-one different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Cork, Dublin, Dundee, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leeds, Leicester Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Exeter.
For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY LL. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
P. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Goods carefully Rem. ved and Warehoused.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."
PURE CONCENTRATED
Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
COCOA
Paris Exhibition 1889: OLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

BY DR. MACLAREN.
SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.
"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

POPULAR EDITION.
Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."
LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows the most at the rate of THREE PER CENT per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THEATRES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechnere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. A. Cecil, H. Standing, A. Aynesworth, F. Cape, G. Farquhar, C. Rock, and J. Clulow; Mesdames R. Filippi, E. Phelps, Harrington, and John Wood.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A MUTUAL MISTAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
Every Evening, at 9, DAVID GARRICK.
Messrs. Charles Wyndham, W. Farren, Cyril Maude, W. Blakeley, S. Valentine, S. Hewson, F. Atherley, and F. Emery; Mesdames M. A. Victor, E. Miller, and Mary Moore.
Preceded, at 8.20, by HEADS OR TAILS.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Every Evening, at 7.45, DRINK.
Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. C. Glenny, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Morgan, A. Phillips, H. Terriss, R. Power; Mesdames Jessie Millward, Ada Neilson, Mrs. Billington, Alice Kingsley, and Kate James.

LYCEUM THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15,
NANCE OLDFIELD and THE CORSICAN BROTHERS.
Messrs. Henry Irving, Terriss, Macklin, Wenman, Haviland, Johnson, Harvey, Tyars, Archer, Reynolds, Lacy, Tabb, Gordon Craig; Mesdames Kate Phillips, Coleridge, de Silva, Pauncefort, Annie Irish, and Ellen Terry.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Haydon Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Sevel; Mesdames Geraldine Ulmar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schuberth, Ellis, and Jeffries.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.20, JOAN of ARC.
Messrs. Marius, Edward Louis, W. Warde, E. Bantock, and Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Marion Hood, Alma Stanley, Agnes Delaparte, Alice Lethbridge, Linda Verner, A. Hewitt, Katie Seymour, L. Gourlay, and Pounds.
Preceded, at 7.45, by CRIME and CHRISTENING.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled LENEANT PRODIGE.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA,

Cambridge Circus, Shaftesbury Avenue.
Every Evening, at 8, IVANHOE.
Messrs. Eugene Oudin, Norman Salmond, W. H. Burgon, Avon Saxon, C. Kinningham, A. Owen, Copland, Wallace Brownlow, Stephens, Bovill, and Ben Davis; Mesdames Macintyre, Grobb, and Donald.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OYLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Timie, Sautmarcz, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

ST. JAMES'S THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Mr. GEORGE ALEXANDER.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE IDLER.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDWIN.
Every Evening, at 8.40, KATIE.
Messrs. Willie Edwin, Eversfield, Dagnall, Barraclough, Sidney, &c.; Mesdames Alice Alberton, Illington, Rutland, Esmond, and Bennett.
Preceded, at 8, by BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
After which, A COMMISSION. Followed by A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Mesdames L. Linden, L. Hanbury, Drummond, H. Daere, Tyrrell, Ford, and E. Chester; Messrs. B. Thomas, Forbes-Dawson, Elliot, C. P. Little, C. Coutts, Branscombe, and W. Grossmith.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cuninghame, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

GAY & BIRD'S PUBLICATIONS

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, pp. 186, cloth, 3s. 6d.

CY ROSS. A Novel.

By MELLEN COLE.

Anti Jacobin, July 11:—"Cy Ross' calls itself a novel, but it is better than that. The tale is freshly and pleasantly told. The Author is no copyist, but has observed for himself. He shows considerable skill in his plot."

Morning Post, July 8:—"The devotion and pluck of Cy's wife are certainly out of the common."

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, pp. 346, cloth gilt, 5s.

JAPANESE GIRLS and WOMEN.

By ALICE MABEL BACON.

CONTENTS:—Childhood, Education, Marriage and Divorce, Wife and Mother, Old Age, Court Life, Life in Castle and Yasuki, Samurai Women, Peasant Women, Life in the Cities, Domestic Service, Epilogue.

"The whole question of the position of Japanese women—in history, social life, education, employments, art, marriage, concubinage, popular superstitions, &c.—discloses such a wide and fascinating field of inquiry that I wonder no one has as yet entered it."—Extract from Grijis' Mikado's Empire.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, pp. 166, fancy cloth binding, 2s. 6d.

THE NEW ERA in RUSSIA.

By CHARLES A. DE ARNAUD.

PREFACE:—"Every candid, intelligent man will, on reading this little work, see that the Nihilists of Russia were not true patriots, but at the best were actuated by very unpatriotic motives."

New Edition. 12mo, pp. 593, Maps, Plans, and 160 Illustrations, leather, 15s.

THE INDEX GUIDE

To Travel and Art Study in Europe.

By LAFAYETTE C. LOOMIS.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

ZADOC PINE, and other Stories.

By H. C. BUNNER.

GAY & BIRD, AMERICAN BOOK & NEWSPAPER AGENCY, 15, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

THE QUARTERLY REVIEW,

No. 345, is published THIS DAY.

- I. MEMOIR of JOHN MURRAY.
- II. PLAUTUS and HIS IMITATORS.
- III. SIR ROBERT PEELE'S CORRESPONDENCE.
- IV. LINCOLNSHIRE.
- V. TALLEYRAND.
- VI. THE MAKING of GERMANY.
- VII. MEDIEVAL ATHENS.
- VIII. THE LATER JANSENISTS.
- IX. GIOVANNI MORELLI.
- X. CONFLICT BETWEEN CAPITAL and LABOUR.

JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE

ENGLISH HISTORICAL REVIEW.

Edited by S. R. GARDINER, M.A., LL.D.

No. 23, JULY. Royal 8vo. Price 5s.

Articles.

CONTENTS.

- THE INTRODUCTION of KNIGHT SERVICE into ENGLAND. By J. H. ROSE.
- DID HENRY VII. MURDER the PRINCES? By JAMES GARDNER.
- THE ROYAL and MERCHANT NAVY under ELIZABETH. By M. OPPENHEIM.
- COUNT LALLY. By SIDNEY J. OWEN.
2. Notes and Documents: Eldi's Life of Wilfrid, by B. W. WELLS; Three Letters written to Dorothy, Lady Wakington, edited by the Rev. Nicholas Pocock.—3. Reviews of Books.—4. List of Historical Books recently published.—5. Contents of Periodical Publications.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 355—CONTENTS.

- I. MEMOIRS of PRINCE TALLEYRAND.
- II. THE SYSTEM of the STARS.
- III. THE BEATRICE of DANTE.
- RAWLINSON'S HISTORY of PHENICIA.
- V. THE CORRESPONDENCE of JOHN MURRAY.
- VI. THE TALES of RUDYARD KIPLING.
- LONDON ARCHITECTURE in the NINETEENTH CENTURY.
- THE REVIVAL of QUAKERISM.
- COLONIAL INDEPENDENCE.
- X. THE MELVILLE and LEVEN MEMOIRS.
- THE INDIVIDUAL and the STATE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & Co.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER, & CO.'S LIST

CANON CHEYNE'S BAMPTON LECTURES.

THE ORIGIN and RELIGIOUS CONTENTS of the PSALTER, in the LIGHT of OLD TESTAMENT CRITICISM, and the HISTORY of RELIGIONS. By the Rev. T. K. CHEYNE, D.D., Canon of Rochester. Demy 8vo, 16s.

"Dr. Cheyne has long been recognised as one of the most learned and devout of the modern school of Oxford theologians. These qualities are displayed in his Bampton Lectures."—Times.

Crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, 5s.

THE HISTORY of S. MARTIN'S CHURCH, CANTERBURY: a Monograph. By the Rev. C. F. ROUTLEDGE, Canon of Canterbury.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

FAITH and UNFAITH; and other Essays. By C. KEGAN PAUL.

"Well worthy of preservation."—Times.

"Have a fine quality and just sobriety."—Anti-Jacobin.

With Portrait, crown 8vo, 5s.

A NUN; Her Friends and Her Order. Being a Sketch of the Life of Mother Mary Xavier Fallon, sometime Superior-General of the Institute of the Blessed Virgin in Ireland and its Dependencies. By KATHARINE TYNAN, Author of "Shamrocks," "Louise de la Vallière."

Crown 8vo, 6s.

WOMANHOOD in the GOD-MAN. By ERNEST MASON, A.T.S.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

THERE is NO DEATH. By FLORENCE MARRYAT, Author of "Love's Conflict," "Veronique," &c.

An account of the wonderful experiences this popular novelist has passed through in her investigation of the science of Spiritualism.

Crown 8vo, 5s.

FINAL CAUSES: a Refutation. By W. M. W. CALL.

Demy 8vo.

PRINCIPLES of NATURAL and SUPERNATURAL MORALS.

By the Rev. H. HUGHES, M.A.

•Vol. I. NATURAL MORALS. 12s. | Vol. II. SUPERNATURAL MORALS. 12s.

EIGHTEENTH EDITION.

ENIGMAS of LIFE. By W. R. GREG. With a Prefatory

Memoir. Edited by his WIFE. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The eighteenth edition of one of the most popular books of our day is enriched by a prefatory memoir and contributions from the pens of friends, which bring the author before us with singular vividness, and which contain one or two passages of rare literary ability."—Spectator.

NEW EDITION, Revised and Enlarged.

MODERN CREMATION: its History and Practice. By Sir H.

THOMPSON, F.R.C.S., M.B. Lond. Crown 8vo, paper, 1s.; cloth, 2s.

"The author discusses the subject in all its aspects, and his arguments and explanations should go far in removing the prejudice which undoubtedly exists against a process which has so much to recommend it."—Morning Post.

Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 6s.

SATURN'S KINGDOM; or, Fable and Fact. By CHARLES MOORE

JESSOP, Author of "A Diagram of the Earth's Rotation."

"A remarkable book, which amounts to little less than a history of the earth and the human race. As an epitome of the generally accepted teaching of science on cardinal points of astronomy, geology, anthropology, it would be difficult to better, either by adding or omitting."—Anti-Jacobin.

Demy 8vo, 10s. 6d.

STAFFORD HOUSE LETTERS. Edited by Lord RONALD GOWER.

With 2 Portraits.

"There is always something of general interest in the private correspondence of those favourites of fortune whose position in the world has brought them into close contact with the great personalities and great events of their time. This sort of interest undoubtedly belongs to 'Stafford House Letters.'"—Times.

Crown 8vo, 6s.

JOURNAL of EMILY SHORE. With Portrait and Facsimile.

"Her journal is a record of a bright home life, and of an education which developed all the native powers, while leaving nature to follow its own bent."—Times.

"The beautiful nature here portrayed may well be the pride of friends, and it will certainly excite the admiration of those who view it in these pages."—Anti-Jacobin.

Small crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

RHYMES from the RUSSIAN. Being Faithful Translations of Selections from the best Russian Poets, Pushkin, Lermontof, Nadson, Nekrasof, Count A. Tolstoi, Tyoutchef, Maiko f, Lebedef, Fet. K. R., &c. By JOHN POLLEN, LL.D., T.C.D.

"An interesting and creditable experiment in versification."—Times.

Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

A STRANGE TALE of a SCARABÆUS; and other Poems. By

A. C. P. HAGGARD.

"Captain Haggard has produced a little volume of verses of quite extraordinary merit... Excellent reading."—Truth.

LONDON: PATERNOSTER HOUSE, CHARING CROSS ROAD, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1003.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, JULY 25, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
STUDIES IN THE ARTHURIAN LEGEND, by LIONEL LINCOLN	67
IRELAND'S LIFE OF MRS. CARLYLE, by W. W. RICE	68
MORICE'S WAR, by Judge O'CONNOR MORRIS	69
SPENSER'S POEMS, by Dr. J. TODDUNTER	70
FOURTEEN POETS OF HENRY VIII., by J. GAIRDNER	70
NOVELS, by J. B. ALLEN	71
THEOLOGY	72
SCIENCE AND NEWS	74
UP-TO-COMING MAGAZINES	74
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	75
RECENT VERSE: "TO MISS L. M. LITTLE," by E. N. P.	75
REVIEWS AND REVIEWS	75
RECENT PENSIONS	75
RECENT FOREIGN BOOKS	75
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Rev. Canon Isaac Taylor; "Pearl," by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris; "Pailha-Yowan," by Dr. Glasier; Anglo-Indian "Elk" and "Estrelin," by S. C.; "Tenebris," by the Rev. C. Plummer; "Admetos," by J. H. Round	76
NOTES ON LATIN GRAMMAR, by F. HAVERFIELD	77
LEXICOGRAPHY	78
CORRESPONDENCE:— Mathematical Nomenclature , by R. H. Graham and the Reviewer	78
ENTOMOLOGICAL NOTES	79
ZOOLOGICAL NOTES	79
PLANTATIONS AT HENASSIEH, by E. NAVILLE	79
THE HOUSE OF SALICUS MERVONS	80
THE ARMY: SIR WILLIAM DOUGLAS	81
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Temple of Luvor , by Lieut.-Col. Ross	81
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHÆOLOGY	81
STAGE NOTES	82
THEATRE: CONCERTS, by J. S. SHEDLOCK	82

WANTED, in September, an Appointment as LADY SECRETARY or AMANUENSIS, German,
French, Shorthand, Type-writing—Miss H. Richa Abbas Rectory, Avenue d'Haute, Havre.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET an excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS comprising central position, and midway between City and West-end with uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and bathing facilities by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—
Apply to HOUSEKEEPER, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, Chancery Lane.

CATALOGUES.
FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

Just published, No. 506 (July 20th) of SOTHERAN'S PRICE-CURRENT of
LITERATURE.
Containing numerous Good Books in many branches of Science, Art, and General Literature.
A Copy post free on application to
H. SOTHERAN & Co., 136, Strand, W.C.; and 27, Piccadilly, W., London.

Price One Shilling.
THE MONTHLY PACKET.
Edited by CHARLOTTE M. YONGE and CHRISTABEL
COLERIDGE.
Part VIII. New Series.—AUGUST, 1891.
CONTENTS.

THE STICK—Chaps. XXVI. to XXIX. By C. M. YONGE.
GREEK FORERUNNERS OF CHRIST. No. IV. By the Rev.
Philip LULLY.
WHAT IT MAY PLEASE THREE . . . TO RAISE UP THEM.
"THAT FALL". By SARAH HAMOND PALFREY.
AT THE FAIR. By KATHARINE S. MACQUOID.
TRAVELLERS' TALES.
LOVE in a HUNGARIAN VILLAGE. By M. L. CAMERON.
TWO LADIES. By FLORENCE WILFORD.
THE CHURCH HOUSE. By IVANOVNA.
CAMEO from ENGLISH HISTORY. Cameo CCLXXXVIII.—
The French Church under Fleury.
TWILIGHT, Chap. II. By HELEN SHUTON.
MATHEN CLARKE.
FRAGMENT POSTS in FAERY LAND.—II. By CHRISTABEL R.
COLERIDGE.
THE CHINA CUPBOARD.
London: A. D. ISSUES & Co. (late WALTER SMITH & ISSUES), 31 and 32, Bedford Street, Strand.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES, BANGOR.
(Incorporated under Royal Charter.)
Principal—H. R. REICHEL, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

DEPARTMENTS.
I. Arts. Professors.
Greek Subjects W. Rhys Roberts, M.A., late Fellow of King's College, Cambridge.
Latin E. V. Arnold, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
French and German Frederic Spencer, M.A. (Camb.), Phil. Doc. (Leipzig).
English The Principal.
Philosophy Henry Jones, M.A., late Clark Fellow of Glasgow University.
Mathematics G. B. Matthews, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
Welsh Lecturer—J. Morris Jones, B.A., late Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford.
II. Science.
Physics Andrew Gray, M.A., F.R.S.E.
Chemistry J. J. Dobbie, M.A., D.Sc., late Clark Fellow of Glasgow University.
Biology R. W. Phillips, M.A. (Camb.), B.Sc. (Lond.), late Scholar of St. John's Coll., Cambridge.
Zoology Lecturer—Philip J. White, M.B. (Edin.).
Agriculture Lecturer—Douglas A. Gilchrist, B.Sc. (Edin.).
With ASSISTANT LECTURERS and DEMONSTRATORS.
The next Session opens on September 15th, 1891. Inclusive Tuition Fee, £10 a year. Registration Fee, £1 1s. Laboratory Fees additional, on the scale of £1 1s. per term of six hours a week. The College possesses extensive and well-equipped Laboratories in Physics, Chemistry, and Biology.
The College Courses include the Subjects for Degrees of London University in Arts and Science. The Chemistry, Botany, and Zoology Courses are recognised for Medical Graduation in the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and Students can make one Annuus Medicus at this College. The Science Courses are recognised for two years of the three years' degree course of the University of Edinburgh. Special provision is made for Electrical Engineering.
The average cost of living (including College tuition fees) at Bangor for the Session (1890) was from £30 to £40. A list of registered Lodging-houses is kept at the College. A Hall of Residence for Women was opened in October, 1888. For detailed information as to Courses Entrance and other Scholarships, &c., apply to the Registrar, Bangor, July 1, 1891. W. CADWALADR DAVIES.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

PRINCIPAL—REV. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).
This College, first established in 1837 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusively Theological College, into which all will be admitted whether candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of £5 for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT OF SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W.

The NEXT ANNUAL GENERAL MEETING will be held at CARDIFF, commencing on WEDNESDAY, August 19th.
President Elect.—
WILLIAM HUGGINS, Esq., F.R.S., LL.D., F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., F.R.A.S.
NOTICE to CONTRIBUTORS OF MEMOIRS—Authors are requested give notice before August 1st of their intention to offer Papers. Information about lodgings and other local arrangements may be obtained from the Local Secretaries, Bank Buildings, Cardiff.
G. GREENHILL, Assistant General Secretary.

BOROUGH of NOTTINGHAM MUSEUM and ART GALLERY, NOTTINGHAM CASTLE.

ELEVENTH AUTUMN EXHIBITION of PICTURES and SCULPTURES.
The above Exhibition will OPEN on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. Works will be received between the 4th and 8th of August, inclusive. Forms and all particulars can be had on application.
G. H. WALLIS, Director and Curator.
Nottingham Castle, July 10th, 1891.

STATUTORY NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS

(To be held in London from 1st to 10th SEPTEMBER, 1891.)
Patrons—H. R. H. the DUKE of COSSAUGHT; H. H. HERD Duke RAISER Hon. FRANK MARGUS OF DUFFERIN; the EARL of LITTON.
President of Organising Committee—The Right Hon. LORD HALSBURY.
500 Members in 25 countries, and 100 "papers" can be counted on. 8 Governments, and 30 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous to send Delegates or to inform the Congress of their Oriental work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers, to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. LEITCH-WALKER, who will supply the programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members. Subscription £1.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—LAST WEEK.—The EXHIBITION will CLOSE on the EVENING of MONDAY, August 3rd.

ROYAL ACADEMY of ARTS.—EVENING EXHIBITION.—The EXHIBITION will be OPEN in the EVENING from MONDAY, July 27th, to MONDAY, AUGUST 3rd (BANK HOLIDAY), from 7.30 to 10.29. Admission, 6d.; Catalogue, 6d. On BANK HOLIDAY, the Admission throughout the day will be 6d., on other days it will be as usual.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION
Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Outless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,
s remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.
Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art, The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HEIK HANSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTO-GRVURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

TO CREST HOLDERS.
COMMUNICATIONS and full PARTICULARS of CRESTS and BLAZONINGS used are REQUESTED by the undersigned, who is engaged in preparing an entirely New Edition of Fairbairn's Standard Book of Crests. Proofs of crests and sketches will be submitted for approval on application.—Prospectus on application.
A. C. FOX-DAVIES, 20, John Street, Adelphi, London, W.C.
To be published by T. C. & E. C. JACK, London and Edinburgh.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other

Sermons.
"It is not possible to open a page without perceiving illustrations of his commanding power, as an exponent of Divine truth."—Christian World.
"While they are distinguished by the finest scholarship and the most exquisite literary finish they are at the same time as plain and simple as the homeliest talk of Moody or of Spurgeon."—Christian Leader.

POPULAR EDITION.
Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V.
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES OF MAN."

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

A SELECTION FROM
Bentley's Favourite Novels.

Each Work can be had separately, price 6s.
Of all Booksellers in Town or Country.

By ROSA N. CAREY.

NELLIE'S MEMORIES.
BARBARA HEATHCOTE'S TRIAL.
HERIOT'S CHOICE.
NOT LIKE OTHER GIRLS.
ONLY the GOVERNESS.
QUEENIE'S WHIM.
ROBERT ORD'S ATONEMENT.
UNCLE MAX. | WEE WIFIE.
WOOFED and MARRIED.
MARY ST. JOHN. [In the press.]

By W. E. NORRIS.

THIRLBY HALL.
A BACHELOR'S FLUNDER
MAJOR and MINOR.
MISS SHAFTO.
THE ROGUE.

By JESSIE FOTHERGILL.

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND. | HEALEY.
KITH and KIN. | PROBATION.

By JANE AUSTEN.

(The only COMPLETE Editions of Miss Austen's Works are Messrs. Bentley's.)

EMMA.
LADY SUSAN, and the WATSONS.
MANFIELD PARK.
NORTHANGER ABBEY, and PERSUASION.
PRIDE and PREJUDICE.
SENSE and SENSIBILITY.

By E. WERNER.

UNDER a CHARM.
SUCCESS; and How He Won It.
FICKLE FORTUNE.
NO SURRENDER.

By HELEN MATHERS.

COMIN' THRO' the RYE.

By RHODA BROUGHTON.

COMETH UP as a FLOWER.
GOOD-BYE, SWEETHEART.
JOAN. | NANCY.
NOT WISELY, BUT TOO WELL.
RED AS A ROSE IS SHE.
SECOND THOUGHTS.
BELINDA.
"DOCTOR CUPID."
ALAS! [In the press.]

By MARIE CORELLI.

A ROMANCE of TWO WORLDS.
VENDETTA. | THELMA.
ARDATH. | WORMWOOD. [Just added.]

By Mrs. ALEXANDER.

THE WOOING OT.
HER DEAREST FOE.
LOOK BEFORE YOU LEAP.
THE EXECUTOR.
WHICH SHALL IT BE?

By FLORENCE MONTGOMERY.

MISUNDERSTOOD.
THROWN TOGETHER.
SEAFORTH.

By J. SHERIDAN LE FANU.

UNCLE SILAS.
IN a GLASS DARKLY.
THE HOUSE by the CHURCHYARD.

By Mrs. ANNIE EDWARDES.

OUGHT WE TO VISIT HER?
LEAH: a Woman of Fashion.
A BALL-ROOM REPENTANCE.
A GIRTON GIRL.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHAPMAN & HALL'S
NEW BOOKS.

MADAME DE BOVET.

THREE MONTHS' TOUR in IRELAND. By Madame DE BOVET. Translated and Condensed by Mrs. ARTHUR WALTER. With 75 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

H. W. SETON-KARR.

BEAR HUNTING in the WHITE
MOUNTAINS; or, Alaska and British Columbia Revisited. By H. W. SETON-KARR. With Illustrations and Map. Crown 8vo, 4s. 6d. [This day.]

CAPTAIN LINDSAY ANDERSON.

A CRUISE in an OPIMUM CLIPPER.
By Captain LINDSAY ANDERSON. Crown 8vo, with Illustrations, 6s.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Captain Anderson's narrative is full of the freshness of the new worlds he explored. He writes of strange things and deeds in a frank, sailorly way, which makes his book extremely readable."

JOHN WATSON, F.L.S.

POACHERS and POACHING. By JOHN WATSON, F.L.S., Author of "British Sporting Fishes." Crown 8vo, with Frontispiece, 7s. 6d.

"The Times says:—"A very attractive series of papers on the life of the fields as seen more or less from the poacher's point of view. Mr. Watson has a keen eye, a ready pen, and a wide knowledge of rural life."

A HISTORY of MODERN CIVILISA-
TION: a Handbook based on M. Gustave Ducoudray's
"Histoire Sommaire de la Civilisation." With numerous Illustrations, crown 8vo.

The Globe says:—"A quite remarkable book. It condenses its immense subject into the space of 585 pages. It is wonderful how much useful information the author and adapter have contrived to compress into the work."

THE QUEEN of ROUMANIA.

ELISABETH of ROUMANIA: a Study.
With Two Tales from the German of CARMEN SYLVA.
By BLANCHE ROOSEVELT. With Portraits. Demy
8vo, 12s.

The Daily Telegraph says:—"Madame Blanche Roosevelt has produced an admirable history of the life of Queen Elisabeth of Roumania. There is hardly a more remarkable figure in contemporary history."

MRS. ROSS.

EARLY DAYS RECALLED. By Mrs.
JANET ROSS. Crown 8vo, with Portrait and Illustrations, 5s.

The Daily Graphic says:—"The unpretending little volume possesses an interest far exceeding that of many more assuming autobiographies."

The Glasgow Herald says:—"One of the most charming collections of reminiscences."

SECOND and CHEAPER EDITION, now ready.

THE CHRIST THAT IS TO BE: a
Latter-Day Romance. Demy 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The National Observer says:—"The attempt of our anonym is a bold one. True reverence, perfect taste, high imagination, and vigour of thought were all required for success. But none of these is wanting; indeed, there is added to them also a style at once simple and graphic, and the result is a remarkable book."

A NEW NOVEL BY HENRY MURRAY.

A DEPUTY PROVIDENCE. By HENRY MURRAY, Author of "A Game of Bluff."
Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d.

The National Observer says:—"An excellent tale. Mr.
Murray, to be brief, has been fortunate in having been able to place a clear and vivid conception of his personages and situations before his own mind, and to convey that conception with no inconsiderable share of skill and vigour to the minds of others."

A STORY of SOUTH AFRICAN LIFE.

The MILNERS; or, the River Diggings.
Crown 8vo, 6s. [This day.]

THE STORY of an AFRICAN FARM.
By OLIVE SCHREINER. Crown 8vo, 1s.; in cloth,
1s. 6d. A SUPERIOR EDITION, 3s. 6d.

LONDON: CHAPMAN & HALL, LIMITED.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c.
3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.

"Its interest never flags. There is much delicious humour."
Scotsman.

"It is soothing and invigorating to turn to Mr. William Black's delightful pages after wandering for a time through the leguans of dreary commonplace of less gifted writers.
A brisk and picturesque story."—Daily Telegraph.

THIRTY STANDARD NOVELS
FOR SUMMER READING.

At prices ranging from ONE to SIX SHILLINGS.

WILLIAM BLACK.

(cloth gilt, 6s. each.)

IN SILK ATTIRE.
A DAUGHTER of HETH.
THREE FEATHERS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
KILMENY.
SUNRISE.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON.

R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition.)
CLARA VAUGHAN.
MARY ANERLEY.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.
CHRISTOWELL.

THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A LAODICEAN.

RUDYARD KIPLING.

Paper covers, price 1s.

SOLDIERS THREE. (Seventh Edition.)
THE STORY of the GADSBYS. (Fifth Edition.)
IN BLACK and WHITE. (Sixth Edition.)
WEE WILLIE WINKIE. (Sixth Edition.)
UNDER the DEODARS. (Fourth Edition.)
THE PHANTOM 'RICKSHAW. (Third Edition.)

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

and the Green Knight" is too doubtful an instance to establish such an unusual form; son become in Middle English ben and son. With regard to the phrase "go to Time," which Mr. Gollancz is good enough to ascribe to me, I need hardly say that nowhere have I made use of such an expression.

"For hit was negh at the terme that he to schude" = "for the term was close at hand to which he was bound"; or, more internally, "for which he was bound"; or, more boundedly, "for hit was negh at the term at which he was bound (to go)." Compare "that . . . on" (Piers Pl. c. xxii. 324), "that . . . of" (Alteogische Dicht. xiii. 31. p. 217). The phrase "negh at" is quite idiomatic in Middle-English, and "to" often has the meaning of "at."

4. "Hondlynges harme that hit not wile" (57. 3) = "Seruantes whose hands did never ill. My remarks on this line have induced the editor of Pearl to reconsider his interpretation, and he declares that the meaning of it is: "He that with his own hands did no injury through evil intent." But this so-called "literal" rendering needs confirmation by the citation of parallel passages.

Light can hardly stand for light (did), with a present tense in the co-ordinate sentence following.

5. Mylter. Here again Mr. Gollancz abandons his former interpretation. By an ingenious alteration in the grammar and order of the words in stanza 12, ll. 7, 8, he makes mylthe to be the Sir Mylthe in Chaucer's Romanz of the Rose; but were this so, should we not expect to find the Lord of the Garden a more prominent figure in Pearl, deserving of more than a mere passing allusion?

6. In the phrase "when strolche men slepe" we do not believe that the author of Pearl intended to suggest any such unavowable notion as that hinted at by Mr. Gollancz. The word strolche still remains a crux. Can it be an adverb meaning soundly?

7. "Deme dryghten ever hym adyte."—30. 1.

8. It is not a vital point whether brede (35. 7) be related to A.S. brēdan or brēdan; but the authorities cited by Maetzner favor the etymology adopted in the New English Dictionary, and seem to tell altogether against Mr. Gollancz's theory of a connexion with brēdan.

R. MORRIS.

=====
 "PUDHA-YAWAN."
 Berlin: June 20, 1891.

Prof. A. H. Sayce has stated that Puhda-Yawan, the town on the sea which is mentioned in a cuneiform inscription of Nebukadrezzar, edited by Mr. Pinches, may perhaps be identified with Pelusium; and Prof. Krall, of Vienna, I believe that this town must be Cyrene. I venture to think that neither Prof. Sayce nor Prof. Krall is right. The close connexion in which Puhda is brought in the inscription with Yawan leads me to believe that it must be searched for in the neighborhood of the Greek colonies in Arabia, which were, as much as the Egyptians, the enemies of the Babylonian conqueror. Indeed, Piny gives us in Western Arabia the name of a town Poda, just where I located the Pute of the Behistun inscription. In the same tract I und Geographische Arabien. The Greek colonies in Arabia, which were, as much as the Egyptians, the enemies of the Babylonian conqueror. Indeed, Piny gives us in Western Arabia the name of a town Poda, just where I located the Pute of the Behistun inscription. In the same tract I und Geographische Arabien.

or disgracedful to one who, like myself, has devoted as many years to palaeography as Mr. Freeman has to the history of Sicily. The phrase merely shows that Regius Professores, although like General Councils, they be called by the Commandment and Will of Princeps, are not infallible, but may err, and sometimes have erred, when they venture beyond their own domain.

ISAAC TAYLOR.

=====
 "PEARL."
 Dehnam, Essex: July 16, 1891.

Mr. Gollancz's lengthy reply to the short notice of his Lurw in the ACADEMY of June 27, 1891, does not call for any very "minute criticism" from the reviewer. I shall, therefore, as briefly as possible, consider some of his objections to my statements.

1. Mr. Gollancz invents a Middle-English edition "to date to," and admits it very much as a fine specimen of his author's "true poetical acumen"! But, inasmuch as he regards a "quotation" as "more valuable than an argument," he cites the Old-English undretan; and because that verb is followed by from, he jumps to the conclusion that Middle-English undretan follows the same construction, and is sometimes employed with from and sometimes with to! He has quite overlooked the fact that the Middle-English verbs undretan and drēdan are followed by of, and not by from. We need not make a guess at the construction of drēde; good authority can be produced for the phrase "to date to."

The meaning that Mr. Gollancz at first assigned to drēde may or may not turn out to be right; but he now shifts his ground, and explains the phrase "that ever darde to hym" by "he that hath ever been humble by reason of his fear towards Him," whereas he originally rendered it by "when he hath feared him." It is difficult in his cumbersome paraphrase to find out what meaning drēde really has. As Mr. Gollancz has failed to prove his point with reference to drēde, the rendering of 51. 8-12 cannot stand without some alteration.

The quotation from Cardinal Newman's Dream of Gerontius with reference to the use of drēde by the author of the Lurw is very much like trying to put new wine into old bottles.

2. The next point to be noticed is clime. I attempted to show that clime could not stand for clime in 69. 9-10, rhyming as it does with drēm, ven, and Litteratum; besides, the usual form of clim in the "alliterative poems" is clim. But Mr. Gollancz produces, from an East-Middle poem, a form clime=clime that rhymes not with the words already quoted but with hapteme; this, however, was not the point in dispute, and has nothing whatever to do with the use of clime in the Lurw. So anxious is he to maintain his interpretation of the word that he actually asserts that the "sinless Savour" "claimed (all) as His right." His author, we believe, held no such strange views. It may safely be asserted that "whether on any safely be asserted that 'whether on himself he can al clime(e)'" cannot mean "though he laid claim to all," but must have original significance of Middle-English clime. The verb clime means (1) to smear or besmear, (2) to smear a thing over or on a person or thing; to lay (on), put (on). The author of the Lurw employs a phrase that is perfectly intelligible; and we may compare this clime with use of besmear in the Lurw, which is also employed with reference to sin.

3. As to the verb toz, Mr. Gollancz thinks he has discovered its initiative ton, which he regards as a variant of ten, from A.S. teon; but he fails to quote any authorities in support of such an initiative. The line from "Gawain FORSTADT, zwei, nach Cod. Rom. 7, 40. Hng. F. GIANNAZZO DI PAVARATO, V. E. II Principe Cardinale di Mantova, 4 M. Ministero di Sanza, Ministero del Icttore e degli artisti. Turin: Loescher, 25 fr.

GRAVE, E. Rhythmus u. Metrum. Mainz: Elwert, 2 M. 40 fr.

MANLY, François de. Anjou de l'île Bourbon et de Madagascar. Paris: Lemonnier, 3 fr. 50 c.

MEXIA, Guille. Tour d'île de France de la Réunion et de l'île de France. Paris: Ollivandier, 3 fr. 50 c.

ORFÈRE, Th. Bénédict Gleding. Ein Beitrag Volks-Dichter d. 16. Jahrh. Bern: Wiese, 1 M. 90 fr.

POINTE, P. A travers l'industrie française. Paris: Hachette, 12 fr.

TERTSCH, K. W. S. Geschichte der evangelischen Gemeinden in Rumänien, mit besond. Berücksicht. d. Deutschthums. Leipzig: Koesler, 4 M.

THEOLOGY.

Corpus scripturum ecclesiasticum habitorium. Vol. XXI. et vol. XXV, pars I. Leipzig: Freytag, 36 M. 40 fr.

HISTORY, ETC.

DUPUY, E. Médecine et moeurs de l'antienne Rome d'après les peuples latins. Paris: Bailly, 3 fr. 50 c.

HILF, H. Die Wahl Pius V. zum Papste. Leipzig: Rök, 3 M. 50 fr.

MATTHEI, A. die akademischen Gymnasien in Hamburg 1613-1858. Eingeleitet u. erläutert v. C. H. W. Sillema. Hamburg: Gräfe, 10 M.

MONASTIK, A. Valéria historii Hungariae illustranda. Series I. VI. Vindobonae: Wörl, 10 M.

FRANZ, R. Du pouvoir législatif en France depuis l'avènement de Philippe le Bel jusqu'en 1789. Paris: Roussseau, 8 fr.

PIROU, G. Le Marquis de La Fayette de Jeanne d'Arc. Paris: Champs, 2 fr. 50 c.

ROUX, C. Die ältere Topographie der Stadt Aachen. Aachen: Croner, 2 M.

SACHS, E. Bemerkungen über die Apostel-Inschriften d. römischen Kaiserzeit. Leipzig: Leopold, 2 M.

GOVERNUS, G. römischer Jurist d. Pimodan (1817-1849). Paris: Champion, 10 fr.

BRUNER, L. Französische Kulturstudien. I. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. Spätes in Alt-Frankreich. Heidelberg: Winter, 1 M. 60 fr.

BRUNER, G. Die Uppflanzung, Geschichte, Wesen u. Bedeutung d. römischen Artele. II. Geschichtliches. Dorpat: Karow, 4 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

BERNER, H. Ueb. das Wesen der Stillehkeit u. den natürlichen Entwicklungsprozess d. stillehlichen Gedanken. Halle: Frieder., 6 M. 50 fr.

HERRMANN, E. G. Philosophie der Arithmetik. I. Bd. Halle: Loebner, 1 M. 50 fr.

LABOUR, J. de. Notes pour servir à l'étude des Echindodermes. Basel: Georg, 4 M.

BAUER, M. J. Die Ansicht üb. die Apoptose v. Zeit u. Raum u. die Kantischen Kategorien. Halle: Frieder., 1 M. 50 fr.

VALENTIN, Th. v. Der Organismus der Alterant u. das Leben der Menschheit in ihm. Leipzig: Freytag, 20 M.

WATSON, E. Zur Inthelmenkunde der Strahlencongruenzen u. Flächen. Leipzig: Freytag, 1 M. 20 fr.

PHIOLOGY, ETC.

BARTHOLOMÄ, Ch. Studien zur indogermanischen Sprachgeschichte. II. Halle: Niemeyer, 7 M.

DISSERTATIONEN PHILOLOGISCHER VINDOBONENSIS. Leipzig: Freytag, 10 M.

GALLER, H. Altchristliche Grammatik. I. Hälfte. Leipzig: Loebner, 2 M.

JANUS, A. Etymologische Grammatik. Halle: Niemeyer, 2 M.

GRÄF, J. G. Grammatik der Aachen Mundart. I. Th. Aachen: Croner, 1 M. 50 fr.

MITTELSTADT, A. Archäologisch-epigraphische, aus Oesterreich-Ungarn. 14. Jahrg. Leipzig: Freytag, 10 M.

REICH, A. Studien zur Geschichte der römischen Konstitution. II. Hälfte. Niemeyer, 2 M. 80 fr.

JANUS, A. d. v. Culturhistorische u. sprachliche Beiträge zur Kenntnis d. alten Peru. Leipzig: Freytag, 11 M. 30 fr.

=====
 CORRESPONDENCE.

MR. FREEMAN'S SICILY.

Settington Rectory, York: July 20, 1891.

Mr. Freeman's letter being partly a reclame of what he has already urged at great length, and partly more unprofitable logomachy, I should have left it unnoticed had it not contained an apt illustration of my remark, which has given such dire offence, as to the difference between the touch of the master and of the amateur. He pronounces the writing on Hiereon's helmet to be "uncial," a term which no specialist would have used, as it exhibits no uncial forms. But as Mr. Freeman, who so kindly explains "things to other people," treats on palaeography for the meaning of the term. Nor will I occupy several columns in denouncing, as an "amazing blunder," an error which though natural and excusable in Mr. Freeman's case, would be either impossible

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE Rev. W. D. Macray—author of Annals of the Bolton, and for more than fifty years connected with that library—has been elected to a fellowship at Magdalen College, Oxford, under the clause in the statutes authorising the election of "persons qualified by their attainments in literature, science, or art."

The Rede Lecture delivered at Cambridge last month, by Sir Alfred Lyall, on "Natural Religion in India," has been published as a pamphlet by the Cambridge Press.

The following appointments have been made at Bedford College, London: Mr. Talford Rely to the professorship of Greek; Mr. J. W. Allen, to the professorship of Greek; and Miss Mabel M. Taylor, of Girton, to the professorship of ancient history.

PROF. MAYOR has published as a pamphlet, with the title Mitico Nomine (Cambridge; Macmillan & Bows), his protest against the proposal to exclude Greek from the Previous Examination. As those who know the author will not need telling, the character and the erudition of the man stand revealed in every sentence.

The Edinburgh Vacation Courses, which meet at University Hall on August 5, for the fifth annual session of four weeks, are this year considerably developed, chiefly through help from continental universities. The course introductory to the social sciences is divided among Dr. Grosse, conservator of the Archaeological Museum at Freiburg; Prof. A. C. Haddon, of Dublin; and Prof. Patrick Geddes; while the associated practical class will be conducted by Dr. Janakovich, of Buda-Pesth, and Mr. A. J. Herbertson. A studio has also been arranged in which Dr. Grosse's anthropological designs will be worked out by art-students, under the direction of Miss Hill Burton and Miss Alice Gray. A series of paintings of typical landscapes and vegetation (some what analogous to the well-known North Collection at Kew Gardens) is also in progress. The course of general biology will be opened by a series of lectures by Dr. Henri de Varyny, of the Paris Museum, who is charged by the French Government with the mission of reporting on the university extension movement.

The introductory lecture delivered by Prof. Edward Caird, as Gifford Lecturer at St. Andrews, on "The Modern Conception of the Science of Religion," is published in the July number of the International Journal of Ethics (London: Fisher Unwin). The same number also contains the programme of a School of Applied Ethics, which was to be held at Plymouth, Massachusetts, for six weeks, beginning on July 1. There are three departments—economics, under the direction of Prof. H. C. Adams, of Michigan, who was to deliver a course of seven lectures on "The History of Industrial Society and Economic Doctrines in England and America"; history of religions, under Prof. Crawford H. Toy, of Harvard, and Prof. M. Bloomfield and Prof. M. Jastrow, among his assistants; and ethics, under Prof. Felix Adler, of New York.

AT Johns Hopkins University, the degree of B.A. has been conferred this year upon 50 students, as compared with 36 in each of the two previous years. Of these, 32 were residents in Baltimore. The average age was 21 years and 7 months, as compared with an average of more than 23 years for the graduating class at Harvard.

JOHNS HOPKINS University and the Academy of Lausanne have been added to the official list of those with which the French faculties interchange theses. The total number of such foreign universities is now thirty-seven, of which twenty-one are German, five are Swiss, and three are Dutch. The only English university is Oxford.

STONES and ROCKS," in which he draws attention to John Wesley's footprints which are believed to be impressed on his father's grave-slab in Epsworth churchyard.

The July number of the London and Middlesex Notebook (Elliot Stock) contains the first instalment of an important contribution to general history, edited by G. E. C. It is an account of the lord mayors and sheriffs during the reign of James I., giving, so far as practicable, the dates of their election, their arms, parentage, marriages, children, deaths, &c. Among other articles may be mentioned—a catalogue of the forty-one monumental brasses that are still to be found in the city churches; the beginning of a list of Middlesex and London gentry, compiled by Blome about the year 1673; the place-names of Chiswick; and a description of a paleolithic implement found in excavations in Oxford-street.

CIVIL LIST PENSIONS.

The following are the pensions upon the Civil List granted during the year ended June 30, 1891, so far as regards literature, science, or art:—Mrs. Anne Maria Whittier—£50; in recognition of the services rendered to literature and geological science by her late husband, Prof. D. Page, of Durham, £100; Mrs. Ellen Davies: in recognition of the services of her late husband, Prof. James F. Davies, to classical literature, £100; Mrs. Eliza Mary Schmitz: in recognition of the services of her late husband, Dr. Leonhard Schmitz, to classical education and learning, £75; Lady Isabella Burton: in recognition of the services of her late husband, Sir Richard F. Burton, K.C.M.G., as an explorer in the eastern portion of Central Africa, and of his services to science and literature, £150; Miss Kate Sullivan and Mrs. Emily Sullivan: in recognition of the services of their late father, Dr. Sullivan, president of Queen's College, Cork, to literature, and of his labours in developing the industrial resources of Ireland, £25 each; Mrs. Clara Margaret Redfern: in consideration of the services of her late husband, Mr. James Redfern, sculptor, to the Royal Asiatic Society, April 1890—that the Book of Wisdom was originally written in Hebrew. The discussion is in a high degree instructive.

In the Antiquary for July (Elliot Stock), Mr. R. C. Hope continues his useful series of papers on Holy Wells. He is at present dealing with Yorkshire, where sacred fountains seem once to have been common. We wonder whether there is good ground for tracing any of them back to pre-Christian times. At Gargrave and at Bishton there are wells dedicated to Saint Helen. There are several saints of this name in the Calendar, but there cannot be any doubt that the Helen invoked in Yorkshire was the mother of Constantine the Great. The legends tell us that she was a British princess born at York. The Rev. E. Maulie Cole also continues his papers on "Archæology in Provincial Museums." The museum at Driffield is the subject of this month's paper. It is at present in private hands; but if we understand Mr. Cole aright, there is hope that it may, at no far-off date, become the property of the town. We gather from what Mr. Cole tells us that this collection is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

AMONG the contents of a singularly good number of the Scottish Quarterly Review may be mentioned S. Schechter's collection of the quotations from Ecclesiastical in Rabbinate literature, the most complete and critically accurate one as yet made. Various readings are carefully given. The order of the quotations is, first, those in the Babylonian Talmud; next, those in the Talmud of Jerusalem; lastly, those in the Midrashim and in the later literature. Other parallels to Strach will form the subject-matter of a subsequent article. No stops are provided, but a metrical division should seem to be implied. Prof. J. Rendel Harris examines the theory of Prof. D. S. Margoliouth (Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, April 1890)—that the Book of Wisdom was originally written in Hebrew. The discussion is in a high degree instructive.

In the Antiquary for July (Elliot Stock), Mr. R. C. Hope continues his useful series of papers on Holy Wells. He is at present dealing with Yorkshire, where sacred fountains seem once to have been common. We wonder whether there is good ground for tracing any of them back to pre-Christian times. At Gargrave and at Bishton there are wells dedicated to Saint Helen. There are several saints of this name in the Calendar, but there cannot be any doubt that the Helen invoked in Yorkshire was the mother of Constantine the Great. The legends tell us that she was a British princess born at York. The Rev. E. Maulie Cole also continues his papers on "Archæology in Provincial Museums." The museum at Driffield is the subject of this month's paper. It is at present in private hands; but if we understand Mr. Cole aright, there is hope that it may, at no far-off date, become the property of the town. We gather from what Mr. Cole tells us that this collection is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains.

ORIGINAL VERS.

THANKS for your answer, friend, un-known.

It was an Echo, in my voice you heard,
Of many children's voices, the sad tone
(Of those who crave what others cast aside,
The crutch, the couch, the all too easy chair,
With health's returning vigour, or Death's kiss
That cures for ever all our bodic care.)
I plead for these, nor shall I plead amiss
If one sweet mother, glad with answered prayer,
Will say, "This wrough't my child some comfort still,

These pillows eased his head, and so I will
Another mother shall my pleasure share,
And see maintained limbs enjoy a moment's ease
And sad eyes smile: we would give life to please."

R. N. P.

The Invalid Children's Aid Association, 18 Buckingham-street, Strand, visits permanently invalid children, and so far as their limited funds will permit, affords surgical appliances and ambulances, &c. These last, when disused, are welcome.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

BACHMANN, K. Die beiden Versionen a. m. Canticum de Creatione. Untersucht, üb. Sprache, Metrik u. Versifikation der beiden Versionen zu Ekinder n. zu ihrer Quelle. Hamburg: Klöppel. 2 M. 60 Pf.

CANTON, W. Infantis Galvatoris. Hrg. v. R. Holthausen. Halle: Niemeyer. (6) Pf.

CHOIX de lettres d' Eugene Burnout (1825-1882). Paris: Champion. 10 fr.

COUGRAY, A. De la Musique en France depuis Rameau. Paris: Calmann Levy. 3 fr. 50 c.

DRAGONET, le Comte H. L'Académie des Beaux-Arts. Paris: Librairie de la Fondation de l'Institut de France. Paris: Librairie de la Fondation de l'Institut de France. Paris: Librairie de la Fondation de l'Institut de France.

DRIBLAIN, R. Etude sur le Hémite parisien du 13e au 17e siècle. Paris: Librairie de la Fondation de l'Institut de France. Paris: Librairie de la Fondation de l'Institut de France.

ETTLEBEN, J. Christian Höpman v. Hofmannsdan. Beitr. zur Literaturgeschichte d. 17. Jahrh. Halle: Niemeyer. 2 M. 80 Pf.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

Each pension is further stated to be granted, "in consideration of the inappreciable means of support of the recipient." In addition, three pensions were granted for military or other services.

geological survey, £45.

husband, the late Mr. H. W. Britton, on the in recognition of the long services of her merits as an artist, £100; Mrs. Eliza Britton: Mr. Harrison West: in recognition of his recognition of the long and valuable services of scholar, £100; Miss Iza Duffus Hardy: in his services to literature, and his merits as a Richard Francis Wymouth: in recognition of his services to literature, £80; Dr. ideration of his services to literature, £100; Mr. George Barnett Smith: in con-late husband, Mr. James Redfern, sculptor, to the Royal Asiatic Society, April 1890)—that the Book of Wisdom was originally written in Hebrew. The discussion is in a high degree instructive.

In the Antiquary for July (Elliot Stock), Mr. R. C. Hope continues his useful series of papers on Holy Wells. He is at present dealing with Yorkshire, where sacred fountains seem once to have been common. We wonder whether there is good ground for tracing any of them back to pre-Christian times. At Gargrave and at Bishton there are wells dedicated to Saint Helen. There are several saints of this name in the Calendar, but there cannot be any doubt that the Helen invoked in Yorkshire was the mother of Constantine the Great. The legends tell us that she was a British princess born at York. The Rev. E. Maulie Cole also continues his papers on "Archæology in Provincial Museums." The museum at Driffield is the subject of this month's paper. It is at present in private hands; but if we understand Mr. Cole aright, there is hope that it may, at no far-off date, become the property of the town. We gather from what Mr. Cole tells us that this collection is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains, and is remarkably rich in pre-historic remains.

NOTES AND NEWS.

SIR W. W. HUNTER has been nominated a member of the governing body of the Imperial Institute, on behalf of the British India Association, which represents the Hindu landowners of Bengal; and also a delegate to the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, on behalf of the Mahomedan Literary Association of Calcutta.

On September 30, Prof. Max Müller will unveil the monument to his father, Wilhelm Müller, the poet, which is being erected by a general subscription at his native town of Dessau. The Pentelic marble for the monument was voted by the Greek Government, in recognition of the poet's enthusiasm for the cause of Hellenic independence.

Subscribers to the series of early Irish texts, which Mr. Stansfeld H. O'Grady has undertaken to edit, under the title of Silen Gallica, will be glad to hear that the work went to press some little time ago, and that the printing is proceeding rapidly.

The next volume in the series of "Rulers of India," published by the Charendon Press, will be "Lyle and Strathmore, and the Suppression of the Great Revolt." The author is Sir Owen Tudor Bampfylde, who himself served through the Mutiny, and was afterwards military secretary to Lord Strathmore when commander-in-chief. A subsequent volume, written by Sir Henry S. Cunliffe, will deal with Lord Canning and the transfer of India from the Company to the Crown.

Messrs. GRIFFITH, FARNAX, & Co. have in the press a work called General Craufurd and his Light Division. It is written by the general's grandson, the Rev. A. H. Craufurd, and has been put together with the twofold object of serving as a trustworthy memoir of one of the most brilliant of Wellington's generals of division, and of gathering together the many anecdotes and stories of heroism which the Light Division gave rise to during its glorious career. The work will also contain some new matter in the form of letters from Sir John Moore, the Right Hon. W. Windham, the Duke of Wellington, &c.; and a long unpublished paper on changes in the army, written by Sir John Moore to General Craufurd.

Mr. T. FISHER UZWIN has sent to press a new edition of Mr. William Watson's little volume of verse, entitled Wordsworth's True, which was fortunate enough to win the warm commendation of Mr. W. D. Howells in Harpur's Magazine, and of Mr. Walter Besant in The Athlete. We understand, also, that Mr. Grant Allen has written an article upon it, which will appear in an early number of the Fortnightly Review. The new edition will contain a few additional poems, while one or two of those in the first edition will be omitted.

The work entitled The Last Great Naval War, which Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish in a few days, not only narrates the events which might happen, but assigns position of command to a man of the highest authority in naval and military matters.

Messrs. J. B. LIPPINCOTT & Co., of Philadelphia, announce a Supplement to Allibone's Critical Dictionary of English Literature and British and American Authors, compiled by Mr. John Foster Kirk. It will be in two volumes, containing more than 37,000 author-titles, and more than 93,000 subject-titles.

Messrs. LONGMANS have nearly ready an English translation of Prof. Georges Ville's book, La Propriété devent sa Femme Detraite, the translator is Mr. William Crookes, F.R.S.

The next volume of the Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour will be In a Canoodle (June), by Mr. Barry Pain, hitherto known chiefly for his contributions to newspapers and magazines, which evidence a distinct gift of humour.

Messrs. MACMILLAN will publish shortly two more novels by Ralph Boldwood—Nevermore, and A Siding Side Saxon.

Mr. H. C. BURKER's new volume of short stories will be shortly issued by Messrs. Gay & Bird, under the title of Zadee Fine, and Other Stories.

A volume of biography, by Mr. John J. Poole, entitled Women's Influence in the East, is announced for early publication by Mr. Elliot Stock. The work will contain the lives of many noble queens and princesses of India in former days.

The next volume of the Camelot Series will be The Handbook of Swindling, and Other Hypes, by Douglas Jerrold, edited, with an Introduction, by Mr. Walter Jerrold.

The Rev. W. A. Griffiths, of Sketty, has a work in the press in Welsh on the Welsh hymnwriters, which is said to be the first attempt on the subject. The publisher is Mr. Gwynlyn Evans, of Carnarvon, and the book will be ready early in August.

Messrs. OLIPHANT, ANDERSON, & FERKLER announce a cheap edition of The Sandalwood Mystery, by Mr. Scott Graham, which will be published in the beginning of August.

The council of the Selden Society have decided that the volume to follow The Mirror of Justice, now in preparation, shall be The Law Practitioners in the City of Norwich during the Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries, edited from rolls in the possession of the corporation, by the Rev. W. H. Hudson. The value of this volume will consist in the early character of its evidence on the working of the frankpledge system, and on municipal development in a chartered borough.

The Hakluyt Society has just issued its two volumes for 1890, consisting of The Voyage of Francis Legut to Ludtrigue, Mauritius, &c., edited by Capt. Pasfield Oliver. With regard to future arrangements, the Report states that the Letters from India of Pietro della Valle, transcribed from the English version of 1655, are now in the printer's hands; Dr. Robert Brown promises very shortly his edition of Travels of Leo Africanus; Mr. Miller Christy's Voyages of Foxe and James to Hudson's Bay are nearly ready; Leut. Cecil Dampier, R.N., is engaged upon an edition of Dampier's Voyages; and Mr. E. in Thurn writes that he is collecting material for a second edition of Raleigh's Discoverie of the Empire of Guiana, which was edited for the Society by Sir Robert Schomburgk in 1850. In addition, Mr. Theodore Bent has in hand two seventeenth-century MSS., illustrating the early intercourse of the English with the Levant; these are the journals of Master Dallam, who visited Constantinople in the early part of that century for purposes connected with the trade of an organ-builder, and of Doctor Covel, who was for six years chaplain to the Levant Company.

Messrs. KEVAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co. have published a new edition—the eighteenth since its first appearance in 1872—of Mr. W. R. Greg's Annals of Life. Fixed is a brief memoir by his widow, together with a few letters addressed to the Countess of Derby, and some estimates of the man by others. Of these last the most interesting is the contribution of Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, who takes the opportunity, while sketch-

Messrs. KEVAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co. have published a new edition—the eighteenth since its first appearance in 1872—of Mr. W. R. Greg's Annals of Life. Fixed is a brief memoir by his widow, together with a few letters addressed to the Countess of Derby, and some estimates of the man by others. Of these last the most interesting is the contribution of Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, who takes the opportunity, while sketch-

Messrs. KEVAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co. have published a new edition—the eighteenth since its first appearance in 1872—of Mr. W. R. Greg's Annals of Life. Fixed is a brief memoir by his widow, together with a few letters addressed to the Countess of Derby, and some estimates of the man by others. Of these last the most interesting is the contribution of Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, who takes the opportunity, while sketch-

Messrs. KEVAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRUBNER, & Co. have published a new edition—the eighteenth since its first appearance in 1872—of Mr. W. R. Greg's Annals of Life. Fixed is a brief memoir by his widow, together with a few letters addressed to the Countess of Derby, and some estimates of the man by others. Of these last the most interesting is the contribution of Sir Mountstuart E. Grant Duff, who takes the opportunity, while sketching the attitude of his friend towards modern Liberalism, to define his own position. On the whole, these personal reminiscences continue the impression that the positivism so often attributed to Greg was not the result of a phibopropic temperament (as was certainly the case with Schopenhauer), but rather of certain incidents in his life.

A recent number of the Theologische Literaturzeitung devotes no less than three out of seven reviews to English books. It happens that all three books are by Cambridge men, and published at the Cambridge Press. All three, also, are praised. They are Prof. Swete's Septuagint, Prof. Kyle's Festivals of Solomon, and Mr. Armitage Robinson's Apology of Aristides. The review of the last runs into two articles.

FORTHCOMING MAGAZINES.

"A Plea for the Triple Alliance," by Dr. Karl Blind, will appear in the August number of the National Review. In contradistinction to those in Italy, under the name of Mazzinians and Cavourians, at present both the Republican apostles of Italian freedom and unity and the constitutionalist Piedmontese statesmen over and over again expressed views which strongly make for the alliance in question, and for a friendly understanding with England. The article will also contain utterances of Garibaldi and Aurelio Saffi, with whom, as with Mazzini, the writer was connected by long friendships.

The English Illustrated Magazine will have for frontispiece an engraving, by Mr. W. George Wilson, entitled "Asia." Dr. John Toddhunter contributes an article upon this little-known artist, who died last year at the age of forty-nine. Among the other contents are: "Tewkesbury Abbey," by Dean Spence; "Dickens and Punch," by Mr. F. G. Kitton; and "The Russo-Jewish Movement," by the Rev. S. Singer. All these articles will be abundantly illustrated.

The August number of Harpur's Magazine will contain an article by Prof. W. G. Blake, of Edinburgh, giving some new information about Byron's early school-days at Aberdeen; and a short humorous story by Mark Twain, and the "Ferrede" itself. Specimens of French and English music are also given.

To the August number of Food Words, Mr. Andrew Lang contributes an article entitled "Life in Homer's Time"; while Canon Fretmantle will describe the historical associations of Canterbury Cathedral.

The August number of the Antiquary will contain an article by Mr. W. Roberts on "The Elizabethan Grub-street," to which is prefixed a note from Mr. Gladstone.

In the August number of Cassell's Magazine will be commenced a new serial story by Ida J. Lemon, entitled "The Little Woman."

"The Oyster and the Oyster Shell," a story by the Rev. P. B. Power, will be commenced in the August number of the Quarter, which will also contain contributions by Rev. Dr. Hugh Macmillan, Prebendary Gordon Cathorpe, &c.

The August issue of Men and Women of the Day will contain a new portrait of the Emperor of Germany, together with a biography. The other portraits will be those of Lady Aberdeen and Sir Graham Berry.

historical position. All controversial matter is scrupulously avoided. For such the student must continue to refer to the five large volumes (under the same title) in which Bishop Light-foot dealt at length with Clement and Ignatius and Polycarp. Of these three Bishops, both text and translation are derived from the larger work; and the other translations, and the introductions throughout, are substantially the work of the Bishop; but the revision of the text of the Epistle of Barnabas and of the Shepherd of Hermas has been contributed by Mr. Harner, the Bishop's chaplain, whose name he wished to stand upon the title-page, side by side with his own. Dr. Lightfoot wrote upon the Epistola, shortly after its first publication by Dryden; but in view of the exceptional interest of the subject, we may quote from his introduction to it here:

"The work is obviously of very early date, as is shown by the internal evidence of language and subject-matter. Thus, for instance, the important prophetic order has not yet been displaced by the permanent localized ministry, but exists side by side with it as in the lifetime of St. Paul (Eph. i. 11, I Cor. xii. 28). Secondly, episcopacy has apparently not yet become universal; the word 'bishop' is still used as synonymous with 'Presbyter'; and the writer therefore couples 'bishops' with 'deacons' as St. Paul does (1 Tim. iii. 1-8, Phil. i. 1) under similar circumstances. Thirdly, from the expression 'after ye have been allied,' it appears that the agape still formed part of the Lord's Supper. Lastly, the archaic simplicity of its practical suggestions is only consistent with the early infancy of a church. These indications point to the first or the beginning of the second century as the date of the work in its present form."

It remains to say that the book is printed on exceptionally good paper, with the handsome font of Greek type adopted by the Cambridge University Press for quotations.

La Doctrine des Douze Apôtres et ses Enseignements. Par l'Abbe E. Jaquier. (Paris: Lethielleux.) This is a thesis for the degree of Doctor in Theology, submitted to the Catholic faculty at Lyons and approved by the dean and rector. It consists of three parts: (1) an historical and critical study of the Didache, dealing elaborately with the questions of its sources, its authenticity, its date, and its authorship; (2) the Greek text, with a French translation and notes; and (3) the information to be derived from it with reference to the history of the primitive Church, especially as regards the sacraments and the ministry. Our author is disposed to assign the date of the Didache to between 50 and 70 A.D., certainly not later than 80; and he believes that it reproduces the actual teaching of the Apostles. He admits that it contains numerous traces of Judaism and of Rabbinical phraseology, which he explains by attributing it to a Jewish convert. With regard to the disputed question of its relation to the Epistle of Barnabas, he concludes that the two works are derived independently of each other from some common source. He thinks it doubtful whether the writer was acquainted with the Fourth Gospel, but probable that he was acquainted with Luke. Finally, he gives a bibliography of eleven pages, which includes the more important articles in German, English, and American reviews, and also publications in Danish, Hungarian, and Greek.

The Rev. C. H. Hoole, student of Christ Church, has published a little pamphlet on the Codex Alexandrinus (Oxford: University Press). He does not deal with palaeography or textual criticism, but confines himself to two questions: (1) what may be learned about the history of the MS. from internal evidence; and (2) the date of contents prefixed to it. The Codex Alexandrinus, now in the British Museum, was presented to Charles I. in 1626 by Cyril Lucaris, patriarch of Constantinople, apparently through the intervention of Archbishop Abbott and Sir Thomas Roe. Various not regarded as so great as to be inconsistent with identity of authorship. Dr. Gloag declines even to have recourse to the usual explanation for the date of the Apocalypse he adopts the works were separated by a long interval of time. For the date of the Apocalypse he adopts the traditional view; and the Neonian hypothesis, which is now so widely accepted as the true key to the enigmas of this book, is pronounced to rest on no foundation. Dr. Gloag examines impartially the different systems of interpretation proposed by the various scholars, and wisely abstains from proposing any of his own. His book is not a brilliant one; but, as based on sound scholarship and written in a judicial spirit, it deserves commendation.

"THE EXPOSITOR'S BIBLE."—The Gospel of St. John. By Marcus Dods, D.D., Professor of Exegetical Theology, New College, Edinburgh. In 2 vols. Vol. I. (Hodder & Stoughton.) This is the latest addition to "The Expositor's Bible"; and as Dr. Dods, besides having caused some stir in Scotland by his advanced views, is well known as a pleasing and graceful writer on Scripture, his name will no doubt recommend it to a wide circle of readers. Dr. Dods shows in every line he writes how carefully and with what sympathetic insight he has studied the Fourth Gospel; and accordingly, his work while throwing no new light on questions of criticism, which of course it is not its object to do, will be acceptable to all who are content to accept the Gospel as a genuine record of Christ's life and words, and who desire to have its deeper meanings drawn out and brought home to them, in their bearing on the life and thought of to-day. The Gospel of John, he shows, naturally falls into two nearly equal parts, and the first of these, ending with xii. 36, is the subject of the present volume.

A Plain Commentary on the First Gospel. By an Agnostic. (Williams & Norgate.) The character and aim of this book will be best indicated in the words of its anonymous author. He says:

"All the many commentaries on the Christian Gospels known to us are the work of Christian believers—believers, it is true, of very varying types, but still believers of some type or other. The present work is not. It is the work of a non-believer in Christianity. The subject therefore is here approached from a standpoint entirely different from that of Christian commentators. The one sole object of the present work is to give to readers a faithful record of the impressions, favourable or unfavourable, which have been left upon us by a long study of this Gospel narrative. Our one purpose in this book has been to write down our plain thoughts, unexaggerated and unretained, upon each section of this Gospel matter. And it cannot we think, be without some service even to Christians themselves to record the thoughts and impressions produced in the mind of a non-believer by a detailed study of the Gospel narrative."

To judge the Gospel of Matthew and the discourses of Christ which it contains from the point of view of modern political economy and modern social life, with an entire disregard of the Oriental colouring of the thought and the figurative language in which it is generally expressed, is, it need scarcely be said, to misjudge and misunderstand it. This, however, is very much what the Agnostic does. That his book shows considerable cleverness need not be denied; but whether his proceeding is consistent with good taste, with good sense, or with a reasonable respect for a venerable document which, where it is not deemed absolutely sacred, is still highly valued as the record of a apostles' life, is another matter.

Johanne writings, Dr. Gloag holds conservative-views far from adequate. As to the other is appreciable; and his treatment of this subject is concealed in the one case, and quite fails to person and mode of action—His showing forth their strongly-contrasted delineations of Christ's however, between John and the Synoptics, in the most conspicuous difference, is that "the correct solution has not yet been discovered." The most conspicuous difference, these that have been suggested, he concludes rejecting one after another the various hypotheses a special dissertation, after stating and as to the day of our Lord's death, on which he have failed to find a completely satisfactory solution"; while in regard to the difference Synoptic Gospels "is a difficulty of which we the omission of the raising of Lazarus in the of the question. Thus, he candidly admits that whole with success, to do justice to both sides sided statement, but has endeavoured, on the credit that he has put forward no merely one-between them. It is, however, to Dr. Gloag's intelligible order, and strike the balance meantime all that remains to be arranged the facts where new light can be looked for; and point of view that it is not easy to see has been so thoroughly investigated from every to be expected that he would. The question the authenticity of John's Gospel. It was not the solution of the still unsettled problem of work, confesses that he has not added much to modesty, Dr. Gloag, in his preface to this enough, but perhaps not with an excess of Introduction to the Johannine Writings. By Paton J. Gloag, D.D. (Nisbet, Madras.)

same date. accepted by the Western Church at about the and thus we are enabled to compare the books Codex Claromontanus, also of the fifth century; photographically and a powerful magnifier. By prints the list of contents prefixed to the codex, which he has deciphered with the aid of Mr. Hoole comes to more solid ground when he legendary story is attributed to the first century, not, of course, St. Thecla of Iconium, whose copied at the expense of an Egyptian lady—the fifth century; and that it may have been majority of editors assign it to the middle of the century as the middle of the fourth century—the belief that the MS. may have been written as Solomon, are missing. Putting these test-monies together, Mr. Hoole is disposed to second Epistle of Clement and the Psalms of which ought to contain the conclusion of the As is well known, the last pages of the MS., As is well known, the last pages of the MS., pressed in Egypt by the Mubamadans"

"The following volume . . . was written, as we have received from tradition, by the hand of Thecla, an Egyptian lady of noble birth, about 1300 years from the present date [1626], and shortly after the Nicene Council [325]. The name of Thecla was originally written at the end of the volume, but was lost when Christianity was suppressed in Egypt by the Mubamadans" signs a Latin note: formerly been patriarch of Alexandria, himself Thecla the Martyr. Cyril Lucaris, who had was believed to be written by the hand of Another, also in Arabic, states that the book written by Athanasius the humble."

Made an inalienable gift to the Patriarchal cell in the city of Alexandria. Whosoever shall remove it thence shall be accursed and cut off.

One, in Arabic, of about 1310 A.D., is to the following effect:

Memoranda in later hands are written upon it. bishop Abbott and Sir Thomas Roe. Various partly through the intervention of Archbishop Lucaris, patriarch of Constantinople, and presented to Charles I. in 1626 by Cyril Charlie Harrowell, the son, falls into the hands of a scheming adventurer, which leads to a rupture with his father; and the old man being murdered soon after, suspicion falls upon the son. This is throughout a sensible and well-executed story. There is nothing, indeed, particularly original in any part of the book, and some of the characters—Mr. Chalvey, for instance, the detective—are rather hackneyed. But the author is a deft hand both in construction of plot and in descriptive narrative, whether the subject of the latter be town life, or country life, or family politics, or domestic arrangements, or upholstery, or popular manners and customs, or in short, anything in ordinary everyday matters that lends itself to graphic treatment. His book is thoroughly enjoyable.

The Earl of Desart shows to much better advantage in his latest book, Allen's Tor, than in his earlier productions. For one bickering, but no match for the cunning man, and above all petty quarrels and minister, the Rev. Robert Miller, a superior well-drawn portrait of the Congregationalist much humour and effect. There is also a possibility; and the story is worked out with return is not by any means an unreasonable make him think himself desperately in love in with an undergraduate, turn his head, and many failures—to write a good novel about university life, but The Undergraduate is certainly a success. That an aged professor's youthful wife should fall in love with an undergraduate, turn his head, and make him think himself desperately in love in return is not by any means an unreasonable possibility; and the story is worked out with much humour and effect. There is also a well-drawn portrait of the Congregationalist minister, the Rev. Robert Miller, a superior man, and above all petty quarrels and bickering, but no match for the cunning thing, he has on this occasion managed to get hold of a really subtle and moving plot, sufficient of itself to place the novel in a high rank of excellence. That a woman, bound by a great oath to seek out and take vengeance on the seducer of her own sister, should in after years marry unwittingly the very man who committed the act, and only learn the truth on her wedding day, after the performance of the ceremony, is an ingenious conception, and affords room for some fine situations. There is, as in Allen's Tor, by the same writer, a prologue, but better managed than in the latter book, where, if we remember rightly, the prologue was devoted to present day history and filled half the book, while the second half was a history of events that had occurred twenty years previously. The present work is not so humorous as its predecessors; it contains less persiflage and fewer club jokes, and a tragic vein is maintained throughout; but this is none the less an improvement. On the whole this may be considered the writer's best novel. He is good in his butterfly touches, but better far in his serious moods.

If we were not inundated already with narratives of old county families, mediaeval mansions with secret chambers and a ghost, alliances with British nobility, and the like, A Harvest of Three might pass muster as a fair novel. Ceil and North Beverley have been brought up with their uncle, Thomas Holden, a country landowner, and are pre-eminently his heirs, until the wife of the latter's younger son, Edward, arrives upon the scene with her boy, Walter, and continues to support them in their uncle's affections to such good purpose that on his death they are left in absolute poverty. One has read so many scores of exactly similar tales, involving nefarious and temporarily successful schemes for diverting the succession to property from the right people in favour of some astute adventurer, that at least a portion of the interest is lost from the outset. As for the plot, though of the truest sort, as already stated, it is well sustained and worked out with commendable mediocrity. There is not much further fault to be found, beyond the suggestion that an author who indulges in classical phrases and quotations might well take the trouble to verify them. Thus, "felix mas" is not the Latin for a male fern; and we have a well-known hexameter line quoted thus, "gutta cavat lapidem non vised semper cadendo," and obligingly converted for us at the bottom of the page. It is exceedingly difficult—as proved by many failures—to write a good novel about university life, but The Undergraduate is certainly a success. That an aged professor's youthful wife should fall in love with an undergraduate, turn his head, and make him think himself desperately in love in return is not by any means an unreasonable possibility; and the story is worked out with much humour and effect. There is also a well-drawn portrait of the Congregationalist minister, the Rev. Robert Miller, a superior man, and above all petty quarrels and bickering, but no match for the cunning thing, he has on this occasion managed to get hold of a really subtle and moving plot, sufficient of itself to place the novel in a high rank of excellence. That a woman, bound by a great oath to seek out and take vengeance on the seducer of her own sister, should in after years marry unwittingly the very man who committed the act, and only learn the truth on her wedding day, after the performance of the ceremony, is an ingenious conception, and affords room for some fine situations. There is, as in Allen's Tor, by the same writer, a prologue, but better managed than in the latter book, where, if we remember rightly, the prologue was devoted to present day history and filled half the book, while the second half was a history of events that had occurred twenty years previously. The present work is not so humorous as its predecessors; it contains less persiflage and fewer club jokes, and a tragic vein is maintained throughout; but this is none the less an improvement. On the whole this may be considered the writer's best novel. He is good in his butterfly touches, but better far in his serious moods.

Mr. Grant Allen is an author who is always entitled to respectful notice. He possesses a powerful descriptive vein, and has written novels of undoubted merit. For this very reason it is impossible to congratulate him on having entered for, and won, the prize of £1000 offered by a well-known weekly for the best serial tale of a certain length submitted to them. There is a proverbial mediocrity attaching to prize compositions, and in the present instance the conditions ensuring mediocrity were only too apparent. If you write purely for the million, you are almost bound, in transalantic phrases, to "write pretty low down"; and this, it is to be feared, is what Mr. Allen deliberately set himself to do. What's Bred in the Bone has its merits, no doubt, but they are not the merits which have won for the writer his reputation. Anybody fresh from perusal of, say, The Trials of Shem, could scarcely fail to be struck with the inferiority of the present work. There are no gorgeous descriptions of scenery, no delightful portraits of girton girls or Arab beauties: the million do not care much about these things. They care for what they find in this book: railway smashes, forgery, blackmail, murder, criminal trials, in short all the stock-in-trade of the professed sensational writer. In keeping with the above, there is in the book a plentiful element of English provincial aristocracy; and the twin brothers, of unknown parentage, who form the central figures, turn out to be heirs to large landed property. That the plot is ingeniously constructed, the dialogue brisk, and the whole narrative thrilling, may be taken for granted. It will probably be a popular book, but only in the sense in which a highly-coloured picture of Tel-el-Kebir or Raphael's Madonnas. For Mr. Grant Allen's own sake, it is no unkindness to express wish that somebody else had won the big prize.

The past generation has witnessed the whitewashing and canonisation of so many well-known historical monsters, that no one need be surprised at the appearance of another candidate for our favourable consideration. In Traveller, Mr. Bain holds a brief for the infamous Don Pedro, King of Castile, whose life appears to have been passed in a continual struggle with turbulent nobles, and whose severity earned for him the title of "The Cruel." Not much is remembered of this monarch, beyond the fact that our Edward, the Black Prince, espoused his cause, and assisted him to win an important victory, but speedily quarrelled with him and returned home. Whether Mr. Bain has successfully vindicated his hero's character is, perhaps, a little open to doubt. He quotes, in an appendix, some apparently rather random remarks of Froissart and others; and he complains that Don Pedro, like Wallenstein, had the misfortune to offend the order which afterwards runs away from home heartbroken, and whose subsequent fortunes constitute the entire story. Though interesting, the narrative is often of a rather depressing nature. The ending is sad; and the book would be easier to read if it were less abundantly stocked with specimens of the dialect of the American lower classes.

RECENT THEOLOGY.

J. BARROW ALLEN.

By the late Bishop Hamner. Edited and completed by J. H. Lightfoot. (Macmillans.) We have here, published by the trustees of the Lightfoot Fund, the condensed result of the life-long years of study which the great Bishop of Durham devoted to those documents of primitive Christianity known to theologians as the Apostolic Fathers. The book is apparently intended for the lay public, who may wish to have these documents before them, both in the original Greek and in translation, with just so much of introduction as may explain their found in the researches of our own country-men. M. Bapst, however, is anything but a mere Dryasdust. He is a most genuine lover of literature, and appears to take special delight in early English verse, of which he has culled and translated into his own language several exquisite specimens in the book before us. It is true of the facts he has himself brought to light. I mean especially opinions touching Mr. Friedmann and Mr. Round in believing Anne to have been older than her sister Mary is a point on which I might perhaps refrain from criticism, though, to my mind, some phases of court life in the days of Henry VIII., and to give additional relish to the poetry of the time.

But who are the two "gentilshommes poëtes" here treated of? The two court poets of the period always named together are Wyatt and Surrey; they are supposed, though quite erroneously, to have been intimate friends; and, as no other two are so well known, the reader will probably suppose that they are the pair treated of in this volume. This, however, is not the case. Surrey is, indeed, the second of the two; but the first is Lord Rochford, the unhappy brother of Anne Boleyn, of whom, though he is included in Walpole's Royal and Noble Authors, very few Englishmen are aware that he was a poet at all.

It is a fact, however, as we know from good authorities, that he did write verses; only what verses he wrote it is not possible now to say. One poem, first printed in Tottel's Miscellany and commonly attributed to Wyatt, might fairly be ascribed to him on the testimony of Sir John Harrington, but that Dr. Nott informs us he had seen the original of it signed by Sir J. Wyatt himself. M. Bapst, however, does not attach much credit to Dr. Nott's testimony in the matter; which is surely a little strange, seeing that the latter has actually given in his book a facsimile of Wyatt's handwriting from the MS. in which this poem occurs, and there are many other specimens with which it can be compared. So that, unless we suppose Wyatt to have put his signature to another man's composition, it is hard to doubt the authorship. Indeed, if we did so, we should almost be driven to the very bold supposition that Rochford was a greater master of lyric verse than Wyatt; for the poem in question, beginning

"My late, awake, perform the last Labour that thou and I must waste," is really superior in its melody to the great majority of Wyatt's compositions. Such an hypothesis would require better evidence to support it than Sir John Harrington's testimony. But whatever his practical merits may have been, it is certain that Rochford was a man of very considerable ability; and his life is so closely connected with the story of his unfortunate sister, that all that may be known of it has special interest in relation to one of the most striking passages in English history. Here M. Bapst has done very good service indeed, showing how very ably he acquitted himself in various foreign embassies, every one of them connected with the interests of his sister, which required very delicate handling. Yet, painstaking and valuable as this work certainly is, I cannot help expressing some surprise at one or two incidental charges (even if they were somewhat over-drawn) brought by his own mother against his father, we cannot say that there was anything in his domestic training to make the darker view altogether improbable. He was, in fact, simply a young aristocrat who loved the company of a king's son, and despised the humble citizens of London; whose fiery temper got him at one time into very serious danger; who shared with his family the ups and downs of court life, all the Howards being more or less involved in the disgrace of two of Henry's queens; who, when his cousin, Katharine Howard, was in the ascendant, was made a Knight of the Garter at the early age of twenty-three; who, a few months later, saw that cousin put to death; who soon afterwards found himself a prisoner in the Fleet, and again, somewhat later, in the Tower, but whose services being by-and-by wanted for the war in France, he was made a general at twenty-seven; who, finally, with his father, incurred the jealousy of Henry VIII., and became the last victim of that monster's tyranny.

His poetry reflects pretty faithfully the general character of his life—chivalrous, passionate, and chagrined; and his life, thanks to M. Bapst, may now be read in detail as it has not been hitherto. Among other results of M. Bapst's investigations, he no surprise to critical students—that the legend of Surrey having met the fair Geraldine in Tuscany is shown to be impossible, as there is no room for a visit to Italy in any part of his brief career.

one man against whom there was real matter of offence escaped merely with a few days' imprisonment? Or, again, is it conceivable that the mistress of Sir Thomas Wyatt should for a long time have resisted the advances of the king? For M. Bapst admits that she did so; and indeed, it is hardly possible to suppose otherwise, seeing that she at length succeeded in sharing Henry's throne. Anne was no saint, and it would have been strange if she had been; but to do her justice we must think of her as one who, in a court full of free love and amorous minstrelsy, evinced some degree of self-control. Her coquetry constituted at least half her charms (for of her beauty there was more than one opinion), and imposed a certain limit upon familiarity. After reading Sir William Kingston's letters about her conversation when she was in the Tower, I think it hard to believe that anyone but the king ever brought against her and her own brother could not even have been made plausible if their general behaviour had been superior to that of the court in which they moved. Surrey is the poet of the later part of Henry's reign. At the death of Anne Boleyn and Lord Rochford he was only eighteen. But the moral atmosphere in which he continually moved, from boyhood to his death at the early age of twenty-nine, was little better than that of his cousin Anne Boleyn's court; and I rather fear M. Bapst takes somewhat too high a view of his character. He was, indeed, frank and outspoken; but it is evident that he was wild and willful, and M. Bapst himself shows in his true light the mock Turf-tism London which in his address to the city of that the infamous advice he was charged with giving to his own sister was really, as M. Bapst very plausibly points out, only a piece of bitter sarcasm, may be true; but the case is by no means free from ambiguity. And when we consider the sort of house in which he was brought up, and the frightful charges (even if they were somewhat over-drawn) brought by his own mother against his father, we cannot say that there was anything in his domestic training to make the darker view altogether improbable.

NEW NOVELS.
The Alderman's Children. By J. Brinsley-Richards. In 3 vols. (Bentley).
Helen's Toy. By the Earl of Desart. In 2 vols. (Sonnenschein).
A Harvest of Tears. By Vere Clavering. In 2 vols. (Hurst & Blackett).
The Undergraduate. By R. G. Dering. In 2 vols. (Bentley).
What's Bred in the Bone. By Grant Allen. (Hogarth of T. B. N.).
Teacher. By F. W. Bain. (Percival & Co.).
In The Alderman's Children we have an account of a merchant who from very humble surroundings has risen to enormous wealth, and endeavours to bind down his son and two daughters to the primitive simplicity of life that characterised his own early years. The mischief begins when, having amassed over a million of money, he announces to his astonished family, who had previously been kept in ignorance of their father's pecuniary means, the brilliant patrimony in store for them, without, however, making anything more than an insignificant increase in their allowances.

JAMES CAIRDNER.
TALY in any part of his brief career. possible, as there is no room for a visit to Geraldine in Tuscany is shown to be impossible, as there is no room for a visit to Italy in any part of his brief career.

" I love my God o'er all," he said,
 " And then I love my land,
 And next I love my Lily sweet,
 Who pledged me her white hand;
 To each—to all—I'm ever true;
 To God—to Ireland, and to you."
 " No tender nurse his hard bed smoothed,
 (Or softly raised his head;
 He fell asleep and woke in heaven,
 Ere I knew that he was dead;
 Yet why should I my darling rue?
 He was to God and Ireland true.
 " Oh! 'tis a glorious memory,
 I'm prouder than a queen
 To sit beside my hero's grave,
 And think on what has been:
 And oh, my darling, I am true
 To God—to Ireland—and to you."
 " A Legend of Tyone."
 (The first and last stanzas are omitted.)
 " Crouched round a bare hearth in hard, frosty
 weather,
 Three lone helpless things ching closely together:
 Tangled those gold locks once bonnie and bright,
 There's no one to fondle the baby to-night.
 " My mummy I want; oh! my mummy I want!"
 The big tears stream down with a low wailing chant.
 Sweet Eily's slight arms enfold the gold head;
 " Poor wenny Willie, sure mummy is dead."
 " And daddie is crazy from drinking all day,
 Come down, holy angels, and take us away;
 Eily and Eddie keep kissing and crying—
 Outside, the wild winds are sobbing and sighing.
 " All in a moment the children are still,
 Only a quick coo of gladness from Will.
 For, clothed in soft raiment, the mother stands
 there.
 " They gather around her, they cling to her dress:
 She rains down soft kisses for each shy carress:
 Her light, loving touches, smooth out tangled locks,
 And pressed to her bosom the baby she rocks.
 " He lies in his cot, there's a fire on the hearth;
 To Eily and Eddie 'tis heaven upon earth;
 For mother's delf fingers have been every where,
 She tulle them to rest in the low singant chair.
 " They gaze open-eyed, then the eyes gently close,
 As petals fold in the heart of a rose,
 But ere soon again in awe, love, but not fear,
 And fondly they murmur, "Our mummy is here."
 " She lays them down softly, she wraps them
 around,
 They lie in sweet slumbers, she starts at a sound;
 The cock loudly crows, and the spire's away—
 The duncard treads in at the dawning of day."
 " A Mother's Lament," the song "Oh,
 " My watching, oh, I'm watching," "My
 Dead," "How to Carrigan," "Ireland's Dead," "God bless the Little Children," are all genuine poems of their kind, but too long to quote.
 A photograph of Miss O'Leary fronts the title page; and there is an interesting introduction by Mr. T. W. Rolleston, giving some account of the Fenian movement in which she played her part.
 J. TODDNER.

history of war, therefore, as it illustrates truths universally applicable in every age, is of the very highest practical value; it is most significant that Napoleon recommends the soldier who seeks to master his art to study the campaigns of seven commanders, none of whom, excepting Frederick the Great, can be said to have led a modern army.
 WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.
 "Days of Country Home and Friends. By Ellen O'Leary. (Dublin: Sealy, Byles & Walker.)
 This unpretending little volume charms by its absolute simplicity and absence of literary artifice. Its author was Irish of the Irish; and these unstudied songs, coming straight from her heart, go straight to the heart of those to whom Ireland is more than a name.
 They are homely songs, sung with tears in the voice, artless in the best sense of the word, full of feeling, tender and deep, which seems to tremble into expression on the lips of the singer without a self-conscious phrase. The best of them should come to her countrymen and countrywomen scattered in strange lands as things of the soil, Irish shawmicks with the dew on them. The worst of them are at least unpretending verses, genuine of their kind.
 There is nothing here of the ornate simplicity of the cultured versemaker, or of that studied pathos which makes the reader feel a little after-taste of shame when he has been moved by it. There is rather something of that almost stern reticence of feeling which is characteristic of the best kind of Irish character. There are also quaint old-fashioned turns of expression, which would seem stiff and affected in any English writer, but which still live a belated life in Irish national poetry.
 Miss O'Leary lived in the midst of that Fenian movement which failed in 1865; and many of her poems are the outcome of the emotions of this period of struggle, so full of hope and yet so hopeless. In these poems there are none of those rhetorical flourishes which we find in many of the patriotic effusions of her countrymen. There is little or nothing that a critic could take exception to on the score of bad taste. Whatever one may think of the movement itself, there can be no doubt as to Miss O'Leary's deep love of her country, and of the friends with whom she worked and suffered. At worst, the reader can but regret that she has the defects of her merits, that in some of her poems there are lines which make him wish that she had studied the art of versification a little more closely.
 A few extracts will suffice to recommend the little book to those capable of feeling its simple charm.
 Here is a little song on the death of a political prisoner in Millbank gaol.
 "To God and Ireland True."
 "I sit beside my darling's grave,
 And in the prison die,
 Who in the prison died,
 And tho' my tears fall thick and fast,
 I think of him with pride;
 Ay, softly fall my tears like dew,
 For one to God and Ireland true."
 "I love my God o'er all," he said,
 "And then I love my land,
 And next I love my Lily sweet,
 Who pledged me her white hand;
 To each—to all—I'm ever true;
 To God—to Ireland, and to you."
 "No tender nurse his hard bed smoothed,
 (Or softly raised his head;
 He fell asleep and woke in heaven,
 Ere I knew that he was dead;
 Yet why should I my darling rue?
 He was to God and Ireland true.
 "Oh! 'tis a glorious memory,
 I'm prouder than a queen
 To sit beside my hero's grave,
 And think on what has been:
 And oh, my darling, I am true
 To God—to Ireland—and to you."
 "A Legend of Tyone."
 (The first and last stanzas are omitted.)
 "Crouched round a bare hearth in hard, frosty
 weather,
 Three lone helpless things ching closely together:
 Tangled those gold locks once bonnie and bright,
 There's no one to fondle the baby to-night.
 "My mummy I want; oh! my mummy I want!"
 The big tears stream down with a low wailing chant.
 Sweet Eily's slight arms enfold the gold head;
 "Poor wenny Willie, sure mummy is dead."
 "And daddie is crazy from drinking all day,
 Come down, holy angels, and take us away;
 Eily and Eddie keep kissing and crying—
 Outside, the wild winds are sobbing and sighing.
 "All in a moment the children are still,
 Only a quick coo of gladness from Will.
 For, clothed in soft raiment, the mother stands
 there.
 "They gather around her, they cling to her dress:
 She rains down soft kisses for each shy carress:
 Her light, loving touches, smooth out tangled
 locks,
 And pressed to her bosom the baby she rocks.
 "He lies in his cot, there's a fire on the hearth;
 To Eily and Eddie 'tis heaven upon earth;
 For mother's delf fingers have been every where,
 She tulle them to rest in the low singant chair.
 "They gaze open-eyed, then the eyes gently close,
 As petals fold in the heart of a rose,
 But ere soon again in awe, love, but not fear,
 And fondly they murmur, "Our mummy is here."
 "She lays them down softly, she wraps them
 around,
 They lie in sweet slumbers, she starts at a
 sound;
 The cock loudly crows, and the spire's away—
 The duncard treads in at the dawning of day."
 "A Mother's Lament," the song "Oh,
 "My watching, oh, I'm watching," "My
 Dead," "How to Carrigan," "Ireland's Dead," "God bless the Little Children," are all genuine poems of their kind, but too
 long to quote.
 A photograph of Miss O'Leary fronts the title page; and there is an interesting introduction by Mr. T. W. Rolleston, giving some account of the Fenian movement in which she played her part.
 J. TODDNER.

groups of men, continually supported by groups in reserve, that can move in rapid order, and make the best use of their arms.
 As for cavalry, its power may have perhaps increased. Certainly, it cannot attack under cover or from folds in the ground; and mounted infantry, though a different arm, is also one that may be very effective. The arm of artillery should be more than ever trained to throw a collected and accurate fire, and to prepare the battle for the attacking force, or in retreat to cover the infantry; but Napoleon's reserves of the infantry; but Napoleon's reserves of guns are things of the past, and as many batteries as possible should be pushed to the front. As to the combined action of the three arms, we can only refer to Col.
 Maurice's work for excellent and judicious remarks.
 Col. Maurice, in concluding, has given us a chapter on military history and its use to the soldier. This is, we think, the least valuable part of his book. He has scarcely gone into the depths of the subject. Military history is, in a special way, a philosophy teaching by examples; and the art of war is not to be set out in a series of a priori rules, but is to be gathered from the exploits of great captains. Whatever may be the material conditions of warfare at any given period, there are certain controlling truths which transcend them; and as mind rules matter, and the faculties of man must always play an immense part in war, the achievements of the past are of supreme importance in the study of the noble profession of arms. We shall illustrate what we mean by two or three examples out of hundreds written on the face of history.
 The command of the sea may be decisive in war, whether its instruments be rude and weak, or perfect: it gave Rome her triumph in the Second Punic War, after Hannibal had brought her to the verge of ruin;
 it secured the allies success in the siege of Sebastopol. Again, many of the higher operations of war must remain predominant for all ages: certain methods of strategy may, perhaps, be more or less effective as time brings its changes; but the conflict on the Métairus, some of the marches of and Uim, teach lessons of equal importance, at least, as those of the campaign of 1870-1.
 War, too, in its grandest facts, in its "divine side," to use Napoleon's expressive phrase, is essentially a contest between opposing leaders which brings out their moral and intellectual powers; and the play and action of these has, in most contests, had decisive effects on the ultimate issue. The campaigns of Moltke form no exception to a truth which has only seemed obscured because the German armies had an overwhelming superiority of force in 1870, and even in 1866, beyond mere numbers. For instance, had Turenne stood in the place of Benedek, we should scarcely have witnessed the day of Sadowa; had Napoleon held the staff of Bazaine, the army of the Rhine would not have been shut up ignominiously in Metz as it in a trap. The given of Mrs. Carlyle's pre-nuptial love affairs. Mrs. Ireland publishes some letters of Mrs. Carlyle to Mrs. Dinning (the "Grace Rennie" of the old Haddington days), Miss Lewsbury, and Mr. Henry Tarkin, that have never before appeared. The letters to Mrs. Dinning show their author at her best and kindest, but are not otherwise remarkable. Finally, Mrs. Ireland writes brightly, carefully, and sympathetically. She is too effusive, however—too fond of bursting out into adjectives like "brilliant," "dainty," and "griffed"—when speaking of her favourite. No doubt Colonel Maurice, we think, might have dwelt on the circumstance that this phenomenon is by no means novel; and that all ages it has been one of the secrets of the success in war of illustrious chiefs that they have understood how new material conditions may affect their work and determine its character. It is believed that Hannibal would not have crossed the Alps had he not possessed an explosive akin to dynamite. The discovery of gunpowder, as everyone knows, transformed the whole warfare of the Middle Ages. So, too, the growing numbers and power of infantry enabled Turone to make his wars of marches, as distinguished from previous wars of sieges—a revolution of extreme importance; so the progress of husbandry and the multiplication of roads, which had taken place since the days of Frederick, appreciated by Napoleon with perfect insight, were among the causes of the great victories of his youth. In the same way the sagacious and full perception of the changes wrought in the nature of war by the material inventions of the last half century explain a great deal of the success of Moltke, and of the German armies in 1870-1.

So long, therefore, as civilisation is growing, war will certainly be a progressive art, largely affected by changing material conditions. How greatly these conditions, as they are due to the inventions of the last fifty years and to other causes of a material kind, have influenced tactics, is fully recognised: they have wrought a revolution in this sphere of the art, on which we shall say a word afterwards. It has been said, however, that that has had no effect on strategy—on the great combinations, on the theatre of war, which guide armies and lead up to battles; and it is undoubtedly true that these will always mainly depend on the facilities of the chiefs in command. But it is not the less certain that material facts have, in all ages, affected strategy, and have specially affected it of late years; and the military student should keep this fully in view. Colonel Maurice's argument on this head is one of the most valuable parts of his work; and we would select it for special praise, if we differ from him in some particulars. We can only refer to a few of the instances in which recent material conditions have told on strategy. The growth of population and conscription have enabled and quadrupled the size of armies; and as no single general can lead a great modern army, there must be more independence of separate commands than ever has been the case formerly. Again, the sculptor with colours and marble; it is the scarcely changing words; the painter and architect as the masterpieces of Shakespeare and Raphael. But the poet has to deal with time; the campaigns of Napoleon are as monuments of grandeur, through the night of plots of Hannibal shine out, like monuments in their higher aspects. The extent and power; and these determine its products in their higher aspects. Like all arts, it depends on human genius and power; and these determine its products in their higher aspects. The extent and power; and these determine its products in their higher aspects.

War. By Col. F. Maurice. (Macmillans.)
 WILKIAN WALLACE.

book. enthusiasm a blot on an otherwise good gushing and redundant expression of that a woman of a woman. None the less is the her enthusiasm is excusable; she writes as when speaking of her favourite. No doubt like "brilliant," "dainty," and "griffed"—ever—too fond of bursting out into adjectives sympathetic. She is too effusive, however, Ireland writes brightly, carefully, and not otherwise remarkable. Finally, Mrs. author at her best and kindest, but are The letters to Mrs. Dinning show their Tarkin, that have never before appeared. days), Miss Lewsbury, and Mr. Henry the "Grace Rennie" of the old Haddington letters of Mrs. Carlyle to Mrs. Dinning affairs. Mrs. Ireland publishes some given of Mrs. Carlyle's pre-nuptial love railways have made the whole system of supplies and transport infinitely more effective than was thought possible, say, in the Crimean war; and military operations have become more rapid, more ample, and even, perhaps, more decisive than was usual in the days of Napoleon. So, too, material conditions have told on strategy even in its manœuvres and peculiar methods; the strategic movements of a preceding age may have different results, in some respects, if copied and undertaken in our own. For example, the telegraph and the communication it may establish between converging armies made the invasion of Bohemia in 1866 less perilous than it was in 1756-7, though Moltke's strategy cannot be deemed admirable. Again, the value of interior lines, as was seen even in the campaign of 1813, in operating against divided enemies may be less important than it was of old. An army of 300,000 men will be less formidable in this position to two of old. A sudden invasion of the Middle Ages. So, too, the growing numbers and power of infantry enabled Turone to make his wars of marches, as distinguished from previous wars of sieges—a revolution of extreme importance; so the progress of husbandry and the multiplication of roads, which had taken place since the days of Frederick, appreciated by Napoleon with perfect insight, were among the causes of the great victories of his youth. In the same way the sagacious and full perception of the changes wrought in the nature of war by the material inventions of the last half century explain a great deal of the success of Moltke, and of the German armies in 1870-1.

So long, therefore, as civilisation is growing, war will certainly be a progressive art, largely affected by changing material conditions. How greatly these conditions, as they are due to the inventions of the last fifty years and to other causes of a material kind, have influenced tactics, is fully recognised: they have wrought a revolution in this sphere of the art, on which we shall say a word afterwards. It has been said, however, that that has had no effect on strategy—on the theatre of war, which guide armies and lead up to battles; and it is undoubtedly true that these will always mainly depend on the facilities of the chiefs in command. But it is not the less certain that material facts have, in all ages, affected strategy, and have specially affected it of late years; and the military student should keep this fully in view. Colonel Maurice's argument on this head is one of the most valuable parts of his work; and we would select it for special praise, if we differ from him in some particulars. We can only refer to a few of the instances in which recent material conditions have told on strategy. The growth of population and conscription have enabled and quadrupled the size of armies; and as no single general can lead a great modern army, there must be more independence of separate commands than ever has been the case formerly. Again, the sculptor with colours and marble; it is the scarcely changing words; the painter and architect as the masterpieces of Shakespeare and Raphael. But the poet has to deal with time; the campaigns of Napoleon are as monuments of grandeur, through the night of plots of Hannibal shine out, like monuments in their higher aspects. The extent and power; and these determine its products in their higher aspects. The extent and power; and these determine its products in their higher aspects.

St. Brandan were hence derived. Heltinger gives a list of some nine such visions of comparison.

We cannot conclude without expressing a wish that Prof. Rhys, or some other Celtic scholar of equal power, would give us a Corpus Poeticum Occidentale. At present, ordinary readers are somewhat at a loss. Then, to quote Blake's slightly grotesque eloquence, we should see

"those naked heroes in the Welsh mountains—the 'Elysian Fields of the North,' by their name of the Glistening Fields, Glastiryll, remarks that 'this name answers, more or less, to the glass mountain of our fairy tales. It was a Celtic belief also.' This helps to force upon us the belief that in 'Glastonbury' we have, as so many scholars have thought, the same idea. It is curious to see that Prof. Rhys quotes a passage of Ptolemy, De Defectu Orientum, to illustrate the ancient belief in Western Isles of the Dead, sometimes represented by our islands, since the same passage was quoted, two centuries ago, by Dr. Henry More, the Platonist and Cartesian, in his Immortality of the Soul, to prove that after death the soul of man either rose from its 'aerial vehicle' to an aërial, or fell from it to a terrestrial. What will the passage be quoted to prove two centuries hence? Another attractive question is the character of Urien, Lord of the Evening. Whence was derived the fantastic medieval conception of Sir Urien, the Devil in his most lecherous and vulgar form? We all remember him in the Waldmännchen: 'Dort sammelt sich der grosse Hauf, Herr Urien sitzt oben auf.' It is possible that Blake, whose knowledge of Celtic things was rather strange, derived from some stray hint of Urogen or Urien the idea of his Urien, whose attributes are precisely those assigned to Urien in Welsh mythology. How far back, again, can be traced that story of Guinevere, 'Ridendo, parve quælla che tossio Al primo fallo scritto di Ginevra'? Is there any reference to the story, discoverable in Welsh, and earlier than the French and Malory versions?

But we might go on in this desultory way for ever, to the just irritation of scholars. I have but set down these rough notes to show that this kind of book may be partially employed by one entirely without special scholarship. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Zimmer, to name but two abroad; some six or eight scholars at home; these will give to this book a proper consideration. Dr. Gaeter, also, will have to reckon with it in establishing his strange Arthurian theory. But there is no 'man of letters' who may not read it with profit and delight. 'There is human nature,' says Mr. George Meredith, 'and there is Welsh nature;' but Prof. Rhys writes in no spirit of carping patriotism. He will not allow much weight to Teutonic influence in English literature. How we rejoice! How Matthew Arnold would have rejoiced to hear it! But, 'whatever preponderance may be found in this work to the side of the Welsh,' to quote Warington's preface to his 'History of Wales,' it is a fair and estimable preference. 'There can be no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtic simplicity with modern refinement.' Had Goldsmith read this book he might have modified that comparison.

Life of Jane Welsh Carlyle. By Mrs. Alexander Ireland. (Chatto & Windus.) From one point of view this book is unquestionably disappointing. It supplies no fresh information of the first importance relating to the married life of the Carlys; and, of course, it may be argued that no addition should be made to the overflowing and embittered literature of this subject, unless it contains such information. At the same time no formal memoir of Mrs. Carlyle has, up till now, been published; and she certainly deserved to have such a tribute paid to her memory, even although she has been portrayed in a host of attitudes, in the Reminiscences, in Mr. Froude's biography of her husband, and in the various volumes of her Correspondence which have been published, and of which Mr. Ritchie's Carlyle Letters are the pleasantest reading. Besides, Mrs. Ireland has a special object in view:

"to echo from my heart the opinions of those who were privileged to know Jane Welsh Carlyle—those whose eyes were open to her deep charm, and her life of pain." A new study of a tolerably familiar subject is always justified by success.

present instance. Mrs. Ireland does not disguise the weaknesses of her heroine—majority of Mrs. Carlyle's champions, she does not think it necessary to dilate upon the "selfishness" or even the bearishness of Mrs. Carlyle's husband. She puts in a nutshell, indeed, the whole story of the temporary difference between the two when she says—

"Had he but shown signs of recognition, had Mrs. Ireland's volume is chiefly valuable because it is the best balanced and most authoritative study of Mrs. Carlyle that has yet been published. Some of its minor excellences may be noticed. Nothing could be more elaborate than the account Mrs. Ireland gives of the Welsh ancestry. She calculates to a nicety—if not to a fault—how much there was of Knox, of Wallace, and of gipsy, blood in Mrs. Carlyle's veins. Then no more detailed description has ever before been gives a list of some nine such visions of comparison.

We cannot conclude without expressing a wish that Prof. Rhys, or some other Celtic scholar of equal power, would give us a Corpus Poeticum Occidentale. At present, ordinary readers are somewhat at a loss. Then, to quote Blake's slightly grotesque eloquence, we should see

"those naked heroes in the Welsh mountains—the 'Elysian Fields of the North,' by their name of the Glistening Fields, Glastiryll, remarks that 'this name answers, more or less, to the glass mountain of our fairy tales. It was a Celtic belief also.' This helps to force upon us the belief that in 'Glastonbury' we have, as so many scholars have thought, the same idea. It is curious to see that Prof. Rhys quotes a passage of Ptolemy, De Defectu Orientum, to illustrate the ancient belief in Western Isles of the Dead, sometimes represented by our islands, since the same passage was quoted, two centuries ago, by Dr. Henry More, the Platonist and Cartesian, in his Immortality of the Soul, to prove that after death the soul of man either rose from its 'aerial vehicle' to an aërial, or fell from it to a terrestrial. What will the passage be quoted to prove two centuries hence? Another attractive question is the character of Urien, Lord of the Evening. Whence was derived the fantastic medieval conception of Sir Urien, the Devil in his most lecherous and vulgar form? We all remember him in the Waldmännchen: 'Dort sammelt sich der grosse Hauf, Herr Urien sitzt oben auf.' It is possible that Blake, whose knowledge of Celtic things was rather strange, derived from some stray hint of Urogen or Urien the idea of his Urien, whose attributes are precisely those assigned to Urien in Welsh mythology. How far back, again, can be traced that story of Guinevere, 'Ridendo, parve quælla che tossio Al primo fallo scritto di Ginevra'? Is there any reference to the story, discoverable in Welsh, and earlier than the French and Malory versions?

But we might go on in this desultory way for ever, to the just irritation of scholars. I have but set down these rough notes to show that this kind of book may be partially employed by one entirely without special scholarship. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Zimmer, to name but two abroad; some six or eight scholars at home; these will give to this book a proper consideration. Dr. Gaeter, also, will have to reckon with it in establishing his strange Arthurian theory. But there is no 'man of letters' who may not read it with profit and delight. 'There is human nature,' says Mr. George Meredith, 'and there is Welsh nature;' but Prof. Rhys writes in no spirit of carping patriotism. He will not allow much weight to Teutonic influence in English literature. How we rejoice! How Matthew Arnold would have rejoiced to hear it! But, 'whatever preponderance may be found in this work to the side of the Welsh,' to quote Warington's preface to his 'History of Wales,' it is a fair and estimable preference. 'There can be no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtic simplicity with modern refinement.' Had Goldsmith he manifested some of the 'small sweet courtesies of life,' all had been well," and

In plain words, Mrs. Carlyle—who, with her eyes wide open, entered into a union with a man who declared that he must be master in his own house, and of whom she herself said before marriage that he had "a towering intellect to command me, and a spirit of fire to be the guiding star of my life"—fretted and sought the refuge of silent, if not sullen, discontent, because her husband did not show her some of those small "attentions" which pass for chivalries in What-is-called-Society. One cannot master in his own house, and of whom she herself said before marriage that he had "a towering intellect to command me, and a spirit of fire to be the guiding star of my life"—fretted and sought the refuge of silent, if not sullen, discontent, because her husband did not show her some of those small "attentions" which pass for chivalries in What-is-called-Society. One cannot represented by our islands, since the same passage was quoted, two centuries ago, by Dr. Henry More, the Platonist and Cartesian, in his Immortality of the Soul, to prove that after death the soul of man either rose from its 'aerial vehicle' to an aërial, or fell from it to a terrestrial. What will the passage be quoted to prove two centuries hence? Another attractive question is the character of Urien, Lord of the Evening. Whence was derived the fantastic medieval conception of Sir Urien, the Devil in his most lecherous and vulgar form? We all remember him in the Waldmännchen: 'Dort sammelt sich der grosse Hauf, Herr Urien sitzt oben auf.' It is possible that Blake, whose knowledge of Celtic things was rather strange, derived from some stray hint of Urogen or Urien the idea of his Urien, whose attributes are precisely those assigned to Urien in Welsh mythology. How far back, again, can be traced that story of Guinevere, 'Ridendo, parve quælla che tossio Al primo fallo scritto di Ginevra'? Is there any reference to the story, discoverable in Welsh, and earlier than the French and Malory versions?

But we might go on in this desultory way for ever, to the just irritation of scholars. I have but set down these rough notes to show that this kind of book may be partially employed by one entirely without special scholarship. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Zimmer, to name but two abroad; some six or eight scholars at home; these will give to this book a proper consideration. Dr. Gaeter, also, will have to reckon with it in establishing his strange Arthurian theory. But there is no 'man of letters' who may not read it with profit and delight. 'There is human nature,' says Mr. George Meredith, 'and there is Welsh nature;' but Prof. Rhys writes in no spirit of carping patriotism. He will not allow much weight to Teutonic influence in English literature. How we rejoice! How Matthew Arnold would have rejoiced to hear it! But, 'whatever preponderance may be found in this work to the side of the Welsh,' to quote Warington's preface to his 'History of Wales,' it is a fair and estimable preference. 'There can be no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtic simplicity with modern refinement.' Had Goldsmith read this book he might have modified that comparison.

We cannot conclude without expressing a wish that Prof. Rhys, or some other Celtic scholar of equal power, would give us a Corpus Poeticum Occidentale. At present, ordinary readers are somewhat at a loss. Then, to quote Blake's slightly grotesque eloquence, we should see

"those naked heroes in the Welsh mountains—the 'Elysian Fields of the North,' by their name of the Glistening Fields, Glastiryll, remarks that 'this name answers, more or less, to the glass mountain of our fairy tales. It was a Celtic belief also.' This helps to force upon us the belief that in 'Glastonbury' we have, as so many scholars have thought, the same idea. It is curious to see that Prof. Rhys quotes a passage of Ptolemy, De Defectu Orientum, to illustrate the ancient belief in Western Isles of the Dead, sometimes represented by our islands, since the same passage was quoted, two centuries ago, by Dr. Henry More, the Platonist and Cartesian, in his Immortality of the Soul, to prove that after death the soul of man either rose from its 'aerial vehicle' to an aërial, or fell from it to a terrestrial. What will the passage be quoted to prove two centuries hence? Another attractive question is the character of Urien, Lord of the Evening. Whence was derived the fantastic medieval conception of Sir Urien, the Devil in his most lecherous and vulgar form? We all remember him in the Waldmännchen: 'Dort sammelt sich der grosse Hauf, Herr Urien sitzt oben auf.' It is possible that Blake, whose knowledge of Celtic things was rather strange, derived from some stray hint of Urogen or Urien the idea of his Urien, whose attributes are precisely those assigned to Urien in Welsh mythology. How far back, again, can be traced that story of Guinevere, 'Ridendo, parve quælla che tossio Al primo fallo scritto di Ginevra'? Is there any reference to the story, discoverable in Welsh, and earlier than the French and Malory versions?

But we might go on in this desultory way for ever, to the just irritation of scholars. I have but set down these rough notes to show that this kind of book may be partially employed by one entirely without special scholarship. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Zimmer, to name but two abroad; some six or eight scholars at home; these will give to this book a proper consideration. Dr. Gaeter, also, will have to reckon with it in establishing his strange Arthurian theory. But there is no 'man of letters' who may not read it with profit and delight. 'There is human nature,' says Mr. George Meredith, 'and there is Welsh nature;' but Prof. Rhys writes in no spirit of carping patriotism. He will not allow much weight to Teutonic influence in English literature. How we rejoice! How Matthew Arnold would have rejoiced to hear it! But, 'whatever preponderance may be found in this work to the side of the Welsh,' to quote Warington's preface to his 'History of Wales,' it is a fair and estimable preference. 'There can be no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtic simplicity with modern refinement.' Had Goldsmith read this book he might have modified that comparison.

We cannot conclude without expressing a wish that Prof. Rhys, or some other Celtic scholar of equal power, would give us a Corpus Poeticum Occidentale. At present, ordinary readers are somewhat at a loss. Then, to quote Blake's slightly grotesque eloquence, we should see

"those naked heroes in the Welsh mountains—the 'Elysian Fields of the North,' by their name of the Glistening Fields, Glastiryll, remarks that 'this name answers, more or less, to the glass mountain of our fairy tales. It was a Celtic belief also.' This helps to force upon us the belief that in 'Glastonbury' we have, as so many scholars have thought, the same idea. It is curious to see that Prof. Rhys quotes a passage of Ptolemy, De Defectu Orientum, to illustrate the ancient belief in Western Isles of the Dead, sometimes represented by our islands, since the same passage was quoted, two centuries ago, by Dr. Henry More, the Platonist and Cartesian, in his Immortality of the Soul, to prove that after death the soul of man either rose from its 'aerial vehicle' to an aërial, or fell from it to a terrestrial. What will the passage be quoted to prove two centuries hence? Another attractive question is the character of Urien, Lord of the Evening. Whence was derived the fantastic medieval conception of Sir Urien, the Devil in his most lecherous and vulgar form? We all remember him in the Waldmännchen: 'Dort sammelt sich der grosse Hauf, Herr Urien sitzt oben auf.' It is possible that Blake, whose knowledge of Celtic things was rather strange, derived from some stray hint of Urogen or Urien the idea of his Urien, whose attributes are precisely those assigned to Urien in Welsh mythology. How far back, again, can be traced that story of Guinevere, 'Ridendo, parve quælla che tossio Al primo fallo scritto di Ginevra'? Is there any reference to the story, discoverable in Welsh, and earlier than the French and Malory versions?

But we might go on in this desultory way for ever, to the just irritation of scholars. I have but set down these rough notes to show that this kind of book may be partially employed by one entirely without special scholarship. M. Gaston Paris and Dr. Zimmer, to name but two abroad; some six or eight scholars at home; these will give to this book a proper consideration. Dr. Gaeter, also, will have to reckon with it in establishing his strange Arthurian theory. But there is no 'man of letters' who may not read it with profit and delight. 'There is human nature,' says Mr. George Meredith, 'and there is Welsh nature;' but Prof. Rhys writes in no spirit of carping patriotism. He will not allow much weight to Teutonic influence in English literature. How we rejoice! How Matthew Arnold would have rejoiced to hear it! But, 'whatever preponderance may be found in this work to the side of the Welsh,' to quote Warington's preface to his 'History of Wales,' it is a fair and estimable preference. 'There can be no greater entertainment than to compare the rude Celtic simplicity with modern refinement.' Had Goldsmith

The Editor cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscripts.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the Editor.

LITERATURE.

Studies in the Arthurian Legend. By John Rhys. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.)

IT may be held an impertinence, if not an arrogance, on the part of a writer, that he should dream of reviewing a book of special and recondite learning, unless he be versed in its particular kind of study. Here is a book, written by the Oxford professor of Celtic: thorough to estimate it, a critic must be a student, if not a master, of many sciences—of philology, anthropology, archaeology, palaeography, history; he must be learned in the Celtic tongues, and in all forms of tradition, myth, and folk lore; he requires a familiarity with the early language and literature of France, with medieval Latin, with Anglo-Saxon; if he be something of a numismatologist and epigraphist, so much the better. And, since many of these sciences and studies are of comparatively recent growth, he must keep in contact with the numerous theories of the day. If you are not such a man, so certain people say, confine yourself to talking about Shelley's first wife, and Mr. Austin Dobson's last ballad. So there appears, and daily deepens, a division between learning and literature, and there is a middle way would seem that there is a middle way between these two extremes. Let us illustrate it by two examples: Mr. Keenan is not a Celtic specialist; Matthew Arnold was a specialist in nothing; yet the essays and lectures of those two men, upon things Celtic, have done an immense service to the cause of Celtic scholarship. Any Celtic scholar can detect mistakes in their work; Arthur's round table, with his knights come; Arthur's show; or when Skelton read "of Justice Shallow" or was Sir Dagonet in what was held concerning him when Rhys's conclusions, let us consider a little among the obscure places of anthropology; No light task, this; but in each of Prof. Rhys's sixteen chapters we advance towards solutions of these questions. Only the specialist may venture, as I have said, to criticise; but an "outsider" may be allowed to make a few remarks illustrating the general interest of the book.

In his most fascinating chapter upon the Isles of the Dead, Prof. Rhys does not quote those strange lines of Claudian in Rhythmum, I, 123-128—a passage discussed by Addison: "Est locus, extremum qua pandit Gallia litus Oceanæ prætonibus aquis, ubi fertur Ulysses Sangvine Hæbito populum movisse silentem. Illic umbrarum tenui stridore volatum Tenebris auditur questus: sinituræ colunt Pallada defunctasque vident migrare figuras." Upon this passage, Gesner has a long note in which he quotes the "tabula de historis Galliarum incolis piscatoribus Francorum imperio subiectis, transiitque animas e Galliæ Britanniam consensibus, quam refert Tzetzes et Iosephus. 1200." He gives the Greek at length, adding that the account is "omnibus prope verbis contractam ex narrationse Procopii." And he concludes by suggesting that the purgatories of St. Patrick and of gaur, signifying a man, Viv' So Arthur, gaur composed of arth, which signifies a Beast; and why may not Arthur be rather a British word renowned among the Britons. (Ann. But Annals). The famous Arthur made this name Arctus, is the Bear, as Ulysses among the goodly fixed star Arcturus, and that from "a Latin name in Juvenal, drawn from the graphia, defines "Arthur" thus: "in that rare seventeenth century Glossar—graphia, defines "Arthur" thus: "or when Blount, to each beauty brought; as ever thought for lady, round-table knight, as ever thought for lady, and we have a guy, a beavis, or some true Queen, to you; you'll soon discern him; or the brave St. George himself, great Henrietta with "we bring Prince Arthur, Luigi's invention, addressed Charles and when Carey, in that gorgeous masque of fame is known, right hyperbumpshall; or "in royal bokes and gesses historiall, their Hawes said of him and his knights, that was somewhat wanton I wene;" or when menadible, and Dame Gynour hys queene, Arthur's round table, with his knights come; Arthur's show; or when Skelton read "of Justice Shallow" or was Sir Dagonet in what was held concerning him when Rhys's conclusions, let us consider a little among the obscure places of anthropology; No light task, this; but in each of Prof. Rhys's sixteen chapters we advance towards solutions of these questions. Only the specialist may venture, as I have said, to criticise; but an "outsider" may be allowed to make a few remarks illustrating the general interest of the book.

In his most fascinating chapter upon the Isles of the Dead, Prof. Rhys does not quote those strange lines of Claudian in Rhythmum, I, 123-128—a passage discussed by Addison: "Est locus, extremum qua pandit Gallia litus Oceanæ prætonibus aquis, ubi fertur Ulysses Sangvine Hæbito populum movisse silentem. Illic umbrarum tenui stridore volatum Tenebris auditur questus: sinituræ colunt Pallada defunctasque vident migrare figuras." Upon this passage, Gesner has a long note in which he quotes the "tabula de historis Galliarum incolis piscatoribus Francorum imperio subiectis, transiitque animas e Galliæ Britanniam consensibus, quam refert Tzetzes et Iosephus. 1200." He gives the Greek at length, adding that the account is "omnibus prope verbis contractam ex narrationse Procopii." And he concludes by suggesting that the purgatories of St. Patrick and of comes that power of appreciation which gives its value to a lettered life. To be called, or is like, a Beast. This last passage shows a commendable desire to get at the truth philologically, as truth historical. That "well-languaged" favourite of Wordsworth tells the traditional story of "that huge dumb heap" brought from Africa to Ireland, by the devil, in one night, and thence "from giant's hands redeemed by Merlin's slight" and set up "near Ambri" in memory of the British massacre by Hengist. And he pathetically asks, "but is antiquity so great a liar?" concluding rightly enough, that not antiquity, but credibility, is responsible for traditional fictions. It would be interesting to compile an account of the beliefs held by learned men, upon early British history, from Chaucer to Dryden; to know what was Milton's view of the matter, more clearly than his brief sketch shows it us; to know what King James really thought, when he warned Prince Henry not to leave the seed of division among his posterity; as befall to this lie, by the division and assignment thereof, to the three sons of Brutus, Lothrin, Albanac, and Camber of Britain. Prof. Rhys holds, as historically probable, that Arthur was Comes Britanniarum, the highest officer in the island, after the departure of the Romans, so that in "the Emperor Arthur," his usual title in Welsh literature, "we have a romantic of our insular history." Mythologically, Arthur is a culture hero of the familiar type. But here we see the complexity of these investigations; of those necessary processes, identification, equation, localisation. How much of a given story is distorted history? What does it owe to early Latin chronicles and their prepossessions? How far is it tinged with romantic colours from France? How far does it represent, or misrepresent, a primitive Celtic myth? How can that myth be grouped, compared, correlated, with other myths of other mythologies? And what does it lead us to infer, far back among the obscure places of anthropology; No light task, this; but in each of Prof. Rhys's sixteen chapters we advance towards solutions of these questions. Only the specialist may venture, as I have said, to criticise; but an "outsider" may be allowed to make a few remarks illustrating the general interest of the book.

In his most fascinating chapter upon the Isles of the Dead, Prof. Rhys does not quote those strange lines of Claudian in Rhythmum, I, 123-128—a passage discussed by Addison: "Est locus, extremum qua pandit Gallia litus Oceanæ prætonibus aquis, ubi fertur Ulysses Sangvine Hæbito populum movisse silentem. Illic umbrarum tenui stridore volatum Tenebris auditur questus: sinituræ colunt Pallada defunctasque vident migrare figuras." Upon this passage, Gesner has a long note in which he quotes the "tabula de historis Galliarum incolis piscatoribus Francorum imperio subiectis, transiitque animas e Galliæ Britanniam consensibus, quam refert Tzetzes et Iosephus. 1200." He gives the Greek at length, adding that the account is "omnibus prope verbis contractam ex narrationse Procopii." And he concludes by suggesting that the purgatories of St. Patrick and of Skizze ii. 432), Puta (Western Arabia), Kusu, Maciya (= Mash = eastern part of Hidjaz up to Djebel Shamir). Pliny's Foda is in the modern province of 'Asyr. It is evidently the same as the Puta of the Darius inscription, and the Pudha-Yawan of the Nebukadrezar inscription. That the Greeks had colonies in Western Arabia is witnessed by the classical authors as well as by the Bible. Pliny states that the Milesians had colonies in Arabia; Diodorus mentions connexions between the Debai in 'Asyr and the Greeks; in Ezekiel (xxvii. 19) the Yawan is a Greek colony in Arabia (cf. Skizze ii. 431 ff.). All this induces me to believe that the town of Pudha-Yawan in the Nebukadrezar inscription is to be placed in Western Arabia. This country was, like Egypt, menaced by Nebukadrezar. Even the former kings of Assyria had penetrated far into Western Arabia; and it is difficult to believe that the Babylonian king should advance into the Cyrenaica, where there is no land-road except the desert.

At the same time I would rectify the error of Prof. Krall, who places Pun-t or Puna in the country between Massawa and Sawakin. All the evidence shows that Punt is in the eastern part of the Somali peninsula, as I proved in my Skizze and also in the Ausland (1890, No. 27), where I stated that Punt is no other than the gold-land Sasu of Cosmas Indopleustes.

EDUARD GLASER.

P.S.—The Foda or Foth of Pliny can be determined with a certain degree of exactness by the Geography of El Hasan ben Ahmed el Hamdani.

On p. 125 this ancient Arabian geographer gives the names of some watering-places of the Beled Khaulân: Fût, 'Arâmi, Ghurâbik, ed-Dabr, Jebel er Ri'â, Yebel el Aswaf or Dalâni, Ghurâs (not Urâsh), 'Anmal, Bedr, El Medrâ, Kharr, 'Arw, &c. These names, especially Arâmi and Ghurâbik, prove that we are in the Serât mountains, called Serât Khaulân or Kadd, in the country of Sa'da, north-west from this town near the sea-coast. Therefore Fût seems to have been a town on the coast of the Red Sea near (north-west of) the modern town Sa'da. In our days there is in this region a district called Bilâd 'Oraima between Jebel Râzih and Khaulân. Since Jebel Râzih is a three days' journey westward from Sa'da towards the Red Sea, and since there is no doubt that Bilâd 'Oraima is identical with 'Arâmi or 'Urâmi of Hamdani, I feel certain that Fût, the neighbouring place of 'Arâmi, must be somewhere in the country of Sabyâ, or a little north of it; that is, in the southern part of the modern province of 'Asyr. Pliny gives the names of the tribes of 'Asyr in the following manner: the town of Badanatha (= Bisha Ba'tân), the Carrheans (identified by me—Skizze ii. 128—with El Kar'a, south-west of Kbbâ, the modern metropolis of 'Asyr), Cariati Achoali (so I read), which I place in about the 19th degree of latitude North, the town of Foda (our Fût in El Hamdani), the Mineans with the Carmeans, the town of Maribba Palmalacum, which I identify with a town in the modern Wâdi Maraba, likewise in 'Asyr. As may be seen, there is no essential difference, especially if we consider that Pliny had no exact information.

The name of the Biblical Fût or Pût, which seems to be not older than the seventh or eighth century B.C., designated in the time of Nebukadrezar a town, and this designation was maintained until the time of Hamdani (fourth century of the Hijra). In the Bible the name seems to designate a people. The same is the case in the inscriptions of the Achaemenite Darius. Therefore we shall be right if we believe that, from the formation of the Biblical genealogies until the fourth century

B.C., there was in Western Arabia (in 'Asyr) a people and their largest town both named Fût. Afterwards the tribe disappeared, and only the name of the city remained; perhaps the name (without the town) has remained until our own days.

E. G.

ANGLO-INDIAN "ELK" AND "ENTERTAIN."

London: July 18, 1891.

There is one usage of the word "elk" not to be found in Part I. of Volume III. of the New English Dictionary.

In the quotation from a statute of Henry VIII., Mr. Bradley observes that "the name seems to be applied to some English species of deer." He also mentions, as a secondary use, the extinct Irish elk and the Canadian wapiti, though for the latter he quotes no example. Still more curious is it to find the word used in the last century for the Cape eland, which is, of course, an antelope. An earlier quotation than any here given may be supplied from Leguat's Voyage to Rodriguez, &c. (1708), which has just been reprinted for the Hakluyt Society; he mentions elks among the Fauna of the Cape (ii., 298).

But the most familiar mis-usage of the word "elk" is omitted altogether—its application by Anglo-Indian sportsmen to the sambar deer (Cervus vel Rusa Aristotelis). For this it is sufficient to refer to Yule and Burnell's Glossary of Anglo-Indian Words (a mistake s.v. being corrected in the supplement); but I may add two examples from recent books of sport. Gen. Rice, in his Indian Game (1884, p. 95), writes "sambar deer, beautiful animals one sometimes hears miscalled the elk;" and Sir Samuel Baker, in his Wild Beasts and their Ways (second ed. 1891, p. 414) writes "sambar deer, miscalled elk in Ceylon." For the wapiti, I can only refer to a plate facing p. 108 of City Boys in the Woods: or, A Trapping Adventure in Maine, by Henry P. Wells (1890), which is entitled "a group of elk."

The Indian bison (Bos gaurus) has been similarly ignored in Part III. of Volume I.

I may also mention that "entertain" in the sense of keeping a person in one's service, which Mr. Bradley describes as obsolete, his latest date being 1786, was commonly used in India well into the present century. Yule does not give it; but here is a quotation from Elphinstone's Cambul (2nd ed., 1839, ii. 266), "volunteers are entertained in actual war."

J. S. C.

"TENSERIE."

Stratford Tony, Salisbury: July 21, 1891.

There can be no doubt that Mr. Round and Mr. Paget Toynbee are right, and that the latter errs on the side of charity in calling my suggestion "rather fanciful." It is another instance of the way in which an editor, by assuming a difficulty where none exists, throws obstacles in the way of those who come after him.

I wonder if Mr. Round, from his special studies in early taxation, can throw any light on the famous "Ship-money annal," as one might call it, 1008 A.D. in the Saxon Chronicle, which occurs with such puzzling varieties of reading in MSS. C. D. E., leading one to suppose that the scribes themselves did not understand it. Prof. Earle rightly calls it "this tantalising annal." Any light on the subject would be most welcome to students of the Chronicle, and indeed to all who are interested in early English history.

CHARLES PLUMMER.

"ONDEMOT."

London: July 18, 1891.

Referring to the phrase "Noutegeld et Ondemot," Prof. Maitland writes:

"What ondemot may be I cannot guess, though it must be a moot of some kind; is it simply the hundred-moot?" (English Historical Review, v., 631 note.)

There is an entry on the "Pipe Roll" of 3 John (Ref. 18, Memb. 2), relating to the same district (Cumberland) as the above phrase, which throws light on the question:

"Johannes de Reinni debet
II. marcas et tenet II. carrucatas terre in Newintone per sectam
Comitatus et de Hendemot unde
Scutigium dari non debet."

The two words are clearly identical, and suggest a derivation from the A.S. hund (hundred). To hold by suit to the county and hundred (if this explanation be accepted) would be a tenure familiar enough, and the instance would be valuable for its early date. It is a pity that in the Testa John de Reinni is entered as holding this estate by serjeantry, bound to accompany the king on his Scottish campaigns.

J. H. ROUND.

SCIENCE.

The Eton Latin Grammar. For Use in the Higher Forms. Second Edition. (John Murray.)

WHEN the first edition of this work was reviewed in the columns of the ACADEMY, just three years ago (July 7, 1888), the reviewer found much to criticise. It was pointed out that the philological sections were excessive in quantity and inferior in quality, that the Syntax, as a whole, was too short, and the Accidence too ample, and that various details were not satisfactorily handled. The second edition is, on the whole, a different book. The whole Grammar has been revised and many peccant details corrected; the Accidence is a trifle shorter and the Syntax longer; and —τὴν ἑλλά καλλιπικόν — the philology has vanished. The volume, so far as I can presume to judge, is a more creditable piece of work, and more nearly is what it professes to be—"suitable for scholars and students generally."

The great gain, of course, is the disappearance of the philology. There is probably no subject so utterly unfit for educational purposes as philology, unless it be textual criticism. The older philology of Bopp and Schleicher was bad enough, but it had some merits. It did not take long to master; and, like the German poems we used to learn at Winchester, about "maidens with blue eyes and blue hair," it was not without its attractive absurdities. But the "new views" are another thing. They have a sort of philosophy which, so far as it goes, is stimulating and suggestive. But they are extremely difficult to learn; a complex literature, ornamented by a hundred controversies, has grown up around them, and it is not untrue to say that philology has now become a special study. The results of philology will, of course, be always useful and interesting. The classical student will always want etymologies, and often demand explanations of peculiar words or particular idioms. But, in his books or his teaching, he will deal only with results, as he deals only with the results of astronomy or metallurgy when he has to consider or how swords were tempered in Sophoclean Greece. This, obviously, is an ideal, from which we are yet far off. Accident—for it was nothing else—made philology popular in Oxford years ago; its popularity soon hardened into custom, and the cake of custom, as Bagehot called it, has even yet not wholly broken up. If the fashion, forty or fifty years ago, had set in favour of (say) epigraphy, no harm would have been done. No one would have wanted to teach epigraphy to students and schoolboys; it is a science which one does not expect even the editor of a weekly journal to understand. Philology unfortunately was taught, and still, to some degree, is taught. Its exclusion by the Eton grammarians is, therefore, a matter for sincere congratulation and a long step in the right direction.

“What time the Pleiads set in autumn skies,”

There are a good many other improvements in the new edition which deserve praise. The cases no longer monopolise all the space; the oratio obliqua is given breathing room, and the rules for the sequence of tenses in it are put much more clearly than in the previous edition, or indeed, in several current Grammars. On the other hand, I do not see why the sequence of final and consecutive clause should have been separated from those clauses, and the whole oratio obliqua shoved in between. Boys often find a difficulty in mastering the consecutive sequence, just as they often find a difficulty in distinguishing final and consecutive clauses at all when they first come to learn them. It would, therefore, seem wiser in a school book, even for “Higher Forms,” to treat the final clause and its sequence together, and so also with the consecutive clause.

There are still not a few errors to be corrected in the book. Those, however, which I have noted are not all serious, and the following will serve as specimens. On p. 7 the letters M and N are wholly omitted. On p. 15 the rules for the affinity of vowels to consonants are not quite satisfactory; certainly the examples given are not all unimpeachable. The vowel-change in pello, populi, for instance, is generally assigned to Vocal-abstufung, not to any affinity of u to l. The form Prosepnais, quoted ten pages later, is no doubt taken from the Corpus (I. 57), but it now appears to be a mis-reading for Prosepnai (Rheinisches Museum, xlii. 486), and must therefore vanish. I cannot think, indeed, that it was ever worth mention in a book like this. If correct, it could only be a dialectism; and a unique form on a unique inscription seems to me hardly suited to “scholars and students generally,” much less to schoolboys. On p. 75 there is an odd remark about the gender of sal, and in several places there are allusions to Plautine grammar which should have been ended or mended. I am sorry, also, still to see, especially on p. 52, various enumerations which I cannot call either clear or useful.

F. HAVERFIELD.

TIBETAN LEXICOGRAPHY.

WE quote from the Annual Address delivered to the Bengal Asiatic Society by the president, Mr. H. Beveridge, the following note on Tibetan lexicography, contributed by the well-known Bengali Tibetan scholar, Babu Sarat Chandra Das:

“The first traveller in Tibet who acquired a mastery over the Tibetan language was a Roman Catholic missionary, who compiled a dictionary in Tibetan and Italian. His name has unfortunately been lost, but Rev. — Schröter obtained his MSS., which he translated into English. The work, under the name of ‘Bhotanta Dictionary,’ was published by Carey at Serampur in 1826. Afterwards, Csoma de Korös explored the field of Tibetan learning. He studied classical and modern literature, though he never visited Tibet proper, or acquired a colloquial knowledge of its language. He compiled an excellent dictionary of Tibetan, after the method of Prof. H. H. Wilson. In 1882, the Secretary of State published another Tibetan dictionary, compiled by the late Rev. Jäschke, of the Moravian Mission at Lahul. Jäschke drew his materials chiefly from Csoma’s dictionary, though here and there he has borrowed words and expressions from the Serampur work. In fact, Jäschke’s dictionary may be viewed as an edition of Csoma’s dictionary, after Monier-Williams’s method, with that scientific finish without which no dictionary can be acceptable to scholars of the present day. But beyond this, and the fact of its being handy and useful to philologists, it does not take the student one step further in the acquisition of Tibetan than Csoma’s dictionary. In studying Tibetan since my return from Tibet in 1883, I have derived much help from Jäschke’s dictionary; but I must at the same time remark that in carrying one’s study deeper into the classical as well as the modern literature of Tibet, neither Csoma’s nor Jäschke’s work affords the necessary help. Here the student’s way to scholarship is blocked by unseen obstacles, which can be removed only by the erudite Lamas of Tibet; but such help is not easily obtainable.

“I keenly felt this difficulty in 1880, when I conceived the idea of collecting additional material for a Tibetan dictionary in Tibet. My residence in the Grand Lama’s Library in Tibet afforded me ample opportunities for the realisation of my hope of being able to explore the entire literature of Tibet, with the help of the learned Lamas of Lhasa and Tashilampo; but unfortunately politics intervened, and all my expectations vanished.

“The sacred works of Tibet are divided into two classes: called the Kahgyur, or the translation of the Word of Buddha; and the Tanggyur, or the translation of Epistles of the Buddhist ministers and sages, the former consisting of 108 volumes, and the latter of 225 volumes. It does not appear to me that a systematic endeavour to examine these works has ever been made by any Orientalist, with the exception of Csoma de Korös, who had the advantage of studying on the confines of Tibet under a scholarly Lama. Had it been possible to explore this vast literature with the help of the existing dictionaries, scholars like Wassilew, Poucoix Léon Feer, Manzel, Rockhill, surely would not have allowed our knowledge of the Tibetan literature to remain at a standstill. Without meaning to give offence to scholars who have already ventured to work in this field of scientific research, I must point out that the numerous erroneous renderings of Tibetan texts, which they have unconsciously permitted to appear in their contributions, owe their origin to the want of an exhaustive dictionary of the Tibetan language. Several sets of the Kahgyur and the Tanggyur exist in the great libraries of London, Paris, Berlin, and Petersburg; in consequence of which it is not too much to say that the scholars of Europe have been in possession of sufficient materials to work with, but then to do so satisfactorily they require the help of a complete dictionary or a scholarly Lama. They have not the former, and it is not possible to have the latter.

“During the last two years, with the help of Lama Sherak, I have examined a large portion of the Kahgyur collection of 108 volumes contained in the Society’s library. With a view to obtaining a set of the Tanggyur collection of 225 volumes for the Society, I applied to the President, the late

Mr. Atkinson; but the Government, on financial grounds, declined to purchase the work. I see from Dr. Huth’s Contribution to Tibetan Literature that there are several sets of the Tanggyur collection in London (India Office), Paris, Berlin, and Petersburg. If the Asiatic Society can procure me the loan of a set of the Tanggyur collection of 225 volumes, I may be able to make my Tibetan dictionary an exhaustive lexicon of classical and modern Tibetan.”

CORRESPONDENCE.

MATHEMATICAL NOMENCLATURE.

July 15, 1891.

In his notice of my (Geometry of Position, in the ACADEMY of July 11, the reviewer raises a few interesting philological and historical points, which, as they affect a new science, merit further consideration.

1. The term Nullpunkt would be improperly translated by “nullpoint,” null in German having two significations, in English only one. Compare null und nichtig (null and void) with Nullpunkt (nought point).

2. The right translation of kern or noyau is “kernel,” not “core.” (The core of an apple is, I think, Apfelfähnschen, and has rather a kitchen flavour about it; while “kern” is not more German in derivation than “kernel.”

3. From the preface to Bresse’s Résistance des Matériaux (ed. 1880), one would naturally infer that the matter on the noyau central was then added. Levy had previously discussed the subject in § 162 of his Statics (1874); but Culmann’s work was published in 1864. The question of priority is, however, perfectly immaterial, as I entirely demur to the notion that a new invention must always pass under the name given to it by its discoverer. Newton, for instance, discovered Fluxions; but who calls them “fluxions” now?

In this letter I deal exclusively with the question of nomenclature; for the rest, I will not trench on the sacred privileges of your critic.

R. H. GRAHAM.

Mr. Graham answers himself to the careful reader; but for those who pass by philological and historical points hastily, it may be as well to briefly indicate that he is wanting in accuracy. In the first place, he it noted that we are not talking here about a “new invention,” but about terms which have been used for a long time by English mathematicians of reputation in print as well as in the lecture room; and established usage ought to count for something.

1. I did not object to the null, but to the punkt in an English work, and should personally be contented if Mr. Graham had used the word “nought-point.” At the same time, null has certainly been used in the sense of “nought” in English. Compare Bacon’s “nulls and ciphers.” Dr. Routh does not hesitate to use “nullpoint” and “nullplane,” and Clifford speaks of the “null-conic.”

2. “The right translation of kern or noyau is ‘kernel’ and not ‘core.’” That depends entirely on the sentence in which the words happen to stand. “Cassez le noyau, si vous voulez l’amande,” “le noyau d’une statue,” sufficiently demonstrate that noyau cannot always be rendered by “kernel.” But to “kernel” again I have no objection, a priori. It is, at least, English, and kern is not. What Mr. Graham means by stating that “kernel” is as German in derivation as kern surpasses my imagination. Major Clarke and he have taken kern directly from the German, while “kernel” has an excellent Middle English and Anglo-Saxon ancestry. The word “core,” however, has been used by several English writers, notably by Clifford, who first introduced the theory of the noyan central to English readers. Hence, while I prefer "kernel" to keru, "core" is superior to both as a term having high mathematical authority in its favour.

3. I need only remark that Bresse did discuss the noyan central in his lectures of 1842-3, and that these lectures were at once issued in a lithographed form. He published his theory in print in 1854, in his classical work on arched ribs, a work widely studied by engineers. Culmann wrote in 1864. The question of priority is not immaterial when we are giving a German name to a French discovery. Finally Mr. Graham asks who calls Fluxions "fluxions" now? I reply—most mathematicians when they use the notation of fluxions, and not a few on other occasions as a briefer and more expressive term than differential co-efficient.

THE REVIEWER.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE programme is now ready of the long excursion of the Geologists' Association this year, which is fixed for the week beginning on Monday, August 3. The scene is the Yorkshire coast; and the directors are the Rev. Prof. J. F. Blake (president for the year), Mr. J. W. Woodall, and Mr. G. W. Lamplugh. Driffield is the headquarters on the first day, when Flamborough Head and Bridlington are to be visited. Thenceforth the headquarters will be at Scarborough, trips being arranged to Speeton, Filey Brig, Peak, Cloughton, Hackness, Robin Hood's Bay, and Whitby. On Wednesday, the greater part of the day will be devoted to a cruise along the coast, which will afford an excellent opportunity of tracing the succession of strata with their faults. The programme is illustrated with several sections, ground-plans, &c.

THE following are some of the excursions that have already been arranged for Saturday, August 22, during the meeting of the British Association at Cardiff: to Penarth and Lavernock, where the finest section of Rhætic beds in England is exposed; to the interesting dolmens at St. Nicholas and St. Lythan's; to Llantwit-major, where a year or two ago the remains of a Roman villa were unearthed, and where a college is said to have existed in the fourth century; to Tintern Abbey and Raglan Castle, the Forest of Dean, Merthyr, Brecon, and to some of the numerous collieries and iron-works in the South Wales coal-field. A practical natural history excursion is also being organised by the Cardiff Naturalists' Society to the Vale of Neath.

A SUM of £500, in addition to the annual grant of £500, has been placed upon the Civil Service estimates of this year for the Marine Biological Association at Plymouth. During the past year, eleven persons visited the laboratory for the purpose of research, some of them on more than one occasion.

THE International Geographical Congress, which will be held at Berne from August 10 to 14, will be attended by representatives of all the different countries interested in the science of geography. Among the subjects to be dealt with will be the elaboration of a map of the earth on the scale of 1—1,000,000, the questions of prime meridian, a universal hour, and the rules to be observed in the spelling of geographical names. The elaboration of the proposed map on a large scale is regarded as important, in order to destroy the illusion that the non-European countries are sufficiently known, and to show that explorers have still a great deal to do. There will also be a geographical exhibition in connexion with the congress.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE understand that the volume entitled Classical Texts from Papyri in the British Museum will be published in a few days, through Mr. Quaritch. It will be illustrated with several autotype fac-similes.

THE July number of the Asiatic Quarterly Review (Sonnenschein) contains an article on "The Races and Languages of the Hindu-Kush," by Dr. G. W. Leitner, supplemented by contributions from natives of the country, giving vocabularies, a list of halting-places on the road to the Punjab, &c. Special interest attaches to the dialogue about Pola (bolá), which is here played even more energetically than in Manipur. The number of players is nine a side, and the game is won by the side that first gets nine goals. Bets are made, and music plays the while. This article is illustrated by several photographs, taken in 1881 and 1886, the anthropological value of which is considerable. We may also mention another illustration in this number—a page of the Korán, photozincographed from an illuminated MS. written by Hafiz Osman in 1094, A.H.

THE last number of the Babylonian and Oriental Record (David Nutt) opens with an article by Prof. Terrien de Lacouperie on the first introduction of Buddhism into China. This has commonly been assigned to uncertain dates in the third century B.C.; but the author is able to fix it in the year 219, when the emperor is recorded in the Shé Ki to have sent for the holy men—Sien-men and his companions. Sien-men is, no doubt, a transcription of Sramana, the familiar name for a Buddhist priest. It is further suggested that the route by which these missionaries entered China was through the modern province of Sze-tchuen. The other articles consist of further notes on the Lycian inscriptions, by M. J. Imbert, of Paris; and "Southern Palestine and the Tel-el-Amarna Tablets," by Mr. W. St. Chad Boscawen.

Aristotele. La Costituzione degli Ateniesi. Testo Greco, versione Italiana, introduzione e note per cura di C. Ferrini. (Milan.) For a short time this is the best available text of the new Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία, and as such it may be useful to some English readers. We say "for a short time," because it is certain that it will soon be superseded by one considerably better. The Greek text, of which its first editor wrote that it "is in good condition and requires little emendation," has been found by other scholars to be in a lamentable condition and to require continual emendation. The Italian editor has availed himself of the suggestions made down to a certain date, and has therefore produced a text greatly superior to that of Mr. Kenyon's second edition. He acknowledges fully his obligations to English scholars as well as to Blass and Herwerden, and his notes are full of references to them. But the work of emendation has gone on actively here and abroad, and his text is already antiquated, greatly as it differs for the better from that of the editio princeps. The scholar who wants an improved text to work with at once will do well to provide himself with this; but anyone not in a hurry will be wise to wait for a little, until all the more obvious corrections have been embodied in some later edition. The present editor has contributed little or nothing of his own to the improvement of the text, but he appears to have made a sensible use of the suggestions of others. He knows when an emendation is good and when it is not. He adds a few notes by way of explanation, and a translation which hardly calls for comment in an English review. It is interesting to see him translating passages, which are certainly corrupt, and have sometimes already been emended, without showing any suspicion of the errors they contain. The description of Cimon as πρὸς τὴν πόλιν ὀφὲ προσελθόντα is erroneously translated by "venuto da poco alla vita politica," which implies a confusion of ὀφὲ with ἔρρι. To adopt περιμένοντας for ἀποσπώντας at the end of ch. 8, and leave τὸ αὐτόματον after it is most unsatisfactory. Certainly Mr. Kenyon's ἀποσπώντας is wrong; but the MS. reading of τὸ αὐτόματον is almost certainly wrong too, and περιμένοντας τὸ αὐτόματον is a very improbable expression. The editor has adopted the emendation of τῆρδ' εἰκόν' ἔθηκε for τῆρδ' ἀείθηκε in the verses of ch. 7, but by an oversight has left θεοῖς at the end of the hexameter instead of altering it to θεοῖσιν.

FINE ART.

THE SEASON'S WORK OF THE EGYPT EXPLORATION FUND.

THE EXCAVATIONS AT HENASSIEH (HANES).

THIS year's campaign was devoted to the exploration of Heracleopolis Magna, the Hanes of the Bible; of the city which was situate twelve miles west of the present Beni Suef, near the Bahr Yussuf; and of the necropolis on the opposite side of the canal, in the ridge of hills which separates the valley of the Nile from the southern part of the Fayoom.

We began with the necropolis, and we settled in the desert not very far from the village of Isedment el Gebel. I had explored the place the year before, and I had seen then a great number of pits which seemed to have been recently plundered. Greeks from Medinet el Fayoom had worked there; but I doubt very much whether they were largely rewarded by the result of their work. The necropolis extends from the limits of the valley towards the hills, on a slightly sloping and undulating ground. The tombs are most numerous on two rocky heights, which rise above the others at the entrance of a wide concavity by which the ridge is interrupted, and which is the way to the Fayoom. In that part the tombs are rectangular pits, at the bottom of which there are two, and sometimes three, side chambers. Many of them had been filled with sand, and we cleared them with the hope of discovering the original interments; but everywhere we found that the tombs had been re-used in later times, plundered of their valuables, even of the coffins, and employed for bodies evidently belonging to the poorer class. They had no coffins, were generally not embalmed, and lying over or under a mat of reeds. With the bones were sometimes found small baskets containing food for the deceased, chiefly nuts of the dóm palm and bread; sometimes also poppies and pigeons' eggs. Here and there were a few remains of the former occupants—for instance, a piece of a handsome funerary cloth on which the weighing of the soul had been painted, fragments of papyri, and pieces of limestone hieroglyphic tablets, evidently belonging to the XVIIIth and XIXth Dynasties. I should not wonder if even these were not the original occupants, and if the pits went back up as far as the XIth or XIIth Dynasty.

On one of the hills, quite at the top, and at a very small depth, among rubbish of broken bricks and chips of stone, we found about twenty coffins, most of them of women. They generally fell to pieces when they were moved. Two of them which we took away were made more carefully; the mummy was in a cartonnage and enclosed in a double coffin painted red. They all bear the characters of a very late epoch, some of them are even of the worst Roman style. They are without names and without ornaments or amulets, except necklaces of very small glass beads or small shells.

In the lower part of the necropolis the coffins are plain rectangular boxes without any ornament or painting; one or two red vases of common pottery were put in the pit, which was not deep, and of the size of the coffins. Twice we discovered mummy cases belonging to an older epoch, which had been re-used, one of them of the XXth Dynasty, the other possibly as old as the XIth. The mummies which they contained were quite out of proportion with the coffins. The most plentiful crop we had in the tombs were hundreds of wooden or terracotta statuettes, ushabtis of the coarsest description, some of which were mere little sticks on which eyes and a nose had been indicated with ink, and where the name was written in hieratic. These statuettes belong to various epochs; and, although many of them are undoubtedly very late, I believe that some of them are remains of the XXth and even of the XIXth Dynasty. In a few large pits there were at the top painted coffins, and underneath heaps of bones and of mummified bodies; the whole had been thrown in without any order.

Finding that the necropolis gave so little result, and that there was nothing belonging to older epochs, we left the desert, and went over to the mounds of Henassieh. The site of the old city is indicated by several mounds of such an extent that they are called in the place itself Ummel Kimām, "the mother of mounds." Several villages are built over them, the largest being Henassieh el Medinet, in the name of which we may recognise a corruption of the old Hanes. All over the mounds, scattered blocks of red granite show that there must have been a construction of importance; but nothing in the nature of the soil and in the appearance of the locality shows distinctly, as at Bubastis, where the temple must have been. Therefore it was necessary to trench and dig pits in all the different parts of the Tell. This work was done on a large scale, for we removed more than 40,000 cubic metres of earth in order to ascertain where the temple had been, and to lay bare what is left of it. We began near two parallel rows of standing granite columns without capitals, of Roman or Byzantine aspect and called "the Keniseh," the church. There was nothing in the space between the two colonnades, which is more than fifty yards wide; but on the west there was another hall with limestone columns bearing well-sculptured Corinthian capitals. The whole seems to me to have been a Roman temple. In digging under the pavement of the western hall, we reached a small staircase leading to a tank built of red bricks and cement, evidently a bath; unfortunately in the night which followed its discovery it was broken to pieces by the inhabitants, who build all their walls and houses with Roman bricks found on the Tell.

In two other places were several shafts of red granite columns lying on the ground. Researches made all around and even underneath did not lead to any result, except the discovery of a fragment of mosaic. These columns belonged to Coptic churches; the Coptic cross was engraved on several of them.

We dug also near two huge granite bases which looked like Roman work. The excavations showed that they had supported two large columns at the entrance of a Coptic church, now entirely destroyed, but of which nearly all the materials were left. They consisted of columns in grey marble with Corinthian capitals, some of which had, instead of astragalus, a Coptic cross, besides architraves and friezes well sculptured with flowers, arabesques, and animals, and even parts of mythological subjects. I should not wonder if a sculptured stone, bearing a coarse representation of Leda and her swan, which was in a fellah's house, had come from here.

In digging in a great depression in the western part of the mounds, at a depth of about four yards, we at last hit upon a granite monolithic column, complete with a palm-leaf capital; we concentrated all our researches around it, and we found that we had reached a vestibule which must have been one of the side entrances of the temple of Heracleopolis. The remains of it consist of six columns 17ft. high, one of which only is complete, with sculptures representing Rameses II. making offerings to various divinities, and in the intervals the name of Menephthah, the son of Rameses. The architraves which were supported by those columns are cut in a building with the cartouches of Usertesen II. of the XIIth Dynasty. The six columns were in one line; the length of the vestibule is 61 ft.; it was open on the water side; the basements of the walls on the three other sides, and even a few layers of stones, have been preserved. This basement is in hard limestone of Gebel Ahmar, which cannot be burnt for lime; it bears in hieroglyphs, sometimes more than 2 ft. high, the following inscription:

"The living Horus, the mighty bull, who loves Ma, the lord of panegyrics like his father Phthah Tonen, King Harshefi, erected this building to his father Harshefi [Arsaphes], the lord of the two lands [Egypt]."

It appears from this description that the temple was dedicated to Arsaphes, a form of Osiris, generally represented with a ram's head. This divinity is sculptured on two of the columns. The vestibule contained statues of which there are a few remains. On the southern side, in the corner, was a sitting statue of Rameses II. of heroic size, in red limestone. We found it broken at the waist, but nearly complete. It was painted in bright red colour, still very vivid on some parts of the throne; the stripes of the head-dress were alternately blue and yellow, like the granite Rameses II., now at Geneva, which I discovered at Bubastis. The inscription on the lower part of the base is a dedication to Arsaphes. On the same side was the bust of a red granite statue of natural size without any name, and also a group of two very weathered kneeling figures. In the opposite corner was a statue of Rameses II. symmetrical to the other, but broken in several fragments. The head had disappeared.

From the vestibule a door led into the inner part of the temple. We had great hopes that behind the basement of hard limestone we should find constructions of importance; but our disappointment was complete. The temple, except the vestibule, was built of soft white limestone; and the result of this is that it has been entirely carried away. We saw, still in situ, bases of columns more than 4ft. in diameter, showing that they must have been of considerable height. But except a few stray blocks here and there, with a few hieroglyphic signs, the whole temple of Arsaphes has been destroyed and employed for building purposes; then the material was taken for the Roman temple and for the Coptic churches, of which there were several. So we can assert that beyond this vestibule nothing remains of the temple of Arsaphes. The considerable excavations which we made all around down to the original pavement, to a depth which was more than 18 ft., show that there is no hope of finding any more traces of this famous building. There may have been other temples of Arsaphes in the city; but it seems certain that this was the principal sanctuary of Hanes, for in the Harris papyrus Rameses III., mentioning the chief temples of Egypt to which he gave slaves, quotes "the temple of Harshefi the king of the two lands." This title of the god, which is characteristic, is that which is mentioned in the dedication of Rameses II. in the vestibule. I cannot believe that there is much more to be expected from excavations on the mounds of Henassieh.

EDOUARD NAVILLE.

THE DE SALICIS MERYONS.

THE late M. de Salicis, of Paris—Méryon's comrade on the high seas, and the man who spoke so eloquently at Méryon's open grave—possessed, as last week's sale at Christie's sufficiently proved, a collection of Méryon's works which was very remarkable. M. Burty's collection of etchings by the master—which was sold a good many years ago—was at least as extensive, and it was probably more equal in point of quality; for M. de Salicis's possessions were acquired under different conditions, and some few of his prints were not the finest of their kind. Still, on the whole, the number of extremely fine impressions which belonged to him was noteworthy; and when it is remembered that he was likewise the owner of a whole series of drawings, of singular completeness and charm—finished drawings for the elaborate and magnificent plates which Méryon afterwards wrought—it may be said, with truth probably, that no single collection formed long ago—not even the Burty, or the Heywood, or that of Mdlle. Niel—has been quite as interesting. What is to become of the drawings, only a few of which—and those the drawings for the minor subjects—were offered for sale? Their place is surely in a public museum, and, best of all, in a museum in our own country, where Méryon has been chiefly honoured. That, however, is a question which may rest for the moment; and if in France there is, comparatively speaking, little care for the works of the greatest original engraver since Dürer and Rembrandt, in America at least Méryon has many generous and intelligent admirers.

We shall record only a few of the prices fetched by the sale at Christie's of M. de Salicis's prints. "Le Pont Neuf et la Samaritaine," after a drawing by Nicolle—one of the few really pretty things Méryon wrought from the designs of others—fetched £6 10s., and was cheap. The funny little subject of "The Ruins of Pierrefonds"—at the best a curiosity—reached £11 11s. (Deprez). A fine first state of the characteristic "Stryge"—in which Méryon beheld lust and avarice and cruelty—attained £26 (Deprez); an inferior impression of the same subject fetched £8 10s.; and a good and representative second state—much better than the impression last mentioned—realised £7. An early state, and not a specially fine impression, of "Le Petit Pont"—which was the first of the Paris etchings that Méryon executed—reached £15 (Deprez); "L'Arche du Pont Notre Dame"—a somewhat muddy first state (at all events, better ones exist) realised £14. A little later in the sale, a rather thin and dull impression of the "Rue des Mauvais Garçons"—Baudelaire's favourite, partly perhaps by reason of its theme—attained £10 15s.; an ineffective proof of the beautiful subject of "St. Etienne du Mont" reached £11, while a really fine impression, in the first state, just realised a higher price—£16 to wit. A first state of "La Pompe, Notre Dame" was likewise sold for £16; an early state of the "Pont Neuf" for £14 (Salting); a trial proof of the "Pont au Change"—before the sky—reached £16 (Lauser); and a fine and representative first state of the same reasonably attained a higher figure—£33 10s., to wit, (Deprez). Afterwards came a proof of "The Morgue," which was knocked down for £16 16s. (Colnaghi); then a fine first state—a presentation copy from Méryon to M. de Salicis—attained £23 (Young). A fair example of the second state of the "Abside de Notre Dame" reached £22 (Salting); while the great price of the sale was reserved for the practically introuvable first state of the "Abside"—the impressions are so few that you may count them on your fingers. The one of which M. de Salicis had been the fortunate possessor was sold, at Christie's, for £125 (Deprez). This—it is interesting to note—is the highest price ever yet paid for a Méryon, at least under the hammer. It is an advance of about £40 on the price previously given for a print of the same character. People who, in old times, bought their Méryons at comparatively small figures—for it used to be a rare thing to have to give more than a ten-pound note for any Méryon, and in his own day he expressed his gratitude even for a franc and a-half—are no doubt a little surprised at the turn that things have taken; but there is, perhaps, no reason, in the fitness of things, why a noble Méryon should not hereafter be always worth as much as the "Melancholia" of Dürer or the "Ephraim Bonus" of Rembrandt, say. In money value, recognition is everything; and the long-neglected genius has now been recognised completely.

OBITUARY.

SIR WILLIAM DOUGLAS, P.R.S.A.

WE regret to announce the death of Sir William Fettes Douglas, President of the Royal Scottish Academy, which occurred at Newburgh, on the afternoon of Monday, July 20.

He was born in Edinburgh on March 29, 1822, the son of James Douglas, accountant in the Commercial Bank of Scotland (who was himself an amateur artist of considerable talent), and Martha Brook, grandniece of Sir William Fettes, Bart. Educated at the Southern Academy and the High School of Edinburgh, he, in 1836, entered the service of the Commercial Bank, in whose employment he remained for ten years. His leisure was assiduously employed in painting and drawing from the model, and in 1847 he resolved to devote himself exclusively to art. At the same time he entered the botany and anatomy classes in the University of Edinburgh, pursuing the latter study, in particular, with great enthusiasm. Though for a few months he attended the Trustees' Academy, then directed by Sir William Allan, he received very little systematic instruction in art; but by the extreme care and precision of the drawings which he made without the aid of any master, he was gradually training himself to be the accomplished artist that he afterwards proved.

At the age of twenty-three Douglas began to exhibit at the Royal Scottish Academy, and the succeeding years were greatly occupied with landscape work. In 1851 he was sketching, in company with Mr. Alexander Fraser, in Warwickshire, and four years later he produced much careful and detailed work at Haddon Hall. Six years afterwards he visited Italy, where he again resided in 1866-67, and laid the foundation of his rich collection of curios of various kinds, a portion of which—his cabinet of Italian and other Renaissance medals—he turned to excellent account by a sale at Christie's in 1883. As a collector, he combined the specific information of the connoisseur with the practical and general discernment of the artist; and he was never happier than when adding to his store this and the other exquisite binding, or illumination, or piece of metal work. Some of the finest and most delicate efforts of his brush consist of renderings of quaint and precious objects of still-life.

Meanwhile painting had not been neglected, and he was gradually acquiring artistic mastery. One of the first works showing his full power is "The Ruby Ring," a mediæval subject, painted about 1853, full of rich colouring and firm definite handling—a work showing traces, as do several other of the best Scottish figure-pictures of that period, of the influence of Pre-Raphaelitism. In 1856 his art reached its highest point in a rendering of "Hudibras and Ralph visiting the Astrologer"—the most perfect and complete of his works, and, indeed, one of the most remarkable figure-pictures ever executed in Scotland. It was followed in 1857 by "Oldbuck and Lovel in the Study," in 1860 by "The Summoners to the Secret Tribunal, an Incident in the Life of Vesalius," and in 1864 by "The Spell," an important picture by which—along with "The Messenger of Evil Tidings" (1856), and "David Laing among his Household Gods" (1863)—he is represented in the National Gallery of Scotland.

In 1851 he had been elected an Associate of the Royal Scottish Academy, and three years later he became a full Academician. For a brief period in 1869 he held the post of secretary; and, in 1877, on the death of James Drummond, he succeeded him as curator of the National Gallery of Scotland, a position in which his wide knowledge of art was eminently useful, his revised editions of the official Catalogue being particularly scholarly and accurate. It is to be regretted that he wrote so little upon art—the biographical notes in the Catalogue of the Academy's loan exhibition of 1880, a few anonymous fragments, and the letterpress of a privately issued volume on the late Mr. Gibson-Craig's Examples of Historic Bindings, being all that can be traced to his pen. But he accumulated a series of MS. memoranda dealing with the less-known Scottish painters, which we hope will, in some form, see the light, and not share the fate of the similar notes collected by the late W. B. Johnstone, which were lost after his death. In 1882 Douglas resigned his curatorship, on his election to succeed Sir Daniel Macnee as president of the Royal Scottish Academy, which was followed by knighthood, and in 1884 by the degree of LL.D., bestowed by the University of Edinburgh.

In 1879 Sir William suffered from a very serious attack of illness, which left his heart affected and his health much impaired. For a time he entirely ceased the practice of his art, though he attended with all the earnestness of a particularly conscientious nature to his duties as president, and as a member of the Board of Manufactures, of which he was appointed a Commissioner in 1882.

Gradually he resumed his brush, confining himself, however, to work in water-colour, and producing during the summer months of the last few years a series of charming landscapes. It was while engaged in work of this kind that he caught a chill, inducing the complications which terminated fatally last Monday.

In virtue of their finished and sensitive execution, and their admirable colouring, the works of Sir William will always occupy a high place among the productions of the Scottish school. An interesting volume of photo-gravures from the finest of them, with biographical and critical letterpress by Mr. J. M. Gray, was issued in 1885 by the Association for the Promotion of the Fine Arts in Scotland.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TEMPLE AT LUXOR.

SS. Hypaspes, Brindisi: July 19, 1891.

I see in the ACADEMY of July 11 that Mr. Henry Wallis, in noticing the fall of the small granite colonnade of Rameses II. in the Temple of Luxor, proceeds to censure the Egyptian Government for not taking more care of the temple site. Mr. Wallis thinks that the whole site is in great danger from the set of the current of the Nile in flood. He says that the "set of the stream has been so perilous for the adjacent houses, that the occupants have on some occasions, at high Nile, sat up all night, fearing that their houses would be swept away."

I beg to assure the scientific public that the face of the temple site and the embankment at the south of the temple have been protected since 1885-86. Two spurs of stone have been made to the south of the temple at a distance of about 300 and 500 yards respectively.

Although very properly no attempt has been made to turn the current altogether away from the temple site face, the current has been so far modified as to impinge now on the earthen river face, about 100 yards north of the Karnak Hotel. There is undoubtedly erosion there, and there always will be erosion on this face until the river shifts from the eastern bank altogether. The present current sweeps along the face of the Roman quays, and along the stone-protected bank under Beato's house and the American Mission. Certainly, under the Karnak Hotel there was a very serious set in 1887-88; but the then proprietor was too sparing of his stone, and did not properly protect his frontage.

The general rule in Upper Egypt about river protection is that Government only undertakes to protect public works and public buildings. Sometimes mosques and tombs are protected; but not in older days, as the ruined mosque at Girga testifies. Since 1886 the Irrigation Branch of the Public Works have maintained the two spurs above noted, which are necessary to make the current sweep along the face of the temple site.

In my opinion, all the temple sites save Kom Ombo are well protected by Roman quays. We find these Roman quays solidly built, with stones on which Ptolemaic inscriptions are frequent, at El Kab, Isna, Luxor, Armaut, Menshiyah, Akhmin, &c. And as we know that the Nile ceaselessly swings backwards and forwards in its valley in a width of probably 400 yards, we may be sure that all the above-mentioned towns have been attacked many times since the days of the Romans, and that these quays have been sufficient to turn the river.

In conclusion, I do not consider the matter at all urgent. In fact, if we (as Mr. Wallis suggests) turned the river to the west bank, the tourists would suffer great inconvenience in having to land on the sand, and would speedily wish the river back again.

J. C. ROSS, Lieut.-Colonel,
Inspector General of Irrigation, Egypt.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

AN exhibition of the works submitted in competition by students of schools of art throughout the kingdom was to be opened in the South Kensington Museum to-day (Saturday).

ACCORDING to a telegram from Cape Town, Mr. Theodore Bent, who is exploring the historical remains in Mashonaland, has discovered some images and pottery at the Zimbabwe ruins, which are supposed to be of Phœnician workmanship.

WE hear that the committee of the Paris Exhibition has awarded a silver medal and a diploma to the American School of Athens. Col. Snowdon, the American Minister at Athens, has just handed it over.

THERE has been opened this week, at Norwich, under the auspices of the Norwich Art Circle, an exhibition of the works of E. T. Daniell, a highly gifted amateur of a generation or so ago, who was more or less affiliated with the famous Norwich School. Though himself destined to be always less eminent than the great masters of that school, Cotman and Crome, and though known perhaps less widely than some of its secondary masters, such as Vincent, Stannard, Stark, and Thistle, E. T. Daniell is no doubt worthy of a place of distinction, not alone in the memory of Norwich and Norfolk men. Amongst his other gifts he was an etcher of some individuality and freedom, at a time when the true principles of etching were but little understood.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Heuzey exhibited a marble head from the Clercq collection, which seems to have formed part of some large Chaldean statuette. Its style, at once powerful and refined, may be compared with good Greek archaic work. Specially remarkable is the elaborate arrangement of the hair and beard, in contrast with the shaven heads usually found in Chaldean sculpture. M. Heuzey added that the two styles existed side by side in Chaldea from the earliest times: the dressed hair and beard distinguishing gods, heroes, and princes; and the shaven head being perhaps a mark of sacerdotal office. At the same meeting, M. Héron de Villefosse communicated a Roman inscription, found between Tôzeur and Gafsa, in Tunis. It dates from the time of Nerva; and it supplies the full name of a consul suffectus, already known from a consular diploma of Trajan preserved in the St. Germain Museum, as Quintus Fabius Barbarus Valerius Magnus Julianus. He exercised the functions of legatus of the province of Numidia, in which he was succeeded by L. Munatius Gallus, the founder of Thamugadi (Timgâd). It also mentions a Castellum Thigensium, planted on an important route between the oasis and the proconsular province, which furnishes an additional proof that Roman authority extended into the Sahara.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE Lyceum Theatre closes to-night, when Miss Ellen Terry—who has never worked more finely than during the present season—takes her benefit. Theatricals in London, which, for many weeks, have not prospered too much, are now about to have a yet duller time of it.

THE St. James's Theatre, before closing its doors, gave a performance of a one-act piece by Mr. Walter Frith, for which the attendance of the audience was besought at the unearthly hour of 7.45 p.m. A great originality in the production would alone have justified such a demand for the ruthless sacrifice of the dinner-hour. And that was hardly forthcoming. Mr. George Alexander and Miss Marion Terry played indeed amazingly well, being both of them thorough craftspeople, and the piece is quite well written. But its chief function would appear to be to afford the actor-manager just the telling sort of part that every actor likes. Molière is represented in the most sympathetic of lights, and is played, as we have implied, by Mr. Alexander very skilfully. But the piece recalls, far too much—we must opine—Mr. Gilbert's highly effective "Tragedy and Comedy" for it to be of much importance. We do not say that there is plagiarism; but there is certainly not novelty. The idea is an old one; and its further presentation could only be fully justified by an exquisiteness of literary treatment which is outside the aim or the capacity of even a favourable type of modern dramatist.

WE were the witnesses, on one of the latest nights of its performance, of the familiar "David Garrick" at the Criterion; and we allude to it because it is an instance, unhappily very rare, of the possibility of retaining, after very likely something like a thousand representations, a perfection, a measure, and a restraint in performance which, in the case of highly popular pieces, generally vanish after the representations have numbered two or three hundred. As to the "measure" and the "restraint," we do not wish to be misunderstood. There is a good deal in the piece itself that is frankly farcical. Mr. Ingot's guests belong to low rather than to high comedy. That is bien entendu. But that being granted, the restraint and measure are still there. Nothing is done that was not intended to be done. Discipline reigns. As to the individual performances, what remains to be said? Mr. Blakeley is an admirable humourist, with a face that is a fortune. Mr. Farren, everybody knows, is precisely the man for his part. The physical and emotional capabilities of Miss Mary Moore are in no way strained by the requirements of the part of Ada Ingot, which she plays with real delicacy and sensitiveness, and with an admirable intelligence. The Garrick of Mr. Wyndham remains—so far as we know—his very best performance. It is full of discretion and of manly feeling, and satisfies the critical sense from beginning to end. How dexterous and quietly impressive is the actor's bearing in the first interview with Mr. Ingot. No popular effect is to be made here; all the more is the scene a test of the real artistry of the actor. Later on come, of course, the opportunities for popular effect, and they, it is needless to say, are not missed—not one of them.

A COMEDIETTA entitled "Retaliation," by Mr. Rudolf Dircks, will be produced at the Grand Theatre, Islington, on July 27, preceding the farcical comedy "Aunt Jack."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN will be the publishers of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's play, "Saints and Sinners."

MR. W. DAVENPORT ADAMS, in A Book of Burlesque (Henry)—the latest addition to the series known as the "Whitefriars Library of Wit and Humour"—does not profess to give a complete history of the subject which he treats. He confines himself to the English stage—the stage, indeed, on which burlesque has flourished the most—and even in his record of burlesque in our midst he makes no pretension to be thoroughly systematic. He gives us, however, as much as we are likely to want, and gives it with a nice appreciation of the qualities peculiar to a particular school of a particular epoch of humour. He treats of the "palmy" days and of classical burlesque, that in which, as he observes, Talfourd stood next to Planché. He treats of the burlesque of history and of fiction, and of the burlesque of opera and of the modern drama. And in a final chapter he deals with "the new burlesque"—he is the first person to whom it has occurred to consider and analyse it seriously. He descants impartially, with tolerance, though not with ecstatic joy, upon the merits of those whole evening entertainments which, at the Gaiety, have of late years taken the place of the briefer burlesques. Mr. Davenport Adams being a shrewd, as well as a kindly, critic—and a critic, moreover, who does not fail to take note of the tendencies of the times—says much that is worth saying; and it is unquestionable that his book gains in attractiveness by the characteristic, yet not too copious, extracts which he makes from that which is lightest, and sometimes brightest, in stage literature. Many is the quaint fancy which is quoted and preserved in Mr. Davenport Adams's new volume; and many is the admirable pun. The prize pun, we imagine—and we have reason to think that the writer of the book before us is of our own mind upon the matter—is in the line in which it is remarked, with reference to a disagreeable sea passage, undertaken on the Sabbath, that

"this sick transit spoils the glory o' Monday."

Many a half-hour may be far worse spent than in following our author in his course over the field of English burlesque.

MUSIC.

RECENT CONCERTS.

THE ninth and last Richter Concert took place on Monday evening, and again Wagner held only a subordinate position in the programme. Lohengrin's "Herkunft" was declaimed by Mr. Barton McGuckin with more force than charm. The "Kaisermarsch" was brilliantly performed, but is too powerful for a concert room. A new Ballad for chorus and orchestra by Dr. Villiers Stanford was performed for the first time—a setting of Thomas Campbell's "The Battle of the Baltic," a poem which, curiously enough, Beethoven once contemplated setting to music. Dr. Stanford's writing is clever and there are some excellent effects of contrast; but yet it produces no striking effect. Was the choice of poem a happy one? Is the story of "Nelson and the North" calculated to stir the nobler emotions of a composer? Dr. Stanford has won with this composition little more than a succès d'estime. He was recalled at the close. The concert concluded with Beethoven's ninth Symphony. The rendering of the instrumental movements was most impressive. In the choral section the solos vocalists were Miss Alice Esty, Miss Damiani, Messrs. Barton McGuckin and Watkin Mills, who all sang in a creditable manner. Of these four, Miss Damiani and Mr. W. Mills deserve the most praise. The Richter choir makes up in energy for what it lacks in quality of tone. Dr. Richter could not have chosen a better work with which to close his series of concerts. It was the composer's mightiest effort in the department of instrumental music, the culminating point in the development of his genius." At the close of the concert Dr. Richter was recalled several times to the platform and overwhelmed with applause. In looking back at the concerts of the present series one notes a more "eclectic" spirit, but we doubt whether Dr. Richter's policy has been altogether a wise one. He is the Wagner-conductor par excellence, and in the prominence given to Wagner in past seasons there was surely no proof of narrow-mindedness. He was fulfilling a special mission, and, so long as the later music-dramas are not given in London, one of great utility.

THE African choir gave a second concert at Princes' Hall on Friday, July 17. There was a large audience, and the excellent and characteristic singing again proved highly attractive. The programme was in part new. The "Wayside" song and dance, and the "Molo koda" (good-bye) were interesting specimens of Kaffir music. The management ought to issue a programme-book giving details about native music and musicians.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

Where difficulty is experienced in procuring THE ACADEMY with regularity in the Country, it is requested that application be made direct to the Publisher.

Office: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

Digitized by Google

THEATRES.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechmere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

COURT THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. A. Cecil, H. Standing, A. Aynesworth, F. Cape, G. Farquhar, C. Roak, and J. Clulow; Mesdames R. Filippi, E. Phelps, Harrington, and John Wood.
Preceded, at 8.15, by A MUTUAL MISTAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled, MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, F. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Every Evening, at 7.45, DRINK.
Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Moran, A. Phillips, H. Terriss, R. Power; Mesdames Jessie Millward, Ada Neilson, Mrs. Billington, Alice Kingsley, and Kate James.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schuberth, Ellis, and Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

OPERA COMIQUE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.20, JOAN OF ARC.
Messrs. Marius, Edward Louis, W. Warde, E. Bantock, and Arthur Roberts; Mesdames Marion Hood, Alma Stanley, Agnes Delaporte, Alice Lethbridge, Linda Verner, A. Hewitt, Katie Seymour, L. Gourlay, and Pounds.
Preceded, at 7.45, by CRIME AND CHRISTENING.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

FATE and FORTUNE; or, the Junior Partner, by James J. Blood, by arrangement with Mr. William Calder, on MONDAY NEXT, the 27th inst.
The cast will include Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Geo. Barrett, W. R. Sutherland, Bassett Roe, Stephen Caffrey, H. Bedford, W. Cheesman, Henry Dargden, T. F. Doyle, Huntley Wright, John M. East, C. Medwin, &c.; Mesdames May Whitty, Cicely Richards, Sallie Turner, May Protheroe, &c.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA,

Cambridge Circus, Shaftesbury Avenue.
Every Evening, at 8, IVANHOE.
Messrs. Eugene Oudin, Norman Salmond, W. H. Burdon, Avon Saxon, C. Kenningham, A. Owen, Copland, Wallace Brownlow, Stephens, Bovill, and Ben Davis; Mesdames Macintyre, Grobil, and Donald.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLYV CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Sautmarez, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDWIN.
Every Evening, at 8.40, KATTI.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Eversfield, Dagnall, Barraclough, Sidney, &c.; Mesdames Alice Atherton, Illington, Rutland, Esmond, and Bennett.
Preceded, at 8, by BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
After which, A COMMISSION. Followed by A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Mesdames L. Linden, L. Hanbury, Drummond, H. Dacre, Tyrrell, Ford, and E. Chester; Messrs. B. Thomas, Forbes-Dawson, Elliot, C. P. Little, C. Coutts, Hianscombe, and W. Grossmith.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cunningham, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Aynian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son's numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

6.—Messrs. W. H. SMITH & Son beg to impress upon their Library Subscribers the fact that much disappointment and inconvenience would be avoided if they would, in all cases, give to the Clerk in charge a list comprising at least twice as many titles of works as they wish to exchange.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

ESTABLISHED 1831.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT
ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250 Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Goods carefully Removed and Warehoused.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S A1 SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."

COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: OLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

WHITTAKER'S LIBRARY
OF POPULAR SCIENCE.

Early next week, square crown 8vo.

PICTORIAL ASTRONOMY.

By G. F. CHAMBERS, F.R.A.S.,
Of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, Author of "A Handbook of Descriptive and Practical Astronomy."

284 pages, 134 Illustrations, price 4s.

Other Volumes of the Series now in the press:—

BOTANY. By G. MASSEE.—LIGHT. By Sir H. TRUCEMAN
WOOD, M.A.—GEOLOGY. By A. J. JUKES-BROWNE, F.G.S.

SECOND EDITION, REVISED.

WOOD-CARVING. By Charles G.

LELAND, M.A. Feap. 160, with numerous Illustrations, 5s.
"A very useful book."—Mr. W. H. HOWARD, Secretary to the Institute of British Wood-Carvers, and Instructor at King's College, London.

"A splendid help for amateurs and those beginning the trade. Without exception, it is the best book I have read at present."—Mr. T. J. FERRIS, Society of Arts Medallist, Instructor in Wood-Carving at the People's Palace.

"I consider it the best manual I have seen."—Miss HOPKINS, Instructor in Wood-Carving at Manchester Technical School.

"Such patient, explicit, step-by-step teaching as Mr.
Leland's is, indeed, the only road to excellence."

Saturday Review.
"Far the most thorough work on the subject that has appeared."—St. James's Gazette.

"A thoroughly practical manual."—Speaker.
"It treats of wood-carving very clearly and practically."
Spectator.

For Irish Intermediate Board's Junior Grade
Exam., 1892.

FOR BEGINNERS.

LA BELLE NIVERNAISE. Histoire

d'un vieux bateau et de son équipage. By ALPHONSE DAUDET. With Introduction, Notes, and Vocabulary by J. BOILELLE, Senior French Master in Dulwich College. And 6 Illustrations. Third Edition, Revised, 2s.
[Whittaker's Modern French Authors.]

"The notes are appropriate and well expressed."
Journal of Education.

For the Cambridge Local Examination, 1891.

LAMARTINE'S JEANNE D'ARC.

With Introduction, Notes, and full Vocabulary by Professor A. BARRERE, R.M.A., Woolwich, Examiner to the War Office, &c., Officier de l'Instruction Publique.
Ewood, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [Whittaker's French Series.]

For the Cambridge Local Examination, 1891.

FREYTAG'S DIE JOURNALISTEN :

LUSTPIEL IN VIER AKTEN. Authorized Edition.
Edited, with Literary Introduction and Notes, by Professor F. LANGE, Ph.D., R.M.A., Woolwich. Fourth Edition. 2s. 6d. [Whittaker's Modern German Authors.]

For Victoria University Intermediate Exam., 1892.

EKKEHARD. Erzählung des zehnten

Jahrhunderts, von VICTOR VON SCHEFFEL. Abridged Edition, with Introduction and Notes by HERMAN HAGER, Ph.D., Lecturer in the German Language and Literature in the Owens College, Victoria University,
Manchester. 2s. [Whittaker's Modern German Authors.]

For the Oxford and Cambridge Examination Board's Higher Certificate Examination, July, 1892.

DER BIBLIOTHEKAR. Lustspiel von

G. VON MOSER. Edited by Professor F. LANGE,
Ph.D. Authorized Edition. Third Revised Edition. 2s.
[Whittaker's Modern German Authors.]

Third Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

ELECTRIC TRANSMISSION OF

ENERGY, and its Transformation, Subdivision, and Distribution. A Practical Handbook. By GISBERT
KAPP, C.E., Associate Member of the Institution of Civil Engineers, &c. With 130 Illustrations. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. [Whittaker's Specialists' Series.]

"The book is one of the most interesting and valuable that has appeared for some time."—Saturday Review.
"We cannot speak too highly of this admirable book."
Electrical Review.

Sixth Edition, Revised and Enlarged.

ELECTRIC LIGHT INSTALLATIONS

and MANAGEMENT OF ACCUMULATORS. A Practical Handbook. By Sir DAVID SALOMONS, Bart.,
M.A., Vice-President of the Institute of Electrical Engineers. With numerous Illustrations. 6s.
[Whittaker's Library of Arts, Sciences, Manufactures, and Industries.]

"From a practical point of view the work is an excellent book of reference for persons engaged in the management of accumulators and installations generally, and teems with useful hints, suggestions, and figures for every-day working."
Electrician.

"Contains a vast amount of really useful information."
Electrical Review.

LONDON: WHITTAKER & CO,
PATERNOSTER SQUARE.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.

By Lady Constance Howard,

Author of "Sweetheart and Wife," "Mollie Darling," "Only a Village Maiden," &c.,

AND

Ada Fielder King,

Author of "It is Written," "Lionel Villiers," &c.

MASTER of her LIFE.

3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

II.

By Mrs. Alexander.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't,"
"By Woman's Wit," "Mona's Choice," "Blind Fate," &c.

3 vols. [Immediately.]

III.

By Hawley Smart.

THRICE PAST the POST.

In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
[July 28th.]

IV.

By Mrs. Hungerford,

Author of "Molly Bawn."

APRIL'S LADY.

Cloth, 2s. 6d. [July 28th.]

V.

By Florence Warden,

Author of "The House on the Marsh."

A WILFUL WARD.

In picture boards, 2s.; cloth, 2s. 6d.
[July 28th.]

VI.

By Mrs. Edward Kennard.

MATRON or MAID?

Third Edition. In picture boards, 2s.
[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VII.

By F. C. Philips

AND

Percy Fendall.

MARGARET BYNG.

Cloth, 2s. 6d.
[At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

GAY & BIRD'S PUBLICATIONS

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, pp. 346, cloth gilt, 5s.

JAPANESE GIRLS and WOMEN.

By ALICE MABEL BACON.

CONTENTS:—Childhood, Education, Marriage and Divorce, Wife and Mother, Old Age, Court Life, Life in Castle and Yashiki, Samurai Women, Peasant Women, Life in the Cities, Domestic Service, Epilogue.

"The whole question of the position of Japanese women—in history, social life, education, employments, art, marriage, concubinage, popular superstitions, &c.—discloses such a wide and fascinating field of inquiry that I wonder no one has as yet entered it."—Extract from Griffis' Mikado's Empire.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, pp. 166, fancy cloth binding, 2s. 6d.

THE NEW ERA in RUSSIA.

By CHARLES A. DE ARNAUD.

PREFACE:—"Every candid, intelligent man will, on reading this little work, see that the Nihilists of Russia were not true patriots, but at the best were actuated by very unpatriotic motives."

Now Edition. 12mo, pp. 503, Maps, Plans, and 160
Illustrations, leather, 16s.

THE INDEX GUIDE

To Travel and Art Study in Europe.

By LAFAYETTE C. LOOMIS.

Now Ready. Crown 8vo, cloth gilt, 5s.

ZADOC PINE, and other Stories.

By H. C. BUNNER.

Editor of "Puck," and Author of "Short Sixes," &c.

Crown 8vo, pp. 78, and Portrait, cloth gilt, 2s. 6d.

WALT WHITMAN:

Liberty in Literature; and a Testimonial to Walt Whitman.

By ROBT. G. INGERSOLL.

Anti-Jacobin:—"The little volume may be commended to anybody who wants to know about the writer of 'Leaves of Grass.' The extracts from the poems give a good notion of Whitman's manner."

GAY & BIRD, AMERICAN BOOK & NEWSPAPER
AGENCY, 15, KING WILLIAM STREET, STRAND.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR AUGUST.

TWO VISITS to the WEST COAST of IRELAND. Miss BALFOUR.
ESTHER VANHOMRIGH (continued). Mrs. WOODS.

HOW the POOR LIVE. W. M. COLLES.

A MAIDEN SPEECH. R. SHINDLER.

EISENACH and the WARTBURG. Miss NORRIS.

THACKERAY'S PORTRAITS of HIMSELF. G. S. LAYARD.

GREAT STEAMSHIP LINES.—No. 6. MORLEY ROBERTS.

BY LETHE'S BANKS. INIGO DEANE.

BEGUN in JEST (continued). Mrs. NEWMAN.

SHORTER POEMS of ROBERT BRIDGES. H. C. DEEQUING.

ASTREA REDUX. R. W. BOND.

NOTES of the MONTH.—LIBRARY LIST.

London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE EDINBURGH REVIEW.

No. 355.—CONTENTS.

I. MEMOIRS of PRINCE TALLEYRAND.

II. THE SYSTEM of the STARS.

III. THE BEATRICE of DANTE.

IV. RAWLINSON'S HISTORY of PHENICIA.

V. THE CORRESPONDENCE of JOHN MURRAY.

VI. THE TALES of RUDYARD KIPLING.

VII. LONDON ARCHITECTURE in the NINETEENTH CEN-TURY.

VIII. THE REVIVAL of QUAKERISM.

IX. COLONIAL INDEPENDENCE.

X. THE MELVILLE and LEVEN MEMOIRS.

XI. THE INDIVIDUAL and the STATE.

London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

Price 2s. 6d.

THE INTERNATIONAL JOURNAL OF ETHICS.

CONTENTS OF JULY NUMBER.

THE MODERN CONCEPTION of the SCIENCE of RELIGION.
Professor EDWARD CAIRD.

THE FUNCTIONS of ETHICAL THEORY. Professor JAMES H.
HARRIS.

THE MORALITY of NATIONS. Professor W. R. SORLEY.

J. S. MILL'S SCIENCE of ETHOLOGY. JAMES WARD.

VICE and IMMORALITY. R. W. BLACK.

THE PROGRESS of POLITICAL ECONOMY since ADAM SMITH.
F. W. NEWMAN.

PROGRAMME of SCHOOL of APPLIED ETHICS.

DISCUSSIONS.—The Moral Aspect of "Tips" and "Gratuities." By CHRISTINE LADD FRANKLIN.—Notes on Current Periodical Literature.

BOOK REVIEWS.

London: T. FISHER UNWIN, Paternoster Square, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1004.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 1, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
SIDNEY COLVIN'S EDITION OF KEATS'S LETTERS, by W. WATSON	87
CASATI'S TEN YEARS IN EQUATORIA, by Prof. A. H. KEANE	88
RECENT FRENCH WORKS ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM, by A. W. BENN	89
NEW NOVELS, by G. COTTERELL	91
SOME HISTORICAL BOOKS	92
NOTES AND NEWS	94
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	94
ORIGINAL VERSE: "FROM ABROAD," by the Hon. Mrs. LIONEL TOLLEMACHE	95
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	95
EXTENSION OF THE VATICAN LIBRARY, by W. B.	95
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	95
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Avancement of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales , by Prof. Skeat; The Etymology of "Hatchment" , by Paget Toynbee and Dr. Murray; An Anecdote about Browning , by the Hon. Roden Noel	96
ELLIS'S NOTES MANILIANÆ , by Prof. NETTLESHIP	97
CORRESPONDENCE:— Some Pith and Jaina-Prakrit Words , by the Rev. Dr. R. Morris	98
SCIENCE NOTES	98
PHILOLOGY NOTES	99
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	99
RICHARD REDGRAVE, by CESMO MONKHOUSE	99
HITTITE DISCOVERIES IN ASIA MINOR	100
CORRESPONDENCE:— The Temple of Luxor , by Henry Wallis	101
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	101
STAGE NOTES	102
MUSIC NOTES	102

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. beg to announce that Mr. RUDYARD KIPLING'S New Volume, "LIFE'S HANDICAP; being Stories of Mine Own People," will be ready on August 14, at all Libraries and Booksellers, price 6s.

Messrs. MACMILLAN & CO. also beg to announce that Mr. MARION CRAWFORD'S New Novel, "THE WITCH OF PRAGUE," is ready at all Libraries and Booksellers, in 3 vols., price 31s. 6d. Mr. CRAWFORD'S Recent Novel, "KHALED: AN EASTERN STORY," "than which," according to the ANTI-JACOBIN, "he has written no more attractive story," is still on sale in 2 vols., price 12s.

NEW VOLUME of POEMS by FREDERICK TENNYSON.
DAPHNE, and other Poems.
By FREDERICK TENNYSON,
Author of "The Isles of Greece," "Sappho and Alcæus."
Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

The ELEMENTS of POLITICS.
By HENRY SIDGWICK, Litt D., Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge.
Cloth, 8vo, 11s. net.

NEW EDITION.
A DOUBTING HEART.
By ANNIE KEARY. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.
Svo, cloth, 11s. net.

THE HISTORY of HUMAN MARRIAGE. By EDWARD WESTERMARCK, Ph.D., Lecturer on Sociology at the University of Helsingfors. With Preface by DR. A. R. WALLACE.

St. James's Gazette.—As regards the correctness of his facts and arguments it need here suffice to quote the opinion of Mr. Alfred Wallace, who anticipates that the verdict of independent thinkers on most of the disputed points will be in favour of Mr. Westermarck. In any case we may admire the boldness and lucidity with which his views are stated and the enormous mass of evidence he has collected in support of them. Even if one rejects all his theories, the book is full of interesting and useful information. While sociologists will exercise themselves over the chapters on the hypothesis of promiscuity, on sexual selection, and the prohibition of marriage between kindred, the less advanced inquirer will be diverted by the history of courtship amongst primitive and savage people, the description of various marriage ceremonies, or, it may be, by the remarks on the duration of marriage. He is chiefly concerned, however, with the past history of marriage; and of the value of his researches in this branch of sociology we cannot speak too highly. His book is in every way deserving of the high eulogy pronounced on it by Mr. Wallace.

JOURNAL OF THE LEPROSY INVESTIGATION COMMITTEE.
Edited by PHINEAS S. ABRAHAM, M.A., &c., &c.
No. III., 2s. 6d. net.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

CONTENTS OF
MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE
No. 382, for AUGUST.

- The August Number contains the commencement of a New Story, "A FIRST FAMILY OF TASAJARA," by BRET HARTE, Author of "Cassa," "The Heritage of Dedlow Marsh," &c.*
1. A FIRST FAMILY OF TASAJARA. By BRET HARTE. (Chaps. I.-III.)
 2. WESTMINSTER ABBEY. By A. E. STREET.
 3. EAST LOTHIAN TWENTY YEARS AGO. By A. G. BRADLEY.
 4. SOME UNPUBLISHED LETTERS of CHARLOTTE BRONTE. By Mrs. WILLIAMS.
 5. HEERA NUND. By F. A. STEEL.
 6. THE DUTCHMAN at HOME. By CHARLES EDWARDES.
 7. A REAL TARTARIN. By A. R. HOPE MONCRIEFF.
 8. THE STORY of a VIOLIN. By ERNEST DOWNSON.
 9. THE STRANGER in the HOUSE.

NOTICE.—The price of the ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE is now Sixpence Net. The terms on which it is supplied to Booksellers are not such as will enable them to sell the Magazine at less than the published price.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For AUGUST, 1891, contains:—

1. ASIA. Engraved by W. BISCOBE GARDNER, after the Picture by George Wilson. Front.
2. GEORGE WILSON. JOHN TODDENTER. With Illustrations after Pictures by the Painter.
3. DAYS. Design by E. E. HOUGHTON.
4. TEWKESBURY ABBEY. The Very Rev. H. D. M. SREXZ, D.D., Dean of Gloucester. Illustrations by C. Alfreda Channer.
5. GENTLEMAN JIM. MARY GAUNT.
6. LILIES. ETHEL CLIFFORD.
7. DIKENS and PUNCH. F. G. KITTON. Illustrations from the Collection of Mr. PUNCH.
8. OLD LANDMARKS. DEWEY BATES. Illustrations by the Writer.
9. THE WITCH of PRAGUE. Chaps. XXIV.—XXV. (To be Continued.) F. MARION CRAWFORD. Illustrations by W. J. HENNESSY.
10. THE RUSSO-JEWISH IMMIGRANT. The Rev. S. SIXSON. Illustrations by Ellen Gertrude Cohen.

ARTIST'S PUPIL.—A young lady, of good address, and with fair knowledge of drawing and painting, can be received as above.—Apply R. T., 54, Chancery Lane, E.C.

PRIZE NOVELS of £200, £150, and £100, for Serial Publication, invited by the GLASGOW WEEKLY HERALD Proprietors.—Particulars of Competition given in the Weekly Herald or in the Glasgow Daily Herald.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to Houskeeper, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the Manager, 54, Chancery Lane.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

TO CREST HOLDERS.

COMMUNICATIONS and full PARTICULARS of CRESTS and BLAZONINGS used are REQUESTED by the undersigned, who is engaged in preparing an entirely new Edition of Fairbairn's Standard Book of Crests. Proof of entry and sketches will be submitted for approval on application.—Prospectus on application. A. C. FOX-DAVIES, 20, John Street, Adelphi, London, W.C. To be published by T. C. & E. C. JACK, London and Edinburgh.

SIR JOHN SOANES'S MUSEUM.

13, Lincoln's Inn Fields.
ANTIQUITIES, PICTURES, AND SCULPTURE. OPEN FREE from 11 to 5, on TUESDAYS, WEDNESDAYS, THURSDAYS, and SATURDAYS in AUGUST. Cards for Private Days and for Students to be obtained of the Curator, at the Museum.

STATUTORY NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS

(To be held in London from 1st to 10th SEPTEMBER, 1891.)
Patron.—H. R. H. the DUKE of CONNAUGHT; H. H. H. ARCHBISHOP RAIZER.
Hon. Pres.—MARQUIS DE DUFFERIN; the EARL of LONDON.
President of Organising Committee.—The Right Hon. LORD HALSBURY, 50 Members in 25 countries, and 100 "papers" can be counted on. Governments, and 30 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous of sending Delegates or of informing the Congress of their Oriental work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers, to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. Leitner, Working, who will supply the programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members. Subscription £1.

For School and College Advertisements, see page 102.

Mr. WM. HEINEMANN begs to announce that COUNT TOLSTOY'S new Comedy, "THE FRUITS of ENLIGHTENMENT," Translated from the Russian by Dr. E. J. Dillon, with an Introduction by Mr. W. A. Pinero, and a Portrait of the Author, will be ready early next week, price 5s.

LONDON: 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

NOW READY FOR SUBSCRIBERS ONLY.

THE MASTERS OF WOOD ENGRAVING.

By W. J. LINTON.

Two Hundred and Twenty-nine Pages of Text, with nearly Two Hundred Cuts interspersed, mostly on India Paper, and Forty-eight unbacked page Subjects.

The Edition is limited to 500 Copies on ordinary paper, folio, 16½ by 12 inches, signed and numbered, at £10 10s. net. 100 Copies, Large Paper, folio, 20 by 15 inches, signed and numbered, at £21 net. Certain Plates (which are too large to be printed full size in the smaller Edition) are here given in their entirety, and in addition is given Dürer's "Triumphal Car of Maximilian," measuring 7 feet 4 inches, with a height of 18 inches (only a few copies remain unsubscribed).
PUBLISHED, July 18, 1891.

"A magnificent volume, admirable for printing, binding, and typography, and most admirable for illustrations, from both ancient and modern examples, printed with great skill and care, and eminently superior to those generally used in books of the sort and somewhat boldly called facsimiles. Not a page without interest and extreme pleasure and profit."
PUBLISHED, April, 1891.

"The history of the art by an expert of experts. If any one be competent to teach the true merits of wood engraving it is Mr. W. J. Linton. Well filled with letterpress, Mr. Linton has absolute knowledge of his subject."
ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE, April, 1891.

"Mr. Linton's crowning achievement as historian of wood engraving. The most luxurious thing of its kind that has yet been produced. Unquestionably the one authoritative treatise by the greatest living master."

Subscriptions received by R. F. STEVENS, 4, TRAFALGAR SQUARE, LONDON, W.C.

CABINET EDITIONS OF STANDARD WORKS of BIOGRAPHY.

Each in crown 8vo, to be obtained at any Booksellers.

Mr. Frith's Reminiscences.
(Recently published in 2 vols., 8vo). A New and Cheaper Edition is now ready. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

The Private Life of Marie ANTOINETTE. By HENRIETTE FELICITE CAMPAN, First Lady-in-Waiting to the Queen. With 2 Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Dean Hook : his Life and Letters.
Edited by the Rev. W. R. W. STEPHENS, Vicar of Woolbeding, Author of "Life of St. John Chrysostom," &c. The Popular Edition. With Index and Portraits. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Recollections of a Literary Life.
With Selections from Her Favourite Poets and Prose Writers. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The Lives of Painters: Hogarth, Sir Joshua Reynolds, Gainsborough, Fuseli, Sir Thomas Lawrence, Turner. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

A Memoir of the late Rev. John RUSSELL ("Parson Russell"), of Tordown, North Devon. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

The Life of Mary, Queen of Scots.
From the French of M. MIGNET. By ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

The Life of Oliver Cromwell.
From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

The Life of Henry John Temple, VISCOUNT PALMERSTON. With Selections from his Diaries and Correspondence. By the late Lord DALING and BULWER, and the Hon. EVELYN ASHLEY, M.P. In 2 vols., crown 8vo, with Frontispiece to each Vol., 12s.

The Life of Lord Wolseley. By CHARLES RATHBONE LOW, F.R.G.S. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

The Life of the Rev. Richard HARRIS BARHAM, Author of "The Ingoldsby Legends." By his Son, the Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The Lives of Wits and HumourISTS: Swift, Steele, Foote, Goldsmith, the Colmans, Sheridan, Porson, Sydney Smith, Theodore Hook, &c. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. In Two Vols., crown 8vo, with Portraits, 12s.

The Autobiography of a Seaman : Thomas, Tenth Earl of Dundonald. Popular Edition, with a Sequel relating Lord Dundonald's services in liberating the Spanish and Portuguese Colonies in South America, and in the War of the Greek Independence, and with an account of his later life and scientific inventions. Edited by the TWELFTH EARL OF DUNDONALD. With Portraits, Charts, and Nine Illustrations on Wood, crown 8vo., 6s.

The Lives of Statesmen: Burke and Chatham. By JOHN TIMBS, F.S.A. Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The Life of Theodore Edward HOOK. By Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM. A New Edition, crown 8vo., 6s.

Seven Years at Eton, 1857-1864.
Edited by JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS. Third Edition, in One Vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Ready next week, price 2s.

THE LAST GREAT NAVAL WAR.

An Historical Retrospect.

By A. NELSON SEAFORTH.

In One Volume, small 4to, with Charts.

Ready in a few days, 340 pp., extra crown
8vo, price 7s. 6d.

LETTERS

OF

MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF.

Translated from the French by MARY J. SERRANO.

WITH

PORTRAITS, AUTOGRAPH LETTERS
AND SKETCHES, &c.

OFFICIAL RAILWAY GUIDES.

Price 1s. each (post free, 1s. 3d.; or cloth, 2s.
(post free, 2s. 3d.).

REVISED EDITION, NOW READY.

London and North-Western Railway, The Official Illustrated Guide to the.
With numerous Illustrations, Maps, &c.

READY SHORTLY.

Great Eastern Railway, The Official Illustrated Guide to the. With Engravings on nearly every page.

Great Western Railway.

Great Northern Railway.

South-Eastern Railway.

London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway.

London and South-Western Railway.

CASSELL & COMPANY, Limited, Ludgate Hill, London.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES:

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By

WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "In Fur Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. "An admirable story."—Athenaeum. "One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By Avery

MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. "The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the denouement."—Times. "An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

A HIDDEN FOE: a Story of Love and Mystery. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "The Curse of Carne's Hold," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. "It may be read once with pleasure and interest, and even among fairly good novels there is hardly one in twenty of which more than this can truthfully be said."—Spectator.

WEDLOCK, and its Skeleton Key.

By KATE HOPE HUNTLY. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth. "The book contains carefully-drawn characters, and is well managed as regards plot and action."—Academy.

THE RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE,

M.P. By G. W. E. RUSSELL. Being the New Volume in the "Queen's Prime Ministers" Series. Crown 8vo, with new Photogravure Portrait, cloth, 3s. 6d. "A worthy offering at the shrine of patriotism and genius."—Daily News.

"A small work devoted to so large a subject must be, to be worth anything, a marvel of condensation. We find such marvel in Mr. Russell's contribution to the 'Queen's Prime Ministers' series. There are none of the weary commonplaces of contemporary biography within its covers; it is at once well informed, concise, and judicious. The author has had an 'Iliad' to transcribe; and he has kept it within the compass of a 'vitebelle'... If the few interesting extracts which we have made are insufficient to turn every reader to the book itself, then no commendation, however warm, in which we might feel inclined to indulge would do so."—Pall Mall Gazette.

"Written in the manly and independent spirit which we should expect in one of his lineage... An honest book."—World. "The most attractive and authoritative history of the man with whom it deals that has yet been given to the world."—Speaker.

"A very striking and instructive picture of the ex-Premier's life and character."—Truth. "A special Large-Paper Edition of 'The Queen's Prime Ministers' Series, strictly limited to 250 copies for England and America, printed on hand-made paper. Price for the complete set of Nine Volumes, Four Guineas net. Prospectus on application."

HOLIDAY BOOKS.

CARLSBAD and its ENVIRONS. By

J. MERRYLEES, Author of "The Englishman's Guide to the United States and Canada," &c. With a Medical Treatise on the use of the Waters by B. LONDON, M.D., Resident Physician at Carlsbad. With numerous Illustrations and Plan. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

FRIESLAND MERES, and THROUGH the NETHERLANDS. By HENRY MONTAGU DOUGHTY. Voyage of a Family in a Norfolk Wherry. Illustrated from Sketches by the Author. New Edition. Crown 8vo, 10s. 6d.

"Friesland Meres" is one of the most charming records of a holiday tour we have read. Mr. H. M. Doughty towed his family over the North Sea in a great big Norfolk wherry, and then explored, in the most luxurious manner, every hole and corner of Holland approachable by a waterway.—Observer.

MEMORABLE LONDON HOUSES.

A Handy Guide, with Illustrative Anecdotes. By WILMOT HARRISON. With over 100 Illustrations from Drawings made expressly for this Work by G. N. Martin. Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

"An excellent little volume... Easily carried in a side pocket, is profusely illustrated, and is provided with a numbered plan. The necessity of such a book is so obvious, one wonders that it was never before thought of."—World.

"Ought to be in the hands of every one who takes an interest in the associations which are connected with so many London houses. The index may be useful, and the book is small enough to be carried in the pocket."—Times.

FOUR WELSH COUNTIES: a Holiday

Book about Brecknock, Carnarvon, Merioneth, and Pembroke. By E. A. KILNER. With Illustrations. Crown 8vo, cloth, 5s.

"The pleasures of holidaying in Wales will be enhanced to those who consult beforehand, or better still, take along with them as a companion Miss Kilner's 'Four Welsh Counties.'"—Scotsman.

THE RURAL ECONOMY and AGRI-

CULTURE OF AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. As seen by ROBERT WALLACE, F.L.S., F.R.S. With 8 Maps, 80 Full-Page Plates, and 20 Text Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, One Guinea net.

"Professor Wallace gives, as the result of personal observation, a very complete and very instructive account of the agricultural methods and appliances in use throughout the principal Australian colonies."—Times.

POWER THROUGH REPOSE. By

ANNIE PAYSON CALL. Small crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. "Full of hints for the prevention and cure of nervous disease, and, as such, should appeal very powerfully to a large section of the public."—Globe.

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUG. 1, 1891.

No. 1004, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Letters of John Keats to his Family and Friends. Edited by Sidney Colvin. (Macmillans.)

THE poet in Keats (and he was nearly all poet) had reached full maturity before he died—indeed, Mr. Colvin, in the excellent biography contributed by him to Mr. Morley's series, gives good reasons for thinking that Keats lived to be more than mature, to be actually decadent: witness "The Cap and Bells" and the strangely ill-judged and uninspired re-cast of "Hyperion," long mistaken for a rough first draught—but the residue of Keats's personality, the ten or fifteen per cent. of him that was not poet, but friend, lover, philosophical observer, social critic, was hardly more than adolescent to the very last. The "marvellous boy" Chatterton was really never a boy at all. Keats was never anything else. Whether, if he had lived, his character, manners, and speech would have ultimately acquired the restraint and reserve, the felicitous and noble reticence, which had just begun to appear in his poetry, is, of course, a hopeless speculation; what is certain is that he died with these qualities undeveloped, and not even rudimentarily disclosed, in his nature. The absence of such qualities makes his letters a singularly interesting and valuable self-revelation; but, to the present writer at least (who is forced to acknowledge himself an eccentric person in regard to these matters), it does not make them pleasant reading. Keats is altogether too frank; he is even, if I may say so without provoking an imputation of cynicism, too sincere. In going over his letters we never have the pleasant exercise of divining something that has been left unsaid; there is no space for reading between the lines. He blurts out everything, like the impulsive, transparent, high-spirited, affectionate boy that he was. He is as garrulous, as confidential, as indiscreet as Marie Bashkirtseff, and a thousand times more veracious and genuine; for he would not give himself the trouble to pose, and it is doubtful if he possessed a looking-glass. From a reader's point of view, the drawback to this habit of complete self-disclosure is that it results in anything rather than variety of impression. It makes his letters, in spite of all accidental and superficial diversity of circumstance and subject-matter, the most monotonous reading imaginable, because, while other men present different facets of their personality to different correspondents, or even assume ventriloquial disguises in speaking down the epistolary telephone, he offers his whole spiritual surface to every eye, and is the same unvaried voice to every ear. Other men write letters with a monitor looking over their shoulders, and a prompter at their elbows. John Keats wrote without any other suggestion, correction, or admonition than were furnished by John Keats.

To class him with the great letter-writers—as Mr. Colvin implicitly does by speaking of "the other great letter-writers in English"—seems to me a questionable proceeding. With the exceptions of Pope and Burns, I can think of no other first-rate English poet whose greatness seems to me to be more entirely in abeyance than Keats's in letter-writing. When he glances at any great subjects other than his own art, he does so in a way that seems to show imperfect comprehension of them; while the flat trivialities that occupy so much space in his correspondence are not, for the most part, redeemed by any specially ennobling grace or charm of touch. He is frequently jocose without being in the least witty or amusing: his facetiousness consists mainly in the execution of all manner of undignified gambols, which he mistakes for humorous sallies (such as commencing several consecutive paragraphs with the mysterious formula, Twang-dillo-dee). Personally he seems to have been a manly young man on the whole, but as a letter-writer his loquacity too often degenerates into an incontinent gushiness which is neither manly nor properly boy-like, but simply hobbledehoyish. And Cockney vulgarity, unfortunately, is never far distant. Faults of breeding—by which I do not mean mere departures from conventional carriage, mere sins against the decalogue of Turveydrop, but violations of the instinctive code of right manners—are but too common in these pages. The divinity of genius does indeed sometimes shine through it all; but—if my fellow-worshippers will pardon the profanity—it is Apollo with an unmistakable dash of 'Arry.

Mr. Colvin has discharged his task in what was, I suppose, the only way legitimately open to him. Had it been a question of publishing Keats's correspondence for the first time, he hints that he might have preferred a method of selection and partial suppression; but, the case standing as it does, he recognises that such a course, however personally acceptable to himself, would have been unsatisfactory to most readers. He therefore rejects altogether the corruptious which Lord Houghton, with unmistakably good intentions, foisted upon the text; and his aim has been to give us Keats, not quite the whole Keats, yet nothing but Keats—

"omitting," to quote his own words, "a few passages of mere crudity, hardly more than two pages in all, but not attempting to suppress those which betray the weak places in the writer's nature, his flaws of taste and training, his movements of waywardness, irritability, and morbid suspicion."

Concerning the ethics of editorial procedure in such cases, the writer of this article having some time ago uttered himself at large elsewhere, with sufficient avoidance of ambiguity, has no intention of reiterating his sentiments here. But I think I cannot be flattering myself unduly by believing that one passage in Mr. Colvin's admirable preface was written with a distinct reference to certain published words of my own; and in the course of this passage Mr. Colvin says:

"Even as an artist, in the work which he himself published to the world, Keats was not one of those of whom it could be said, 'his worst he kept, his best he gave.' Rather he gave promiscuously, in the just confidence that among the failures and half-successes of his inexperienced youth would be found enough of the best to establish his place among the poets after his death."

Quite true, if by "worst" and "best" we simply mean degrees of literary merit; but to do so is clearly to misapply Tennyson's words. Keats "gave" indifferently his best and worst verses, because, like most of his poetic contemporaries, he was probably not always able to discriminate the two; but he was fully able to distinguish between the great and the petty in his own personal character; and we may be sure that in his heart of hearts he wished to "give" the world no part of himself that was not noble and high and true. He would surely have been the last to desire that his occasional outbursts of petulance, of unworthy distrust, of irritated self-esteem, should be fixed in the permanence which befits his greatness alone. "The object," says Mr. Colvin, "of publishing a man's correspondence is not merely to give literary pleasure—it is to make the man himself known"; but to say thus is to assume (quite unwarrantably, as it appears to me) that we alone, the poet's public, have rights in the matter, while the poet himself has none: that our right of inquisition is unassailable, and the poet's right of privacy non-existent. Touching one important matter, I venture here to make a confession of ignorance which, in the opinion of some readers, may perhaps put me out of court altogether, and disqualify me for uttering another word concerning Keats's life or writings. I have never read the letters to Fanny Brawne, and no consideration shall ever induce me to look at them. From common report I have learned their general character and spirit; but to read them—why, I should feel like a man listening at a keyhole, or spying over a wall. Mr. Colvin, to his honour be it said, gives them no place in his edition of Keats's correspondence. This is a matter about which there can be no conflict of opinions among healthy-minded persons; but in my inability to share Mr. Colvin's general estimate of Keats's genius for letter-writing, many readers will doubtless differ from me on vital points. It seems to me that he had not paid much attention to the art of handling prose as a precise instrument of expression, and it is also probable that he deliberately or instinctively saved his best powers, and nursed his finest impulses, for poetry alone. Not to measure him against the "other great letter-writers" whom Mr. Colvin names, take some of the new letters of Charlotte Brontë, published the other day. What a great tone is in them! What a profound and powerful spirit is seen to tremble behind the words, showing us its wounds, its agitations, its immense loneliness, without artificial reserve, without unseemly self-betrayal, nor yet without regard for the decencies of comely and even studied expression. Compared with a voice calling from such deeps as those, the letters of Keats seem, for the most part, the veriest infantine prattle and babble.

Looking over some of the dates given in Mr. Colvin's Preface, one cannot but reflect how many of Keats's circle survived until almost the present day. Keats's brother George, and Armitage Brown, only outlived the poet some twenty years; but Reynolds and Bailey lived till 1852, Hunt till 1859, Dilke till 1864, Cowden Clarke till 1877, Severn till 1879, and Fanny Keats (Señora Llanos) till 1889. It is difficult not to think that, if Lord Houghton had taken the requisite trouble, he might have learned more about the poet than he did, and have been able to paint a more life-like portrait. For the task was surely not a very hard one. Keats's was a simple and legible nature. He did not, like Shelley, send out tortuous roots and "intertwisted fibres serpentine" in every direction. He stood in no perplexingly elaborate relation to his age. He was, thank heaven! not one of the writers about whom a "Life and Times" is necessary. His appropriate fate would have been to live and die

"Content on pleasant sward, Leaving great verse unto a little clan."

As it was, he left that imperishable legacy to a clan which at first was indeed little, but which now embraces all who, vocal or silent, "follow the delightful Muse."

WILLIAM WATSON.

Ten Years in Equatoria and the Return with Emin Pasha. By Major Gaetano Casati. Translated by the Hon. Mrs. J. Randolph Clay, assisted by Mr. J. Walter Savago Landor. In 2 vols. (Frederick Warne & Co.)

MAJOR CASATI, after serving with distinction in the wars against Austria and in suppressing the brigandage long rampant in the Neapolitan provinces, threw up his commission in 1879 for the purpose of devoting himself to geographical studies and, should the occasion present itself, to the practical work of exploration. His opportunity came with a letter from Gessi Pasha to a mutual military friend, asking for "a young man, preferably an officer in the army, well acquainted with the art of drawing maps," the immediate object being a complete exploration of the Welle basin. Casati eagerly accepted this commission, for which he appeared to be fully qualified, being a member of the Topographical Department of the Leghorn Institute, which was entrusted with the construction of the ordnance maps of Italy. Little time was lost in preparations; and before the end of August, 1880, he had his first and last meeting with Gessi on the banks of the Jur tributary of the White Nile. Gessi, who had just succeeded in suppressing the dangerous rebellion of Soleimán, son of the notorious slave-trader, Zebehr, soon afterwards quitted the province for ever, and Casati found himself alone in the wilds of Central Africa with no recognised official authority, suffering from the effects of a severe attack of typhus, and deprived of his supplies by the local functionary. Nevertheless, he started at once with a small caravan for the station of Rumbek, on the river Ról, and during the next four years devoted himself to the exploration of the Upper Welle regions. The Mambattu (Mongbottu), Zandeh, Abarambo, and other territories were traversed in various directions, Schweinfurth's and Junker's itineraries were crossed at several points, and Junker himself was met on the banks of the Welle while that explorer was staying at the Court of Mambanga, successor of Munza, King of Mambattuland. Meantime the Mahdi's revolt had spread to the Equatorial Province; and, at the urgent request of Emin and Junker, Casati withdrew in January, 1885, to Emin's headquarters at Lado, on the White Nile. It was from this place that he started the following year on his famous expedition up the Nile to Unyoro, charged by Emin with an important mission to Chua, better known as Kaba Rega, king of that country. The mission was a failure; and after losing all the records of his previous explorations and narrowly escaping a cruel death, Casati returned to Lado, whence he was ultimately rescued with Emin by the Stanley Relief Expedition.

Such, briefly, are the incidents which form the groundwork of these bulky volumes, last and least of those issued in connection with the Emin episode. Several untoward circumstances have conspired to render this one of the least satisfactory books of travel that have appeared for some time. The author's friend, Capt. Camperio, who supplies the preface, frankly admits his lack of literary skill, remarking that the work has not the artistic merit of a practised writer, but reads rather like a report to his superior in command. Then, the disappearance of the papers dealing with the explorations in the Welle basin had to be made up by reports from Emin, long quotations from Gessi's diaries and other sources, and vague descriptions made from memory, which produce a bewildering effect on the reader. Thus, the sources of the Nile are said to be "formed and flow from a vast basin partly surrounded by a semicircle of mountains. In the eastern segment the range of heights describes a curve diverging from the Abyssinian mass of mountains and from the surroundings of the Blue Nile, reaching its highest altitude in the equatorial lake region."

Then follows some more equally unintelligible or misleading matter, with a footnote stating that the information is partly taken from an Italian document published in 1885. But surely a professional surveyor might at least have controlled such statements, if he was incapable of giving his readers an original and accurate account of the Upper Nile regions taken from personal observations during a residence of "ten years in Equatoria." Elsewhere the White Nile is identified with "the Astapus of the ancients," which was certainly the Blue Nile, while it is suggested that the latter takes its name from the indigo plant; the fact being that, although mostly turbid in its lower reaches, it issues as a blue, limpid stream from Lake Tsana, whence its Arab name of Bahr-el-Azrek, the "Blue River." Another adverse factor is the writer's idiosyncrasy revealed by a profusion of naive statements, puerilities or platitudes, often quite in the "copybook style," as thus:

"Difficulties at first perceived fade away; the cowardice of boasters is always defeated by the patient steadfastness of a strong mind. A good intelligence department, moderation towards adversaries, and actions that are able to inspire and maintain the confidence of friends, will always rule men and events."

Then we are gravely informed that "the evil counsellors," that is, the Egyptian traitors who conspired to depose Emin,

"proudly withdrew to their houses with the conviction of having saved the country and performed a memorable act of justice, while the nervous, few in number, are perhaps sorry; but they felt their conscience delivered from the incubus of responsibility weighing upon them, and concealed their cowardice with the excuse of numerical impotence."

It is startling to read that Casati advised Emin to affix his signature to the decree dismissing him from the government of the province, and to sign "any other paper of the sort which might subsequently be sent to him." From his somewhat obscure account of these intrigues, interspersed as they are with much sententious moralising and serpentine maxims, one might almost suppose that his rôle was that of a "trimmer," running with the hare and hunting with the hounds. It appears that he was not himself at any time under arrest, and he even assures us that Jephson was mistaken in supposing himself a prisoner. Anyhow, Casati moved freely between both parties, preaching fine moral maxims to the cut-throat Nubians, and exhorting Emin to be of good cheer under uncommonly depressing circumstances. He professes to be astonished that Jephson felt pained, "as if an indecorous precedent had been set," and rather prides himself in obtaining recognition as the representative of both in one particularly nefarious transaction, which he himself calls "a heinous proposal." On another occasion he adopts a policy that he knows must deeply wound Emin, but he protests that he was bound so to act.

"It was an indispensable step in order to begin work in favour of my friend. I did not act in this manner because I had lost the sense of my own dignity, but because calm reflection proved to me that it was the best means of performing the friendly duty I had undertaken; and, if the course of events had compelled me to give up European customs to such an extent that my life might have been thought incomprehensible, still I can certainly say that my courage never wavered, that my mind was constantly bent on my purpose, and that I did not care to indulge in vain pride, either in season or out of season, as others did."

For his "friend" Emin he had evidently a kindly feeling, though almost unconsciously saying most unkind things of him:

"If not proud, he was certainly self-reliant, and seemed to disdain the careful study of the men who surrounded him. He believed that he could attend to everything himself; and, when he saw that he could not alone prevent the forthcoming ruin of his province, he conceived false opinions, often changed them, and thus injured himself. . . . His temporising in the continual hope of a better day shook his authority as a commander more and more, and gradually brought him into general distrust."

Emin's behaviour in connexion with the Unyoro mission is declared to be "ungrateful and presumptuous"; and elsewhere we are told that

"the Governor, powerless to put a stop to the increasing thirst for blood and the revengeful spirit of the military tyrants, was not only compelled to sign proscriptions, but also to initiate them, and to praise murderers and shake hands with them."

The author has not been fortunate in his translators, who through ignorance, partly of the subject, partly of the language, fall into several serious blunders. Thus we have "at Massico" for in Mexico, the reference being, not to a place in Sudan, but to the French invasion of Mexico; "a successor at Mirambo" for to Mirambo, Mirambo not being a place, but a well-known conqueror in Central Africa; "the explorer of Cassai" for the Kasai, which is a river, not a country, and so on. A strange indifference to English idiom is betrayed in such sentences as: "His never-extinguished hatred for the Egyptian domination increased and again engaged his attention"; "The chimneys and hulks [query: hull of the steamer] had been varnished like new, for show at the approaching voyage on the lake"; "They exhibit their gifts in industries and commerce"; "The Chief of the Wavitu, by right of custom, has the prerogative of the investiture of new chiefs in the single branches"; "Driven away by the persecution of man, these monkeys often immigrate." The reference here is to the chimpanzee, which, we are assured, "can cook meat and ground-nuts." If Major Casati had established that statement on some better authority than mere hearsay, he would gladly be forgiven a whole volume of platitudes.

There are four rather sketchy maps and a large number of illustrations—some passable and even good, especially the portraits, others execrable. Inventors of new processes of reproduction seem just now to be trying their effect on the patience of a long-suffering public.

A. H. KEANE.

RECENT FRENCH WORKS ON BIBLICAL CRITICISM.

La Modernité des Prophètes. Par Ernest Havet. (Paris: Calmann Lévy.)

Les Résultats de l'Exégèse Biblique. Par Maurice Vernes. (Paris: Leroux.)

Essais Bibliques. Par Maurice Vernes. (Paris: Leroux.)

WHAT is known in Germany as Graf's theory, in England as Kuenen's or Wellhausen's theory of Old Testament history and literature, has hitherto had to cope only with attacks from the traditional or conservative side. Against these it has successfully held its ground; and it is now not only accepted by a great number, perhaps the majority, of unprejudiced and competent Biblical critics, but it is assumed as authoritative by such an historian as Edward Meyer, and by such an archaeologist as M. Perrot. But, like all other great reforms, it is now threatened with the hostility of a different class—of those who want to go farther, to make a still cleaner sweep of traditional opinions. So far the assailants are neither numerous nor formidable; but they have the advantage of attacking the theory on a side left comparatively undefended because believed to be absolutely secure.

In a work called Le Christianisme et ses Origines, begun in 1871 and completed in 1884, the author, M. Ernest Havet, having occasion to read through the Old Testament under the excellent guidance of the late Prof. Reuss, took upon himself to revise the work of that eminent critic, in the sense of a much more complete break with the old traditions and a much larger recognition of the forger's hand in the composition of ancient Hebrew literature. In particular, he disallowed the authenticity of the "Prophets" wholesale, bringing down the earliest of them to the Maccabaean period, and the most recent to the years following the death of Herod the Great. This view was first put forward in 1877. M. Havet was a good classical scholar, but he knew neither Hebrew nor German. Naturally enough his views did not commend themselves to Hebraists, who apparently disdained even to refute them. He, however, remained convinced of their truth, and returned to the charge in 1889 by publishing an amplification and defence of his thesis in the Revue des Deux Mondes for August of that year, now re-issued as a separate volume by his literary executors. Before his death, which occurred on December 21, 1889, at the age of seventy-six, M. Havet had the satisfaction of discovering that he had made one disciple, a certain M. Charles Bellange, who, in the preface to a work on the history of the Jewish people, had, it seems, professed his adhesion to the views of the aged and solitary sceptic.

The reasoning by which Ernest Havet hoped to revolutionise Hebrew studies without a knowledge of Hebrew is of a very summary character. Detailed predictions of future events are an impossibility; therefore no books containing such pretended predictions can be of an earlier date than the events themselves. But the Hebrew prophets are filled with references to what happened during the last two centuries B.C. Therefore they were written during that period. We have here what at first sight seems a generalisation of the methods by which, to the unanimous satisfaction of liberal scholars, much of Isaiah has been assigned to the close of the Exile, and the whole of Daniel to the Maccabaean epoch. And just as extreme reactionists are very fond of parading the wildest revolutionary schemes as the logical consequence of moderate reforms, so also we find orthodox reviewers affecting to perceive no difference between the method of M. Havet and the method of so cautious and conservative a critic as M. Renan. It is even surprising that the disquisitions of the former are not already figuring among the "remarkable books" of the Nineteenth Century, and appearing under the skilful manipulation of Mr. Gladstone or Mr. Lilly as awful examples of the inclined plane down which modern rationalism is gliding, or of the abyss to which it leads.

But just as the grounds of true Liberalism are valid equally against a Metternich and a Marat, so, also, the very arguments by which the higher criticism has disauthenticated some parts of the Canon may be used as effectually for the vindication of other parts. Thus, the silence of Ecclesiasticus is justly held to be good evidence that Daniel was unknown at the time when that book was composed, that is to say at a time not later than the first quarter of the second century B.C. But this single date is enough to destroy the whole hypothesis of M. Havet; for the son of Sirach mentions Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the Twelve Minor Prophets as part of the hereditary glories of Israel. So, also, with the internal evidence supplied by the book of Daniel itself. Clearly it dates from a period long posterior to Jeremiah; and M. Havet accordingly brings it down to the death of Herod. But the same arguments that prove the impossibility of its having been composed before the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes also exclude the possibility of any later date. M. Havet does indeed maintain that by the beast with the iron teeth is meant the Roman empire; but we need go no farther than the explanation given by "Daniel" himself, in his eighth chapter, to see that it is an emblem of Macedonia. The argument used to discredit Ezekiel is particularly unfortunate. He alludes several times to the battering-ram, which it is alleged was not used until the year 400 B.C. (p. 115). M. Havet need have gone no farther than the work of his countrymen, MM. Perrot and Chipiez, to find that the battering-ram is represented on the figured monuments of ancient Assyria. The prophecies of the Babylonian Isaiah date themselves almost as certainly as Daniel, the allusions to Cyrus being alone sufficient for the purpose. But M. Havet is so possessed with the idea of Herod that he identifies him with the Persian hero as readily as with the little horn in Daniel. There is not much to choose between such an interpretation and the desperate shifts of those orthodox apologists who assume that Korsh was an ancient title for the chiefs of Iran well known to the contemporaries of Hezekiah. As for the first Isaiah, when he describes the desolation of Judaea, evidently he is thinking of the ravages of the army of Antiochus. Naturally one Syrian war was very like another Syrian war. Indeed, all wars and sieges present a sort of family resemblance. It is not so very long since an august personage rather infelicitously reminded us how very applicable a certain passage in this same Isaiah is to some circumstances of the Franco-German War. But I must apologise for troubling the readers of the ACADEMY with such trumpery nonsense. I can only plead that it was signed by a member of the Institute, and published in that supreme organ of culture and of mortal ennui—the Revue des Deux Mondes.

M. Maurice Vernes has the advantage over Ernest Havet of knowing Hebrew, German, and Dutch; and accordingly he has not committed himself to such obvious absurdities. His thesis is that the whole Hexateuch and all the prophetic books were composed in the post-exilic period, speaking roughly between 400 and 200 B.C. So far he has advanced but few and trifling arguments in support of what Dr. Kuenen well describes as an astounding thesis that ought not to be put forward without a powerful array of proofs. To this M. Vernes replies that the same scandal was excited when the views held by Dr. Kuenen himself, and by the whole modern school of Biblical criticism, were first promulgated. No doubt; but then their views were established by the recognised canons of scientific method, and so won their way to general acceptance; whereas his views have nothing but audacity and novelty to recommend them, and even in those respects they are outdone by the wilder conjectures of Ernest Havet. M. Vernes, it is true, finds fault with the method of his opponents as unscientific, because their present conclusions have been reached through a gradual modification of the traditional exegesis; whereas his method is to work back from a particular date—say 200 B.C.—when the Hebrew Bible is known to have existed, with a few exceptions, nearly as we have it now, and as we ascend upward to assign each book or group of books to whatever age seems most suitable to its composition. But surely, when we have the internal evidence supplied by the writings and by their mutual connexion, it matters little from which end of the chronological series we start—the terminus a quo or the terminus ad quem. At any rate, the adherents of the reigning school need not fear the appeal to a priori probabilities. Antecedently, it is most unlikely that a number of Jewish families would have voluntarily relinquished their comfortable settlements in Mesopotamia in order to rebuild Jerusalem and its temple, facing for that purpose the hardships of a journey through the desert and the privations incident to the colonisation of a lawless, inclement, and rather barren country, had they not been stimulated to the enterprise by a glorious legendary history, an intoxicating prophetic literature, and a code believed to be divinely revealed. It is most unlikely that the proud language of those whom we call the Older Prophets could have been formed in any but a period of national independence, that a pseudographic literature could have been composed except on the model of an authentic literature, that a post-exilic writer could have produced a dramatic work so palpitating with life and actuality, so meaningless when detached from its present historical framework, as the book of Jeremiah. "But," says M. Vernes, following Havet, "Jeremiah is not mentioned in 'Kings.'" Why should he have been mentioned? He had no influence on history, he witnessed and deplored the fate of Jerusalem, but could not avert it. The Oresteia of Aeschylus was a political manifesto in favour of the Areopagus. Yet in Aristotle's account of the conflict that led to the political ruin of the Areopagus, and with it of the old Athenian aristocracy—that very interesting account that we have all just been reading—the name of Aeschylus does not once occur. Are we then to conclude that the poet never existed?

The date of Deuteronomy is a question closely connected with that of the authenticity of Jeremiah. There are sufficient points of resemblance in style and thought to prove that they belong to the same age, and of difference to prove that they are not from the same pen. There is besides the external evidence going to show that the Book of the Law "found" by Hilkiah was no other than the Deuteronomic code. But, says M. Vernes, Jeremiah nowhere alludes to the reforms of Josiah; and, what is more, the prophet declares that no law of sacrifice was promulgated in the desert. Besides, the abolition of the high places attributed to Josiah is incredible; the idea of such an outrage to popular feeling could only have occurred to a fanatic or a madman. The whole narrative in "Kings" is manifestly a post-exilic fiction. Let us begin with the last argument. It might be replied that the conduct of Josiah in flinging himself with a small and untrained force across the path of Necho's conquering army was a sign of fanaticism and even of madness. But the project of abolishing the high places was not so insane after all. According to our authorities, it had been already attempted by Hezekiah when, as Prof. Robertson Smith has well suggested, the devastation of the open country by Sennacherib's army, combined with the immunity enjoyed by the temple of Jerusalem, would render the centralisation of public worship in one sanctuary comparatively easy of acceptance. Deuteronomy would be quite unintelligible as a post-exilic composition; its reforms work from the circumference in, from Judaea to Jerusalem; whereas, before the foundation of the second temple, a clean sweep had been made, and henceforth the whole religious movement was from the centre out, from Jerusalem to Judaea. The absence of any essential distinction between priests and Levites in Deuteronomy is another pre-exilic note: the subsequent degradation of the Levites could only have been effected through such a profound break as the exile supposes; and the position occupied by Ezekiel in this respect is a strong argument for the authenticity of his prophecies. As regards the absence of references to the sacrificial code in Jeremiah, and the generally unfavourable attitude of that prophet towards all ritualism, M. Vernes is in error when he assumes that his opponents are unaware of that fact. It was already pointed out by Duhamel in 1875, and the observation has since been confirmed by Dr. Kuenen, that Jeremiah only sympathised with the Deuteronomist up to a certain point, drawing the line where the latter declines from the heights of spiritual religion. Jeremiah has words of praise for the just administration of Josiah; to have dwelt on his iconoclasm would have been scarcely politic after the catastrophe of Megiddo. The star-worshippers were ready enough as it was to point out that the period of national misfortune had begun with the abandonment of their cult.

Besides the instance just mentioned, M. Vernes gives more than one example of very imperfect acquaintance with the writings of the school whom he attacks. In reviewing a friend of his whom he greatly admires, but who is, I believe, otherwise unknown to fame, the late M. Gustave D'Eichthal, he credits that critic with the idea of separating the great preamble in Deuteronomy (chap. v-xi) from the code which it precedes, and treating it as an independent composition belonging to another author and another age. But this feat of analysis, whatever it may be worth, had been performed by Wellhausen ten years before the appearance of M. D'Eichthal's essay, and was controverted, in my opinion, with success, by Kuenen in the first part of his Onderzoek. Again, in arguing for the recent origin of the short code contained in Exodus xx.-xxiii., M. Vernes confidently appeals to the pericope xxiii. 14-17, as embodying the recognition of a single sanctuary. He ought to have known that Kuenen and Wellhausen have condemned this passage as an awkward Deuteronomic interpolation. It is not then surprising that so very careless a critic should have disregarded the delicate analysis by which the comments of a Deuteronomizing editor in "Kings" have not only been detected, but safely assigned to a period anterior to the fall of Jerusalem. It is a remark which we owe to the sagacity of Wellhausen that the reference to the fate of Judah in 2 Kings xvii. 19-20, was added after the catastrophe, and thus proves that the reflections which it interrupts date from before the Exile.

One need only compare the historical perspective, the political outlook, of the Great Prophets whose genuineness is now impugned with writings of admittedly post-exilic origin, to perceive the difference. On the one side, we have a world full of nations still desperately struggling for their political independence; on the other, the dead calm of a world over which one irresistible monarchy has established its sway. And so the ideal of Isaiah and Micah is peace; while the ideal of the later prophets is empire, but an empire of the saints. On the other hand, anticipations of a time when Jahvism should be universally recognised as the true religion cannot be used, as they are by MM. Havet and Vernes, to prove the post-exilic date of a prophecy. Such a prediction was the natural consequence of a pure spiritual monotheism whenever and wherever that creed first prevailed; and to say that it did not prevail among the prophets of Israel before the Exile is to assume one of the questions at issue, and to assume it in the teeth of positive evidence. Predictions of the Captivity and the Restoration are also made much of by these writers, as arguments for the late origin of the books containing them, but with equally little force. Historical experience gave ample warrant for predictions of a wholesale transportation; the promise of a subsequent deliverance is remarkable, but no doubt it arose from the tradition of an ancient deliverance from Egyptian bondage, and it was moreover one of those predictions which realise themselves. The period of seventy years fixed by Jeremiah considerably exceeds the actual duration of the Captivity, and would hardly have been fabricated after the event. Neither would the return of the Ten Tribes have been included, as it is, in nearly every promise to the nation, at a time when such a promise was so signally belied by the event. Conversely, such a triumph for Israel as the destruction of Nineveh would surely have provoked some allusions in the books attributed to Amos, Hosea, and the first Isaiah, had they been made up after its occurrence. Its actual effect was to suggest that a similar fate lay in store for other proud and oppressive cities—an expectation which, as Dr. Kuenen has shown, did not come true in the real sense of the prophets who proclaimed it.

The argument on which M. Vernes seems to rely most is that the alleged prophetic writings betray a complete misconception of the religious condition of Israel before the Exile, confounding together such distinct facts as the plurality of places of worship, the representation of Iahve under a visible form, and the introduction of foreign cults. It is not quite clear whence his own superior information is derived. But perhaps the prophets were not so very much mistaken. Perhaps the preservation of the old sanctuaries was favourable to idolatry, and perhaps an idolatrous conception of Iahve did facilitate apostasy to Baal and Moloch, or what would now be more politely called a system of religious syncretism.

The example of Matthew Arnold shows that literary tact does not by itself qualify one to be a Biblical critic. But neither is the total absence of literary tact a qualification; and it is totally absent from the essays of M. Vernes. He does not often venture into the field of literary criticism; but when he does, his performances are only valuable as illustrating a certain remarkable resemblance between the ulterior effects of Calvinism on the sense of humour in countries otherwise the most opposed. Arguing against the genuineness of the elegy on the deaths of Saul and Jonathan attributed to David, he points out how irrational it would have been to forbid the communication of the fatal news to the Philistines, when it was in a battle with those very Philistines that Saul and Jonathan had just succumbed (Essais Bibliques, p. 168). Perhaps when the elegist, whoever he may have been, said, "Tell it not in Gath!" what he really meant was that his verses were not to be brought under the notice of such critics as M. Maurice Vernes.

ALFRED W. BENN.

NEW NOVELS.

For God and Humanity. By Haskett Smith. In 3 vols. (Blackwoods.)

It Happened Yesterday. By Frederick Marshall. (Blackwoods.)

A Deputy Providence. By Henry Murray. (Chapman & Hall.)

The World Grown Young. By William Herbert. (W. H. Allen & Co.)

Elsa. By E. M'Queen Gray. (Methuen.)

Balaam and his Master. By Joel Chandler Harris. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

The Upper Ten. By Sebastian Evans and Frank Evans. (Sampson Low.)

Good Bye. By John Strange Winter. (White.)

THE character of Cyril Gordon, in Mr. Haskett Smith's novel, is avowedly drawn from life, the prototype being no other than the late Laurence Oliphant. It required some boldness to attempt by such a means the limning of a man who so little lends himself to portraiture as the subject of a recent biography. Nor can it be said that Mr. Haskett Smith has succeeded in producing a portrait. His Cyril Gordon is a religious enthusiast, who lives a life of self-abnegation among the Druses on Mount Carmel; but he is far too colourless and shadowy a personage to suggest the brilliant many-sided man whom he is supposed to represent. The truth is that canvas, materials, and a subject do not make a painter or a picture. Mr. Haskett Smith had all these. He knew Oliphant, and is perfectly familiar with the Eastern life which gave appropriate surroundings to one of the most striking careers; but there is a want of vividness in his work. Not only does he not succeed with his central character—a result at which no surprise should be felt—but all the lines of his story are flimsy and unreal. The book has been written with the evident object of conveying certain lessons on points of conduct and belief. The object is admirable, and the lessons are well meant; but the genius of fiction is not to be cheated into doing homilistic duty. A moral essay remains a moral essay, no matter what the form in which it is presented. Here we have it in the supposed form of conversations; but the wary reader will perceive that he is being quietly preached at, and that the names Cyril Gordon, Sir Thomas Randolph, and so on, are only tags used as innocent disguises. It is the common fault of all kinds of preachers to misapprehend the things they rail against, and, as a consequence, to misconstrue their ideals. Among Mr. Haskett Smith's characters are two young undergraduates, friends of each other. One of them is a good fellow at heart, but like many another generous young man he gets into bad company and contracts gambling debts. The other—Harold Maybrook—is a paragon of virtue. Maybrook is consulted by his friend as to a large sum lost to a sharper named Baker at cards, which he cannot pay. The erring youngster has formed the wise resolution never to play again; but his monitor tells him to keep a card-party engagement he has already made, and volunteers to take a hand himself. The other players on the occasion were Baker and a companion sharper. To the surprise of the rest, Maybrook consents to play unlimited loo, and he wins round after round until the three other players are "rooked." The biggest loser is Baker. Maybrook then sees his chance. He accepts from Baker his own friend's I O U's in part payment of his winnings, and forthwith destroys them. After having thus delivered his friend, he wipes his hands of the whole business, and renounces the rest of his winnings. Baker is so touched by his magnanimity that he falls upon his neck, and when the curtain drops everybody is forswearing cards for ever. This is utterly unlike life. Mr. Haskett Smith's best characters are the women in the story. Miss Lockyer has some individuality, and Nellie Marshall some freshness. The descriptions of Syrian life and scenery are fairly good, but the style—especially in the conversations—is unpleasantly stiff and awkward. When a girl, having taken her hat off, puts it on again, it is irritating to be told that she "proceeded to restore to her head the hat which she had discarded."

Mr. Frederick Marshall has spoiled a good story, and a very clever book, by the conclusion he gives to It Happened Yesterday. Up to a certain point, and a point far advanced in the tale, an exceptionally strong interest is maintained. Then all at once hypnotism comes in and the interest ceases. You feel that the author has played you a trick, and you resent the quackery of the whole thing. Mr. Marshall could well have dispensed with so feeble a resource. He had an excellent plot in hand. His chief characters are two women—one of them a German of noble birth, with pride of ancestry, acute sensibility, and Teutonic awkwardness; the other a Frenchwoman of low birth, unimpressionable except on the surface, but with all a Frenchwoman's talent and taste in the matter of externals. The former was very poor, the latter very rich; and they are brought into close relations, in which they mutually act and re-act upon each other. Another character, full of strong individuality, is a nephew of the Frenchwoman, an ardent patriot, always in a state of effervescence, and never foaming so much as at the sight of a German. Here was matter enough for a story of the better sort. The idealism of the German girl had to transform the mind of the Frenchwoman; and the luxurious taste of the latter had to work an external transformation in the young German. French and German patriotism, moreover, each displayed in fiery ebullitions against the other, might have found a solvent for their separate fires in the glow of love. This, with much else, is all in the course of being well worked out, when a wretched Russian comes upon the scene—a creature without a single pleasant quality, but capable of an ultra-hypnotic power of will. With his advent the story breaks down; and Mr. Marshall deprives his readers of the conclusion they had expected, and denies to his own powers the legitimate completion of an admirable piece of mental analysis.

Mr. Henry Murray tells a pleasant story with much skill in A Deputy Providence. If his country, his people, and his style are suggestive of Mr. Christie Murray, it must be remembered that the two are brothers, and that midland scenes and midland people were among the native surroundings of both. Mr. Barstow, the purse-proud, uneducated Staffordshire man who had made his money "in the hardware business," is a genuine specimen of a small class still to be met with in the Midland Black Country. While Barstow adds field to field the neighbouring squire's estate shrinks in his hands. Barstow holds mortgages on it and means to absorb it. But it is quite in accordance with the usual drift of this kind of story that the indigent squire should have a daughter, and the vulgar capitalist a son, between whom a union may be foreshadowed in the early chapters. Ancestry, when it is accompanied by penury, does not count for much with the Black Country type of capitalist; but old Barstow knew that there was coal under the squire's estate—a matter as to which that improvident gentleman had never taken the trouble to inform himself—and there was therefore reason enough why, as a second string to his bow, Barstow should wish to marry his son to the squire's daughter. The squire was helpless, and ready to agree to anything; but the young people had plans and ideas of their own, which did not readily fit in with Barstow's. A time of trouble ensues for each of them, in which the scene changes to the East End of London, and both youth and maiden show of what heroic stuff they are made. This part of the story, and the end to which it leads up, it would be unfair to tell. It is enough to say that the sequel is a happy one, and that from beginning to end the story has a decided charm.

Mr. Philip Adams, the philanthropic millionaire in The World Grown Young, was "a deputy providence" in a very real sense. A lucky inventor, he became the richest man of his time, and of all times. There is no excuse for a novelist who draws the line at a few millions more or less when he is dealing with imagined wealth. In Mr. Herbert's book the millions are vaguely abundant, and they multiply themselves as one supposes millions would be apt to do. Philip Adams thus starts on his work of philanthropy fully equipped. He is a philanthropist of a sensible sort, for instead of foisting more hobbies upon the world, under the name of charities, he relieves the poor world of some of these doubtful boons. He abolishes the Poor Law, or gets Parliament to do so—though he is himself the master-spirit of the House of Commons—and establishes a system under which everybody is fed and kept in health to the advantage of the whole community. Free sleeping accommodation is afforded in churches and museums, which seems a rather bold experiment, but it is part of an excellent gospel of cleanliness. He puts down long speeches, street organs, umbrellas, tall hats. Women receive his especial care, and he finishes the great work of their emancipation. They become voters, discard corsets and petticoats, take to knickerbockers, and may change their husbands once a year. Among the vexed problems solved is that of vivisection, for, instead of hanging capital offenders, Philip Adams hands them over to the doctors as subjects for operation. Changes so sweeping are not accomplished without opposition; but the philanthropist is all-powerful, and Parliament and the country ultimately let him have his way. On the whole it is a very good way, and one wishes that some of the abolitions he is credited with were as true in fact as they are in fitness.

Elsa is a pleasant Venetian story which makes no great demand on the energies or imagination of the reader. The girl Elsa is charming in her simplicity and naturalness. She is well-born, but her father's poverty obliges her to look to the operative stage for a livelihood; and the training for this vocation supplies a fair amount of interesting material. The chief interest, however, centres in the loves of Elsa and the young Englishman, Edward Somerled—loves not declared until much of the story has been told, but anticipated throughout by the mutual delight of the two in the bright, artistic, musical, idyllic life of Venice. A good deal else enters into the plot, and there are some well-drawn subordinate characters, of several nationalities, the least satisfactory of them being the villain, who (like so many other villains in fiction) is an Italian. The villainy would be artistically more effective if it were a trifle less fiendish. The author succeeds best in the quieter parts of the book and in the simpler characters. His worst fault is that, in the possible abundance of his own leisure, he forgets that his readers may have less time at their disposal. Had he thought of this contingency, he would no doubt have shortened some of the more trivial passages, and given a little more quickness to some of the conversations.

The creator of "Uncle Remus" is inimitable in stories of negro life, of which the volume called (after the first story in it) Balaam and his Master contains a further supply. Mr. Harris's humour is both grim and funny, qualities which one imagines to be thoroughly characteristic of the black people he describes. But they have, or they had, another quality also—that of devotion to their masters—which he brings out even more forcibly. As seen under these lights, slavery was not without its higher uses and compensations. It would be very hard to find counterparts to Balaam and Mom Bi among English or white American domestic servants. Ananias, one fancies, is equally unique, especially in the faculty of ready invention. He claimed to be descended from "Ananias de Poffit," and not from "Ananias de liar," but he certainly had all the romancing powers of the latter.

The dedication of The Upper Ten to Edouard Pailleron recognises the indebtedness of its authors to his "Le Monde ou l'on s'ennuie." But marked as that indebtedness is, it does not detract from the originality of style, subject, and treatment of this amusing comedy. It is pretty much what Sheridan might have written, though he would have called it by a better title. Vacuity and dullness belong to "the upper ten," whereas neither the one nor the other is to be found in the piece.

Good Bye is bright and smart, but divorce makes an unsavoury subject at the best. The weakness of the man who could so readily assume his wife's unfaithfulness forms an element of weakness also in the story. His wife was far too good for him, and he too insignificant to have caused so much misery to other people. The grief which he thinks he feels, after his wife's departure, is only the petulant crying of a child over the toy he has wilfully broken.

GEORGE COTTERELL.

SOME HISTORICAL BOOKS.

A Student's History of England. By Samuel Rawson Gardiner. Vol. II. (Longmans.) This second volume, shortly to be followed by a third, carries the student from the accession of Henry VIII. to the abdication of James II. In other words, it covers the period of "the making of England," in a truer sense than that adopted by J. R. Green—the period when the civil and religious liberties of Englishmen were being gradually established. For ourselves, we confess to belonging to that considerable class who can never be brought to take a proper interest in the barbarous centuries from Caesar down to the Wars of the Roses, the whole of which pass before our eyes like a pageant, crowded with kings and knights and monks, but without any political lesson. For us Richard Lion-Heart is no more real than Arthur, Henry VI. no more real than Lear, the Babes in the Wood a great deal more real than the Princes in the Tower. With Charles Lamb, we are content to take our early history of England from Shakspeare. But from the Tudor dynasty downward even the most incurious is compelled to recognise the continuity of events and their bearing on modern affairs. The Reformation is coincident with the decay of feudalism: the first Cecil is a very different person for us from the last Neville. It is hardly necessary to say that Mr. Gardiner rises to his subject. He is, emphatically, a political historian, such as were Thucydides and Tacitus, whose interest lies in watching the development of great movements, and in determining the share which monarchs and statesmen had in advancing or hindering them. It is not for nothing that his present book is entitled A Student's, not The Student's History. For if it be intended for the use of students, it is no less certainly the work of one who is himself a student, undertaken in the maturity of his powers, and written under a sense of the supreme duty of veracity. Without partisanship, but by no means without strong sympathies, he here traces the course of the Reformation, of the Elizabethan epoch, of the Puritan revolt, and of the Glorious Revolution. It might not be impossible to detect errors of detail, such as were plentiful in the picturesque pages of Green's first edition—we ourselves have noticed one (strange for an Oxford man) at the top of p. 425—but one feels, as one did also with Green, that one is in the hands of a master, and that the broad outlines are permanently true. It is difficult to believe that our interest will be equally sustained through the next volume, dealing with the dull eighteenth and the familiar nineteenth centuries, even though it will include the "expansion of England." It remains to say something about the illustrations, which would alone suffice to make this the most attractive history of England that has been published. Here, for example, you may find the vexed question of what kind of block Charles I. was executed upon settled, without a word of comment, by the reproduction of a quaint woodcut from a contemporary broadside. As in the first volume the most notable feature was the representation of mediæval architecture, so now special mention must be made of the portraits. London has recently had reason to know that the Tudors and the Stuarts were alike fortunate in their court-painters, several of whose finest works are here admirably engraved—though it should also be said that the engraving is very unequal. Less well known are the likenesses of the ministers of those kings and queens, who bear, almost without exception, the look of seriousness, if not of melancholy, that was assuredly characteristic of the whole period. From Sir Thomas More to Milton there is hardly a face but shows the lines of mental anxiety—perhaps most strongly marked in Cooper's portrait of Oliver Cromwell, upon whom all the political and religious troubles of this time were concentrated. The bust of Shakspeare from Stratford church stands alone in its Sphinx-like serenity.

Some Account of the Stuarts of Aubigny in France (1422-1672). By Lady Elizabeth Cust. (Privately printed at the Chiswick Press.) This choice volume, printed on hand-made paper in charming type, with ample uncut margins, will be a treasure to all bibliophiles who are so fortunate as to secure one of the few copies that have been struck off, while scholars will appreciate the patient research and the somewhat recondite learning which the book exhibits. The French branch of the Stuart family was founded by Sir John Stuart, of Darnley, who in 1419 was sent by Robert Stuart, Duke of Albany and Regent of Scotland, in joint command of 6000 Scotch troops, to assist the Dauphin, afterwards Charles VII., in the struggle against Henry V. of England. The first exploit of the Scots was the raising of the siege of Angers, followed by the crushing defeat of the Duke of Clarence at Baugé. In recognition of these services, Charles VII. granted him the Seigneurie of Aubigny, in Berri, and the right to quarter the arms of France with those of Stuart. The Stuarts of Aubigny for more than two centuries commanded the Scots men-at-arms and the Scottish archers of the king's body-guard, who, being in personal attendance on the king, took a prominent part in the Italian campaigns of Charles VIII. and Louis XII., and whose favoured position at the court of Louis XI. has been so skilfully seized by Sir Walter Scott in his novel of Quentin Durward. The most distinguished of the line was Bernard Stuart, third Seigneur d'Aubigny, who, in command of a Scotch contingent, fought at Bosworth for Henry VII., and in the campaigns of Charles VII. and Louis XII. won twelve pitched battles, becoming Governor of Naples, and afterwards of Calabria. A characteristic portrait of Bernard Stuart, from a medal by Niccolò Spinelli, of Florence, forms the frontispiece to Lady Elizabeth Cust's volume. Next in interest to the career of Bernard Stuart is that of Esmé Stuart, sixth Seigneur d'Aubigny, who, provided with ample funds by the Pope and the Kings of France and Spain, was sent to Scotland in 1579 by the Duc de Guise on a secret mission, with the object of replacing Mary Queen of Scots on the throne and restoring the old faith in Scotland and England. He speedily succeeded in gaining influence over the mind of the boy king, and having procured the execution of his rival, the Earl of Morton, was loaded with wealth and honours and created Earl and Duke of Lenox. In answer to letters from Philip II. of Spain, offering him the command of an army, to be raised at Philip's expense, in order to restore the Catholic religion in England, the Duke replied that he would do it or die in the attempt. These intrigues seem to have come to the knowledge of Elizabeth, and no doubt materially influenced her in deciding on the execution of the Queen of Scots. Lady Elizabeth Cust must be complimented on the skill and patience with which, from obscure materials, she has worked out this history of the distinguished ancestors from whom she is descended through her father, the late Earl of Darnley, the heir in line to the Stuarts of Aubigny and the Dukes of Lenox. Through Henry Stuart, Lord Darnley, the father of James I., the Queen, to whom the book is dedicated by permission, is descended from Sir John Stuart, first Seigneur of Aubigny, who also counts among his descendants no less than fifty English peers and most of the royal families in Europe.

The Strife of the Roses and Days of the Tudors in the West. By W. H. Hamilton Rogers. (Exeter: Commin.) The author of this well-illustrated and well-printed volume seems to have approached history by a path that is not often trodden. He appears to have been first attracted to the history of the fifteenth century by the monumental relics of that period with which the churches in the West abound. They suggested to him (as they have done to others) the question: What part in the public affairs of the time did these men, whose monuments are still with us, take? In answering this question, Mr. Rogers has gone somewhat minutely into the history of the several Western families—Willoughby de Broke, Bonville, Stafford, Cheney, and Arundell—who were concerned in the wars of the Roses and the court life of the Seventh and Eighth Henrys, and has described with considerable detail their descent, their achievements, the blazonry of their arms, and their last resting-places. The strong points of the book are the genealogies and the illustrations; the literary merit is less conspicuous. The concluding chapter is devoted to an account of the ancestry and descendants of Theodore Palaeologus (a scion of the imperial line which ended with the fall of Constantinople), who lies buried at Landulph, Cornwall. The last of the English branch seems to have been a mariner, who died at sea in 1693.

Collections for a History of the Family of Malthus. By John Orlebar Payne. (Privately Printed.) The family connexion of the famous author of the Essay on Population, who enjoys the rare distinction of having added an adjective to the English language, have already been printed in a pamphlet by Mr. W. H. Holt, a grand-nephew of the professor. Our present author duly records such modern information in an elaborate pedigree; but the main object of his labours had been to collect every mention of the name Malthus that occurs in old documents, without any genealogical parti pris. With this object, he has ransacked not only such obvious sources of information as parish registers and wills at Somerset House, but also early documents of title and legal proceedings in the Public Record Office. The great Malthus undoubtedly descended from a Berkshire family. Our author is able to trace his descent without a break to John M., who was buried at Binfield, in Berkshire, in 1558. But a William Malthus is to be found at the same place a century and a half earlier. A branch of the family, which seems to be now extinct, were prosperous merchants at Reading in the seventeenth century. One of them was a benefactor of the Blue-Coat School there; another has left a farthing token, engraved in the new edition of Boyne. The professor's ancestor was the intruding vicar of Northolt, in Middlesex, during the Commonwealth; his son was an apothecary and friend of Dr. Sydenham, and the name of Sydenham has been preserved in the family until the present day. Another family of the same name—commonly spelt Maltus or Malthouse—is to be found in Yorkshire. Our author himself feels a special interest in these, because many of them are recorded as recusants in the last century, and some are still Roman Catholics. But it is to be feared that only professed genealogists will take an interest in these lists of shadowy names, none of which emerges into history. The same may be said of a subordinate branch of Malthouses whom Mr. Edward Peacock has brought to light in Lincolnshire; and of another Malthous, from Hampshire, whose name is associated with the beginnings of English drama as landlord of the Rose theatre in 1582.

THE new volume of the Gentleman's Magazine Library (Elliot Stock) deals, like its immediate predecessor, with architectural antiquities. By far the greater portion of its contents is contributed by the indefatigable John Carter, who travelled all England over, but did not neglect the ancient buildings, or the relics of edifices mostly destroyed, which were to be found in London. These papers chronicle much the memory of which would otherwise have perished long ago. Witness, for example, the audacious suggestion made about the period when the brothers Adam were destroying the buildings by the river-side that the Buckingham-gate should be removed, on the ridiculous plea that "a better view would be had of the Thames." Note Carter's account (p. 246) from memory of the "magnificent square conduit" that once lent an additional beauty to the High-street at Exeter. The notes to this section of Mr. Gomme's labours are of unusual value; and for much assistance in this branch of the subject the editor is indebted to Mr. Henry Wheatley, who has furnished for his friend's pages some of the information which he has collected for his own edition of Peter Cunningham's Handbook of London. They bring down to the present date the condition and history of the buildings described in the earlier part of the volume. Several pages are filled with a reprint of the acrimonious controversy on the removal of the screen in York minster. They should be kept in perpetual remembrance for their spirited appeal for the preservation of existing memorials of the past when threatened by the excessive zeal for alteration which seems to exist in the minds of clerical enthusiasts for restoration.

Old-Time Punishments. By William Andrews. (Simpkin, Marshall, & Co.) Hanging in Chains. By Albert Hartshorne. (Fisher Unwin.) It is a curious coincidence that these two books should have appeared almost at the same time. Mr. Andrews, indeed, covers a much wider field than Mr. Hartshorne; but both treat their common subject from the stand-point of the antiquary: that is to say, they have expended infinite pains in gathering old anecdotes and modern survivals, but have not quite succeeded in impressing upon their work the stamp of exact research. It is characteristic of the antiquary to devote himself to the by-paths of history, to be attracted by the quaint and horrible. It is the work of the philosophic historian to combine the materials thus collected into a general view, and to illustrate therefrom the progress of human society. One thinks what a picture Mr. W. E. H. Lecky might have drawn of the change that has come over England in the present century with regard to the infliction in public of brutal punishments. Take the subject of hanging in chains. The present writer will never be able to banish from his memory a passage in The Fairchild Family—one of the few books that he was permitted to read on Sunday—where an estimable parent could find no better means of deterring his children from the sin of lying than to take them to behold a parricide rotting on a gibbet; and the same sentiment is expressed by Mercy in The Pilgrim's Progress, as quoted by Mr. Hartshorne. Fifty years ago, probably every parish in England had its stocks in good repair, and in frequent use. It is barely ten years since flogging was abolished in the army; and we confess that we have been surprised to learn how many examples of ducking-stools, branks, and gibbet-chains are preserved to this day, in public museums or private collections. According to Mr. Hartshorne, the daughter of a noble marquis possesses one of the "leg-pieces" of a notorious murderer, concerning whose accomplice the gruesome story is told that he died of fright when they measured him for his irons. Indeed, each of our authors has collected a sufficiently blood-curdling catalogue of horrors to make the fortune of a Police News novelist; and both books are abundantly illustrated. We observe that Mr. Hartshorne and Mr. Andrews are not in agreement upon a point which ought to be capable of precise determination—whether persons were ever hanged in chains alive. Undoubtedly, there exists a widespread belief that they were, which derives some support from Hollingshed and another Elizabethan writer. Against this, Mr. Hartshorne urges that no such form of punishment is to be discovered in the Statutes at Large; but we confess that we should like stronger evidence of the negative than this. The custom of gibbeting after death, which itself arose without express legal sanction, certainly looks like a modified survival of an original "hauling in chains" in the vulgar sense.

Mr. Ditchfield has given us in his little book on Old English Sports, Pastimes, and Customs, (Methuen) some interesting matter, gleaned from various sources; and, as the volume is prettily got up, it might form an acceptable prize for country school-children, among whom not a few old-fashioned games are still in vogue. Mr. Ditchfield writes in rather a condescending style, suitable perhaps to the pages of the Parish Magazine in which the papers originally appeared, but otherwise objectionable. Is he quite right in asserting that the annual fair or village feast was always held on the festival of the saint to whom the parish church was dedicated? We certainly know of a good many exceptions to the rule, if rule it be.

Retrospections, Social and Archaeological. By C. Roach Smith. Vol. III. (Bell.) These consist of papers relating to local history and to the many friends and colleagues of the distinguished antiquary who died at an advanced age last summer. They have been carefully edited by Mr. J. G. Waller, and complete a work which shows how friendly as well as fascinating a pursuit archaeology often is.

MRS. EVERETT GREEN has issued another part of her Calendar of the Proceedings of the Committee for Compounding. (Printed for H.M. Stationery Office.) The cases in this part reach from January 1, 1647, to the end of June, 1650. Its value will be more fully appreciated when an index appears to render its contents accessible.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE next instalment of the British Museum Papyri, containing the newly-discovered poems of Herodas and other matter, new and old, will be issued very shortly. In the case of the Herodas, which is the most important section of the new volume, the Trustees publish merely the text as it stands in the MS.; but it is understood that Dr. Rutherford will shortly issue a provisional reconstruction of the poems, to be followed hereafter by an edition on a larger scale.

IN connexion with the seventh International Congress of Hygiene and Demography, which is to be inaugurated on August 10 by the Prince of Wales, Messrs. Cassell & Co. will publish, by arrangement with the executive, a Handbook to London in English and French, specially prepared for the use of members. The book will be illustrated with eight plans, and deal not merely with the "sights" and amusements of London, but also with its public services and government, besides giving a mass of information of special interest to medical men. These and other subjects are dealt with under the following heads:—Locomotion and communication; London, past and present; the government of London; vital statistics and sanitation; hospitals, dispensaries, &c.; disposal of the dead; sewerage, drainage, and scavenging; warming and lighting; the water supply; food supply; and police and crime.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will be the English publishers of Major Wissmann's new book of African travel. It is entitled My Second Journey through Equatorial Africa, from the Congo to the Zambesi, in the years 1886 and 1887. It will be in one volume, with a map and nearly a hundred illustrations.

MR. ARTHUR W. PINERO has written an introduction to the translation of Count Tolstoi's comedy, The Fruits of Enlightenment, which Mr. Heinemann will publish next week. The book will be uniform with Hedda Gabler, and will contain a portrait of the author.

MESSRS. METHUEN have in the press a new book by the Rev. S. Baring Gould, entitled The Tragedy of the Caesars: The Emperors of the Julian and Claudian Lines. It will be abundantly illustrated from busts, gems, cameos, &c.

MR. GEORGE CLINCH, of the British Museum, the historian of Bloomsbury and St. Giles's, and Marylebone and St. Pancras, is now at work upon a companion volume relating to the parish of St. George's, Hanover-square. The new work will be entitled Manfair and Belgravia, and it is hoped that it will be ready for subscribers in the autumn of the present year. Any notes of topographical interest relating to the districts would be gladly received by Mr. Clinch, and should be addressed to him in the care of the publishers, Messrs. Truslove & Shirley, Oxford-street.

MR. ELLIOT STROCK announces for publication The Socialism of Christianity, a series of essays on the higher motives for Socialism in the present day, by the Rev. William Blizard.

WE hear from America that another collection of Thackeray's letters is to be published there. The letters are described as written to a "Long Island girl"; and the book will be illustrated with a drawing by Thackeray, in coloured ink.

WE quote the following from the Hannover correspondent of the Times:

"Erroneous statements have been circulated as to the writings of the late Marshal von Moltke. The quantity of these is unexpectedly large. A portion of the papers is of purely military interest. It consists of reports and strategical observations on the campaigns in which Moltke commanded. These are to be issued by Messrs. Mittler & Son, of Berlin, and English editions will be published by Messrs. Osgood, of London. But the late Marshal also left a sort of autobiography comprising twenty-nine diaries, which cover almost the whole of his military career, and are replete with notes on all the events in which the great soldier was in any way mixed up. These diaries give a vivid illustration of Moltke's character, and were originally intended for the perusal of his family only. But it has been decided to publish them; and they are to appear first as serials in the German periodical Ueber Land und Meer, and in an English illustrated journal. Afterwards they will be issued in book form by the Deutsche Verlag's Anstalt, of Stuttgart, and by Mr. William Heinemann, of London."

THE fourteenth annual meeting of the Library Association of the United Kingdom will be held in the University College, Nottingham, from September 16 to 18, when papers will be read on various questions relating to library administration and bibliography. The Castle Museum committee have arranged for an exhibition of art bookbindings, under the control of Mr. G. H. Wallis; and there will also be an exhibition of library appliances, bindings, forms, &c., at the University College, arranged by Mr. J. Potter Briscoe. There will be an official reception, probably at the Castle Art Museum, on Tuesday evening, September 15; a dinner at the Mechanics' Institute on Wednesday; and an excursion on Thursday.

THE British Record Society has just elected the Marquess of Bute as its president, in succession to the late Earl Beauchamp; Mr. J. J. Digges Latouche and Mr. G. Wreford were at the same time elected members of the council. This society is now engaged in issuing an entirely new lexicographical Calendar to the prerogative wills at Somerset House, a book which has long been looked for by antiquaries. The present series must number about 50,000 wills; and it will now be possible to complete in a few minutes a search which hitherto may have taken as many days.

A CORRESPONDENT who should be well informed writes:—

"Authors are looking upon America as another El Dorado. Because the works of English novelists—bought for a nominal sum or stolen outright—have had a large vogue in the States when sold at 20 cents, or given away as a 'bonus' in dry good stores, it is being surmised that copyright books will sell just as largely. This is a mistake. The population of the States represents various nationalities, and the reading public is not committed solely to English fiction. Indeed there has always been a good business done in translated novels, and it is increasing. The opinion of the representative of one of the leading New York publishing houses is that if English authors stiffen their prices much, they will commit literary suicide. The class of American business will not afford high rates, and if English books are too expensive there will be a more decided run upon foreign translations."

MESSRS. MACMILLAN have now added Sir Percival to their cheap re-issue of Mr. Short-house's works. It first appeared in September, 1886; four more editions were demanded within three months, and it was reprinted in the following year.

WITH reference to a note that appeared in the ACADEMY of last week, Messrs. W. H. Allen & Co., Limited, write to us that they still continue to act as publishers and literary agents to the India Office. In justice to Messrs. Luzac & Co.—who sent us the note of last week—it is right to add that they have shown us an official letter, stating that Lord Cross has confirmed their appointment, from August 1, as "agents for the sale in this country of Indian Government publications and publishers to the Secretary of State for India in Council." As a matter of fact, we believe that similar letters of appointment have been given to Mr. Edward Arnold and to the new firm of Messrs. Archibald Constable & Co. It would seem, therefore, that the India Office henceforth will have no special publisher, but will place the names of several selected firms on the title-page of any books they may publish (as do the Trustees of the British Museum), and will entrust the same firms with the sale in this country of works issued by the several governments in India.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

AT the graduation ceremony at Edinburgh to-day (Saturday), the honorary degree of LL.D. was to be conferred on Sir Colin Campbell Scott-Moncrieff, well known for his services to Egypt in the department of irrigation.

PROF. T. F. ROBERTS, of the University College of South Wales, has been elected principal of Aberystwyth College, in succession to the Rev. Dr. T. C. Edwards, who was recently appointed to the headship of the theological college at Bala. The latter college, which was founded in 1837 for the training of ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will henceforth be thrown open to all theological students, whether candidates for the ministry or laymen.

THE Johnson Memorial prize at Oxford, which is awarded every fourth year for an essay on some subject connected with astronomy or meteorology, has been adjudged to Mr. M. S. Pembrey, of Christ Church, who won the Radcliffe travelling fellowship last year.

THE use of the large lecture-room in the Divinity School at Cambridge has been specially granted to Dean Vaughan from September 1 to 4, for holding meetings of his former theological pupils.

SIR M. MONIER-WILLIAMS has issued an appeal for subscriptions towards the sum of £8000, which is now wanted to extend the buildings of the Indian Institute at Oxford according to the original plan.

THE following is the programme of lectures for the next session of the Manchester New College, now at Oxford:—"The Pauline Epistles," "Introduction to the Fourth Gospel," and "Study of Doctrinal Theology," by Principal Drummond; "Old Testament" and "Comparative Religion," by the Rev. J. Estlin Carpenter; "Mental Philosophy" and "Ethics," by the Rev. C. B. Upton; and "Sociology," by the Rev. P. H. Wicksteed.

THE regulations for the examination for musical degrees at Victoria University have been issued. Besides a preliminary arts test, the course include four examinations spread over three years. Candidates will also have to compose a short work for orchestra, chorus, and solo; but they will not be subjected to the expense of a public performance.

WE may note that the two most valuable scholarships at Girton College for mathematics have both been won by pupils of the Notting Hill high school for girls.

THE results of the L.L.A. examination at St. Andrews have just been issued. It appears that 636 candidates entered at thirty-seven centres, being a larger number than in any previous year. Taking a joint view of all the subjects, passes were obtained in 621 instances, and honours in 256. Ninety-seven candidates passed in the full number of subjects required for the L.L.A. diploma.

THE Mercers Company has given one hundred guineas, and that of the Merchant Taylors thirty guineas, to the extension fund of the Maria Grey Training College. Of the £13,000 required to build and start the new institution £7954 has now been collected.

HARVARD UNIVERSITY has lately received the following gifts or bequests: 100,000 dollars, under the will of Edwin Conant, a graduate of the class of 1829; two sums of 10,000 dollars from Mr. Roger Wolcott, to commemorate the names of his father and brother, by the purchase of books on history, political economy, and sociology, and by the promotion of archaeological and ethnological research; 15,000 dollars from Mr. W. S. Bullard, to endow three fellowships for original research in medical science; a portrait of Nicholas Sever, who was fellow and tutor in the first half of the eighteenth century; and a portrait of the historian George Bancroft, painted by Gustavus Richter.

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY, which already possesses the library of Prof. Blüntschli, has received, by gift from M. Laboulaye, the historical MSS. of his father, the late Edouard Laboulaye, whose name ranks with that of Blüntschli among international publicists of the generation that is now passing away.

THE first Library Bulletin issued by Bowdoin College, Maine, contains a list of poems illustrating Greek mythology in the English poetry of the nineteenth century; and also—like other academical publications in America—an obituary record of deceased members, arranged according to the date of their graduation.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

FROM ABROAD.

O LET me dream some summer day
That I am carried far away
To where the waters basking lie
Beneath an English summer sky.

And drowsily I sit once more
And look right through the open door
Of that old church where oft I heard
The preacher comment on the Word;

While in my thoughts a whisper ran:
" 'Tis Nature speaks of God to man
Each moment that he breathes and lives;
Her voice now gentle warning gives,
Now louder speaks, but every tone
The heart may ponder when alone."

And as I mused the summer air
Awoke the mere, which blue and fair
Lay with green meadows as a frame,
And through the door the soft wind came
So fresh and cool upon my face,
'Twas like, methought, the Spirit's grace.

O let me dream some summer day
That I am carried far away,
And see again through open door
The shining of the mere once more,
And feel the freshness of the air—
The Spirit of the Lord is there.

BEATRIX L. TOLLEMACHE.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

A PARTICULARLY interesting article opens the July Livre Moderne, being an account, with abundant illustrations, of divers modern French ex libris or book-plates. The fanciful book-plate is, of course, not unknown in England; but it has not, at any rate recently, been as much favoured as in France, and, to tell the truth, we know of no great choice of artists among us who could either design or execute things of the kind, or put into artistic shape a layman's fancy for them. Book-plates, title vignettes, head and tail-pieces, all things of this kind, are but ill done with us as a rule, and in a dreadfully stereotyped manner. Yet if any artist-workman were to devote himself to them, there must be people enough in England who would gladly be his clients. M. Assé's "Un Névrosé au XVII^{ème} Siècle" should not frighten even those who are sick to death of névrose and passionnel and all the rest of the jargon; for the subject is Chabanon, a person of no great talent but some interest. M. Gausseron "renders account," as usual, with care and wit; and there is an article on "Printing in England."

IN the Boletín of the Real Academia de la Historia for June F. Codera gives a report on the Arabic MSS. by Spanish authors preserved in the library of the Khedive at Cairo. Antonio Delgado has a careful monograph of the town of Niebla, showing its much greater importance in Roman and in Moorish times. He regrets not having seen some documents in the Mayans collection, now in the British Museum. The claim of the Franciscan Pedro de Arenas to have said the first Mass in America is examined by Father F. Fita. He also prints a Latin panegyric of Philip II., written by S. Luiz de Gonzaga at the age of fourteen, and brings evidence to show that he was a knight of the order of Santiago, before becoming a Jesuit at the miraculous command of the Virgin.

EXTENSION OF THE VATICAN LIBRARY.

UNDER the great hall of the Vatican Library, which is well known to those who have been to Rome, there is another of the same size that has hitherto been the Armoury. Its contents have now been removed; and in it have been placed about 185,000 printed books, which formerly filled the Borgia and other rooms situated at a considerable distance from the reading room.

For the convenience of readers in the Library and those admitted to the Vatican Archives, one section of the new hall is filled with books of reference, those selected being such as serve the purpose of scholars working at MSS. The plan of the reference library resembles that of the MS. department at Paris, but is of a more international character, and includes all publications sent by foreign governments, learned societies, and literary clubs. The Pope has specially intended that the books in the reference library should represent the literature of all nations, and that students coming to work at the Vatican should find there the publications of their own countries.

Besides these there are (1) the Mai collection, (2) the old papal library of printed books, (3) the Palatine library from Heidelberg, (4) the Fulvio Orsini collection, (5) that of Cardinal Zelada, (6) that of Capponi (containing Italian literature), (7) that of Cicognara (books on the history of art), (8) all subsequent historical collections down to that of Ruland, librarian of Würzburg.

The Palatine library is partly catalogued by Mr. Stevenson, jun., in three volumes, printed at the Vatican. The Orsini collection has been described by Nollac.

W. B.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BAFET, Germain. Essai sur l'histoire des panoramas et des dioramas. Paris: Masson. 6 fr.
 BEZOLD, G. v. Die Entstehung u. Ausbildung der gothischen Baukunst in Frankreich. Berlin: Ernst. 10 M.
 DELABORD, le Comte H. L'Académie des Beaux-Arts depuis la fondation de l'Institut de France. Paris: Plon. 6 fr.
 EYSENHARDT, F. Mittheilungen aus der Staätsbibliothek zu Hamburg. VIII. Hamburg: Herold. 2 M. 40 Pf.

HISTORY.

- LULVÉS, J. Die Summa cancellariae d. Johann v. Neumarkt. Eine Handschriftenuntersuchg. üb. die Formularbücher aus der Kanzlei Kaiser Karls IV. Berlin: Mayer & Müller. 3 M.
 ROTHEMAN, FRIH. v. Die neuere Kriegsgeschichte der Cavalerie vom J. 1859 bis heute. 1. Bd. München: Franz. 4 M. 50 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- DE-TONI, J. B. Sylloge algarum omnium bucusque cognitarum. Vol. II. Bacillariae. Sectio I.: Rhapsidiae. Berlin: Friedländer. 27 M. 50 Pf.
 GRUBER, H. Der Positivismus vom Tode August Comte's bis auf unsere Tage (1857—1891). Freiburg-i-B.: Herder. 2 M. 60 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- AL-HANDĀMĪ's Geographic der arabischen Halbinsel, hrsg. v. D. H. Müller. 2. Bd. Noten u. Indices. Leiden: Brill. 13 M.
 ALTMANN, W. Studien zur Eberhart Windecke. Mitteilung bisher unbekannter Abschnitte aus Windeckes Welt-Chronik. Berlin: Gaertner. 2 M. 80 Pf.
 CASSET, P. Vom neuen Aristoteles u. seiner Tendenz. Berlin: Bibliogr. Bureau. 80 Pf.
 GRIMM, J. u. W. Deutsches Wörterbuch, 11. Bd. 3. Lfg. Thiermilch-Todestag. Bearb. v. M. Lexer. Leipzig: Hirzel. 2 M.
 HULTSCH, F. Die erzählenden zeitformen bei Polybios. Leipzig: Hirzel. 7 M.
 LESKIEN, A. Die Bildung der Nomina im Litauischen. Leipzig: Hirzel. 16 M.
 SCHRADER, H. De archaeologicae Thucydideae apud veteres scriptores auctoritate. Hamburg: Herold. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 VOGELREUTER, O. Geschichte d. griechischen Unterrichts in deutschen Schulen seit der Reformation. Hannover: Meyer. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ARRANGEMENT OF CHAUCER'S CANTERBURY TALES.

Cambridge: July 22, 1891.

The valuable "Trial-Table" of the Groups of Chaucer's Canterbury Tales, printed by Dr. Furnivall on some leaves prefixed to his six-text edition, is of such interest that I think a few illustrations of it may be useful. Of course, they are all founded on his tables, for which we who work at the subject are very grateful.

The chief actual (MS.) Groups of Tales, neglecting (for the present) the headings to them, and the links connecting them, are these:

1. Prologue, Knight, Miller, Reeve, Cook.
2. Man of Law.
3. Wife of Bath, Friar, Sompuour.
4. Clerk, Merchant.
5. Squire, Franklin.
6. Doctor, Pardoner.
7. Shipman, Prioress, Sir Thopas, Melibeus, Monk, Nun's Priest.
8. Second Nun, Canon's Yeoman.
9. Manciple, (slightly linked to) Parson.

Such is the order in the Ellesmere MS. There is every probability that this is how Chaucer (temporarily) arranged them for the purpose of his work. Such an arrangement may be called A.

First disturbance. The second arrangement is B, as found in the Harl. MS., 7334. Disregarding minor differences, such as the re-arrangement of the Monk's Tale, the only disturbance in the general order is that B places 8 before 6. We thus obtain these arrangements:

- A.—1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9.
B.—1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 8, 6, 7, 9.

Second disturbance. When 8 had thus been advanced, it so remained in all later MSS. But the Corpus MS. (Oxford) shows us a new thing. It splits up 5 into 5a (Squire), and 5b (Franklin), and places 5a before 3.

Third disturbance. Over and above all this, some MSS., as that printed by Thynne and reprinted in all the black-letter editions, further split up 4 into 4a (Clerk) and 4b (Merchant), and place 4b after 5a.

We thus obtain these arrangements:

- C.—1, 2, 5a, 3, 4, 5b, 8, 6, 7, 9.
D.—1, 2, 5a, 4b, 3, 4a, 5b, 8, 6, 7, 9.

It is obvious that these changes are successive and progressive. Only two orders are possible—viz., A, B, C, D, or else D, C, B, A. Either the arrangement became more complex, or, conversely, it was gradually simplified. But the latter supposition is not possible; for D exhibits absurdities, as will be found; while A appears to be Chaucerian. Hence the order is A, B, C, D only.

Further deductions are these:

Type C exhibits inconsistencies which we cannot attribute to the author, but in a less degree than type D.

Type B is doubtful. For myself, I believe it may have been due to the author. Dr. Furnivall thinks otherwise. There can be no harm in letting this stand over for the present.

We thus get a good working hypothesis, as follows:

- A.—As near to Chaucer as we shall get.
B.—Doubtful; due to him or to some one else.
C.—Due to some editor who was not the author.
D.—Due to some subsequent interference, and still more remote from the author.

An easy test is to observe the position of the Franklin. His surroundings differ in all four types.

- A.—Squire, Franklin, Doctor (5a, 5b, 6).

B.—Squire, Franklin, Second Nun (5a, 5b, 8).
C.—Merchant, Franklin, Second Nun (4, 5b, 8).

D.—Clerk, Franklin, Second Nun (4a, 5b, 8).
All exact knowledge is useful. For example, Lord Ashburnham's Catalogue says that MS. No. 124 wants the end of the Man of Law and the beginning of the Squire. Therefore, in that MS. 2 is followed by 5; i.e., it probably belongs to C or D, and not to A or B, as we can tell without seeing the MS. itself.

Examples: A.—Ellesmere; Cambridge Gg. 4, 27; Cambridge Dd. 4, 24; Addit. 5140; also Bodley 686 (slightly misplaced near the end).

B.—Harl. 7334; Harl. 7335 (where 8 is too high—viz., after 3, but neither 4 nor 5 is split).
C.—Corpus (Oxford); Lansdowne; Sloane 1686.

D.—(A large class.)—Sloane 1685; Harl. 1758; Royal 17 D 15; Royal 18 C 2; Barlow 20; Laud 739; and many which present further irregularities, as Petworth (which inserts a part of 7 far too high); Cambridge Mm. 2, 5 (which splits up 7 into three bits); Cambridge II. 3, 26 (which inserts 5b in the wrong place); New Coll., Oxford (which omits Gamelyn); also the editions of 1532, 1542, 1550, 1561, 1598, &c.

B. and C. contain Gamelyn; so does D. usually, but exceptions exist. Caxton omitted it.

The two MSS. in Trinity College, Cambridge, are very irregular, but probably belong to D.

The Hengwrt MS. presents an extraordinary and unique order, probably due to the scribe; in its readings it resembles Ellesmere. Further details are numerous and somewhat difficult.

I ought to add that I have here said nothing new; I only try to present the matter in the simplest form.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "HATCHMENT."

Stanhoe Grange, Norfolk: July 15, 1891.

The word "hatchment," as is well-known, is ordinarily regarded as being a corrupted or shortened form of "achievement" (see Skeat's Etymological Dictionary s.v. "Hatchment," and New English Dictionary s.v. "Achievement.") If this etymology be correct, how is it that it is only in the heraldic sense that "achievement" is found in this altered form?

The earliest instance of the word in its ordinary sense given in N. E. D. is from Caxton (1475): "With thachievement of these deuises the king Oetes approched." Here the spelling is identical with that of the present day, and the only variation recorded between the fifteenth and nineteenth centuries is the form "atchievement."

The earliest instance given of the heraldic word is from Hall's Chronicle (1548): "The Hachementes wer borne onely by capitaynes." The form "atchievement" in this sense appears at the beginning of the seventeenth century, namely in Gwillim's Display of Heraldry (1610): "An atchievement, according to Leigh, is the Arms of every Gentleman, well marshalled with the Supporters, Helmet, Wreath, and Crests," &c. (in N. E. D.).

The definition of the word given by Dr. Murray is: "An escutcheon or ensign armorial, granted in memory of some achievement or distinguished feat." There is nothing, however, to justify this definition in any of the quotations given in the Dictionary.

I believe the word "hatchment" to be entirely unconnected etymologically with "achievement," which is, of course, merely an adoption of French achievement. The real origin of the word is to be found, I believe, in the French hachement, which is itself (see Littré s.v.) an altered form of O.F. acesnement, in the sense of "equipment, ornament, decoration." The term was often applied to the trappings or arms borne by a king or other distinguished personage:

"Ben cunut k'il est reis par sun acesnement."

Horn, v. 1629.

"Cel jour y orent mainte gent

Ilec, maint riche acesnement."

Cocci, v. 1585 (in Godefroy).

Hachement is defined by Godefroy as "lambrequin ou chaperon d'stoffe qui enveloppe le casque ou l'écu, ornement d'armoirie, timbre, ou casque au dessus de l'écu." The earliest instance given by him is from a statute of the Order of Saint George, dated 1349:

"S'il advenoit que par la mort d'aucun des compaignons, il y eut quelques bannieres, espees, heaumes, timbres qui deussent estre offertz, qu'adonc (avant l'offrande d'argent) lesditz hachementz soient offertz."

Several other instances are given, some undated:—

"A Gilles de Mortaigne. . . pour avoir esté en la ville de Tournay pour pourvoir une pierre servant au bolwerq de ceste dite ville en laquelle l'en a taillé le hachement de Mouy. (1155-6)."

"Si estoit par dessus le siege du duc ung tableau armoicé de ses armes, de hachement de son ordre et devise."

"Les armes, les bannieres, les enseignes, les timbres et les hachemens des emperceurs, rois, ducs, marquis, comtes, barons."

Precisely similar was the original meaning of the Eng. "hatchment," as is evident from the passage from Ferne's Blazon of Genetrie (1586) quoted in N. E. D.:—

"The creast, tymber [i.e. the cognisance, such as the tiara, or mitre, or helmet, or hat, placed above a shield as an indication of the quality or rank of the personage to whom it belonged, Fr. timbre], mantell, or worde, bee no part of the coat-armour; they be addicions called atchements."

Compare with this the definition given in the passage from Gwillim quoted above.

Not only is the English word identical in meaning with the French one, but it is also identical in form. It appears variously in N. E. D. as "hachement," "achement," "achment," "atchement," "hatchment," "ach'ment," "atch'ment"; the last two of which are evidently due to the supposed connection of the word with "achievement." Not one of these various forms, be it repeated, occurs under the heading of "achievement" in its ordinary sense.

The popular and hitherto accepted etymology of "hatchment" is easily accounted for by the obvious temptation to identify a comparatively obscure technical term with a more familiar word, which sufficiently resembles it in form, and is readily connected with it in sense, as Dr. Murray's definition shows. It would be interesting to learn from Dr. Murray whether any of the quotations supplied to the N. E. D. for "hatchment" itself in any way justifies that definition, which appears, so far, to be based solely on the assumed identity of the two words.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

Oxford: July 23, 1891.

Through the writer's courtesy I have seen the proof of the above. The publication of Godefroy's Dictionary of Old French since my article "Achievement" was written has made it possible and needful to reconsider the relation between that word and "Hatchment," the result of which will appear under the latter word.

Meanwhile, Mr. Toynbee, in his O.F. studies, will perhaps reinvestigate the alleged relations between F. hachement and O.F. acesnement. It was easy for Littré, who evidently knew no more of the existence of O.F. hachement, hachement, than any of us did before 1884, to identify the two words; it is not so easy for us, who find both words in O.F. with no phonetic affinity, and with a contiguity of meaning which may be only accidental. From the form alone we might suspect that the two O.F. words appeared in Eng. hatchment and acheament. The latter would be a natural Eng. representative of O.N.F. achesement, achement. "Acheument" occurs earlier than is shown in the Dictionary and quoted by Mr. Toynbee, e.g., in Gerard Legh's Accidence of Armory (1562), in Bossewell's Work of Armorie (1572), &c. It may well be as old in English as "hatchment." The definition criticised is taken from the heraldic writers: that there is nothing to justify (or condemn) it in the quotations is, unfortunately for the lexicographer, true of the majority of quotations for obscure words: they use the word, but throw no light on its origin or etymological sense.

J. A. H. MURRAY.

AN ANECDOTE ABOUT BROWNING.

West Brighton: July 29, 1891.

I fear that, in a sentence of my review of Mrs. Sutherland Orr's Life of Browning (ACADEMY, July 18), I may have inadvertently given a wrong impression. Will you therefore allow me to explain that I heard the story of Mr. Browning's juvenile impersonation of the devil, after Mrs. Orr's book was published, from one who had it from Mrs. Orr herself? Only there were a few details in what I heard which I did not find in Mrs. Orr's published version of what is precisely the same anecdote, given a little differently.

RODEN NOEL.

SCIENCE.

Noctes Manilianae: sive Dissertationes in Astronomica Manilii. Accedunt Coniecturae in Germanici Aratea. Scripsit R. Ellis. (Oxonii: e Typographeo Clarendoniano.)

THIS little book, which contains in a small compass the ripest results of Mr. Ellis's studies, will give scholars a great deal to think about. It is written in the form of Latin notes on detached passages of Manilius. To these are appended an English dissertation on the name of Manilius; and a few remarks on the Aratea of Germanicus.

Manilius is a poet little read, probably, at the present day. Yet he has had the good fortune to attract the attention of two among the greatest scholars of all time, Scaliger and Bentley, to say nothing of Huet. The fact is due partly, no doubt, to the interest attaching to the subject of ancient astronomy, which, at the time when Scaliger published his first edition, attracted him for controversial reasons. But this is not all. Manilius is one of the most important poets of the Roman Stoicism, and, like Lucan, never writes so well as when he is rising to the height of his argument. The finer points of the Stoical system found easy and suitable expression in the kind of rhetoric which came into vogue among cultivated Romans towards the end of the republican, and at the beginning of the imperial, age. Manilius was, no doubt, sincere, and he had no inconsiderable rhetorical gifts. With the help of these, and of a language the genius of which lies in its power of broad and impressive statement, he succeeded in producing a poem which has many fine lines, many clever passages, and a general force and character which have not been without their effect in modern literature.

The name of the author of the Astronomica or Astrologia has always been in dispute for lack of decisive evidence; but the fact to which attention was first called by Woltzer (Ellis, p. 230) that a MS. of this poem, apparently bearing the name of Manilius, was discovered in Switzerland by Poggio during the session of the Council of Constance, is, of course, important. I am unable, in spite of Mr. Ellis's arguments, to attach much weight to the evidence of the second Vossianus (V²), a MS. written in 1470, and, if Bechert may be trusted, full of unpardonable blunders. That Scaliger and Bentley were in the main right in ranking the Gembloux MS. (of the tenth or eleventh century) far above all other MSS. of Manilius seems indisputable; nor does Mr. Ellis, either in theory or practice, seriously attempt to impugn their conclusion. But, just as Keller has attacked Bentley's judgment on the Vetus Blandirianus of Horace, so Jacob attacked it in the case of the Gemblacensis of Manilius. Jacob set up the Vossianus Secundus against the Gemblacensis, with results disastrous for his text. A new champion of the Gemblacensis appeared in Malvin Bechert ("De M. Manilii emendandi ratione," Leipziger Studien, vol. i., pp. 3-61). Bechert attacked the second Vossian as full of blunders and interpolations. If he is to be trusted, the MS. contains errors, especially errors of prosody, so grotesque, and so different from the comparatively honest mistakes of average mediæval scribes, that it seems impossible to attribute them to anyone but an ambitious but very ignorant copyist of the fifteenth century. This is stated, of course, only upon Bechert's authority, and it must be remembered that Mr. Ellis has made a new collation of the two Vossian MSS. His verdict on V² is pronounced as follows (p. 222):

"I believe no one who, like myself, has examined the Vossianus² for a considerable time, and in comparison with other codices of Manilius, can fail to acknowledge its unique importance for the restitution of the text of the poem."

In his Latin preface (p. viii.) he speaks with more reserve, expressing the opinion that the truth lies between Jacob and Bechert; and this is the view which apparently guides his practice. It is a pity that he did not discuss Bechert's judgment comprehensively in a separate chapter, as he nowhere gives a direct answer to the main points urged by that scholar. For his reports of the readings of the Gemblacensis, Mr. Ellis depends on a new collation of that manuscript made by Prof. Paul Thomas of Ghent, the results of which were published in 1888.

Mr. Ellis's own notes are, throughout, on a level with his best work, and will, it is to be hoped, attract the serious attention of Latin scholars everywhere. Some of what seem his best emendations ought to be mentioned in detail.

I. 723-4:

"An coeat mundum duplicisque extrema cauernae Conueniant, caelique oras et sidera iungant?"

For mundum (Gemblacensis and Cusanus) Mr. Ellis would read nondum; adding "Lacteae uiae duas causas fingit Manilius. Aut enim diducuntur mundi primordia laxataque compage caeli par commissuram lumen diffluit: aut caelum nondum ex fissura coit, sed extrema cauernarum etiamnum conuenientia lucem per se mittunt siderum, dum orae iunguntur necdum coeunt."

I. 750 following:

"Nec mihi celandae est famae uulgata uetustas Mollior; e niueo lactis fluxisse liquorem Pectore reginae diuum."

For the senseless mollior Mr. Ellis proposes mollem de.

I. 867-8:

"Sive illas natura faces ob cuncta creauit Sidera per tenues caelo lucentia flammis."

For ob cuncta Mr. Ellis writes obducta; "tam tenui flamma lucent illae faces ut siderum speciem praebent sed obductorum ac paene latentium."

II. 489 following:

"Virgine mens capitur, sic quondam uexerat ante Europam dorso rotinentem cornua laeva Indutusque Ioui."

Mens Gembl. Cusanus. Mares Voss.² Mars Voss.¹ in the margin. Mr. Ellis reads mas.

II. 762-4:

"Quae nisi constiterint primis fundata elementis. Versaque quae propere dederint praecepta magistri Et fluit in uanum rerum praeposterus ordo."

For versa quae Mr. Ellis suggests vertas quae.

III. 520-1:

"Sic annum mensisque suos natura diesque, Atque ipsas uoluit numerari signa per horas."

Signa per is probably, Mr. Ellis thinks, a mistake for signifer.

IV. 200-1:

"In uitio bonus ut teneros pudor impedit annos Maguaque naturae cohibendo munera frenat."

Mr. Ellis would write in uitio bona sunt; the virtues of the over-modest man turn to his disadvantage.

I conclude by offering a few suggestions which have occurred to me while reading Mr. Ellis's pages.

I. 780:

"Maiorque uiris et Cloelia uirgo."

Perhaps et represents it; though I admit that no other verb occurs in the context.

IV. 37-40:

"Quid referam Cannas admotaque moenibus arma Varronemque fuga magnum quam vincere possit Postque tuos, Trasimene, lacus Fabiumque morantem Accipisse iugum victae Carthaginis arces?"

Prof. Jebb has proposed to transpose the words Fabiumque morantem and quam vincere possit, which he would alter to quam vincere posset.

Thus:

"Varronemque fuga magnum, Fabiumque morantem, Postque tuos, Trasimene, lacus quom vincere posset, Accipisse iugum," &c.

But it is doubtful whether any transposition is required. Keeping to the reading of G, with the single change of possit to posset, we get the sense "Varro great in the flight which (i.e., the disgrace of which) he was strong enough to overcome"; a rhetorical point quite in the style of Manilius.

IV. 180-2:

"Hoc habet, hoc studium, positis ornare superbis
Pelibus, et captis demibus praefigere praedas,
Et pacare metu silvas."

Postis is an old variant for positis; but should not superbis be changed into superbos? For metu Mr. Ellis proposes manu; but it is doubtful whether any alteration is necessary, as Manilius is evidently abridging Aen. 6. 802.

"licet aut Erymanthi Pacarit nemora et Lernam tremefecerit arcu."

IV. 366, foll.

"Nec tua sub titulis fallantur pectora notis:
Diesimulant, non ostentur mortalibus astra;
Altius est acies animi mittenda sagaxis,
Inque alio quaerenda mali cunctis sequendum
Uiribus."

So G. From the other MSS. Mr. Ellis recovers ostendentur for ostentur, quaerendum aliquid for quaerenda mali, and unctisque for cunctis. Perhaps quaerendum aliud would be nearer the sense of the passage than quaerendum aliquid: compare V. 311:

"Ne lateant aliae vires aliena per astra."

H. NETTLESHIP.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME PĀLI AND JAINA-PRĀKRIT WORDS.

Dedham School, Essex.

II. Nūma.

The word nūma occurs several times in the Āyāraṅgasutta, and is translated by Prof. Jacobi in various ways—by "inferiority," "underground," "moat." These different meanings are at first sight somewhat puzzling, because of the apparent want of connexion between them. An examination, however, of the several passages where the word nūma is employed will show that one sense underlies its various usages:

"Bhiduresu na rajjējā kāmesu bahutaresu vā icchālobham na savejā dhuvam vānam sapchhiyā
Sāsachim nimantejjā divvam māyam na saddāhe
tam paḍibujjha māhane savvam nūmam vihūniyā."

(Āyāraṅgasutta i. 7, 8, vv. 23, 24.)

Prof. Jacobi, following the scholiast's interpretation, gives the following translation:

"He should not be attached to the transitory pleasures, nor to the greater ones; he should not nourish desire and greed, looking only for eternal praise" (23).

"He should be enlightened with eternal objects, and not trust in the delusive power of the gods; a Brāhmana should know of this and cast off all inferiority" (24).

(1) In verse 23, "looking only for eternal praise" seems forced, for the true Brāhman ought to look for what is lasting, and not for what is transitory. We ought, doubtless, to read "icchālobham na savejā dhuvam vānam sapchhiyā," where dhuvam = adhuvam, "transitory," "impermanent," and sapchhiyā = "regarding."

(2) In spite of the commentator's explanation, we do not think that nimantejjā (= nimantrayet) can mean "should be enlightened," but "should set before." The usual meaning of the verb, both in Jain and Pāli, is "to invite, offer" (with inst.).

(3) The note in the Commentary on nūma is "nūmam karma māyā vā."

(4) The phrase divvā māyā does not seem to denote "the delusive power of the gods," because neither Jains nor Buddhists held that divine beings, such as Indra, had no real power. It was real enough while it lasted. The phrase "divine illusion" may, perhaps, refer to the belief in the māyā of Iṣvara, which was supposed to bring about transmigration, or to the wiles of Māra. We find māyā associated with Māra in the following passage from Sūyagadamgasutta (i. 1, 3, 7, p. 74):

"Sayambhunā kade loe iti vuttam mahesinā Mārena santhuyā māyā tena loe asāsae."

But the real origin of sorrow and rebirth was not owing to any "divine illusion," but to a man's own evil actions, the true source of all karma.

With these few remarks we would venture to suggest a slightly different rendering of the Jaina verses:

"He should not be attached to transitory pleasures nor to those that seem more (enduring). He should not cherish desire and greed, looking (only) at (that which has) an impermanent form."

"He should set before him lasting (joys),* and should not believe in any divine illusion (as the cause of sorrow and rebirth); a Brāhman should know this, and cast off all illusion (and so get rid of Karma)."

We find the phrase "savvam nūmam vihūniā" in Sūyagadamgasutta i. 2, 12, p. 54:

"Savvappagam viukkassam savvam nūmam vihūniā appattiam akammamse eyam attham mige cue."

Eradicating all desire and getting rid of illusion (as the cause of what is) sinful (i.e., anger, &c.), he is free from Karma, (therefore) the (ignorant) creature † should give up this (sinful) desire (kāmābhavarūpa).

"Etehim tihim thānehim samjāe satatam muḍi ukkassam jālanam nūmam majjbattham ca vigimcae" (ib. i. 1-4, p. 97).

Here nūma is explained by the scholiast as having the sense of gahana or māyā.

In Āyāraṅgasutta ii. 3, 3, §§ 1-2, we find that the Bhikkhu is enjoined to avoid nūma-gihāni (underground houses), nūmāni (moats), valayāni (fortified places), and gahanāni (thickets).

In nūma-gihāni the first element has the sense of "a sequestered spot," "a hiding place," and nūmāni must mean "places of concealment."

In Sūyagadamgasutta i. 3, 3, § 1, p. 186, we get a good instance of nūma in the singular as "a hiding place."

"Jahā samgāmakālammi pitthato bhuru vehai valayam gahanam nūmam ko jānai parā-jāyam."

"When in the time of battle a coward sees behind him a dry ditch, a sequestered spot, or a thicket (to which he runs) who knows (in the midst of the fray of his) loss?"

The Dipikā has the following note on the words valaya, &c.:

Valayam yatrodakam valayākārena sthitam udukarahito vā gartā. Gahanam dhavādivrikā vritam sthānam.

Nūmam prachannagiriguhādikam ityādisthānam nācāhetor ālokate."

The various passages we have quoted show clearly that the true meaning of nūma is (1) concealment, a place of concealment; (2) illusion.

Since writing the above, I find that Prof. Weber, in his edition of Hāla's Saptaçatāka (p. 32), has noted the Jaina nūma-giha = Versteck, Gewahrsam, which he connects with the Prākṛit

* That is, such as arise from samādhi, &c.

† The ignorant creature is a foolish man.

verb nūmati or nūmeti.* This, however, may be a denominative of nūma, from the root hnu, "to conceal." Compare ninhuvijjanti (Hāla 657), a-ninhavamāna (Spec. der Nāna, § 83).

"No nihavejja viriyam" (Āyāraṅga i. 5, 3, § 1) is translated by Prof. Jacobi by "one should not abandon firmness"; but, if the text is correct, it ought to mean "one should not conceal firmness"—i.e., "one should display firmness."

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE Clarendon Press will publish immediately a new and cheaper edition of the English translation of Prof. Weismann's Essays on Heredity, including a list of articles on the subject that have recently appeared in England and America. A second volume, which is now in the press, will consist of four additional essays, with a preface by Prof. Weismann.

MR. W. HEINEMANN will publish almost immediately, as a new volume in his series of "Scientific Handbooks," Geodesy, by Prof. J. H. Gore, of Columbia University, which in a brief compass describes the geodetic work prosecuted in many lands and at divers epochs.

PROF. MAX MÜLLER will preside over Section H (Anthropology) at the Cardiff meeting of the British Association, which opens on August 19. It is understood that, in his presidential address, he proposes to give a retrospect of the work done since the science was first recognised by the British Association. He will then dwell on the advantages which anthropology may derive from the science of language, and likewise on the disadvantages which have accrued to the study of anthropology from allowing itself too implicitly to be guided by the science of language. He will have something to say, also, on the untrustworthy character of the evidence on which anthropologists have often had to rely, and will recommend a more critical examination of the authorities. Among the papers promised for this section are: "The Similkameen Indians of British Columbia," by Mrs. S. S. Allison; "Burial Customs of New Britain," by the Rev. B. Danks; "Family Life of the Haidas," by the Rev. C. Harrison; "The Natives of Central Africa," by the Rev. J. Macdonald; "Nicobar Pottery," by Mr. E. H. Man; "The Berbers of Morocco," by Mr. J. E. B. Meakin. It is possible that Prof. Brinton, of Philadelphia, may be present, and read a paper on the general subject of American ethnology.

AT Marlborough House, last Monday, the Prince of Wales presented the Albert medal of the Society of Arts for 1890 to Mr. W. H. Perkin, "for his discovery of the method of obtaining colouring matter from coal tar, a discovery which led to the establishment of a new and important industry, and to the utilisation of large quantities of a previously worthless material"; and the medal for 1891 to Sir Frederick Abel, "in recognition of the manner in which he has promoted several important classes of the arts and manufactures by the application of chemical science, and especially by his researches in the manufacture of iron and steel; and also in acknowledgment of the great services he has rendered to the state in the provision of improved war material and as chemist of the War Department."

AMONG the interesting plants shown at the last meeting of the Royal Botanic Society was a museum specimen of one which had recently died in the gardens—a victim to the late severe winter. This was one of several specimens of the East Indian or white mangrove (Avicennia nipa) sent to the gardens by the late Duke of Buckingham when Governor of Madras. For some years past these plants had flourished amazingly, thanks to the near approximation to their natural condition attained by keeping them in a very wet state and watering only with sea water. Under these circumstances they threw up from the roots a number of offsets, or upright adventitious roots, of from 10in. to 12in. high, and half an inch thick. In a space of 2ft. square as many as eighty appeared, looking like so many rakes standing up out of the water, and keeping as near as possible the same height above the surface. The only explanation, so far, has been that offered by the secretary, Mr. Sowerby. In its native state the trees form a fringe along the sea-shore and estuaries of great tropical rivers, lining the banks with a dense and impenetrable mass of vegetation, which pushes itself further and further into the river or sea, and leaves behind the dry land it has reclaimed. In such a position these curious rootlets must be an immense advantage to the plant, enabling it to retain all the débris washed to the sides, and at the same time preventing the soil between the roots from being carried away by floods, &c. The plants of this species now growing in the society's gardens are the only ones alive in this country.

* Cf. Numa (gopāy) in Setu, i. 32; v. 37; (acchādane) in Gāudavaho 103, 226.

THE following details have been published concerning the observatory which it is proposed to erect on Mont Blanc. It will be remembered that last year M. Joseph Vallot erected an observatory and hut of refuge on the Rocher des Bosses, 1312 feet from the summit of the mountain; but this undertaking is now to be eclipsed by the construction of an observatory on the very summit (15,781 feet above sea level). The idea originated with M. Janssen, who stayed on the mountain some time last summer for the purpose of making meteorological observations. In conjunction with M. Eiffel, and with the support of M. Bischoffsheim, Prince Roland Bonaparte, and Baron Alfred de Rothschild, he has now elaborated a plan which is as daring as the Jungfrau railway. The observatory is to be entirely of iron, and is to have a length of 85 feet and a breadth of 20 feet. The iron roof is to have the spherical form of an ironclad turret, which the construction will much resemble. The erection of such a building on the highest point of Mont Blanc naturally involves thorough preliminary studies, with which a Zürich engineer experienced in works on high mountains has been charged by M. Eiffel and M. Janssen. In the first place, it is necessary that a firm foundation should be found for the supports of the building on the rock of the mountain. For this purpose a horizontal gallery is to be driven through the ice of the highest glacier until rock is met with, and by means of this gallery the formation and position of the rock buried beneath the ice and snow are to be ascertained and examined. If once this has been accurately determined, a structure is to be designed which will give to the observatory a firm hold by iron pillars founded in the rock. It is not stated how these pillars are to resist the movements of the ice. The question of how the heavy materials are to be moved to the top of the mountain does not appear to give much concern; but, whatever method is adopted, it will certainly prove laborious and very costly. More is thought of the work of surveying, which was to have been commenced this month. Should the surveys prove the practicability of the plan, it is intended to proceed with the erection in September.

THE annual meeting of the French Association for the Advancement of the Sciences will be held this year at Marseilles, beginning on September 17.

THE Winchester College Natural History Society has just issued, under the title of Geological Notes (Winchester, Wells), a list of all the fossils as yet known from the chalk in the anticlinal of Winchester, giving the exact localities and zones.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

WE understand that more than one hundred communications have already been promised for the Congress of Orientalists meeting in London this September. Prof. Gustav Oppert, of Madras, will contribute a paper showing the influence of the non-Aryan element on Hindu religion.

THE July number of the Scottish Review (Alexander Gardner) prints the sixth of Prof. Rhys's Rhind Lectures, dealing with "Certain National Names of the Aborigines of the British Islands." His conclusions are as follows:—

"The non-Aryan names of Britain and Ireland respectively were probably Albion and Iverion; the latter has been retained in 'Erinn' and the former in 'Alban,' which has however retreated from the southern portion of the island to the north.

"The principal non-Aryan name of the inhabitants of both islands was some prototype of the word 'Pict,' and traces of its use occur not only in Scotland, but also in Ireland and Wales. The national name 'Pict' was early translated into such Celtic names as 'Cruithne' or 'Prydain,' and 'Scot'; also, perhaps, into other tribal names, the annotation of which has been forgotten.

"These islands were called the Islands of the Picts, or names to that effect. That was the meaning of the Greek description Πυθωνικῶν Νήσων, and of Ynys Prydain as applied in Welsh to Britain; and we seem to have a prehistoric proof of the use of the vocable 'Pict' [=Ict] by continental Celts in the name of the Isle of Ictis and in that of Portus Ictius.

"Britannia is a name which was formed from that of the Britanni [Brythons], as the Romans at first called the most important people of Southern Britain, whom they afterwards learned, from the people themselves, to call Brittones. Britannia at first only meant Southern Britain; and it has etymologically nothing to do with Prydain and Πυθωνικῶν Νήσων, except that its influence caused the latter to be distorted into Βρετανικῶν, so that the correct form disappeared from the MSS.

"The non-Aryan inhabitants of a part of Gaul, including what is known as Poitou, were known by names closely related to those of 'Pict' and 'Cruithne': witness 'Pictones' and 'Chortonicum.' So the pre-Aryan occupants of the Gaulish country in question, and those of the British Isles, must have been considered by the early Celtic conquerors to be of one and the same race.

"According to the conclusions drawn by the students of ethnology and craniology [e.g. Prof. Huxley], the skulls of some of the descendants of these pre-Aryan aborigines of the British Isles belong to a type found also in the Basque country. And I am inclined to think that in pre-Aryan times a neolithic race, which may be called Ibero-Pictish, occupied Western Europe from the Straits of Gibraltar to the Pentland Firth and the Danish islands of the Baltic.

"The range of that race might perhaps be more exactly defined by reference to a map showing the relative positions of the most remarkable megalithic erections of the West, sometimes called Druidic. For anything known to the contrary, these structures may be regarded as monuments of the unaccountable energy of the Ibero-Pictish race, whose existence I have ventured to suggest."

PROF. D'ARBOIS DE JUBAINVILLE, of the Collège de France, has published (Paris: Bouillon) the result of a recent course of lectures on the Gaulish names in Cæsar. This volume, which is to be followed by others, deals specially with that class of proper names that have rien for their termination. After discussing such words as Caturiges and Bituriges, Ambiorix and Dumnorix, he led, through Vercingetorix, to Vercassivellaunos. The former name is interpreted as "great chief of warriors," and the latter to mean "excellently good." The volume abounds in learning, it is written in a clear style, and is well printed. It concludes with no less than eight separate indexes. We are glad to see from the preface that the appearance of Dr. Holder's exhaustive Alt-Celtischer Sprachschatz has not deterred M. d'Arbois from making public his own elaborate researches in a somewhat similar field.

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

SOCIETY FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE MONUMENTS OF ANCIENT EGYPT.

(Annual Meeting, Tuesday, July 14.)

THE Earl of Wharncliffe (president) in the chair.—Among those present were Prof. W. H. Flower, General Donnelly, Mr. E. Maunde Thompson, Lieut.-Colonel G. T. Plunkett, Mr. A. S. Cole, Sir Edmund Henderson, Mr. F. Dillon, Mrs. Inaclure, Lady Seymour, Mr. K. W. Murray, Mr. E. J. Poynter, Mr. E. A. Wallis Budge, and Mr. J. Bryce. The report stated that the energies of the society in the past year had been directed principally to two points—the necessity for an official inspector or superintendent in Egypt whose duty should be the care of the ancient monuments, and an endeavour to do something towards arresting the gradual destruction of the Great Temple at Karnak. Statements concerning a proposed scheme for barring the Nile below Philæe to make a vast reservoir for purposes of irrigation had appeared in the public papers from time to time, and recently various more definite communications had been received by the committee on the same subject. The result would be, it was acknowledged, to completely cover this beautiful island and temple with water. There had been some correspondence on this subject with the authorities in Egypt; but as nothing had as yet been decided as to any scheme of irrigation, and as a committee would be appointed to consider the whole question, it might be considered as suspended for the present, and the committee had thought it best to wait before taking any further action; but they would not lose sight of this important matter, and would oppose to the utmost of their power any engineering scheme which would involve injury or destruction to this well-renowned spot.—General Donnelly moved the adoption of the report, which was seconded by Sir Edmund Henderson, and agreed to. The committee for the coming year was then elected; and a discussion subsequently took place as to the proposed scheme for barring the Nile below Philæe, the opinion of the meeting being evidently strongly opposed to the adoption of any system of irrigation which should involve damage to the temple. Mr. J. Bryce spoke of the wanton injury which was often inflicted on monuments in Egypt, and said that he thought it would be necessary, in dealing with that matter, to bring the question of jurisdiction to the attention of those from whom any system of inspection or care was to emanate.

FINE ART.

Richard Redgrave: a Memoir. Compiled from his Diary by F. M. Redgrave. (Cassells.)

THIS Memoir has a modesty well suited to its subject—a man who spent a long life in the discharge of responsible official duties without forcing himself upon the public attention. Surrounded on all sides by personages of greater distinction, like Sir Charles Eastlake, or of stronger personality, like Sir Henry Cole, his official life, though of scarcely less value to the nation, was less thought of and spoken of than theirs. An artist of originality and talent, whose work had no little influence in turn ing the stream in the direction of a more faithful representation of nature, he never rose to great prominence in his profession. Even when public honour in the form of a knighthood was offered him by the Queen, he declined it as unsuited to his mode of life. So it happens that these short notes from his intermittent Diary will be the first intimations to many that the Richard Redgrave, R.A., who died some three years ago, was a man who played no unimportant part in the art-history of his country.

The Treasury Minute which awarded him his well-earned pension in 1875 bears testimony to the value of his labours "in founding and directing the existing system of art-instruction throughout the United Kingdom, and in establishing the art-branches of the South Kensington Museum"; and however this system may be open to criticism after many years of trial, there is no doubt that it was a great and worthy work, well conceived and thoroughly executed, nor that it was the work of Richard Redgrave. Not less should be recognised the part that Redgrave played in securing for the nation the unrivalled collection of works of art in the South Kensington Museum. It, or a great part of it, was collected with much care and labour, at a time when taste and judgment requisite for the task were rare indeed. Here, again, was a work the national importance of which can scarcely be over-estimated. And, though he had valuable colleagues like Sir J. C. Robinson, it is more than doubtful whether Redgrave has ever yet received his due share of the credit for it; for not only did he make special journeys on the continent in order to purchase works of art for the museum, but all acquisitions from other sources during his long course of office had to pass the muster of his approval. Of these matters the Diary does not tell us much. He never fails to give credit to the value of the services of Sir H. Cole; but it is only now and then that he claims special merit for himself, as in an entry of May 26, 1860:

"May 26th.—To-day the Ellison gift of water-colour paintings was opened to the public for the first time. I have taken much pains to secure the gift for the South Kensington Museum, and much trouble on the whole subject of water-colour art, of which there is now the beginning of a good collection, both in point of beauty and historically. I wonder whether I shall ever get the credit of having been the means of securing both the Sheepshanks and the Ellison gifts for the public."

Redgrave little thought, probably, at the time he made this entry that he himself was then securing his wish by the mere act of recording it. No one can doubt after reading this Memoir how sincere was his desire to secure proper national recognition of his nation's painters, whether in oil or water-colour. Although he was a Royal Academician (I am sorry to use the word "although"), he was zealous for the honour of painters in water-colour. When we have our promised really National Gallery, it is to be hoped that his name will not be forgotten as one of the first who wished and worked for it. It is now thirty-two years since he wrote:

'It is a sin that English art has no national representation. The liberality of individuals has done much, as, for instance, Soane, Vernon, Turner, and Sheepshanks; but why should not every man who struggles into fame have at least one of his best works well placed at the cost of the nation? And then as yet we have not formed any collection of that purely national art, water-colour. I trust, however, that I have made a beginning at South Kensington Museum which will in time bear fruit."

Altogether, Redgrave's services to his country were considerable, and deserve to be more widely known than they are; but it must not be supposed that he lived neglected or died unrewarded. On the contrary, having regard to his origin and his abilities, he may be regarded as a fortunate man. He was ready, industrious, versatile, and trustworthy, and he was an artist with skill in teaching and faculty for organisation; but he was not a man of any striking genius. After serving some years as a master of the School of Design, his services were so appreciated that, when he proposed to retire, he was offered the appointment of Art Superintendent. He had no common claim to the appointment, which may be said to have been necessary to carry out his own views. As early as 1846 he had written a letter to Lord John Russell pointing out the faults of the then system of the School, and suggesting a scheme for its improvement; and one of the consequences of this letter was the foundation of the Department of Practical Art, with himself and Mr. (afterward Sir Henry) Cole as superintendents. No doubt his hard work at the Great Exhibition of 1851, and the Supplementary Report on Design which he drew up in connexion therewith, helped to demonstrate his fitness for the new post. It was in 1851 that he was elected to the full honours of the Academy, and the only drawback to the double success of these years was that it was impossible to push both to advantage. Although he never left off painting until he lost his sight, his professional career had gradually to be sacrificed to his official duties. Such regrets as this caused him had their compensation in the honour and usefulness of his position, and few men have probably lived happier lives; for his was spent mainly in carrying into effect his own views with the full consent and appreciation of the government who employed him, not unaccompanied with the special favour of his sovereign, who offered him a knighthood in 1869, and gave him a C.B. on his retirement in 1880. The Queen did not forget that Redgrave had been instrumental in carrying into effect the plans of the Prince Consort. Those who remember the effect of the Prince's death (greater and more universal, perhaps, than that of any similar event in the memory of anyone living) will testify to the truth of the impression recorded by Redgrave.

"What a terrible shock! too terrible for belief; and, when I rose and went out, and found that I was the spreader of bad news, I doubted if the letter sent me from the Museum could be true. Too true it was and is, alas! but so unexpected that numbers of people in church looked round with astonished eyes when the Prince Consort's name was left out of the Litany. And so the dull week drags on, and all feel how great the loss, how many noble qualities he possessed, and oh! more than all, what our dear Lady and Queen must suffer."

There is too little of this stamp in these extracts from Redgrave's Diary; but his recollections of his father, the notes about his family, his records of his fellow-artists and others with whom he was associated, bear continual testimony to his geniality and the warmth of his affections. The volume is throughout very good to read—full of excellent anecdotes, old and new. The freshest perhaps are those of Leslie, Landseer, Mulready, Maclise, and Herbert; but there is one at least of those about Turner which I do not remember to have met with before:

"April 30, 1878.—I dined last night at Mr. Pender's. Goodall sat next to me, and told me a story to the credit of Turner. Goodall said his father had told him that he had unwittingly signed an agreement, in that careless manner too common with artists, to engrave a series of book illustrations from designs by Turner; and that, when he came to study this agreement, he found it contained clauses which laid upon him very serious terms, such, in fact, as he had never contemplated. He became much alarmed, and, on seeing Turner, he told him of his fears, and said, 'You alone can help me out of my difficulties.' 'How is that?' said Turner. 'Why, by refusing to complete or to make the illustrations I have engaged to engrave.' Turner said: 'That is a bad alternative; it would cost me £500 worth of work.' 'True,' said Goodall, 'but I have been engraving your works for the last twenty-five years with increasing pleasure, and would you bind me to work on these to my great loss and in misery as I work? You will fill up your time in an equally profitable manner, and you will relieve me from engagements which, on signing the agreement with the publisher, I certainly never understood.' Turner acceded to his request; but he said: 'I have done that which I never did before, and would not do for another.'"

Artists possibly may agree that this was "to the credit of Turner," but what would publishers say? One thing at least seems clear—that it was not to the credit of Goodall.

Perhaps the best anecdote in the book is one of Wilkes. It is certainly not new, for it was told by the late Lord Granville; but however old, it is worth repeating for the sake of those who may not know it.

"Once he asked an elector to vote for him. 'No,' replied the man warmly, 'I'd rather vote for the devil.' 'Yes,' responded Wilkes, 'but in this case your friend doesn't stand.'"

These anecdotes are only "tastes" out of a very interesting and entertaining book, the only fault of which is its brevity. Short as it is, however, it gives a very distinct impression of a very worthy and amiable man, who, without rising to the first rank as an artist, a connoisseur, a critic, or a teacher, yet did much valuable and memorable work in each of these capacities.

COSMO MONKHOUSE.

HITTITE DISCOVERIES IN ASIA MINOR.

UNDER this title the Times has published (July 25 and 28) two long articles, forming a valuable summary of our present knowledge of the class of monuments called Hittite, dealing more particularly with the results gained by Prof. Ramsay and Messrs. Hogarth and Headlam during their recent archaeological expeditions in Asia Minor. We must content ourselves with quoting the following summary of the writer:—

“We may best conclude with a brief outline of the various opinions and theories that have been stated with regard to the whole class of monuments.

“In the first place, as to their date. The general view seems to be that they belong to the period when the Hittites were a great people, in close relations, sometimes peaceful and sometimes hostile, with Egypt, i.e. 1500—1100 B.C. Prof. Ramsay divides them into two classes: one, the earlier, comprising the monuments of Boghaz Keui and Eyuk, and those in the Eastern parts of Cappadocia; and the other decidedly later, comprising those of Syria and Southern Cappadocia, especially at Ibriz. The former class is, according to him, more Egyptian in type, the latter more Assyrian. Recently, Dr. Puchstein has argued that all the monuments belong to the later period (1000-700 B.C.); while Dr. Winter, in reply to him, has maintained before the Berlin Archaeological Society that all belong to the earlier period. On the other hand, Prof. Hirschfeld has asserted the existence of two distinct types, and has gone so far as to deny any community of character and origin, maintaining that the Syrian and South Cappadocian monuments may be perhaps Hittite, but that those of Boghaz Keui and Eyuk are non-Hittite and native to Asia Minor.

“In the second place, as to the home of the people who created these monuments. M. Perrot and most writers, with the recent agreement apparently of Dr. Winter also, consider that Syria was the centre of their power, and that Asia Minor was subject to them. Prof. Sayce's language has often been quite consistent with this view; but he is disposed rather to think that Asia Minor was the original seat of their power, and that they advanced into Syria. Prof. Hirschfeld denies all connexion between the people and monuments of Syria and those of Asia Minor. While in answer to him Prof. Ramsay has maintained that the original centre of the Hittites was at Pteria; that they spread thence through Eastern Cappadocia into Commagene and Syria in general, and that a later wave of their influence extended from Syria, through Cilicia, into the southern parts of Cappadocia. Adhuc sub judice lis est.”

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE TEMPLE OF LUXOR.

Norwood: July 26, 1891.

Those interested in the preservation of the Egyptian monuments will be relieved on hearing from the distinguished Inspector-General of Irrigation that there is no immediate danger to the Temple of Luxor; some of us, perhaps, more from the fact that it may now receive his special attention rather than from its actual state.

If, in spite of the protection of the stone spurs (loose stones thrown against the bank, and not solid masonry), the persons living in Beato's house (standing on the bank between the river and the Temple) were, as I was informed, afraid it would be washed away last high Nile, it shows at least that they, who had a strong personal interest in the matter and considerable experience in what happens to Nile towns, did not possess that perfect assurance of the man whose house is built upon a rock. This was last year, when the embankment had not been additionally weakened by the extensive excavations of the past winter, which must further have imperilled Beato's and many other houses, besides the Temple.

It was this new danger to the Temple to which I especially begged to call attention. And if anything could have been put forth in defence of the way the excavations were carried on, I am quite sure Col. Ross is far too clever an advocate to have left it unsaid.

What else than “censure” is to be applied to a department which permits one of the most ancient and important monuments in the world's history, which is known to be in a decayed state and upon an insecure foundation, to be excavated—to have the supporting earth removed from columns and walls—and not to tell off a trained engineer to watch and direct the operations? It needed small knowledge of the builder's art to see that columns thus left would soon topple over. It appears they have already begun to do so. Will immediate orders be now given to secure the others? is the question which should be asked of the Egyptian authorities.

As to the case of the set of the current against the east bank, I would venture to appeal to Col. Ross again to consider the matter on the spot. Doubtless in ancient times the river frontage of the city, or least that part near the Temple, was protected by quays, of which now only a portion remains, and that, apparently, in a state far from secure. Has not the time now arrived to extend the quay and put what remains in thorough repair? Also, as to the spurs; should they not be of masonry and project further into the river?

Col. Ross speaks of the “convenience” of the tourists. No one would desire to inconvenience them; but is their convenience in escaping a short sandy walk to be considered when the safety of the monuments is in question? It happens, however, that now, when the tourists visit the monuments on the west side, although they have no sand on the east bank, there is nearly half of a mile of it on the island where they are landed from the first ferry. There is then a second ferry, involving abominable treatment to the donkeys in getting them into the barge. Those who remember the horrors of that ferry would probably prefer commencing with a tract of sand and landing on the opposite bank in one ferrying.

There can be no question that, if at Luxor the river flowed evenly between the two banks, there would be less danger than now exists to the monuments on the east side. What Col. Ross can do in the matter of reducing the island opposite the town, and joining the remainder to the west bank, it is not for me to say. Considering the interests involved, expenditure for such an object would surely be justifiable.

In case it might be supposed that I attribute blame to the Inspector-General of Irrigation in this matter, permit me to disclaim such intention. All who read his admirable letter in the ACADEMY some two years ago on the Beni-Hassan outrage will recognise his warm interest in the preservation of the monuments. But he cannot perform the impossible. The fault lies with the government that refuses to appoint an inspector of the monuments. Col. Ross and his chief, Sir Colin Scott-Moncrieff, have probably done more to promote the prosperity of Egypt and to improve the position of the fellah than any two men who have held office in Egypt since the time of the Pharaohs. The fact, however, of their being masters of the art of irrigation, and having a genuine desire to do justice to the cultivators, does not imply that they are conversant with the art of preserving ancient monuments, although, at the same time, those responsible for that duty should naturally belong to their department.

Since the English have assumed control over the government of Egypt, order has been restored in the land, and the condition of the fellah has been ameliorated; but even when the kourbash has been laid aside and taxation lightened, the last word of civilisation has not been said. The memorials of Egypt's past greatness are now in our charge. They are the country's most sacred treasures, and these we have shamefully neglected.

I may add that not only ought the excavations at the Luxor Temple to have been conducted under the inspection of an engineer, but also the inscriptions and sculpture should have been properly treated immediately they were uncovered. From the omission to do this, large passages of sculpture at the neighbouring Temple at Karnak now crumble beneath the touch, which, a few years ago, before suffering from the action of the atmosphere, were firm and solid. Decomposition in some kinds of Egyptian stone appears to set in very rapidly after it is exposed to the air, a principal cause, I believe, being that the stone is saturated with nitron. It may not be too late to save the sculpture, if the government would send a competent person having a knowledge of chemistry to wash the stone, and perhaps impregnate it with a silicate solution—as to this last suggestion, possibly there is some other substance much better adapted for the purpose.

HENRY WALLIS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

THE committee of the Edinburgh Heraldic Exhibition, encouraged by the richness and extent of their display, and by the public interest manifested in it, propose issuing an illustrated edition of their Catalogue, giving plates of the objects most distinguished by artistic beauty or historical association. It is not intended that profit should be made from this publication—indeed, any surplus that remains from the general funds of the exhibition is to be devoted to enriching the volume; and, as the edition will be strictly limited to subscribers, those interested in the subject should lose no time in communicating with the hon. secretary, at the National Portrait Gallery, Edinburgh.

THE memorial to Christopher Marlowe at Canterbury will be unveiled by Mr. Henry Irving—in the unavoidable absence of Lord Coleridge—on September 16 or 17. It has been executed by Mr. Onslow Ford; and it takes the form of a drinking-fountain surmounted by a bronze statue of a Muse, with statuettes representing characters from Marlowe's plays.

ACCORDING to the report for 1889 of the National Gallery of Ireland, the total number of free admissions for that year was 72,591, of which number of persons 26,810 attended on Sunday. Of forty-four new students admitted to copy pictures forty were ladies; the total number of students' attendances was 2025. The purchases made during 1889 included an interior, by Dirk van Delen, with figures by Dirk Hals, £243; a group of Saints, by Paul Veronese, £50; a portrait by Sir Peter Lely, £1 10s.; a portrait of Sir Richard Steele, by Sir Godfrey Kneller, £20. The sum of £100 was presented to the National Historical and Portrait Gallery by the committee of the Stuart Exhibition.

THE Prix de Rome in the section of sculpture have been awarded as follow: Grand Prix to M. Lavalley, pupil of MM. Cabanel, Maillot, and Bouguereau; Premier second grand prix to M. Decheneau, pupil of MM. Jules Lefebvre, Boulanger, and Benjamin Constant; Deuxième second grand prix to M. Etcheverry, pupil of M. Bonnat.

THE new Salon, the Salon du Champ-de-Mars, has now firmly established itself. The exhibition this year has brought in 40,000 frs. more than last, and has enabled the Société Nationale des Beaux-Arts not only to pay its heavy expenses, but also to distribute “bourses de travail.”

M. RODIN has been chosen to design the monument to Balzac to be erected in the Place du Palais Royal. The former project of Chapu has been abandoned as too expensive; but the municipal council have allowed his family to retain as an indemnity the advances amounting to 5000 frs. which were received by him.

THE pictures recently stolen from the museum at Rennes have been restored by the thief, and will shortly be replaced in their frames.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE announcement that Mr. Henry Arthur Jones shortly takes a theatre for the performance of Mr. Henry Arthur Jones's plays is an interesting one: it promises an experiment with which all writers are likely to be in sympathy. That with regard to the long pieces which fill the evening's bill, certain changes are effected by managements, contrary to the author's wishes, is pretty well known. Are these generally speaking wise or unwise, demanded or superfluous?—that is what remains to be seen. We are not ourselves amongst those who deny to the pursuers of a particular business the capacity of knowing their own business properly. A simple manager is not, broadly speaking, such a fool as to require to be set right by his dramatist in regard to what is really telling upon the stage. Yet many a simple manager is unimaginative, and most who have anything to lose are desperately conservative. But then the business side of the matter has, after all, to be in the foreground. No author, unless he be a dilettante, can afford to lose sight of that. The author's real grievance begins and ends, in most cases, we suspect, not so much with the manager proper as with the actor manager, who, whatever may be his services to the stage in individual and exceptional cases, is, as a rule, very one-sided. He wants, not a piece, but a part. From the view of that part alone does he survey—or is inclined to survey—the whole performance. Now an author's point of view is at all events more central. What will be the outcome of the experiment?

WE shall be interested in seeing what reception the reading public will give to Mr. A. W. Pinero's plays, more than one of which is about to be published. One of them—it is "The Profligate," we believe, but we are rather sorry it is not the less immediately successful piece which was last performed—Mr. Malcolm C. Salaman is now editing. Why it is that a living writer of repute does not prefer to do the editing of his own plays we cannot profess to explain; but in any case Mr. Malcolm Salaman is excellently fitted to do this office for them, his attitude towards them—as towards the best of dramatic literature generally—having always been one of the most intelligent sympathy. It is understood that Mr. Pinero's stage directions will be given with completeness; and these, we believe, are wont to be singularly copious and exact, Mr. Pinero enjoying the reputation of being the most punctilious of stage managers of his own pieces. Never probably did M. Montigny, at the Gymnase, insist more absolutely upon details deemed conducive to the perfection of the performance.

WE doubt whether Mr. Leonard Outram's play—well acted as it unquestionably was the other evening at the Avenue—will hold the stage. It has indeed in some quarters been treated not very fairly; for not only was the piece well played, it has distinct interest; it has even what has been described to us as "certain bursts of dramatic and nervous energy," but "lacks," says our informant, "sustained power." The author is as well aware as we are, in all probability, that the accident that the idea of the piece is derived from Mr. Browning's "In a Balcony" cannot long or substantially serve it. The piece must stand upon its own merits. It cannot appropriate the genius of Browning, nor find itself excused by the circumstance that its stage faults recall those of the great poet. When we want Browning, to Browning himself shall we turn—not to any adaptation, or expansion, or dilution of him. Mr. Outram has not produced commonplace. He might have been more likely to succeed if he had; for on the stage success comes generally—it may be contended—to absolute commonplace or to absolute genius, scarcely to anything between them.

SATURDAY sees the production, probably, of the new melodrama by Messrs. Buchanan and Sims at the Adelphi. The cast announced is in some respects a departure from the familiar ones at Messrs. Gatti's theatre. Miss Robins—who did so much even with Hedda Gabler—finds herself in it.

MR. DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY, who has recently returned to England, has arranged to produce his comedy drama, "Chums," at the Globe Theatre on August 27. Mr. Murray will himself sustain one of the principal parts.

A BOOK by Mr. T. Raymond Solly, entitled Acting and the Art of Speech at the Paris Conservatoire, is announced for immediate publication by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MUSIC.

MUSIC NOTES.

VERDI'S "Traviata" was given at Covent Garden on Friday evening, July 24, with a new comer, Mme. Teleki, in the part of Violetta. She is an experienced and intelligent actress, and also praiseworthy as a vocalist; she has no tremolo and no tricks. M. Maurel being ill, the elder Germont was played by Franceschetti, but indifferently. The voice of the tenor, M. Lubert, is not pleasant when he strains it. Signor Randegger was the conductor.

THE students of the Royal Academy of Music gave a concert at St. James's Hall on Tuesday afternoon. Miss Margaret Ford gave an intelligent rendering of the first movement of the Schumann pianoforte Concerto. Miss Ethel Barns, formerly a pupil of M. Sainton, played the slow movement and Finale of Max Bruch's seldom heard violin Concerto in D minor. She has excellent fingers, and plays with much taste and feeling. She was especially good in the fine Adagio, and was well received. Miss Margaret Ormerod sang "The Kelpie," a Dramatic Cantata by M. L. Drysdale. The music is fairly interesting, but certainly not dramatic, and the orchestration is good. The programme included another novelty, Grieg's "Bergliot" (Op. 42), recitation with orchestral accompaniment. Miss Lina Ashwell declaimed the lines with much effect, though her voice was scarcely strong enough for the large hall. Accompanied recitation has been attempted by various composers—Schumann, Liszt, Dr. Mackenzie, and others; but has never come much into vogue. Grieg has provided some dignified music for the lines of the old Saga telling of death and vengeance. He has kept the music duly subordinate, and in fact has shown great skill. The "Siegfried Idyll" was well performed by the students; it was, however, taken by Dr. Mackenzie at a slower rate than is usual. The hall was crowded.

THE death is announced of Franco Faccio, the eminent Italian conductor at La Scala. He directed the first European performance of Verdi's "Aida" in 1872, and also the production of that master's "Otello" at Milan in 1887, and afterwards at London in July, 1889.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of NORTH WALES, BANGOR.

(Incorporated under Royal Charter.)

Principal—H. R. RICHEL, M.A., Fellow of All Souls College, Oxford.

DEPARTMENTS.

I. Arts.
Subjects.	Professors.
Greek.....	W. Rhys Roberts, M.A., late Fellow of King College, Cambridge.
Latin.....	E. V. Arnold, M.A., late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge.
French and German ..	Frederic Spencer, M.A. (Camb.), Phil. Doc. (Leipzig).
English.....	The Principal.
Philosophy.....	Henry Jones, M.A., late Clerk of Felf of Glasgow University.
Mathematics.....	G. B. Matthews, M.A., Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.
Welsh.....	Lecturer—J. Morris Jones, B.A., late Scholar of Jesus College, Oxford.

II. Science.

Physics.....	Andrew Gray, M.A., F.R.S.E.
Chemistry.....	J. J. Dobbin, M.A., D.Sc., late Clark Fellow of Glasgow University.
Biology.....	R. W. Phillips, M.A. (Camb.), B.Sc. (Lond.) late Scholar of St. John's Coll., Cambridge.
Zoology.....	Lecturer—Philip J. White, M.B. (Edin.)
Agriculture.....	Lecturer—Douglas A. Gilchrist, B.Sc. (Edin.), With ASSISTANT LECTURERS AND DEMONSTRATORS.

The next Session opens on September 15th, 1891. Inclusive Tuition Fee, £10 a year. Registration Fee, £1 1s. Laboratory Fees additional, on the scale of £1 1s. per term of six hours a week. The College possesses an extensive and well-equipped Laboratories in Physics, Chemistry, and Biology.

The College Courses include the Subjects for Degrees of London University in Arts and Science. The Chemistry, Botany, and Zoology Courses are recognised for Medical Graduation in the Universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and Students can make one Annum Medicus at this College. The Science Courses are recognised for two years of the three years' degree course of the University of Edinburgh. Special provision is made for Electrical Engineering.

The average cost of living (including College tuition fees) at Bangor for the Session 1890-91 is from £30 to £40. A list of registered Lodging-houses is kept at the College. A Hall of Residence for Women was opened in October, 1888. For detailed information as to Courses Entrance and other Scholarships, &c., apply to the Registrar, Bangor, July 1, 1891.

W. CADWALADR DAVIES.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE,

BALA, NORTH WALES.

Principal—Rev. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).

This College, first established in 1837 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusively Theological College, into which all will be admitted whether candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of £5 for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS.

The CHAIR of LOGIC, RHETORIC, and METAPHYSICS having become vacant by the resignation of Professor Seth, Applications, accompanied by 20 copies of Testimonials, may be lodged with the Secretary of the University Court until 1st September next.

The appointment will be made subject to such alterations as to the duties of the Chair as may hereafter be enacted by Ordinance of the Scottish Universities Commissioners.

St. Andrews, 28th July, 1891.

THE UNIVERSITY of ST. ANDREWS

GRANTS THE

DIPLOMA and TITLE of LL.A. to WOMEN.

The Subjects of Examination may be selected from any seven out of twenty-nine different subjects, the standard being the same as that for the M.A. Degree. The centres of examination are St. Andrews, Aberdeen, Bedford, Belfast, Birmingham, Bristol, Cardiff, Cheltenham, Colburn, Dublin, Dumfries, Edinburgh, Inverness, Leica, Leicester, Liverpool, London, Loughborough, Manchester, Newcastle-on Tyne, and Paisley.

For Prospectus, &c., apply to the SECRETARY LL. Scheme, the University, St. Andrews, N.B.

BOROUGH of NOTTINGHAM

MUSEUM and ART GALLERY, NOTTINGHAM CASTLE.

ELEVENTH AUTUMN EXHIBITION of PICTURES and SCULPTURES

The above Exhibition will OPEN on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. Works will be received between the 4th and 8th of August, inclusive. Forms and all particulars can be had on application.

G. H. WALLIS, Director and Curator.

Nottingham Castle, July 10th, 1891.

BRITISH INSTITUTION SCHOLARSHIP FUND.

At a Meeting of the Trustees held on July 29, Scholarships of £30 a year, tenable for two years were awarded in PAINTING to Frederick Dudley Wallner, Edward Spilbury Swinson, and Ralph Peacock; in SCIENCE, to Paul Raphael Montford; in ENGRAVING, to Arthur H. Rickland; in ARCHITECTURE, to Heber Rimmer. The Competition Works can be seen at the Western Galleries of the Science and Art Department (Entrance from the Imperial Institute Road), from Monday, August 3, to Saturday, August 8, both days inclusive, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m.

By order of the Trustees.

In the High Courts of Justice (Chancery Division).—Mr. Justice Chitty.—Re GROOMBRIDGE & SONS, Limited, late of Panzer Alley, E.C.

MESSRS. PUTTICK & SIMPSON have received instructions to offer for SALE by AUCTION, at their HOUSE, 47, LEICESTER SQUARE, W.C., on TUESDAY, AUGUST 11, at 1 o'clock precisely, the GOODWILL of the BUSINESS, COPY RIGHTS, and STOCK, of the old established and well-known firm of GROOMBRIDGE & SONS, Limited, Booksellers and Publishers, late of Panzer Alley, E.C. The Catalogue comprises many popular publications, particularly the "Magnet Stories" Series—Shirley Hibberd's celebrated Works on Gardening—Carte's Standard Work on War Models (with the new edition now ready for publication)—Dr. Vornell's Popular Educational Series—Scientific Works—Juvenile Literature—Reference Books, &c.

Particulars and Catalogues may be had of A. E. GOODCHILD, Esq., Solicitor, Gresham House, E.C.; of A. R. KING FARLOW, Esq., F.C.A. (Martin & Farlow), 4, King Street, Cheapside, E.C.; and of the AUCTIONEERS, as above.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
On SATURDAY, Aug. 1, at 7.45, will be produced a new and original drama, by Geo. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled THE TRUMPET CALL.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechmere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, F. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
Every Evening, at 7.45, DRINK.
Mr. Charles Warner, Messrs. C. Glenney, E. Gurney, J. Cross, W. Morgan, A. Phillips, H. Torriss, R. Power; Mesdames Jessie Millward, Ada Neilson, Mrs. Billington, Alice Kingsley, and Kate James.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, G. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Ulmar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schubert, Ellis, and Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Manager, W. W. KELLY.
REOPENING SATURDAY, Aug. 1.—Grand revival.—Sardou's THEODORA.
Messrs. Fuller Mellich, Murray, Cerson, G. W. Cockburn, T. W. Percival, Leslie Corcoran, F. Victor, Henry de Solla, Alker, Ludlow, Warton, &c.; Mesdames Bertie Willis, Lillian Sccombe, Louisa Wyatt, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

To-night, at 8, FATE and FORTUNE; or, the Junior Partner, by James J. Blood, by arrangement with Mr. William Calder.
Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Geo. Barrett, W. R. Sutherland, Bassett Roe, Stephen Caffrey, H. Bedford, W. Cheesman, Henry Pagden, T. F. Doyle, Huntley Wright, John M. East, C. Medwin, &c.; Mesdames May Whitty, Cicely Richards, Sallie Turner, May Protheroe, &c.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA,

Cambridge Circus, Shaftesbury Avenue.
Every Evening, at 8, IVANHOE.
Messrs. Eugene Oudin, Norman Salmond, W. H. Burgon, Avon Saxon, C. Kenningham, A. Owen, Copland, Wallace Brownlow, Stephens, Bovill, and Ben Davis; Mesdames Macintyre, Groehl, and Donald.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OLYVY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Santmarcz, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDOUN.
On SATURDAY, Aug. 1, and Every Evening, at 9, THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Eversfield, Hawtrey, Cape, Barraclough, and H. Standing; Mesdames Fanny Brough, Edmund Phelps, Eva Moore, and Venie Bennett.

TERRY'S THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15, THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR. After which, A COMMISSION. Followed by A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL. Mesdames L. Linden, L. Hanbury, Drummond, H. Dacre, Tyrrell, Ford, and E. Chester; Messrs. B. Thomas, Forbes-Dawson, Elliot, C. P. Little, C. Coutts, Bramcombe, and W. Grossmith.
Mr. George Edwardes has decided to transfer the above programme to the SHAFTESBURY THEATRE on MONDAY, August 3.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cuningham, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Arrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

W. H. SMITH & SON'S
SUBSCRIPTION LIBRARY,
186, STRAND, LONDON, and at the Railway Bookstalls.

1.—This Library is established in connexion with Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON'S numerous Railway Bookstalls; it embraces all the most important Works of History, Biography, Travel, Fiction, Poetry, Science, and Theology, as well as the leading Magazines and Reviews, and gives greater advantages to Subscribers than any other existing Library, from the fact that there are 500 Bookstalls in England and Wales, and to any of these Depots a Subscriber may be transferred free of charge.

2.—Subscribers can only change their Books at the Depot where their names are registered, but they may transfer the place of exchange by giving notice to the Clerk in charge of the Depot at which they obtain their Books. Of the current periodicals, one only at a time is allowed to a Subscription under Five Guineas, and Subscriptions will not be accepted for the supply of Magazines and Reviews only.

3.—The Books are delivered at the Bookstalls, carriage free. A Subscriber may exchange once a day; the Clerk in charge will obtain from London any Work in the Library which a Subscriber may desire to have. NOVELS exchanged only in unbroken and complete Sets.

4.—London Subscribers transferring their Subscriptions to a Country Depot will be entitled only to the number of volumes which the Country terms assign to the amount they subscribe; similarly, Country Subscriptions transferred to Town become subject to the London regulations.

5.—Subscriptions may commence at any date, and are payable in advance at any of the Railway Bookstalls.

A Catalogue of Surplus and New Books, offered at greatly reduced prices, is published Monthly, and can be had upon application at the Bookstalls. Also a Catalogue of Books in elegant bindings, for Gentlemen's Libraries.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTO-GRAYURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

ON
MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,
The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers)
Goods carefully Removed and Warehoused.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.
LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED
Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

ELLIOT STOCK'S NEW LIST.

In handsome demy 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

History of Corea, Ancient and Modern.

With Description of Manners and Customs, Language and Geography. Maps and Illustrations.

By Rev. JOHN ROSS, seven years resident in Manchur ia.

Also, by the same Author, price 7s. 6d.

The Manchus, or Reigning Dynasty of China: Their Rise and Progress.

In crown 8vo, handsomely bound in cloth, price 5s.

Daydawn, Consolation, and other Poems.

By J. MELLOR.

There is a deal of praiseworthy piety in Mr. Mellor's volumes. These poems have a frankness and sincerity of feeling that is better a thousand times than the affectations of superiority that beset most modern minor poetry; and the book will please that large number of readers who take interest in a new expression of familiar truth.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

The Love-Song of Barbara: A Narrative Poem of London Life.

By CHARLES JOSEPH WHITBY.

Deserves strong commendation on account of the correctness of its metrical form, the elegance of the diction, and the chaste character of some of the imaginative passages.

Displays genuine poetical feeling and a great deal of originality.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d.

Weeds from a Wild Garden.

These better deserve the name of "flowers" than most of the verses which strew our path. Here there is pathos, heart, scenery, point, and somewhat of the true minstrel music.

From no wild garden, but a well-cultivated mind have these verses come. The author thinks good thoughts, and if sometimes of a melancholy cast, the sadness generally yields to a strong religious hope.

In crown 8vo, tastefully printed, and bound, price 1s.

Dora: a Poem.

By K. FENTON, Author of "Old Memories of Passing Clouds."

An eminently readable little poem, in every way creditable to its author's taste and judgment.

The story is exceedingly well told, and the heroine charms us much by the sweetness of her character and her noble idea of duty.

In crown 8vo, cloth, price 3s. 6d., post free.

Old England's Navy.

An Epic of the Sea. By CHARLES RATHBONE LOW, F.R.G.S., Lieutenant Indian Navy.

In crisp and pleasing verse the poet carries us over many scenes. We recommend this book unreservedly.

Full of a sailor's soul, and written with sailor-like terseness: it is an accurate and coherent picture of the exploits of old England's navy from the time of Sir Francis Drake down to its latest brush: the author is at his best when he sings of the action between the "Shannon" and the "Chesapeake," and the death of Nelson is also lovingly pictured in the epic.

London: ELLIOT STOCK, 62, Paternoster Row, E.C.

TRISCHLER & CO'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries. FRENCH FICTION OF TO-DAY. By Madame VAN DE VELDE. Beautifully Illustrated with Twelve Portraits.

Daily News says: "Madame Van de Velde has written two serious, yet light and amusing, volumes on French Fiction of To-day. The authoress renders full justice to the exquisite sense of style in most French fiction."

Readers will gather from the book more information regarding contemporary French novelists than from any other single book with which we are acquainted.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCUDAMORES." JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By C. J. WILLS.

Daily News says: "Judged as a novel, the work is exceedingly clever. The parodies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable."

NEW BOOK BY B. L. FARJEON. FOR THE DEFENCE. Dundee Advertiser.

"A clever and ingeniously constructed story." The Gentlewoman. "Mr. Farjeon's name is always a guarantee for a story with a strong sensational interest and a great amount of originality."

NEW PRIZE NOVEL. - ONE SHILLING. THE ONLY WITNESS. By E. J. GOODMAN.

Author of "Too Curious," "Paid in his Own Coin," &c. PRIZES of £30, £15, and £5

Are offered by the Publishers for the three best solutions of the mystery contained in this story, and to be revealed in the last chapter, at present placed in a sealed packet and deposited in the hands of Mr. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALLA.

TRISCHLER & CO., 18, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.

Just published, in 1 vol., royal 4to, with 20 Autotypes, price 42s. net. THE FLINDERS PETRI PAPYRI.

With Transcriptions, Commentaries, and Index, by Rev. JOHN P. MURPHY, D.D., F.R.C.D.

OTHER RECENT PUBLICATIONS. A PLAIN COMMENTARY ON THE FIRST GOSPEL.

By AN AGOSTINI. 1 vol., 8vo, 632 pp., cloth, 14s. Logical power and reasoning ability of a very high class are displayed throughout this manifesto of Agnosticism.

LABOUR and LIFE of the PEOPLE. Edited by CHARLES BOOTH. Vol. II. In 2 Parts. Cloth, 21s.

Part I. London, continued. Part II. Appendix. With large Coloured Maps.

JUSTICE: being Part IV. of the "PRINCIPLES OF ETHICS." By HERBERT SPENCER. In 1 vol., 8vo, price 8s.

ESSAYS, Scientific, Political, and Speculative. By HERBERT SPENCER. A New Edition, re-arranged, with additional Essays. 3 vols., 8vo, 30s.

WILLIAMS & NONGATE, 14, Henrietta Street, Covent Garden, London, and 29, South Frederick Street, Edinburgh.

READY. ALFRED STEVENS AND HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies. Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED BY THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

THE MONIST: A Quarterly Magazine of Philosophy, Science, Religion, and Sociology.

CONTENTS FOR JULY, 1891. PSYCHOLOGY OF CONCEPTION. JAMES SULLY.

THE RIGHT OF EVOLUTION. MOSCIE D. COSWAY. A CONVICTED ANARCHIST'S REPLY TO PROF. LOMBROSO. MICHAEL SCHWAR.

THE PRINCIPAL OF WELFARE. Prof. HARALD HOFFDING. THE CRITERION OF ETHICS AN OBJECTIVE REALITY. Editor.

ON THOUGHT AND LANGUAGE. Prof. MAX MULLER. LITERARY CORRESPONDENCE. - France. - Lucien Arrat. - Pedagogues in Germany. - Christian Ufer.

BOOK REVIEWS - PERIODICALS. Now Ready, VOLUME I., in handsome leather back binding, sent post paid for 13s. 8d.

Chicago: The Open Court Publishing Co. Per copy, 2s. 6d. In cloth, 7s. 6d. Yearly, 9s. 6d. In cloth, 13s. 6d.

London: Messrs. WATTS & Co., 17, Johnson's Court, Fleet Street, E.C.

THE THEOLOGICAL MONTHLY.

An Exponent of Current Christian Thought at Home and Abroad. For AUGUST. Price One Shilling.

- CONTENTS. I. MERODACH-BALADAN. By T. H. BIRDLEY. II. THE REVISION OF CREEDS. By T. WITHEROW, D.D. (the late III. PHILOSOPHY and RELIGION. Part II. By EDWARD NAVILL IV. A PARAPHRASTIC ANALYSIS OF HOSEA. By MARCUS E. W. JOHNSON. V. JOHN STUART MILL and CHRISTIANITY. Part II. B. JAMES ORR, D.D. VI. THEOSOPHY in INDIA. By J. E. SLATER. VII. CURRENT LITERATURE.

THE HOMILETIC MAGAZINE.

For AUGUST. Price One Shilling. CONTENTS.

- EXPOSITORY PAPERS - The Miracles of Our Lord. By Rev. W. J. DEANE, M.A. Outlines of the First Eight Chapters of the Epistle to the Romans. By Rev. C. CLEMENCE, B.A., D.D. THE CHILDREN'S SERVICE - Lessons from SPURLOW. By Rev. R. TUCKER, B.A. A Voice in the Night. By Rev. W. J. FOXELL, B.A. My Hiding Place. By Rev. R. DREWES. THE CHURCH YEAR. By Rev. EDWIN DAVIES, D.D. The Tenth Sunday after Trinity. The Eleventh Sunday after Trinity. The Twelfth Sunday after Trinity. The Thirtieth Sunday after Trinity. The Fourteenth Sunday after Trinity. SERMON OUTLINES FOR SPECIAL TIMES - Harvest Time. By Rev. J. DICKERSON DAVIES. The Clean Way. By Rev. W. F. ADENEY, M.A. SERMONS: OUTLINES ON SCRIPTURE CHARACTERS - Abraham. By Rev. CHARLES JERDAN, M.A. PRACTICAL HOMILETICS - St. Stephen. The Two Prodigal Sons. By Rev. R. TUCKER, B.A. The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Rev. R. C. CAFFEY, M.A. In What the Religious Life Does Not Consist. By Rev. J. WILCOCK, B.D. Royal Clemency. By Rev. J. DICKERSON DAVIES. JAMES NISBET & Co., 21, Berners Street, W.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 910. - AUGUST, 1891. - 2s. 6d. CONTENTS: - SIR JOHN MACDONALD, by Martin J. Griffin.

- COOKERY. - FRANCESCA'S REVENGE. - STUDIES IN TACTICAL PROGRESS DURING THE LAST TWENTY-FIVE YEARS. - CHRONICLES OF WESTERLY: A PROVINCIAL SKETCH. - NAMES IN NOVELS. - WOODCOCK, SNIPE, AND PLOVER, by A Son of the Marshes. - MNEOSYNE, by Sir Herbert Maxwell, Bart., M.P. - ACCESS TO MOUNTAINS. - THE OLD SALOON. - THE SESSION AND THE GOVERNMENT.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

AUGUST. THE FUTURE OF PORTUGAL. By OSWALD CRAWFORD, C.M.G.

- GOETHE'S FRIENDSHIP with SCHILLER. By Professor DOWDEN. THE LABOUR MOVEMENT in AUSTRALIA. By FRANCIS ADAMS. NOTE on a NEW POET. By GRANT ALLEN. THE NEW YACHTING. By Sir MORELL MACKENZIE, M.D. THE EDUCATION OF MILITARY OFFICERS. By WALTER WREN. PAINTERS' "PALACE OF PLEASURE." By J. A. SYMONDS. PRIVATE LIFE in FRANCE in the FOURTEENTH CENTURY IV. By MARY F. ROBINSON (Madame DARMESTETER). MARRIAGE and FREE THOUGHT. By M. THE OLD ECONOMY and the NEW. By Professor W. SMART. CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

MONTHLY, price Half-a-Crown. CONTENTS FOR AUGUST.

- ITALY, FRANCE, and the PAPACY. By Signor CRISPI. THE STORY of an INDIAN CHILD-WIFE. By Professor F. MAX MULLER. PICTOR SACRILEGUS: A.D. 1483. By VERNON LEE. LABOUR and LIFE in LONDON. By CLEMENTINA BLACK. THE ETHICS of GAMBLING. By W. DOUGLAS MACKENZIE. MORALITY in FICTION. By Canon MACCOLL. THE AMERICAN TRAMP. By JOSHUA FLAVY. SOULS and FACES. By NORAH GRIBBLE. REMBRANDT'S LESSON in ANATOMY. By W. HASTIE, B.D. ST. PAUL and the ROMAN LAW. By W. E. BALL, LL.D. THE ANTIPODEANS. - I. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY. ISBISTER & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

2s. 6d. - CONTENTS FOR AUGUST.

- THE SESSION: Its Domestic Questions. HISTORICAL DRAMA and TEACHING HISTORY. By Mrs. E. EGERTON. ROUSSEAU'S IDEAL HOUSEHOLD. By Mrs. ANDREW LANG. A PLEA for the TRIPLE ALLIANCE. By KARL BLIND. THE DEGRADATION of BRITISH SPORTS. By W. EARL HODGSON. SOME FAMOUS PIRATES. By TIGHE HOPKINS. THE ANGLO-INDIANS. By Mrs. JAMES C. ROBERTSON. A MATERIALIST'S PARADISE. By MARICE HILWELT. THE PERSECUTED RUSSIAN JEWS. By C. B. ROVLANCE KENT. CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE - CORRESPONDENCE, &c. London: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street, W.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1005.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 8, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
THE POSTHUMOUS WORKS OF DE QUINCY, by J. A. NOBLE	107
THE LIFE OF SIR RICHARD CHURCH, by the Rev. H. F. TOZER	108
WATTHMAN'S CHARYBDIS AND OTHER POEMS, by R. K. LEATHER	109
THE "POPE-DONKEY," by Prof. KARL PEARSON	109
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM SHARP	111
SOME VOLUMES OF SERMONS	112
NOTES AND NEWS	114
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	114
ORIGINAL VERSE: "TO LORD TENNYSON," by JOHN B. TABB	115
OBITUARY: RAJENDRA LALA MITRA, by J. S. C.	115
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	116
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	116
CORRESPONDENCE:— Shakespeare and Wordsworth , by the Rev. Dr. R. P. GRAVES; "Pearl," by I. GOLLANCE; Phut and Saba , by E. GLASER	116
APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK	117
CROLL'S PHILOSOPHICAL BASIS OF EVOLUTION, by Prof. OLIVER LODGE	117
SOME BOOKS OF CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY	119
THE AMERICAN PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION	120
PHILOLOGY NOTES	120
THREE NUMISMATIC BOOKS	120
CORRESPONDENCE:— Book Plates , by F. WEDMORE	121
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	121
STAGE NOTES	122
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	122

Messrs. FREDERICK WARNE & CO. announce that MISS IDA LEMON'S original and powerfully written story, entitled A DIVIDED DUTY, is now ready in one volume, price 6s.

LONDON: BEDFORD STREET, STRAND.

CARLSBAD AND ITS ENVIRONS

By J. MERRYLEES.

WITH a MEDICAL TREATISE on the USE of the WATERS

By B. LONDON, M.D., Resident Physician at Carlsbad.

With numerous Illustrations and Plan. Crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, LIMITED; AND ALL BOOKSELLERS.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE OF SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The CHAIR of GREEK is now vacant through the resignation of Professor Roberts. The Council will proceed to the appointment of the new PROFESSOR in September next. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before Tuesday, September 8th, 1891. For further information apply to, Cardiff, August 4th, 1891. IROR JAMES, Registrar.

BOROUGH of NOTTINGHAM MUSEUM and ART GALLERY, NOTTINGHAM CASTLE.

ELEVENTH AUTUMN EXHIBITION of PICTURES and SCULPTURES.

The above Exhibition will OPEN on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. Works will be received between the 4th and 8th of August, inclusive. Forms and all particulars can be had on application.

G. H. WALLIS, Director and Curator. Nottingham Castle, July 10th, 1891.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c.; of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Outess, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

"A REAL want seems to be supplied by THE STATUTORY TRUST INVESTMENT GUIDE, by Richard Marrack, Barrister-at-law, assisted by F. C. Mathieson & Sons, Stockbrokers (statisticians). The object of the book is to inform trustees and beneficiaries, by means of a detailed list of the securities in which they are allowed to invest by statutory authority, without any authority whatever from their settlements. It is not the first annual of the class, but it is the first in which a list of investments actually available under the statute has been prepared by stockbrokers (statisticians), and combined with a statement by a lawyer of the law relating to them."—Times.

Just Published, 232 pp., fcap. 8vo, 4s. net. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, Limited, Stationers' Hall Court, E.C.

TRISCHLER & CO'S LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries.

FRENCH FICTION of TO-DAY. By Madame VAN DE VELDE. Beautifully Illustrated with Twelve Portraits.

Daily News says: "Madame Van de Velde has written two serious, yet light and amusing, volumes on French Fiction of To-day. The authoress renders full justice to the exquisite sense of style in most French fiction."

"Readers will gather from the book more information regarding contemporary French novelists than from any other single book with which we are acquainted."—Glasgow Herald. In Two vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCUDAMORES."

JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By O. J. Wills.

Glasgow Herald says: "Judged as a novel, the work is exceedingly clever. The parodies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable."

NEW BOOK BY B. L. FARJEON.

FOR THE DEFENCE. Dundee Advertiser.—"A clever and ingeniously constructed story." The Gentlewoman.—"Mr. Farjeon's name is always a guarantee for a story with a strong sensational interest and a great amount of originality." Paper cover, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

NEW PRIZE NOVEL.—ONE SHILLING.

THE ONLY WITNESS. By E. J. Goodman, Author of "Too Curious," "Paid in his Own Coin," &c.

PRIZES of £30, £15, and £5

Are offered by the Publishers for the three best solutions of the mystery Y contained in this story and to be revealed in the last chapter, at present placed in a sealed packet and deposited in the hands of Mr. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALA.

The Evening News says: "The story is highly sensational, and the developments are of so startling a character, and are told with such terse rapidity, that when the early chapters are read one hurries on to the last with ever-growing curiosity and eagerness. The book is made at a point which plunges the reader into endless conjectures."

TRISCHLER & CO., 18, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,

14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAVURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

PRIZE NOVELS of £200, £150, and £100, for Serial Publication, invited by the GLASGOW WEEKLY HERALD Proprietors.—Particulars of Competition given in the Weekly Herald or in the Glasgow Daily Herald.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO BE LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and sit-in-lance by resident house-keepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HOBBS & CO., 63 and 64, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, 63, Chancery Lane.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS

promptly supplied on moderate terms.

CATALOGUES on application.

DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH

PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

PRINCIPAL—Rev. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).

This College, first established in 1837 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusively Theological College, into which all will be admitted whether candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of 12s. for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.

Professors—Seeley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

Full list and references on application.

Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

STATUTORY NINTH INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS

(To be held in London from 1st to 10th SEPTEMBER, 1891.)

PATRONS—H. R. H. the DUKE of COSSAUGHT; H. I. H. ARCHDUKE RAINER.

Hon. Pres.—MARQUIS of DUFFERIN; the EARL of LYTON.

President of Organising Committee—The Right Hon. LORD HALSBURY. 500 Members in 33 countries, and 120 "papers" can be counted on. 8 Governments and 29 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous of sending Delegates or of informing the Congress of their Oriental work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers, to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. Leitner, Woking, who will supply the Programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members. Subscription £1.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

PRESS OPINIONS OF SOME

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

THE STANDARD says:—

"SO NEAR AKIN [3 vols.] is a clever story, and if it is a first book we shall look forward with interest to its successor."

THE ST. JAMES'S GAZETTE says:—

"The dénouement in SO NEAR AKIN is tragical, but is told with great spirit, while the character of the heroine is drawn with a skill which would alone be sufficient to prove that in Mrs. BENGOUGH we have a new writer of high ability."

THE ACADEMY says:—

"THE ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN [3 vols.] is throughout a sensible and well-executed story. Mr. BRINSLEY RICHARDS is a deft hand both in construction of plot and in descriptive narrative. His book is thoroughly enjoyable."

THE DAILY TELEGRAPH says:—

"A story of middle-class life in which crime plays a more conspicuous part than love, is THE ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN. The plot of this somewhat sensational novel is characterised by considerable ingenuity and originality..... There are smart sketches of character, notably those of Lady Looney, Madge Rose, and Chauncey Travers."

THE MORNING POST says:—

"A country-town chronicle as well written as THE HALLETTS [3 vols.] has in itself many of the elements of a successful novel. When, added to these, the author has the simple yet graphic manner of LESLIE KEITH, it has a very real attraction for the lovers of wholesome fiction. The author has already shown talent for delineation of character, and in her present work Andrew Hallett, his meek wife, and Lavy Moss are clever as well as vigorous sketches."

THE SPECTATOR says:—

"The general character of THE HALLETTS is well indicated by its sub-title 'A Country Town Chronicle.' There is fairly solid structure of plot, but the interest lies in the quietly truthful delineation of various types of character."

THE TIMES says:—

"THE UNDERGRADUATE [2 vols.] is an extremely clever and sparkling novel. The scenes in the Dissenting "connexion" in Scarborough are as full of knowledge and nearly as good as anything Mrs. Oliphant described in 'The Chronicles of Carlingford.'"

THE MORNING POST says:—

"Mr. DERING'S THE UNDERGRADUATE is on somewhat new lines. He treats the difficult incident of his hero's love for the professor's wife with as much tact as can be desired, and not without a touch of humour."

Also, now ready.

EVELYN'S CAREER. By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney." 3 vols.

AND

VIOLET MOSES. By the Author of "Mr. Bazalgette's Agent." 3 vols.

A NEW AND POPULAR EDITION READY THIS DAY.

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.
Forming the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS

Just published, New and Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

Including a list of English and American articles on the subject of the Volume published since the appearance of the first edition.

ESSAYS upon HEREDITY and KINDRED BIOLOGICAL PROBLEMS. By Dr. AUGUST WEISMANN, Professor in the University of Freiburg in Breisgau. Edited by E. B. POULTON, M.A., F.R.S., F.L.S., F.G.S.; SELMAR SCHONLAND, Ph.D., Hon. M.A. Oxon.; and A. E. SHIPLEY, M.A., F.L.S.

* This Volume contains the Essays which composed the First Edition. Volume II., to be issued shortly, will contain four additional Essays, with a Preface by Dr. Weismann.

Just published, Fifth Edition, crown 8vo, cloth, price 7s. 6d.

FIRST LESSONS in TAMIL; or, an Introduction to the Common Dialect of that Language, for the use of foreigners learning Tamil, and of Tamilians learning English. With an easy Catechism in Tamil of both the Colloquial and Classical Dialects. By the Rev. G. U. POPE, M.A., D.D., Member of the Royal Asiatic Society and of the German Oriental Society, Lecturer in Tamil and Telugu in the University of Oxford, sometime Fellow of the Madras University.

SOME LATIN TEXTS FOR SCHOOLS.

Extra fcap. 8vo.

CICERO.—INTERESTING and DESCRIPTIVE PASSAGES. With Notes, by H. WALFORD, M.A. In Three Parts. Third Edition, 4s. 6d. Separately, 1s. 6d.

SELECT ORATIONS. (For Schools.) With Notes, &c. By J. R. KING, M.A., Editor of "Cicero—Philippics," &c. Second Edition. 2s. 6d.

IN O. CÆCILII DIVINATIO ET INC. VERREM ACTIO PRIMA. Separately, limp, 1s. 6d. "A masterly work."—School Guardian.

DE SENECA. Edited, with Notes, by LEONARD HUXLEY, B.A. 2s.

PRO ROSCIO. Edited, with English Notes, by ST. GEORGE STOCK, M.A. 3s. 6d.

CATILINE ORATIONS. Edited, with English Notes, by G. A. UPCOTT, M.A. 2s. 6d.

SELECTED LETTERS. (For Schools.) With Notes, by the late C. E. PRICHARD, M.A., and R. E. BERNARD, M.A. Second Edition. 2s.

HORACE.—SELECTED ODES. With Notes for the Use of the Fifth Form. By E. C. WICKHAM, M.A. 2s.

HORACE. With a Commentary. (In a size suitable for the use of Schools.) Vol. I. The Odes, Carmen Seculare, and Epodes. By E. C. WICKHAM, M.A. Second Edition. 6s.

LIVY.—SELECTIONS. (For Schools.) With Notes and Maps. By H. LEE-WARNER, M.A. In Three Parts, limp, each 1s. 6d.

BOOKS V.—VII. With Introduction and Notes. By A. R. CLUER, B.A. Second Edition. Revised by P. E. MATHIESON, M.A. 5s.

BOOKS XXI.—XXIII. With Introduction and Notes. By M. T. TATHAM, M.A. Second Edition. 5s. "A thoroughly good school-book."—Saturday Review.

BOOKS XXI., XXII., separately, 2s. 6d. each.

OVID.—SELECTIONS. (For the use of Schools.) With Notes, &c., by W. RAMSAY, M.A. Edited by G. G. RAMSAY, M.A. Second Edition. 5s. 6d.

OVID'S TRISTIA. BOOK I. With Notes, &c., by S. G. OWEN, B.A. 3s. 6d. "A thoroughly scholarly edition."—Classical Review.

OVID'S TRISTIA. BOOK III. By the same Editor. 2s.

PLINY.—SELECTED LETTERS. (For Schools.) With Notes, by the late C. E. PRICHARD, M.A., and E. R. BERNARD, M.A. Third Edition. 3s. "An admirable specimen of scholarly editing."—Scotsman.

PLAUTUS.—CAPTIVI. With Introduction and Notes, by W. M. LINDSAY, M.A. 2s. 6d. "An excellent school-book."—Guardian.

TRINUMMUS. With Notes, &c., by C. E. FREEMAN, M.A., and A. SLOMAN, M.A., late Assistant Masters in Westminster School. 3s.

TERENCE.—ANDRIA. With Notes, &c., by C. E. FREEMAN, M.A., and A. SLOMAN, M.A. 3s. "The best school edition of the 'Andria' yet published."—Athenæum.

Full Clarendon Press Catalogues post free.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA. By

WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. SECOND EDITION. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.
"An admirable story."—Athenæum.
"One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By Avery

MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.
"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the dénouement."—Times.

A HIDDEN FOE: a Story of Love and Mystery. By G. A. HENTY, Author of "The Curse of Carne's Hold," &c. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"It may be read once with pleasure and interest, and even among fairly good novels there is hardly one in twenty of which more than this can truthfully be said."—Spectator.

THIRTY STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

At prices ranging from ONE to SIX SHILLINGS.

WILLIAM BLACK.

Cloth gilt, 6s. each.

IN SILK ATTIRE.
A DAUGHTER of HETH.
THREE FEATHERS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
KILMENY.
SUNRISE.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON.

R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition.)
CLARA VAUGHAN.
MARY ANERLEY.
CRIPPS THE CARRIER.
CHRISTOWELL.

THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A LAODICEAN.

FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Crown 8vo volumes, prices as below.

THE HUNDREDTH MAN. 6s.
THE LATE MRS. NULL. 6s.
THE BEEMAN of ORME. 5s.
ARDIS CLAVERDEN. 6s.
THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs.) hds., 2s.
JECKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and "The) Dusantes") clo., 2s. 6d.
THE MERRY CHANTER. (Illustrated.) 2s. 6d.

OTHER VOLUMES IN OCTOBER.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUG. 8, 1891.

No. 1005, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Posthumous Works of Thomas De Quincey. Edited from the Original MSS., with Introductions and Notes. By Alexander H. Japp. Vol. I. (Heinemann.)

THE publication of De Quincey's fragmentary MSS. necessarily reopens a discussion which can never be definitively closed, because no general principle will cover all the cases that have arisen or that may arise. The question concerning the rights and duties of survivors with regard to the unfinished, unrevised, or in any way incomplete work which an author leaves behind him may in diverse circumstances be legitimately answered in different ways; and considerations which in one instance ought to have preponderating weight may in another be minimised or altogether disregarded. A conscientious editor will necessarily feel some concern both for the reputation or conjectured wishes of the author and for the interests of the reading public; and in cases where there seems any conflict between his responsibilities to the dead and to the living, the difficulty of the decision should be generously recognised by any person who undertakes to criticise it.

So far as the present work is concerned, there is little doubt that among candid judges the verdict upon Dr. Japp's latest editorial performance will be one of general, if not of wholly unreserved, commendation. Among critics of unmistakable competence there are to be found widely varying estimates of De Quincey's intellectual and literary importance, but even those who are least enthusiastic will admit that hardly anything from his pen is likely to be wholly devoid of some kind of interest or value. Such an admission suffices to justify the scheme of the present work. Its execution is necessarily more open to criticism, though every critic is certain to be influenced by those personal tastes and preferences which cannot boast a logical justification, but must be taken on their own merits for what they are worth. Probably the general impression will be that Dr. Japp's gleaning has been a little too indiscriminately inclusive. Though he makes no explicit statement to that effect, he seems to be of opinion that every intelligible sentence written by De Quincey is worthy not merely of preservation but of publication; and he accordingly includes in his collection of Posthumous Works not only papers which, being wholly or in parts finished productions, are therefore more or less deserving of the name, but mere memoranda that not infrequently are too casual and fragmentary to possess even the interest of suggestiveness. There is undoubtedly much that can be read with pleasure in the collection of isolated paragraphs arranged in groups under the general heading "Brevia"; but it may be doubted whether as a whole it can be regarded as an adequate return for the drudgery which Dr. Japp has devoted to its compilation. A passage in his general introduction is worth quoting, both as a fragment from the autobiography of a painstaking editor and as a description of the bewildering methods of work favoured by a great writer.

"His [De Quincey's] habit was to make notes just as they occurred to him, and on the sheet that he chanced to have at the moment before him. It might be the 'copy' for an article indeed, and in a little square patch at the corner—separated from the main text by an insulating line of ink, drawn round the foreign matter—through this, not seldom, when finished he would lightly draw his pen; meaning probably to return to it when his MS. came back to him from the printer, which accounts, it may be, in some measure for his reluctance to get rid of, or to destroy, 'copy' already printed from. Sometimes we have found on a sheet a dozen or so of lines of a well-known article; and the rest filled up with notes, some written one way of the paper, some another, and now and then entangled in the most surprising fashion. In these cases, where the notes of course were meant for his own eye, he wrote in a small spidery hand, writing with many contractions—a kind of shorthand of his own, and very different indeed from his ordinary clean, clear, neat penmanship. . . . Pages of articles that had already been printed were intermixed with others that had not; and the first piece of work that I entered on was roughly to separate the printed from the unprinted—first having carefully copied out from the former any of the spidery-looking notes interjected there, to which I have already referred. The next process was to arrange the many separate pages and seeming fragments into heaps by subjects; and finally to examine them carefully and with a view to 'connexions' to place them together."

We have not all edited De Quincey, but many readers of the ACADEMY have performed tasks the remembrance of which will help them to a sympathetic understanding of Dr. Japp's experiences. When arduous work of this kind has been so conscientiously performed, it seems ungracious to ask whether the game proves to be worth the candle; but the question will make itself heard, and the only possible answer is not that which one would like to give. Indeed, so far as it is possible to judge from internal evidence—and none other is available—those portions of this volume which represent the greatest amount of editorial labour, especially labour "with a view to connexions," are not the most but the least valuable. To say nothing of trivialities—for a remark which seems utterly trivial to one reader may be full of suggestion to another—many of the more elaborate passages in the "Brevia" are utterly lacking in both intellectual coherence and mere verbal lucidity. An enumeration of such passages would occupy space that can be more profitably utilised, and on the same ground illustrative quotation is impossible; but the reader who turns to the note, or whatever it may be called, which occupies pages 244-5, will see a typical example of the defect referred to. The opening statement of the proposition to be demonstrated, and the greater part of the demonstration itself, are really unintelligible, probably because—like that kind of cipher based upon a volume used by writer and receiver—the key is to be found in other writings of De Quincey, from which the passage is here dissociated, and which the reader may not be able to identify.

Outside the "Brevia" there is less evidence in support of a charge of indiscriminateness in inclusion; and the volume contains much for which every lover of De Quincey, and of literature, cannot fail to be grateful. Even were they not to be found in the opening pages, every reader would turn first to the four additions to the "Suspiria de Profundis" series, which, alas, is destined to remain for ever incomplete. Concerning this series, Dr. Japp, in his introduction, gives some interesting information. The original scheme comprised thirty-two numbers, only eleven of which appear in Messrs. Black's editions of De Quincey's works—indeed, Dr. Japp, by the typographical dagger printed against various items in his list, indicates only nine, but he omits to mark "Levana and our Ladies of Sorrow" and "Savannah-la-Mar," which have long been familiar to all students of De Quincey. It is not quite clear, from Dr. Japp's narrative, how many of the thirty-two were actually written and how many only planned; but evidently more than twenty of them existed in a more or less complete form, and five or six of these were destroyed by the fire described by De Quincey in his prefatory notice to the enlarged edition of the Confessions (November, 1856). The four now recovered are entitled "The Dark Interpreter," "The Solitude of Childhood," "Who is this Woman who beckoneth and warneth me from the Place where she is, and in whose eyes is Woeful Remembrance?" and "The Princess who overlooked one Seed in a Pomegranate." Of these the third is the only one which has the appearance of being finished, the first being incomplete by a considerable hiatus, while the second and fourth are little more than elaborate notes, which are less interesting than some of the briefer notes that follow. The third is, however, hardly less perfect in the indescribable magic of its imaginative suggestion and rendering than the most famous of its predecessors; and the first is noteworthy as the most explicit embodiment of the idea which Dr. Japp declares—perhaps a little too unreservedly—to be the "master-idea" of the series:

"the power which lies in suffering, in agony unuttered and unutterable, to develop the intellect and the spirit of man, to open these to the ineffable conceptions of the infinite, and to some discernment, otherwise impossible, of the beneficent might that lies in pain and sorrow."

The "Brevia" and the new "Suspiria" fill about half of Dr. Japp's volume, the remainder consisting of essays, which are very unequal in length, weight, completeness, and finish, and of passages originally written as integral portions of the Confessions and other works, but omitted for various reasons from all editions yet published. A considerable number of the essays deal with theological or Biblical subjects; and one little group of them—especially when taken in connection with the first section of the "Brevia"—provides good ground for Dr. Japp's suggestion that one of De Quincey's unaccomplished schemes was a great work on "Paganism and Christianity," devoted to the thesis that Paganism had exhausted all the germs of progress that lay within it, and that human progress in post-pagan times is due exclusively to Christianity, "which, in opening up a clear view of the infinite through purely experimental mediums in man's heart, touched to new life science, philosophy, art, invention, and every kind of culture." His main proposition evidently would have been to this effect—that Christianity not merely gave a new force to impulses founded on pre-existent sensibilities, but that it actually extended the gamut of spiritual sensation; the sense of sin, for example, being a form of consciousness introduced in its entirety by Christianity, of which no germ is to be found in the recorded thought of the pagan world.

The purely literary papers are not numerous; but the "Thoughts on Biography" and the essay on "Great [literary] Forgers" are pleasantly De Quinceyan, as is also his return to the old theme "Murder as a Fine Art," with its characteristically subtle passage upon the power given by obscurity. There is also a metrical translation of a passage in Voss's Luisa, which is not likely to convert the decriers of English hexameters, and which is mainly of worth as the occasion for an introductory letter on the general principles of verse translation, full of sound sense and freer from subtlety and paradox than is De Quincey's ordinary treatment of kindred themes. Of the one fault of the collection—its over-inclusiveness—enough has been said; and it is a fault which may easily be pardoned to an editor who has given us so much that we are glad to have and that is well worth having.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

Sir Richard Church, C.B., G.C.H., Commander-in-Chief of the Greeks in the War of Independence. By Stanley Lane-Poole. (Longmans.)

THE subject of this memoir, Sir Richard Church, without being a man of first-rate abilities, possessed so strong a vein of originality that he was destined from the first to make a mark in the world. His character comprised a number of elements which are rarely found together—love of adventure combined with coolness of judgment, strong patriotism with philanthropy and sympathy for the oppressed, great industry and perseverance joined with dashing gallantry, and a warm interest in wild, half-civilised natures with the power of reducing them to order. In this way he was fitted to carry out perilous enterprises, and to obtain influence over strange people; and for such services there were ample opportunities during the first thirty years of the present century.

The commencement of his career was not the least remarkable part of it. Born and bred a member of the Society of Friends, at sixteen years of age he ran away from school and enlisted in the army. His father must have been a man of good sense, for he recognised that it was easier to make a Quaker into a soldier than a soldier into a Quaker, and accordingly purchased a commission for him. This was in the year 1800; and he was at once despatched to Egypt to serve under Sir Ralph Abercromby, and in the March following took part in the battle of Aboukir and the expulsion of the French from that country. As contemporary documents relating to this expedition are very scarce, a letter of Church's giving an account of it, which is here printed, is of considerable value. At this early period he was an ardent student, and he soon made himself familiar with the French and Italian languages, the knowledge of which was of great service to him in his subsequent employments. We next find him at Messina serving in the Sicilian expedition of 1806; and during this he was engaged at the battle of Maida on the Calabrian coast, by which the French were for a time driven out of that part of Italy. Subsequently, for two years (1806-8), as lieutenant under Hudson Lowe, he held the upper town of Capri as a look-out place in the very eyes of Jerome Buonaparte at Naples, and it was not until after his removal from that command that the island was taken. In 1809-14 he took an active part in the capture of the Ionian Islands from the French, and both his knowledge of languages and his influence over untrained natives rendered him very useful in this service. He now ventured to enrol a regiment of Greek volunteers, for even during his campaign in Egypt he had formed a high opinion of the capacities of that people. On this subject he writes to his mother in 1811:

"To you, mother, I do not boast; but I have now, thank God, divested those men of prejudices rooted by ages, and converted them from the most lawless of mankind, not only into good soldiers, but also into praiseworthy members of civilised society. These men, who once knew no law but their sword, are now the admiration of the inhabitants for their correct, quiet, and obedient conduct. My maxim has been to treat them with mildness and humanity, and by that means I have succeeded in gaining the love of these people beyond what can be imagined. The number of recruits that flock to me from all parts of Greece is really extraordinary."

At the head of this Greek regiment he captured the strong castle of Santa Maura, but in the moment of victory his left arm was shattered by a bullet. To recover from the effects of this he was allowed to go on a tour through Greece and to Constantinople, where he commenced his friendship with Stratford Canning, who was already minister there. After the peace of 1814, when he was no longer required for active service in the English army, his love of adventure forbade his remaining idle; and after he had been employed by his own government on various missions, we find him, in 1817, undertaking for the Neapolitan government to suppress the secret societies in South Italy, which, from the atrocities that they committed, had become the terror of the respectable population, and which up to that time both the central government and the local authorities had been powerless to deal with. This task he accomplished in the course of a few months, mainly through the absolute fearlessness with which he went about in the most disturbed districts, though in constant peril of his life; for the conspirators were cowed by his resolute action, and the confidence of the people at large was proportionately raised. He continued to rule the Apulias for two years from this time; and so highly was this work of deliverance appreciated, that "the grateful people held solemn services of thanksgiving in every church in the provinces, a commemorative column was erected at Lecce, and the freedom of the city and the sword of honour were presented by the citizens to their deliverer."

He is described at this time as being

"below the middle height, extremely well built, spare, sinewy, and active, with a well-proportioned head, sharp, piercing eyes, rather aquiline nose, and a closely compressed mouth, denoting great firmness and resolution."

We now come to the most important part of Church's career. In 1821 the Greek War of Independence broke out, and for some time the course of events proved favourable to the cause of liberty; but at length the tide turned, and in 1826 the fortunes of the Greeks had reached their lowest ebb. Mesolonghi had fallen; Ibrahim Pasha occupied the Peloponnese, and by his barbarous ferocity had struck terror into the inhabitants; and all Attica, with the exception of the Acropolis of Athens, was in the possession of the Turks, who also commanded the shores of the Corinthian Gulf, and many points in the interior of Northern Greece. Already, in 1825, Church had been in frequent communication with Mr. Canning, who was then foreign minister, on the subject of the future of Greece; and in the following year an official invitation came to him from the Greek administration to undertake the office of generalissimo of their forces. This was backed by a personal appeal from the famous chieftain Colocotronis, who was one of those that had served under Church in the Ionian Islands. He at once accepted the position, though he was well aware of the difficulties of the task, and arrived in Greece in the spring of 1827. The first operation in which he took part was the ill-advised attempt to relieve the garrison of the Acropolis, which was forced on contrary to his advice by the rashness of Lord Cochrane, and ended in failure. After this he devoted himself to strengthening the posts which were available for defence, and reorganising the forces of the insurgents, until the battle of Navarino was fought in October of the same year. This gave him the opportunity of carrying out the plan which he had advocated from the first, of causing a diversion by raising the western provinces, Acarnania and Epirus. Accordingly, after establishing himself at several points in that region, he at length obtained a safe base of operations in the gulf of Arta; and though he found the interior occupied by numerous Turkish garrisons, and his own resources were most scanty, by June 1829 he was in complete possession of Acarnania and Aetolia. The result of this was of the first importance for Greece. Had not the western provinces been in the hands of the Greeks when the new state was constituted, it would have been limited to the Peloponnese, according to the arrangement contemplated by Capodistrias, who was then president of Greece. As it was, in the first instance the districts which Church had conquered were ordered to be given up to Turkey, a proceeding which called forth an indignant letter of remonstrance from that general; but two years later, in 1832, the frontier was rectified by the efforts of Lord Palmerston and Sir Stratford Canning, and these provinces were finally united to Greece. The remainder of Church's long life of ninety years was spent peacefully at Athens; and the soldier who fought against the first Napoleon before he was emperor survived to witness the fall of the second empire at Sedan. The epitaph on his monument in the cemetery at Athens is one which most men might envy:

"RICHARD CHURCH, GENERAL, who, having given himself and all that he had to rescue a Christian race from oppression, and to make Greece a nation, lived for her service, and died amongst her people, rests here in peace and faith."

Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole has told the story of Church's life in the present volume with skill and judgment; and the conciseness of his narrative, which is confined to the principal episodes of his hero's career, contrasts favourably with the usual prolixity of biographies.

H. F. TOZER.

Charybdis and other Poems. By H. M. Waithman. (Eden, Remington & Co.)

A TRUE English love of Nature with a bird-like power of song characterises the poems, ninety-one in number, extending over 176 pages, here jumbled together under the misleading title of Charybdis. The author's truest utterances have the clearness of a moorland stream, but he is often slipshod. He sings for his own delight, and does not in general show that respect for his audience which, since he makes songs and prints them, it was his duty to show. He discovers not seldom a strong sense of art, and gives us, especially in his treatment of Nature, songs which we could not easily replace.

Charybdis has all the imperfections of a first book, and needs much weeding, clipping, and rearranging. May the author take the advice to heart! Here is an example of what we mean:

"HAYMAKING.

"Sweet June roses were all ablow,
Seythes swung steadily to and fro,
Ripe grass fell in a level row.
Oh happy days!—Heigh ho!

"Strong arms tossing the dying grass,
Raking, lading, and carts that pass;
Song and sunshine and lad and lass.
Oh happy days!—Heigh ho!

"Light hearts laughed with the day begun;
Laughed at noon with the laughing sun;
Laughing still when the day was done
Oh happy days!—Heigh ho!

"Days of happiness! Hours of play!
Time has carted you all away;
Stored you by, like the scented hay.
Oh happy days!—Heigh ho!"

Prosaic, clumsy refrains like this mar some of the writer's best work. There are pieces of graceful trifling; some few of a grimmer cast, as a "Rockless Record," made up of five quatrains. We quote the last three:

"When the call comes to go, we will take you
As near as we can to the door,
In farewell by the hand we will shake you.
What can we do more?"

"What matter to us if your pastime
Has its cost? You will have to atone.
We have bid you good-bye for the last time.
You must face it alone.

"We will stay the mad whirl in our sorrow
For a moment—a day—but no more;
And the wheel will be turning to-morrow
As fast as before."

"Charybdis" itself, one of the most highly finished efforts, is yet grimmer. We could wish that the space at our disposal permitted us to quote more. So much is good, so little entirely good, that selection is difficult. But perhaps we shall do best to end this brief notice with one of our author's Nature poems, which, along with others, such as "A Snowstorm," "My Cloud," &c., are, we think, his most individual utterances; and it is with these in mind that we say again the book contains matter which it would be difficult to replace. Mr. Ruskin has laid down, once and for all, the pathetic fallacy, whereby we invest Nature with our own joys or sorrows. This fallacy is the product of modern times, and draws man into closer relationship with Nature than the similes of the old world, e.g., "My heart is smitten and withered like grass." An intermediate step is the landscape painted or described purely for its own sake, of which Sophocles has furnished the earliest examples we remember. The subject is an intensely interesting one. Mr. Waithman goes, it seems, a step further, often looking at Nature for her own sake, and being drawn out of himself into sympathy with her, of which the following "Note in a Garden" is an almost perfect example, the two lines rhyming at the end of the sestet being the one false note:—

"An owl cried out as the daylight passed
O'er a sea of gold to the distant west;
While overhead, like a curtain vast,
To close the scene of the day's unrest,
A cloud of purple—whose folds were red
With the dying fire of the sun—was spread.
As I watched the glory that paled and waned,
And the grey that crept where the flush had died,
The sense grew keen that the world was pained,
And my heart cried out as the owl had cried."

R. K. LEATHER.

THE "POPE-DONKEY."

Der Papstesel: Ein Beitrag zur Kultur- und Kunstgeschichte des Reformationszeitalters von Konrad Lange. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck u. Ruprecht.)

PERHAPS few things are more tantalising to the scientific student of history than the card-houses, which emotional and marketplace historians run up with such a show of substantiality that they often suffice to deceive several generations of a trusting public—a public which has small means of investigating the real foundations of our historical knowledge. The operation of destroying card-houses may not be laborious, but it is very thankless; they have already served to create an impression, and too often, as soon as they are knocked down on one site, they reappear in another and perhaps more inaccessible spot. The historical jerry-builder is generally a strong political or theological party-man, and he thus finds an audience already inclined to accept his sectarian view of the growth of civilisation. In Germany he not uncommonly brings to the support of his structure an appearance of learning which in itself carries conviction to the minds of the uninitiated. It is this party-spirit which in the last three hundred years has produced as rich a crop of myths as were ever brought together even in the childhood of a civilisation. Notably Germany, the very booksellers of which are able to asterisk in their catalogues the distinction between Protestant and Catholic historians, is largely responsible for the fabrication of myths. It must, however, be confessed that other countries have not been unwilling to accept as substantial her historical card-houses.

Take, for example, the whole range of Luther myths, and especially the Luther Bible myth. It used to be asserted, hardly forty years ago, that Luther refound the Latin Bible as a rare book in the Erfurt Library. This card-house toppled down so soon as it was demonstrated that the Vulgate had been printed in hundreds of thousands of copies within the first thirty years of the printing press. Then a new card-house arose—Luther had first given the Bible in the vernacular to the German people. This toppled down also when it was shown that the German Bible had been printed eighteen times before Luther's version appeared, and that his September Bible was but a slight modification of the old text. The next card-house was the theory that the pro-Lutheran German Bible was not only due to Waldensian heretics, but that the very printers and illustrations were tainted with heresy. Here there was plenty of scope for show of learning and for knitting hypothesis to hypothesis. The trials of Waldensians in Strassburg and Augsburg were drawn from the archives and printed alongside accounts of the early printers of these towns. The heretics were found to have Bibles in their pockets; what more natural than that they should have been on their way to take them to the printers? But not only the printers, the engravers were also "Reformers before the Reformation" for these sectarian historians! According to Keller, the woodcut of the Augsburg Bible of 1477 representing a blindfolded king seated on a falling ass bears traces of Waldensian inspiration. Indeed, Keller directly connects it with a copper engraving representing an asinine monster which, under the title of "poppe-donkey," played a large part in Lutheran polemic. Of the Augsburg woodcut, he writes, it shows "nearly all the symbols and figures of the well-known woodcut of Wolgemut of the year 1496." Ergo, since the "poppe-donkey" must be anti-papal, the earlier Augsburg Bible is Waldensian. It is, perhaps, needless to shatter this card-house by the remarks that the "poppe-donkey" is not a woodcut, that it is not due to Wolgemut, that the date 1496 is probably not that of the engraving, and that till Luther chose to interpret the so-called "pope-donkey" as a direct revelation of the deity against the papacy, there is no evidence at all that any one treated the engraving as anti-papal. But Keller had a certain amount of authority on his side, and as nothing is more instructive than to note the growth of a modern myth, it may not be idle to pursue the subject further.

In 1876 Moriz Thausing wrote a deservedly popular book on Albrecht Dürer. Unfortunately Thausing wrote with a distinctly Lutheran bias, and one of the points that he endeavours to make in his work is that Dürer was a "Reformer before the Reformation"—a Protestant twenty years before Luther. As a matter of fact, Dürer was keenly in sympathy with the Humanists, notably Pirkheimer and Erasmus, and, like the former, cordially welcomed the appearance of Luther. Whether, like Pirkheimer, he deserted the Lutheran cause when he recognised how it led to the destruction of art and learning, we do not know. We have no ground to decide upon, beyond the knowledge that Pirkheimer became a bitter opponent of the Lutherans and that Dürer remained Pirkheimer's friend until he died. On Dürer's sympathy with Luther in 1521, Thausing builds up a theory that Dürer's art was Protestant from the beginning. Because bishops and popes appear in undignified positions in the "Apocalypse" of 1495, Thausing, totally neglecting the mediæval tradition which Dürer closely followed—a tradition which invariably placed a representative bishop and pope in hell—proceeded to argue that Dürer was Protestant in spirit so early as 1495. The Apocalyptic cuts were a great blow aimed at the Papacy. But this was not sufficient. There exists a copper engraving with the initial W. upon it, representing a monster with the head of an ass, the breasts and belly of a woman, one hand an elephant's trunk, one foot cloven, one an eagle's claw, and the scales of a fish upon the arms, legs, and shoulders, standing in front of a landscape representing the Tiber, the castle of S. Angelo, with the papal flag and the Torre di Nona, the whole inscribed "Roma caput mundi." This engraving was attributed by Thausing to Wolgemut, Dürer's master. The further inscription, "Januarii 1496," indicated that it was issued about the period of Dürer's "Apocalypse," while the fact (!) that Wolgemut could put his initial showed that Nürnberg was openly in revolt against the papacy in 1496. There could be no doubt that the cut was a biting satire against the papal claims; this monstrous figure was a scathing manifesto of the emancipated artists of Nürnberg against Rome as head of the world! The contemporary spirit in Nürnberg was never really investigated, the views current as to Alexander Borgia in 1496 never inquired into. This wonderful card-house of Thausing, extended by Keller and others to embrace even the woodcut of the Augsburg Bible of 1477 (!), was generally accepted, and Mr. Conway could write in his Albrecht Dürer of 1889:

"Dürer then, by 1497, was in revolt against the papacy. Wolgemut, with his 'Pope-donkey,' in the preceding year unmasked the batteries of satirical art on behalf of the coming Reformation. Dürer was at the same time working at his Apocalypse. The two were of one mind on this matter, and perhaps it was Wolgemut that opened young Dürer's eyes to the new tendencies. However it came about, Albrecht revolted, not against any set of doctrines, but against the tyranny of a degraded ecclesiastical government."

It is this card-house of Lutheran historians which Herr Lange has completely shattered in his monograph entitled Der Papstesel; but with the perversity of a mind bent on tilling 100 pages with what could be said in three, he has built up another card-house of a still more hypothetical kind. When only a certain range of facts are known, not sufficient to explain a phenomenon, is it not possible for the historian merely to state those facts, following them, if he so pleases, by any plausible hypothesis couched in cautious phrases? Is it necessary to ransack the whole of contemporary history for straws which may point in the same direction as some elaborate theory solely propounded to exhibit the writer's own ingenuity? Had Thausing waited for further information, we might have been saved a good deal of myth-making. Herr Lange's services in sweeping away these myths are more than counterbalanced by the string of unproven possibilities by which he dogmatically replaces the really unknown actuality.

Let us briefly examine the facts of the case. In 1523 Luther and Melancthon published a tract whose title may be translated: "Interpretation of the Two Grusome Figures Pope-donkey found at Rome and Monk-calf at Freiberg in Meissen." (The title and position of the woodcuts, as stated by Herr Lange on his p. 106, are not in agreement with the copy of the original Wittenberg tract in my possession). This tract contains two woodcuts of abortions or monsters, which the authors declare to have been found respectively at Rome and at Freiberg, and which they interpret to denote the corruptions and immorality of papacy and monasticism respectively. The spirit of this interpretation is well indicated in the following words of Luther:

"The pope-donkey is in itself a horrible, hateful grusome form, and the longer one looks at it the more terrible it appears. But therein is nothing so terrible as the fact that God Himself has created and revealed such a wondrous and horrible form. Since had a man invented, engraved, and painted it, one might well be contemptuous and laugh over it. But, since it is high, divine Majesty which has itself created and manifested it, it is reasonable that the whole world should be filled with awe and trembling, for one can easily mark what He thinks and has in view. Is not everyone terrified when a spirit or devil appears or makes a clatter in a corner; and is that not child's play as compared with this loathly thing, wherein God publically shows Himself and that so awfully?"

The historical interest of the "pope-donkey" arises partly from the insight it throws on the credulity of the times, partly because it marks the commencement of that prostitution of art to theological polemic, which helped in the sixteenth century to destroy the artistic spirit in Germany.

The question is naturally forced upon us —where did Luther, in 1523, find his "Pope-donkey?" The answer is easy; it is a copy with very small modifications of the above-mentioned copper engraving, marked with the initial W. Between the date of that engraving and 1523—a period, perhaps, of twenty-five years—we have no evidence to suggest that any one had thought of the "Pope-donkey" in an anti-papal sense. Authorities now seem to be agreed that the engraving is due to Wenzel von Olmütz, and therefore has no connexion with a reforming spirit in Nürnberg, still less any relation to Wolgemut or Dürer. Where did Wenzel get the idea? The engraving itself tells us. The inscriptions CASTELSACNO, TEVFRF (for Tevere), and TOFEDINONA (for Torre di Nona) show that Wenzel had an Italian original before him, the inscriptions on which he did not understand. The fairly accurate forms of St. Angelo and the Torre di Nona in Wenzel's engraving go a long way to suggest that the producer of the Italian original was a Roman or had been to Rome. The representation of the City of Rome suggests that the monster exhibited is somehow to be connected with that city; while the date, January, 1496, points to an event happening at that date, and not to its being necessarily the date at which the engraving was made. This representation of the locus of a particular event by the picture of the town in the background was not an uncommon device of the mediæval wood-cutter or engraver, and the representation of Rome on the golden bulls of the German emperors also bore the words Roma caput mundi. Till further evidence is forthcoming, we cannot look upon the representation of Rome in the background as anything but an indication of the locus of the event recorded by the engraving. But we are not left in doubt as to the origin of the monster, although no Italian engraving of it has yet come to light. In the Venetian Annals of Malpiero, in the account of a contemporary of the great floods of the Tiber, which occurred in January, 1496, we read:

"There has been found in Rome in the present month of January, after the Tiber had again sunk, on the banks of the river a monster, which apparently had the head and long ears of a donkey, and the body of a woman. The left arm has human form, the right ends in an elephant's trunk. On the hind parts behind is the face of an old man with beard in human form. As tail comes out a long neck, upon which is set a serpent's head with open mouth. The right foot is an eagle's claw, the left that of an ox. The legs from the feet upwards, together with the whole body, is covered with scales, after the manner of a fish. The details are contained in the letters of the ambassador to the Signoria."

Here is a very accurate description of Wenzel's cut, except that the right and left legs are inverted. What more natural than that an Italian artist should have represented this monster in an engraving, and that Wenzel should have copied it and spread it further? The Middle Ages were monster-producing and monster-loving times, and Dürer and other artists were only too glad to depict monsters or abortions, since they doubtless found a ready sale for their productions. The Tiber, the city of Rome, and the date all now become intelligible. There is nothing that in the least suggests an anti-papal tendency in the engraving, and it was in all probability not till the time of Luther that an engraving, which probably originated in Rome itself, was interpreted for party purposes as the "Pope-donkey." As if to confirm this view, if it needed confirmation, a very accurate representation of the "Pope-donkey," in marble relief, has recently been found on one of the pedestals of the north door of Como Cathedral. This door was constructed by the Brothers Rodari in the last years of the fifteenth century. It is impossible to think that an anti-papal satire would have been placed on one of the important cathedrals of Italy under the very nose of a rigidly orthodox bishop and chapter. With the discovery of this relief the whole card-house of Thausing falls to the ground, as well as the rich series of annexes due to Keller and other partizan historians. The monster in early days was not anti-papal in character. What really was discovered in the Tiber, it may be impossible now to suggest; the find may have been distorted in innumerable ways before it came into the Venetian Chronicle, or the Italian cut or drawing into Wenzel's hands. If I were to venture a suggestion it would be in the direction of a comic classical antique—which is slightly suggested by the "old man's face" on the hind quarters. This is only a suggestion, but receives, perhaps, a slight confirmation from the figures from classical mythology, fauns and satyrs, centaurs and flute-blowers, &c., which appear also on the Como Porta della Rana.

Such are the facts; what we owe to Herr Lange are the discoveries at Como and in the contemporary Venetian Chronicle (we had previously only a report in a chronicle of 100 years later date). For these we are only too grateful. They suffice to demolish the card-house of the Lutheran historians, which we had several years ago declared unstable. Herr Lange is not content with this. He gives the following evolution of Luther's "Pope-donkey"—for not one single stage of which is there any more direct evidence than we have given in the statement of the facts above.

1. The monster found in the Tiber in 1496 received in 1497 or 1498 an anti-papal significance. Accompanied by the inscription "Roma caput mundi," and the papal buildings, it was affixed as a Pasquinade (the only picture Pasquinade preserved to us!) to the statue of Pasquino as a protest against the brutality of Alexander Borgia.

2. In 1491-7 the church in Moravia was in a state of disruption, and this was especially the case at Olmütz; Wenzel (who for aught we know was only born and did not pass his life there!) sympathised with this anti-Catholic movement (although we find him chiefly occupied in engravings of Madonnas, Saints, Scenes from the Passion, and ecclesiastical goblets and ornaments!) and did not hesitate to put his monogram on an anti-papal cut.

3. The original was brought to him by two Bohemian Brothers, who visited secretly certain Waldensians at Rome in the year 1498 (although we have no knowledge whether they ever heard of the Pope-donkey or Wenzel ever heard of them!).

"Sie brachten das Blatt mit nach Böhmen und Mähren. Sie liessen es in den Kreisen der Brüder kursieren, kopieren kommentieren. So kam es in die Hände des Wenzel von Olmütz."

In a few years, we suppose, another learned German will write a monograph of another hundred pages to demolish Herr Lange's card-house, and will probably build up a taller one of his own. Herr Lange remarks that no engraving at the time of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries is so closely related to the historical events of the age. I believe that scarcely any engraving has afforded, or is likely to afford, such an interesting study of the manner in which historical card-houses are run up by partizan writers as Luther's "Pope-donkey."

KARL PEARSON.

NEW NOVELS.

So Near Akin. In 3 vols. By M. A. Bengough. (Bentley.)

Jardyne's Wife. In 3 vols. By C. J. Wills. (Trischler.)

Gallegher, and other Stories. By Richard Harding Davis. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Captain Blake. By Captain Charles King. (Lippincott.)

Retribution: A Corsican Vendetta. By Philippe Tonnelli. (Dean.)

A Village Priest. From the Russian of Potapenko. By W. Gaussen. (Fisher Unwin.)

Brooke Finchley's Daughter. By Mary Albert. (Chatto & Windus.)

Extenuating Circumstances. By F. C. Philips. (White.)

THERE is much that is fresh and vigorous in So Near Akin; and if the novel be a first venture, as it presumably is, the author may be expected to do better still. The book suffers from its length. True, Mr. (or is it Miss?) Bengough has not made the padding obtrusive; on the contrary, there is a free play of life, a continuity of movement, and a maintenance of interest from first to last such as might well redeem the wandering attention even of a wearied novel-reader. But it is difficult not to believe that, if the author had not had to write up to the three-volume limit, he would have produced a still more vivid, more amusing and interesting—in a word, a better book. The plot is not in itself a strong one, but the incidents are naturally evolved; and, above all, there is no effort at consistency with real or supposed conventions in the gathering of clues and the final disposal of the persons concerned. But even with a slighter plot the story would find many appreciative readers on account of its humour, which is of an attractive kind. The author's familiarity with "the respectabilities of life at Clapham" is evidently based upon experience: certainly the Paton and Stephens households are depicted with insight as well as skill. The busy, motherly, inconsequent Mrs. Stephens, the insipid

Mrs. Paton, and the painfully upright and respectable Captain Paton, are all familiar figures in fiction, though here touched to life anew, and not merely copied with more or less ability. On the other hand, though the Prig—whether the Prig kindly, the Prig tiresome, the Prig altogether objectionable, or the Prig simply amusing—is as recognised a "property" as the ultra-respectable and ultra-evangelical Captain Paton, he is capable of more variations; and in Henry, afterwards Sir Henry Stephens, the author has given us a new and almost welcome Prig. At first he is tiresome; as a boy, indeed, he is even more an impossibility than a bore. Even the tutor of Sandford and Merton, when the great Mr. Barlow was himself a small boy, would hardly have replied to a smaller girl who had remarked on Frederick T. being a strange name for the hero of a bad-boy story—

"That is not the whole of his name; that is only the first, or to use the correct word, the initial letter. It would grieve his poor parents, you see, dear Anne, to have their names promulgated in a public magazine, though being good and magnanimous persons, they would not withhold a narrative so likely to conduce to edification."

But after a time Henry Stephens becomes an entertaining Prig, and, therefore, much can be forgiven him. As Sir Henry he is sometimes a man as well; and in the end, as Prigs go, he becomes almost a desirable acquaintance. But the chief personage in the story is the beautiful, impulsive, irresponsible, flighty, and yet honest and charming Anne Paton, who wins the reader's sympathies from the outset by her childish unconventionalities, and her daring exploit in running away to join an almost unknown and vaguely located "Uncle Will." Anne goes through many experiences quite foreign to the routine of young ladies belonging to respectable families at Clapham or elsewhere; and in the web of her life there are strands of sorrow as well as of happiness. The least convincing chapters of the book are the "Bohemian" parts; and though mercifully the Stage is not forced often or much upon the reader's attention, the story is not strengthened by its introduction.

Both in the web and in the weaving there is a striking and unwelcome contrast between So Near Akin and the next book on my list. Mr. C. J. Wills is a writer of some experience; yet there is so much of the amateur in the manner and matter of Jardyne's Wife that, had it been published anonymously, or without indication that the author had written other books, a critic might well have been excused for taking it to be the first work of an inexperienced and too ambitious youth. Mr. C. J. Wills, however, has written several books both "off his own pen" and in collaboration with Mr. F. C. Philips; so that the present result is the more surprising. However, all Jardyne's Wife is not in one strain. The third volume in particular contains some brightly written and entertaining matter; and though in the most original episode there is often more farce than comedy, yet few readers will fail to be amused by the strange married adventures of Mr. "Pottinger the dreadful" and Sapphira Bagge. The book is much too long. The padding here is as obtrusive as in So Near Akin it is inconspicuous. Unlike the author of the latter book, Mr. C. J. Wills has not been able to resist the stale expedient of a long murder-trial, though, it may be allowed, it proves less wearisome than might be expected. Those persons who were profoundly interested in the famous Mrs. Maybrick case will no doubt find Jarvis's Wife an entrancing complement to that tragedy. The novel would unquestionably have been regarded as a fictitious setting of the central facts of that case but for the author's prefatory disclaimer. There is quite enough in the book to make a good short story; it has been ruined by Mr. Wills' having realised that he had to produce a novel of a certain length, and therefore to spread himself out—to use an expressive Americanism—to that end.

It is a pleasure to turn to so crisply-written and so fresh and entertaining stories as those comprised in Mr. Richard Harding Davis's little book. There is not one of the ten (unless "The Cynical Miss Catherwaight" be excepted) that is not worth a dozen ordinary three-volume novels. Mr. Davis is one of the youngest recruits to the army of Transatlantic novelists, and, certainly, one of the most promising. It is a pity that he is claimed by injudicious admirers as "the American Kipling." His work, it is true, has in its freshness and vigour a certain fundamental kinship with that of Mr. Rudyard Kipling; and there is, obviously, the rock-ahead of more or less conscious imitation. But in Gallegher, and other Stories Mr. Davis is himself and nobody else; and he has only to write like himself in order to succeed. "Gallegher," I know, has been much admired. It is a capital story; but in the opinion of the present critic it is equalled, if not surpassed, by at least one other tale in this volume of what the publishers call their "Red Letter Stories" series. It is certainly the best of its kind, good as are "My Disreputable Friend Mr. Raegen," and "The Trailer for Room No. 8." But where Mr. Davis shows that he is something more than a fresh and spirited teller of low-life tales is in his quiet, simple, but powerful little study entitled "The Other Woman." This seems to me his most promising achievement, and one of the best short stories of its kind that has appeared of late. In succinctness and simply produced effect "A Walk up the Avenue" suggests the method and manner of Guy de Maupassant; and that this suggestion in no way detracts from Mr. Davis's originality is what so good a writer of short stories must feel to be the best compliment that could be paid to him. Again, the tender pathos of "There were ninety and nine," is beyond, or, at any rate, distinct from, anything of the same nature in Mr. Kipling's delightful tales. There is but one indifferent story in this collection. "The Cynical Miss Catherwaight" has a meretricious twang, after the sterling ring of "The Other Woman," "A Walk Up the Avenue," and "Gallegher" itself.

Captain Charles King is another popular

American novelist, though, of course, he is not a new comer in the sense that Mr. Richard Harding Davis is. Captain King is to the youthful generation in the United States what Grant was to that generation in England which is now watching the rise of a younger. He is, par excellence, the military novelist of the States. He has not the immense hold, nor is his talent sufficiently varied and elastic to enable him to gain the hold, which Fenimore Cooper obtained; nor has he the literary distinction and peculiar charm of Winthrop. But he is the most vigorous and perhaps the most stirring of military romancists in America. No doubt, though it is not his best story, Captain Blake will prove as successful here as it has already done in America, for it is compact of love or intrigue, besides much fighting in Texas, Mexico, and along the frontiers of the Indian "reserves."

It is somewhat puzzling to take up Retribution: A Corsican Vendetta Story, and to find that the book is not a continuous romance, but a collection of six short stories, none of which is called "Retribution." Have the wrong covers been put upon this series of tales, or was the title given to the book as an afterthought? Possibly the name is taken from the subject of the first story, "The Maiden of the Makis" (? from the Italian macchia, dense undergrowth, literally an aggregation of thickets), as the forest-slopes of Corsica are called. In any case this is much the best of the six tales. Those who have been to Corsica will recognise the truth of the local colouring and of the delineation of the peasants, at once so courteous and pleasant, and so apt to give way to sudden frenzies of emotion. The practice of la vendetta is, fortunately, dying out; but Corsica is still to a great extent a virgin land, either for the adventurous tourist or for the novelist who would enter into rivalry with M. Phillippe Tonnelli.

It cannot be said that the Russian novelists, who have had such a vogue in Western Europe, have uniformly or even frequently appeared to advantage in their English dress. Gogol and Lermontoff have suffered with Dostoevsky and Tolstoi, and Tourguenief more than any. It is no small matter, therefore, that the translation of Potapenko's sympathetic study of clerical and peasant life in Southern Russia should have been undertaken by an able writer and scholar. It is not to be expected that A Village Priest can have the same popularity in this country as in Russia; for apart from its strangeness of setting, it is too closely a "study" to suit a taste so foreign to the Russian as that of the reading public in England. But it is a book that deserves to be read and considered. In Russia it is likely to prove of vital service in helping to bring about the much-needed reform in the ecclesiastic régime which has been so long foreseen and attempted but has not yet been achieved. The character of Cyril, the village priest, is a fine one. But it will be through men of more dominant if more worldly natures that the reform will be inaugurated. M. N. Potapenko, we learn from M. Milyoukov's recent article on contemporary Russian literature, is one of the most powerful of the younger novelists of his country. The preface to this new volume of the "Pseudonym Library," short as it is, affords an interesting outlook upon a deep movement in Russia, the rumour of which has reached us in divers confused echoes.

Brooke Finchley's Daughter has, I fancy, already appeared in three-volume form. It has a good plot, and some excellent characterisation. The plot turns upon the disappearance of Brooke Finchley, and his subsequent return as a kind of Enoch Arden. The ingenuity, as well as the continuous interest of the story, will doubtless commend the book to many persons.

Readers who appreciate Mr. F. C. Philips's style will find sufficient entertainment in Extenuating Circumstances, which, without having anything original or particularly clever about it, has at least the "go" which, whatever else he may lack, is characteristic of the story-telling faculty of the author of As in a Looking-Glass.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME VOLUMES OF SERMONS.

Order and Growth. By the Rev. J. Llewelyn Davies. (Macmillans.) A course of sermons exhibiting no marks of hasty composition or crude thought is not easily produced by the modern divine. He is expected to pronounce on a great many subjects alike only in their intricacy and difficulty, and he is given no time to mature his views. Sermons are almost necessarily imperfect echoes of the opinions of some popular teacher or party. The preacher's emotional eloquence has no rational connexion with ideas he has vaguely comprehended, and is useful not because it directs, but only because it stimulates, the mental activity of worshippers. Mr. Llewelyn Davies's Hulsean Lectures are notable as in themselves constituting a protest against the current style of preaching. The writer has adequately pondered his subject in all its bearings, and has taken care that the mellowness and grace of his style reflect the maturity of his thought. Moreover, Mr. Davies is independent; he does not preach party pamphlets, but the truth as it appears to him after impartial and thorough investigation. It is possible that young readers may find Mr. Davies sometimes too judicious, and almost austere in his refusal to let his subject run away with him; but it is especially the young reader who will profit by Mr. Davies's scholarly restraint. Older men will rejoice in a guide who does not care to convince them against their will, and is fond of grappling with the difficulties of his subject. The lectures are five in number. Mr. Davies himself points to the second on the Church and the fourth on Justice as the most important. Current views concerning "the Catholic Church" are so full of inconsistencies that Mr. Davies's careful analysis cannot fail to be useful even to those who dissent from his conclusions. He insists that a distinction must be made between an ideal and an imaginary body.

"If a non-Christian had assumed that this Jew's idea of a Church was nothing but a creature of his imagination, St. Paul would have taken the assumption as a matter of course; but he would have been impatient if a fellow-Christian had regarded the idea of Christ's body as anything but most real."

Nothing but intolerance results from the claim each body of Christians sets up that it alone is the Catholic Church. If all could receive Mr. Davies's saying that visible societies of Christians "are far from being ideally perfect in knowledge or in life, but are struggling forward, and all doing something to make the one Catholic Church an outward existence in the world," it might be possible for peace to prevail between Christian sects. In the discourse on Justice, Mr. Herbert Spencer's theory that "self-sacrifice comes of the force of habit" is examined, and objected to as "purely naturalistic, with no title to be called ethical." These two lectures are the most important of the series, but they are perhaps not so interesting as the last on Progress. Mr. Davies contends that suffering is not the worst evil. Modern visions of an earthly paradise in which there shall be "no more responsibility, no more struggling," are criticised with more warmth and display of personal feeling than the author usually allows himself. The eloquence of the lecture is of a very high order. "Pain . . . has of itself a certain power to disencumber the mind of nonsense, to give keenness to the vision, and energy and pathos to expression." Words like these coming from an old man who has taken a full share of the world's work are singularly impressive.

The Teaching of Christ. By the Right Rev. J. Moorhouse, Bishop of Manchester. (Macmillans.) The first two of these five discourses will be found by the general public most important and interesting. Bishop Moorhouse, preaching on the secret and results of Christ's teaching, has felt compelled, in view of recent controversies, to begin his subject with a consideration of "the conditions" under which that teaching was conveyed. His first discourse, therefore, is on "the nature and limits of inspiration," the second on "the limitations of our Lord's knowledge." In the first he deals with the fact that "we find in the earliest part of the book of Genesis traditions which are substantially identical with those of Chaldaea"; and he decides that "the inference is irresistible that Abraham, taking the traditional accounts of the distant past from the literature of the country where he dwelt, so modified them as to make them affirm what the Holy Spirit had taught him respecting the nature of God and man's relation to God."

The Bishop goes on to insist upon the "utter absence" in the historical portions of the Old Testament of "our scrupulous modern regard to dates and claims of authorship," and points out that the Hebrew historians claim "the usual critical licence" of a secular historian, "only with less skill and less independence." And all this leads up to the emphatic conclusion that, as a matter of fact,

"inspiration guarantees, not the special human authorship of a passage, or the unimpaired preservation of a formal institution, but the divine origin and increasing spirituality of the religious truth which these are made to symbolise or express."

The second discourse is as uncompromising and vigorous as the first. "To affirm that divine modes of thought belong to the humanity of Christ . . . is to be either illogical or heretical." Had Christ, in answer to a definite question, stated that Hosea or Jonah wrote a certain passage, Bishop Moorhouse would have believed Him; but judging from the ordinary method of His teaching, the Bishop holds that "He would have said, in reply to a question about the age or author of a passage in the Old Testament, 'Who commissioned Me to resolve difficulties in historical criticism?'" In a passage of unusual solemnity and earnestness, Bishop Moorhouse affirms his undoubting belief that Jesus was what He called Himself, the Divine Son of God; and he does not deny the possibility of miraculous communication of knowledge of science or criticism to Christ, but "the reality of our Lord's human limitation as in knowledge as in moral energy" he holds to be an essential part of the Christian creed. The strong common-sense and earnest regard for truth, obvious on every page of these discourses, make them very impressive. We have no space left for detailed comment on the three remaining sermons, which insist upon the originality and uniqueness of the mind and power and person of Jesus; but the reader will find in them a wide and scholarly knowledge of recent historical criticism, and an honest sincerity which shirks no difficulties and imparts to the Bishop's style a manly strength, recalling the sermons of Dr. Arnold.

Old Truths in Modern Lights. By the Rev. T. G. Bonney. (Percival.) There are few clergymen whose scientific attainments are so extensive as Prof. Bonney's, and of those few some have no gift as preachers, and others make no serious effort to reconcile their two spheres of mental activity. The sermons of an earnest divine and enthusiastic student of science, who is convinced that his science and theology are friends and not foes, will always display special characteristics. We notice these at once in Prof. Bonney's discourses. The most obvious is a fondness for the use of scientific facts and laws to illustrate theological arguments. These are of course often fanciful; the preacher forgets that suggestive analogies are not logical proofs, and he allegorises his scientific treatises much as the Fathers allegorised their Old Testament. Prof. Bonney, however, is aware that his method can be abused, and employs it discreetly. A second more valuable and fundamental characteristic of Prof. Bonney's style is its sustained alertness of thought, and consequent absence of mere emotional comment. The appeal is continually to the reason of the hearer; and the preacher is content to stop when he has made himself clear. As a scientific student he knows that irrelevant reasons and false reasons, accumulated round the reason, merely hinder its comprehension. The volume before us consists of eight Boyle Lectures on "The Present Conflict of Science and Theology," followed by twelve miscellaneous discourses. The Boyle Lectures bear marks of hasty composition, but the subject has evidently been a familiar one to the preacher. The two sermons on the Inspiration of Scripture, the two on the Growth of Jesus, and the sermons on the Demoniacs of Gadara and the Miracles of Apostolic and Mediaeval Times, are interesting and valuable contributions towards the settling of some recent controversies. Prof. Bonney expresses great sympathy with those parts of Lux Mundi which have been most attacked, and declares that the book "marks an important epoch in the history of religious thought in the present century." We have space for only one comment upon only one argument which Prof. Bonney uses in the fourth Boyle Lecture. He contrasts the monotheism of Abraham with the polytheism of his kinsfolk, and argues that "the appearance of a monotheist at that epoch of a world's history is an event as improbable as the discovery of the remains of man in a deposit of miocene age." Remembering, perhaps, that there are critics who question the monotheism of Abraham, Prof. Bonney goes on: "not one of the men who gave the great impulses to Jewish thought can be called a normal product of his age, if we depend solely upon evolutionary processes." This is of course an argument for the uniqueness of God's revelation of Himself to the Jews, and like all such arguments it merely weakens the argument for God's existence. God is logically as necessary to the "evolutionary processes" as to the abnormal Jewish prophet; moreover, if Dr. Bonney's argument is to be taken seriously, he must establish the general moral and intellectual backwardness of the Jews, in order to make it clear that to God must be ascribed everything they teach us. But the argument is both ethically and logically false. It is specially opposed to the teaching of Christ. His Heavenly Father is not a comet appearing suddenly at intervals in man's heaven, but a star constantly shining and diffusing all the light that man gets.

Some Aspects of Sin. By the late Aubrey L. Moore. (Percival.) These sermons, "found among the deceased writer's papers" increase our sense of the loss sustained by his premature death. They consist of three short courses, preached respectively in 1882, 1886 and 1889. The editor has rightly named the collection from the second series, in which more method and thoroughness are aimed at than in the other two. The first series was preached in the chapel of Keble College, the second and third in cathedrals. In the first series, therefore, we have the author more at his ease than in the later sermons; the style is more familiar and personal; there is less effort of thought and more display of emotion. In the first series we are most conscious of the fascination of a frank emotional personality: kindly, and candid, and intensely in earnest, but not always clear-headed or judicious, and never vigorously logical. The sermon on "Steadfastness in Faith," for instance, is strongly felt and persuasively stated, but it does not go to the root of the matter. When we find our author quoting from the Apologia against mistiness, we feel at once that he has not grasped all the aspects of his subject. Again, when he tells us that "truth must be intolerant of error," and cheerfully assumes that a conscientious seeker after truth can seriously err, we wonder if he quite realises how his words will affect some of his readers. It is a pity, moreover, that Mr. Moore cannot be just to Calvin or Luther. This antipathy is so irrational that he seems scarcely able to distinguish between them. The five sermons on "Some aspects of Sin," and the three on "the Disciples and their Lord," are not without some of the blemishes we have noted in the first series; but more time and thought have been given to them, and their eloquence is more deliberate and sustained. They are devotional in intention, and so far succeed in realising their aim that the reader is willing to refrain from criticism. The sermon on Judas seems to us especially striking; we are not acquainted with any analysis of the traitor's motives and character which can claim to be more reasonable.

Sermons to Boys. By the Rev. T. F. Bramston. (Sonnenschein.) We can easily account for the fact that, among the volumes of sermons continually issuing from the press, those preached in the chapels of schools and colleges are conspicuous for thoughtfulness and scholarly finish. Perhaps it is equally easy to explain why these volumes are all open to the charge that they appeal only to the sixth form, and make no effort to gain the ear of younger lads. Sermons which seriously attempt the task of interesting and instructing children are as a rule the work of parish priests, or of laymen engaged in philanthropic work among young people; and very few of them are even tolerably successful. It is perhaps because Mr. Bramston has entitled his volume "sermons for boys," that we have expected from him something suited to lower forms; but our expectations have been disappointed. His sermons are unusually good: considered as sermons preached to thoughtful lads of sixteen or seventeen they could scarcely be better. Among the twenty sermons in the volume we have not found one that is weak or careless. The sermons on the Safety of Quiet and on Mystery are examples of very different subjects treated with equal success. The discourse on "Waiting and Working," confessedly suggested by Bishop Westcott, is an excellent instance of restatement of another man's thoughts so judicious as to be almost original. "Old Boys" will specially appreciate Mr. Bramston's volume. Its simplicity is never trivial; the preacher realises that to be scholarly and logical is the best way of being clear. But we must end as we began, by regretting that Mr. Bramston shirks the special difficulty of preachers in his position: he does not preach to the lower forms. It is the excellence of what he has given us that prompts us to call upon him for further effort.

Sermons Preached in Clifton College Chapel. By the Rev. J. M. Wilson. Second Series. (Macmillans.) Mr. Wilson, like Mr. Bramston, preaches only to the sixth form, and the style of his sermons renders it improbable that he would succeed in appealing to younger minds. His sermons deal with the more serious social and moral subjects which are coming before the mind of the boy about to leave school, and attempt to instil into him manly and logical ideas concerning them. "Criticism and the Synoptic Gospels" prepares an intelligent lad for the tremendous subject of the composition of the Gospels, and lets him know the subject exists. "The Strikes" gently calls attention to social inequalities, and condemns with earnest emphasis the snobbish contempt for the poorer classes which too often the schoolboy thinks it his duty to cherish. "Mrs. Booth and the Salvation Army" is a warm tribute of respect to the Mother of the Army, accompanied by a generous and tolerant criticism of its methods and achievements. It is not easy to overestimate the influence for good which such sermons as these must exercise on those who hear them. It is not because they are well written and carefully put together that they impress; but because they are so obviously genuine—the strongly felt convictions of the preacher, stated to his hearers for the purpose of guiding and guarding them in their journey through life. Mr. Wilson prints thirty sermons, and in each one he says something to the purpose. The sermons are short, but terse and solid. That they are a schoolmaster's discourses to his boys is indicated by an authoritative tone about them, as of a general issuing orders, very refreshing and stimulating.

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. EWALD FLÜGEL is preparing for early publication at the Clarendon Press the Life and Correspondence of Sir Philip Sidney. He will be greatly obliged if any librarians or private collectors who are in possession of unedited letters of Sidney will communicate with him, and, if possible, furnish him with transcripts. His address is Sidonienstrasse 39, Leipzig.

DR. R. M. BUCKE, the biographer of Walt Whitman, is at present in England, making arrangements for the publication of Whitman's last work, Good Bye, my Fancy. It will be issued in this country by Messrs. Reeves & Turner, of Fleet-street, the publishers of William Morris and James Thomson. Concerning this volume Walt Whitman himself writes, comparing it with Leaves of Grass:

"The clef is here changed to its lowest, and the little book is a lot of tremolos about old age, death, and faith. The physical just lingers, but almost vanishes. The book is garrulous, irascible (like old Lear), and has various breaks and even tricks to avoid monotony. It will have to be ciphered and ciphered out long—and is probably in some respects the most curious part of its author's baffling works."

We may add that an almost verbatim report of the proceedings that took place at Walt Whitman's house on May 31, on the occasion of his keeping his seventy-second birthday, is printed in the August number of Lippincott's. Letters were read from Tennyson, J. R. Lowell, J. A. Symonds, Edward Dowden, Roden Noel, Buxton Forman, &c.

THE letters written by Dickens to Wilkie Collins during the years of their intimate companionship are to be published in Harper's Monthly. They have been edited by Georgina Hogarth (with further comment by Laurence Hutton), and will be given in three instalments, the first of which will appear in the September magazine. They represent Dickens in the most active and successful period of his literary career (1851-69).

MESSRS. KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & Co. are about to publish, by subscription, a new edition of The Blazon of Episcopacy, by the Rev. W. K. Riland Bedford, which originally appeared in 1858. The book having become scarce, and a continuation to the present day having been frequently asked for, the author proposes to reissue it in an amended and more complete form, with numerous corrections and additions in substance, the result of his study of the subject during the last thirty years, and, moreover, comprising Scottish and Irish episcopacy. The work will contain: (1) An introduction, mentioning the authorities on which the Blazon is based. (2) A short description of the arms of the sees, with outline cuts of the shields, the number of which will be about seventy-four. (3) An alphabetical list of bishops, and outline cuts of arms, to the number of about one thousand. The cuts will be executed in such a manner, and on paper of such a quality, as will allow of each copy being hereafter coloured by hand. (4) An ordinary of the arms contained in part 3.

MR. FISHER UNWIN is projecting a series of small books for young readers, to be called the Children's Library. The first volume, The Brown Owl, by Mr. Ford H. Hueffer, a son of the late Dr. Hueffer, will be illustrated by the author's grandfather, Mr. Ford Maddox Brown.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON will issue, very shortly, vols. ii. and iii. of Mr. Alfred H. Miles's Poets and Poetry of the Century. Mr. Austin Dobson writes on Praed; the Hon. Roden Noel on Byron; Dr. Garnett on Hood; Dr. Japp on Sir Henry Taylor; Mr. Buxton Forman on R. Hengist Horne; Mr. Ashcroft Noble on Robert Hawker; and Mr. Mackenzie Bell on Sir Aubrey de Vere and Charles Whitehead. The editor is himself responsible for several of the more important articles.

MESSRS. GRIFFITH, FARRAN & Co. will publish in October a new three-volume novel by Florence Marryat, entitled A Fatal Silence; and they have also in preparation a one-volume novel, by Messrs. Christie Murray and H. Herman, entitled Only a Shadow.

A VOLUME of Daily Readings, entitled At Odd Minutes, by Miss S. M. A. Hornby, with an introduction by the Bishop of Argyll, will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock very shortly.

MESSRS. TRISCHLER & Co. announce a new series of illustrated historical books, to be called "England's Royal Children Series." Its object is to attract children to the study of history by means of stories about children of royal blood, which shall be both interesting and also true. The illustrations are reproduced from authentic documents in the British Museum, &c. The first volume of the series will be The Little Princess in the Tower, written by C. Lysah, and illustrated by M. Smargiassi Santantico.

MESSRS. WILLIAM ANDREWS & Co., of Hull, will publish in a few days a volume entitled Yorkshire Family Romance, by Mr. Frederick Ross.

Illustrations, still under the editorship of Mr. Francis George Heath, will commence an entirely new series at sixpence on August 15, and continue thereafter as a mid-monthly.

THURSDAY, August 6, was the eighty-second birthday of the poet laureate, who is reported to be in good health. He is now staying with his family at Aldworth, Haslemere; but the event was celebrated at Freshwater by a concert, at which some of his lyrics were sung to the music composed by Lady Tennyson.

IN addition to the unveiling of the monument of Wilhelm Müller, the poet, at Dessau, on September 30—of which mention has already been made in the ACADEMY—two other literary centenaries will be celebrated next month in Germany: that of Franz Bopp, the founder of comparative philology, at Mainz, his birth-place, on September 14; and that of Theodor Körner, the soldier-poet, on September 21.

THE last number of the Pauline gives some details about the scheme for recording on marble panels in the corridors of the school the names of eminent scholars. In view of recent allegations as to the class for whose benefit Dean Colet originally intended his endowment, it is pointed out that under John Lily, the first high master, are to be found the names of Lord Paget of Beaudesert, Lord North, and Sir Anthony Denny, all of whom were among the executors of the will of Henry VIII. Another item proves that natural history can be pursued even by London boys. Among the collections exhibited in competition for the Smee prizes were the eggs of nearly one hundred British birds, brought together from such remote quarters as the Faroe Islands and Wolmer Forest; and cases of beetles which included forty-eight different species stated to have been found in the grounds of the school.

THE current number of the Göttingen Gelernte Anzeigen contains a review by Prof. de Lagarde, which will interest readers of Mr. Bemm's review of French works on Biblical criticism in the last number of the ACADEMY. In it the learned professor reviews the old, but of late somewhat forgotten, view of the composite origin of Daniel, and proposes a startlingly late date for the seventh and eighth chapters; he, of course, rejects the extravagant radicalism of MM. Havet and Vernes. By the way, it is worth noting that M. Gustave d'Eichthal, whom our reviewer treats with such scant ceremony, was a good and worthy idealist, who loved Greek well and Saint Simonianism almost better.

WE are informed on the best authority that the article in the current number of the Edinburgh Review on "The Revival of Quakerism," which is exciting such general interest both among the Friends and the general public, was not written by the member of Parliament nor by the other review writer to whom it has been attributed.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

ON the occasion of the visit of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography to Cambridge, the honorary degree of LL.D. will be conferred upon the following: Dr. Paul Brouardel, of Paris; Dr. C. T. von Iramas-Sternegg, of Vienna; Dr. F. von Esmarch, of Kiel; Dr. Alfonso Corradi, of Pavia; and Dr. J. von Fodor, of Buda-Pest.

AT the graduation ceremony at Edinburgh, on August 1, at the close of the summer session, the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred in absentia on Prof. Simon Newcomb, of Washington, U.S.

THE ten medical schools of London—St. Bartholomew's, Guy's, St. Thomas's, the London, St. Mary's, Charing Cross, Middlesex, Westminster, and St. George's Hospitals, and the medical school for women in connexion with the Royal Free Hospital—have all agreed to associate themselves with the medical faculties of University and King's Colleges, to form the medical faculty of the proposed new Albert University; but they object to the name suggested. On the other hand, the Royal College of Physicians and the Royal College of Surgeons have both declined the representation offered to them on the council. It is understood that the Privy Council will now report favourably to the Queen on the amended draft charter submitted by University and King's Colleges; but as the draft charter must lie for thirty days on the table of both houses of parliament before coming into effect, all further action is practically stayed until February of next year.

THE Scotch Universities Commission has just issued a draft ordinance for the future regulation of the chair of music at Edinburgh, which is at present vacant through the resignation of Sir Herbert Oakeley. The new professor will receive £420 a year, with fees in addition; and it is proposed to associate three other professors with him, in order to form a faculty of music for the granting of degrees. The sum of £300, now expended every year on the Reid concert, is henceforth to be devoted to subsidising orchestral and educational concerts for the students—following the example of Cambridge under Prof. Villers Stanford. It is estimated that upwards of £1000 a year is now available for the advancement of the study of music at Edinburgh university.

THE programme for the winter session at University Hall, Gordon-square, W.C., includes courses of lectures by Prof. Knight, of St. Andrews, on "Some Aspects of Theism," by Mr. R. G. Moulton on "The Literary Study of the Bible," and by the warden, the Rev. Philip H. Wicksteed, on "Dante," on the "Elements of Political Economy," and on "Old Testament History."

THE University of Utrecht has celebrated, with much pomp and public rejoicing, the conclusion of its fifty-fifth lustrium—in other words, the anniversary of its foundation 255 years ago. In October next, the corner stone of new buildings, to be erected out of local subscriptions, will be laid by the Queen of Holland.

WE quote the following from the New York Nation:

"Amherst College is just completing the thirtieth year of physical culture under the charge of Dr. Edward Hitchcock, who instituted the system of regular exercise as a part of the curriculum in 1861. The classes have thirty minutes' drill in marching and the use of dumb-bells four days in the week; and interest is stimulated not only by an accompaniment of lively music, but also by an annual prize to the class doing the best work, which was won this year by the juniors. Careful records have been kept from the first and they show that regular exercise produces a perceptible improvement in health during the college course, the percentage of sickness among the seniors during the last twenty-five years having been almost one-fourth less than among the freshmen. Another interesting thing brought out by these statistics is the fact that students as a class are more vigorous young men now than a quarter of a century ago. From 1861 to 1865 each student lost an average of 2.18 days during the college year on account of sickness, while from 1885 to 1889 the average was only 1.75 days—one-fifth less. An interesting study has also been made at Amherst of the effects of smoking upon the members of the graduating class. In this class 71 per cent. have increased in their physical measurements and tests during the four years, while 29 per cent. have remained stationary or fallen off. Separating the smokers from the non-smokers, it appears that those who do not use tobacco have gained 24 per cent. in weight more than the smokers, 37 per cent. more in height, and 12 per cent. more in chest-girth, while in lung capacity there is a difference of 8.36 cubic inches in favour of the non-smokers. These figures show the same tendency as those compiled by Dr. J. W. Seaver, the instructor in athletics at Yale, who found that the non-users of tobacco among the seniors show a gain over the users of 20 per cent. in height, 25 per cent. in weight, and 66 per cent. in lung capacity. Dr. Seaver has kept statistics of this sort for eight years, and finds that they show an equally decided advantage for the non-smokers during the whole period. He notes the interesting fact that not only do all the candidates for the crews abstain from tobacco, but that only one man smokes among all the prominent athletes in the different fields of activity."

ORIGINAL VERSE.

TO LORD TENNYSON.

(On his Eighty-second Birthday.)

THE laurel wreath upon thy brow
Fades not; but fresh and fragrant still,
As erst in summer, blossoms now
Upon the snow-crowned hill.
For seeing none to take the lyre
When thou art gone, the God of Song
With Fate doth lovingly conspire
Thy music to prolong.

JOHN B. TABB.

St. Charles College, Ellicott City, Maryland, U.S.A.

OBITUARY.

RAJENDRA LALA MITRA, LL.D., C.I.E.

By the death of Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra, which took place at Calcutta last week, India has lost one of her few native scholars who, both by sound principles of research and by command over the English language, could rank with the Orientalists of Europe. His career is also specially interesting, because he did not belong to the Brahmam caste (with whom a knowledge of Sanskrit is hereditary), nor did he ever enjoy the advantages either of a university education or of a professorship. Like the English pioneers of Orientalism—Jones and Colebrooke and Prinsep—he may be called an amateur, in the best sense of that word.

Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra was born at Surah, a suburb of Calcutta, in February, 1824, so that he had completed his sixty-seventh year. The clan of the Kayasth caste to which he belonged trace their descent through twenty-four generations to an ancestor who came from Upper India in the reign of Adisur, King of Bengal, in the tenth century A.D. With other Kayasth clans—such as the Ghoses, the Dutts, the Sens, and the Palits—they have always held a high position in Bengali society, and in recent years have furnished a large proportion of civil servants, judges, and barristers. At the time of his birth, his family had lost the great wealth which they had acquired in the previous century in the service of the Nawabs of Murshidabad, and even (it is said) in that of the Mughal Emperor; but they were noted for their devotion to Sanskrit and Persian literature, and for the possession of a fine library. The boy was thus brought up in a cultivated household, being educated only at native schools. For some time he attended the Medical College, and afterwards studied law; and we have heard that Mr. Charles Hay Cameron, the legal member of council who succeeded Macaulay, directed his private studies. Legends are told about the reasons which made him abandon both medicine and law. He does not seem to have tried to enter government service. At last, in 1846, the future bent of his studies was fixed by his being appointed to the librarianship of the Asiatic Society, which had just previously been vacated by the learned Hungarian, Csoma de Körös. With the Asiatic Society he remained closely connected until his death, for some time as philological secretary, as vice-president for twenty years, and finally as president in 1885, being the only native of India who has ever attained that distinction. It was, therefore, natural that when, in 1884, the mother of all orientalist societies celebrated its centenary, Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra should have been chosen to write its history. Apart from the works he published, there are few other facts in his life worth recording. In 1856 he was appointed Director of Government Wards in Calcutta, which office he held for more than twenty years. Latterly, he was elected on more than one occasion a member of the Calcutta municipality, and he was ever ready to take a part in public proceedings on the Liberal side. On the occasion of the Queen's being proclaimed Empress of India, he received the title of Rai Bahadur; and when the order of the Indian Empire was founded in 1878, he was appointed one of the first Commanders, along with the present Sir William Hunter. The University of Calcutta made him one of its fellows, and conferred upon him the rarer distinction of an honorary degree. He was also an honorary member of our own Royal Asiatic Society, and of a long series of learned bodies on the continent. We believe that he never attended any of the meetings of the International Congress of Orientalists.

Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra's contributions to the Journal and Proceedings of the Bengal Asiatic Society cover five columns in the Catalogue, being equalled in number only by those of Mr. Brian Houghton Hodgson, who left India before he began to write, and has survived him. Apart from these, he published Catalogues of the curiosities in the society's museum (1849), of the books and maps in the library (1856), of the Sanskrit MSS. dealing with grammar (1877), and of the Buddhist MSS. from Nepal (1882). He was, moreover, an indefatigable contributor to the texts published by the society under the title of "Bibliotheca Indica." Out of 467 fasciculi in the Sanskrit series his name is prefixed to 83. Among these may be specially mentioned the Aitareya Brahmana of the Rig Veda, with an abstract of the contents in English; the Pratisakhya of the Black Yajur Veda, with its commentary; the Yoga Sutr of Patanjali, with English translation and notes; the Agni and Vayu Puranas; and the Kamandakiya Nitisara, an encyclopaedic work which purports to contain the political maxims of the minister of Chandra Gupta.

But the books by which Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra is best known in this country are three. First, The Antiquities of Orissa (two volumes, large quarto, 1875 and 1880), illustrated with lithographed plates and photographs, containing the results of an archaeological mission on behalf of the Government at the suggestion of the Society of Arts. Here the author traces back both the form of the image of Jagannath, and also the ear festival, to a Buddhistic origin. Second, a similarly illustrated work on Balkh Gaya, the hermitage of Sakya Muni (1878). And third, Indo-Aryans (two volumes, 1881), in which he has collected a number of previously published papers dealing with the ancient and medieval history of India. Among the questions here discussed are human sacrifice, the eating of beef, and the use of intoxicating liquors in Vedic times; and—a subject which the author had made specially his own—the chronology of the early Pala and Sen dynasties of Bengal.

Dr. Rajendra Lala Mitra had not produced much of late years, owing to weak health; but his name will always be remembered as one of the most industrious and single-minded of those Indian students who have been trained to appreciate the accuracy of Western methods of investigation.

J. S. C.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE current number of Mind opens with a thoughtful article on "The Problem of Psychology," by Mr. E. W. Scripture. The article is remarkable for the emphatic way in which the writer insists on the proposition that psychology has to do with mental processes only, and that any reference to the neutral concomitants of these processes is, strictly speaking, a travelling beyond the limits of the science. The relation of psychology to the other sciences, general and special, is defined fully and clearly. In a paper on "The Physical Basis of Pleasure and Pain," Mr. H. R. Marshall contributes an interesting and suggestive study on the well-known theories of the subject, pointing out where they are one-sided, and serve to supplement one another. His own theory is to be given in a later number. In addition to these, there is an article by Mr. W. Caldwell which examines "Schopenhauer's Criticism of Kant," distinguishing wherein this is effective and valuable, and where, owing to the limitation of his own point of view, it is defective; also an interesting contribution to the question of the origin of music, by Mr. R. Wallaschek, in which an ingenious attempt is made to show (as against Darwin, and with some approach to the point of view of Herbert Spencer) that music is distinctively a human product, and that the sense of tune or melody is evolved out of the feeling for rhythm. From a special notice appended to this number, the reader learns that, with the October issue, the present series, which will have run sixteen years, will close, and that in January next a new series, with Mr. J. F. Stout as editor, in place of Prof. Croom Robertson, will be begun. As the new editor and three out of his four co-operators named are Cambridge teachers, it looks as if Mind is henceforth to be in a special manner the production of that university.

THE August number of Temple Bar contains a paper entitled "Wayfaring in the Quercy," by Mr. E. H. Barker, which, alike from the novelty of its subject and the unconventional mode of treatment, is not unworthy of being compared with Mr. Stevenson's classical experiences with a donkey in the Cevennes.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOETTCHER, F. v. Malerkwerke d. 19. Jahrh. 1. Bd. 1. Hülft. Aagaard—Heideck. Dresden: Boettcher. 10 M.
 HALLER, M. Kompositionslehre f. polyphonen Kirchengesang m. besond. Rücksicht auf die Meisterwerke d. 16. Jahrh. Regensburg: Coppenrath. 6 M. 40 Pf.
 SITTL, K. Die Patrizierzeit der griechischen Kunst. Würzburg: Stahel. 2 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

- AUBÈS, A. Traité de métrologie assyrienne. Paris: Bouillon. 6 fr.
 CAT, E. Essai sur la province romaine de Maurétanie césarienne. 7 fr. 50 c. De Caroli V. in Africa rebus gestis. 2 fr. 50 c. Paris: Leroux.
 CUTRU, T. Vendita, cessione e permuta. Naples. 12 fr.
 GEISELER, F. H. Etude sur la commission départementale et législation comparée. Paris: Cotillon. 7 fr. 50 c.
 GRAYSON, E. Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France. T. 4. La féodalité. Paris: Cotillon. 10 fr.
 HILLER v. GABELINGEN, F. Zur arkadischen Königsliste d. Pausanias. Jauer: Guericke. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 KOHLER, J. Altindisches Prozessrecht. Stuttgart: Enke. 3 M.
 MEISSNER, H. Die Herzogin Maria Anna v. Bayern u. der preussische Reichstagsgesandte v. Schwarzenau (1778—1785). Jauer: Guericke. 1 M.
 MEYER, Ch. Geschichte der Prov. Posen. Gotha: Perthes. 6 M.
 PIERLINO. La Russie et l'Orient. Mariage d'un Tzar au Vatican.—Ivan III. et Sophie Paléologue. Paris: Leroux. 2 fr. 50 c.
 REUR, l'abbé. Les gens de lettres et leurs protecteurs à Rome. Paris: Belin. 7 fr.

WEIL, le Commandant. La Cavalerie des armées alliées pendant la campagne de 1814. T. 1. Paris: Baudouin. 8 fr.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BERGER, H. Geschichte der wissenschaftlichen Erkunde der Griechen. 3. Abth. Die Geographie der Erdkugel. Leipzig: Veit. 4 M. 40 Pf.
 SORAFER, P. Atlas der Pflanzenkrankheiten. 5. Folge. Berlin: Parey. 20 M.
 VREJENOVSKY, J. Flora bulgarica. Prag: Rivnac. 20 M.
 ZIMMERMANN, A. Beiträge zur Morphologie u. Physiologie der Pflanzenzelle. 2. Hft. Tübingen: Laupp. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- MATZNER, E. Altenglische Sprachproben. 2. Bd. Wörterbuch. 11. Lfg. Berlin: Weidmann. 8 M.
 PARTZOLT, F. De nonnullis glossomatibus, maxime Galenianis, commentatio. Jauer: Guericke. 80 Pf.
 REYLLIOUT, Eug. Corpus papyrorum Aegypti. Papyrus démotiques du Louvre. 2e Fasc. Paris: Leroux. 25 fr.
 SAALFELD, G. A. De bibulum sacrorum Ulgatae editionis graecitate. Quedlinburg: Vieweg. 7 M. 50 Pf.
 STÜCKEN, alsatische. 1. Hft. Strassburg: Trübner. 2 M.
 VOLKMANN, W. Untersuchungen zu Diogenes Laertius. 1 M. 40 Pf. De encomio Demosthenis inter Luciani scripta perperam relato. 80 Pf. Jauer: Guericke.

CORRESPONDENCE.

WORDSWORTH AND SHAKSPEARE.

1, Winton-road, Dublin: Aug. 3, 1891.

It is to be regretted that Mr. Roden Noel should, in his recent review of Mrs. S. Orr's Life of Browning (ACADEMY, July 18, p. 48), have fallen into the mistake of representing as a serious boast of Wordsworth what was nothing more than a witty invention of Charles Lamb. I refer to the joke as to Shakspeare. Mr. Noel's words are, "When Wordsworth said that he could have written Shakspeare 'if he had a mind to,' the retort of Charles Lamb was obvious."

It may be of interest to point to the foundation of this misrepresentation. It is a passage in a skittish letter from Lamb to his friend Manning, written in February 1808.

"Wordsworth, the great poet, is coming to town: he is to have apartments in the Mansion House. He says he does not see much difficulty in writing like Shakspeare, if he had a mind to try it. It is clear that nothing is wanting but the mind."

An apprehensive reader would see that the latter part of this passage is as little matter of fact as the preceding piece of news that Wordsworth "was to have apartments in the Mansion House."

Among a few reminiscences communicated by me to Canon Wordsworth's Memoirs of his uncle, I put on record that Wordsworth, in ranking the great poets of the world, placed Shakspeare first, adding the epithet "unapproachable"; and his habitual way of referring to Shakspeare in his writings throughout is in full accordance with this judgment. Lamb, it is plain, had observed the absence of enthusiasm in Wordsworth when speaking of other poets, and in his amusing way determined by this caricaturing invention to satirise the defect. It is to be hoped that a blunder as to his intention, which would have pained the maker of the joke, may henceforth cease to be propagated.

R. P. GRAVES.

"PEARL."

London: July 27, 1891.

I regret exceedingly that Dr. Morris seems annoyed at my notes on his review of Pearl. I need hardly say that, had I anticipated this, I should have held my peace; but the interests of a subject that owes its very life to Dr. Morris's unstinted zeal, patience, and knowledge seemed to me to demand a frank discussion of certain points adduced by him in his criticism of my book. I could not, and I cannot, agree with my reviewer; but there should be no cause for annoyance. No one can afford so well as Dr. Morris to make an occasional mistake; and among the younger generation of English students there is, I hope, no one more appreciative of his labours in the past than myself. While I write, I am not unmindful of the fact that, if there is any merit in what I have done, a great part of the credit must of necessity belong to the pioneer of Middle-English studies. I do not yearn for the credit, but I am very eager about the truth; and I fear that Dr. Morris's indignation has prevented him doing justice to a cause he so much at heart.

* Letters, vol. i., p. 247. Canon Ainger's edition.

1. I am not the inventor of the Middle-English idiom "to dare to," but I have, I think, discovered the meaning of a puzzling haparlegomennon, hitherto unexplained. I cited the Old-English ouðrædan, not because I regard "a quotation as more valuable than an argument," but because ouðrædan and to dare (i.e., "to dare for drede") are synonymous. Nor did I jump to the conclusion that Middle-English daren follows the same construction as Old-English ouðrædan: I tried to understand, and to help others to understand, why this word daren, in the sense of "to fear," is followed in this particular passage by a preposition expressing motion to, whereas in Old-English and in Middle-English a verb of "fearing" is usually followed by a preposition expressing motion from. I did all this in deference to Dr. Morris's objection to the Scottish "to dare at" (i.e., "to fear a person"), with which I compared the Middle-English phrase. I distinctly stated that I discarded my Scottish phrase merely "for the nonce," while arguing out the matter with Dr. Morris. My reviewer now turns on me and tries to fight me with my own weapons; "we need not make a guess," he writes, "at the construction of dare; good authority can be produced for the phrase to dare at." Furthermore, I did not quote the passage from Cardinal Newman's "Dream of Gerontius" with reference merely to the use of rescoghe, but as a remarkable parallel to the thought and the very words of the medieval poet. This is not the first time that I have been able to throw light on a misinterpreted passage in Pearl by means of a quotation from modern poetry. But these things are misères compared with the final question at issue.

Dr. Morris says that I have shifted my ground anent the interpretation of the lines under discussion. I have done no such thing; my rendering of the whole passage is naturally terser than my attempt to explain the full significance of each single word. That there may be no doubt about the matter, I beg leave to quote (a) the Middle-English lines, (b) Dr. Morris's rendering, and (c) my own:—

- (a) His franchise is large that ever darde
 To hym that macz in synne rescoghe
 No blysse becz from him reparde.
 (b) God's liberality, which has ever been hid (i.e., has been unsearchable), is large;
 To the man who makes a rescue in sin (i.e., repents);
 No blessing shall be withdrawn from him.
 (c) Large is man's franchise (in heaven), when he hath feared (on earth)
 Him that maketh a rescue in sin (i.e., Christ);
 No bliss shall be denied to him.

The objections to (b) are, I venture to think, insurmountable; unbiassed scholars must decide concerning (c).

2. Dr. Morris objected, in the first instance, to my rendering of "clem" by "claim" because in Middle-English it would be cleime. I quoted a passage in which clem (= claim) rhymes with bapteme. He will not accept the quotation because it is from an East-Midland poem, and the dialect of the Pearl is West-Midland. I beg leave to point out to Dr. Morris that cleme (= "claim") is common in the writings of Barbour; as there are a large number of northern forms in Pearl, he will not, I hope, object to one more instance.

Dr. Morris argues on behalf of clème "to smear." If he could adduce one line in the whole of English literature in which the word is used metaphorically, I would willingly give up my rendering; but in spite of the Sanskrit līmpati I cannot do so at present. The author of Pearl uses this word elsewhere, but merely in its literal sense of "to daub." There is nothing anomalous in the use of "claim" (clème). In another poem the poet tells how the sick and diseased "claimed" grace of Christ; in the passage under discussion the poet states that Christ "claimed" all the sins of men. I am aware of the fact that the usual form of "claim" in the Alliterative Poems is clajme; but it would not be a difficult thing to array a number of instances from Pearl of illustrative "eye rhymes. I dwell on the matter in one of my notes in the ACADEMY of July 11.

Finally, I could point that two important authorities construe clème in this particular passage in the same way as I do: to wit, Dr. Morris himself (Alliterative Poems, 1st ed., p. 137, 2nd ed. p. 135), and Dr. Murray (New English Dictionary, sub voc.).

3. (i.) totz, in Pearl, rhymes with ros, porpos, gotz, thos; wherefore in the same way as gotz=gos, i.e., the 3rd person singular pres. ind. of go, so totz=tos, i.e., the 3rd person sing. pres. ind. of to; it cannot be the 3rd sing. of toteu; its infinitive must be ton.

Dr. Morris argues that A.S. tēon can only give ten in Middle-English, but an A.S. eo often becomes not only e but also o in Middle-English (cp. cnēo lōsan, cēosan, &c., &c.). In the case of ton, it must be remembered that the secondary verb towen (= Icel. toga) may have had some influence on the vowel; but for the fact that the poet spells this secondary verb elsewhere tove, one might have identified the two words. There was probably some confusion between the primary and secondary forms.

(ii.) "For hit was negh at the terme that he to shude."

Dr. Morris refuses to recognise that to in this passage is merely the infinitive under discussion; he argues that it is a preposition meaning "at," and that the verb "to go" is understood. Is it likely that any writer, medieval or modern, would use the preposition to in the sense of "at" in an elliptical sentence expressing motion? The fact of an ellipsis in such a sentence is only explicable on the supposition that the preposition itself expresses motion to a place.

4. "Bytwene myrthez by merz made."

Dr. Morris seems annoyed with me for abandoning my former interpretation, as though I had no right to make a discovery after the publication of my book. According to Dr. Morris, my new interpretation is due to "an ingenious alteration in grammar and order of the words." I cannot see where the alteration in grammar comes in, unless it be the change of myrthez into myrthe. The accidental z in myrthez seems to me to be evidence in favour of my reading, rather than against it; the scribe thought of merz but wrote myrthez. As regards the order of words, if Dr. Morris turns to my notes on stanzas 19, 1 and 45, he will find similar scribal errors due to the mere transposition of two or more words. Finally, my reviewer asks, "Should we not expect to find the Lord of the Garden (of the 'Romaunt of the Rose') a more prominent figure in Pearl deserving of more than a mere passing allusion?" I do not think so. The poet wrote for a cultured audience, and no such fourteenth century audience would have found the least difficulty in the personification. If this were the only reference in the poem to the "Romaunt," it would be different; but the earlier part of Pearl is steeped in ideas derived from "the Bible" of the medieval poets. Who but an enthusiastic reader of the Romaunt would have spoken of Inf-dauugere—to quote an instance from the very first verse of the poem? And what audience would have understood the full significance of the word but one that was familiar with the machinery of the older poem? The only question is this: Was the author of Pearl in this particular passage indebted to Chaucer's version of the poem, or is the parallelism of expression in the two English poems purely accidental? I do not think it can be accidental, and I should be grateful for criticism on this point.

While working at the "Romaunt" in its relation to Pearl, the meaning of ll. 11-12 of stanza 1 has dawned on me, and I am now able, I think, to explain the lines for the first time in a satisfactory manner. Danger in the "Romaunt" is the personification of the arbitrary power that refuses what one longs for; Inf-dauugere in Pearl is "Love's denial or arbitrary will"; but underlying "love's" is the idea of God, so that in reality Inf-dauugere = God's Will, and I suggest that the meaning of the closing lines of stanza 1 is as follows:

"I pine, debarred by God's Will from my own, my spotless pearl."

My only regret is that some reviewer has not earned my gratitude by anticipating this suggestion, or at all events by finding fault with the one passage in the poem about which my conscience has been uneasy for some long time.

5. "It is not a vital point," says Dr. Morris, "whether brede be related to A.S. brēdan or brēdan." In philology every point is vital: and in literature it makes some difference to the reputation of a poet if he writes "crowned me queen to breed in bliss," instead of "to revel in bliss." As I hold that the poet of Pearl wished to convey the latter thought, I am zealous to prove that Dr. Morris's derivation from brēdan is erroneous. It is true that Mätzner is with him, and that the New English Dictionary follows Mätzner; but I find in Mr. Bradley's new edition of "Stratmann," recently issued by the Clarendon Press, confirmation of my opinion. He quotes the passage from Pearl under brēdan and not under brēdan.

I. GOLLANZ.

PHUT AND SABA.

Berlin: July 31, 1891.

In the ACADEMY for July 25, I stated that Pūt must be searched for, together with the Fūt of Hamdāni, in the neighbourhood of Sabyā, in the south-western part of 'Asyīr. I would now add that a town Pudu is also mentioned by Ptolemy (Book V., ch. vi.) exactly at the same place.

Ptolemy mentions a Πουδρου πόλις on the coast of the Red Sea in the latitude of 16° 30'. In my Skizze der Geschichte und Geographie Arabiens (ii. 238), I identified this locality with Jazīn. As in the time of Ptolemy the sea-coast was not the same as in our days, but lay further to the east, Jazīn cannot correspond exactly with Pudu. We must rather search for this town a little eastward, that is, towards the country of Sabyā, not in Sabyā itself, but perhaps between Sabyā and the coast. The geographical position of this place is exactly the same as the Fūt (more correctly Fūtu) of Hamdāni; and, since Pudu or Pudn is not a Semitic form, I have no doubt that Pudu, and not Pudn, is the correct reading.

Further, Ptolemy places a Σαβη in 16° 55', and about one degree east-north-east from Pudu. This Σαβη is evidently identical with Sabyā. Another locality is named by Ptolemy—Αἰλου κόμη. As there is between Sa'da and the Wādī 'Yrdh (the river of Ned-jrān) a Mount Dulū' (sometimes written Dilū') on the pilgrim road from Sa'da towards Mekka, I would read ΔΙΑΟΥ instead of ΑΙΑΟΥ. Ptolemy places this locality east of Pudu. I venture to think that here the Alexandrian geographer is in error, because Dilū' is in reality east of Sabyā. Ptolemy's localities must not be placed absolutely on the sea-coast, but in general rather in or near the Tihāma, because in ancient terminology all places near the coast were called coast-places.

I wish to add that this Σαβη must not be confounded with another Σαβη (Σαβη βασιλείου), which is identical with Sawwā between Ta'izz and Mokhā, and was a metropolis of the Himyars in the time of the author of the Periplus Maris Erythraci (circa 65 A.D.).

Sprenger, in his Althegeographie Arabiens (§ 62), identifies Pudu with Rās Mejarnā near Ghalāfika, and Ailu with Shurame (Schuraym). Sabe is placed by him in the neighbourhood of Zebid. These positions are as erroneous as my own identification of Ailu with Abū 'Arish in Skizze (ii. 238).

EDUARD GLASER.

APPOINTMENTS FOR NEXT WEEK.

MONDAY, Aug. 10, 1 p.m. Botanic: Anniversary Meeting.

SCIENCE.

The Philosophical Basis of Evolution. By James Croll, LL.D., F.R.S. (Stanford.)

In this book Dr. Croll propounds, at some length and with rather wearisome iteration, the doctrine that directing motion and producing motion are two distinct things; that whereas energy is admittedly constant in quantity, it may be altered in direction at will;* and that evolutionists have been apt to overlook the importance of the directing or determining factor in evolution, and to lay exaggerated stress on the omnipotence of matter and energy per se. There certainly has been a tendency to speak as if in matter and energy could be discerned "the promise and the potency of all forms of life," and of all mental and physical events; whereas Dr. Croll holds that matter and energy, alone and unguided, contain little better than impotency, at least as far as the production of an ordered and organic universe is concerned.

The following extracts may serve to give an idea of the doctrine as propounded by Dr. Croll:

First of all he grants the law of causation. "No event happens without a cause." Next he grants the continuity and uniformity of nature: "No breaks or stoppage in the sequence of phenomena." And next ordinary Darwinism, "higher and more complex forms of life gradually arising out of the lower and more simple." All these propositions "researches are tending daily to confirm." But "when we leave established facts and principles, and begin to inquire into the causes of evolution and the nature of those agencies by which the process is brought about, we soon meet with a diversity of opinion. At present most evolutionists regard the process

* This statement is not to be found in Croll, and though I may believe it capable of substantiation and amplification, I only intend it here in a popular and explanatory sense.

as purely mechanical and physical, the result of matter, motion, and force, alone; to be explained, if explicable at all, in terms of these elements."

"It is one of the chief objects of the present treatise to demonstrate that such is not the case, and that it is absolutely impossible that the processes of nature can ever be accounted for without going beyond what is to be found in matter, motion, and force."

"In regard to all physical change or motion, no matter what the nature of that change or motion may be, at the very outset two questions arise, viz., what produces the change—causes motion? What determines or directs it? The answers to these two questions lead us into two totally different paths; and the overlooking of the distinction between the paths, or the confounding of them, has led to no end of confusion."

"The great question is not simply what produces a motion, but what produces the particular kind of motion? It is not what gives existence to the motion, but what determines its direction."

"Determination is the foundation stone of evolution."

The fundamental element in the process of evolution is neither force nor the persistence of force, as Mr. Spencer supposes, but a totally different thing, viz., the determination of force.

"The production of motion and the determination of motion are two things absolutely different in their essential nature. Force produces motion; but it is as impossible that force can determine motion as that two can be equal to three." "Force can impart the blow of a hammer, it cannot direct it."

Now here, unfortunately, and in all corresponding places throughout the book, Dr. Croll's inadequate acquaintance with the language of modern physics leads him into serious error and confusion: and it is probably this confusion, grafted on to the element of truth in the doctrine he is trying to enforce, that leads to the length and tediousness of the book. When he says that force cannot direct motion, he is flying in the face not of Mr. Spencer but of Isaac Newton: rather a serious opponent. The "second law of motion" asserts that force is necessary to change the motion of matter, whether in magnitude or in direction. Dr. Croll virtually admits the magnitude but denies the direction.

It is most unfortunate that he should have made this mistake, because he has glimpsed a real distinction between altering the amount and altering the direction of the motion of matter, but he has failed to express it. He has been misled by the painfully inaccurate use of the term "force," current in the time of his youth, and by the wholly obnoxious and meaningless expression "the persistence of force," which seems to have become an integral portion of evolutionist philosophy. It will not do to say that by "force" is meant "energy," and that we can translate the one word into the other; that may be done sometimes, but at other times the word force means force and not energy, and the confusion is not to be avoided by any amount of kindly interpretation.

All through the rest of the treatise Dr. Croll struggles in vain to get out of this entanglement, and at length has to take refuge in "an objective idea" as a determining cause, which is suddenly introduced thus (p. 53):

"The determination which takes place in nature occurs not at random but according to a plan—an objective idea. . . . In the formation of, say, the leaf of a tree, no two molecules move in identically the same direction or take identically the same path. But each molecule must move in relation to the objective idea of the leaf, or no leaf could be formed. The grand question therefore is—What is it that selects from among the infinite number of possible directions the proper one in relation to this idea?"

Returning, however, to Dr. Croll in his earlier chapters, before he becomes mystified by making quotations from various metaphysicians as to the nature of matter, we find him for a time speaking with perfect physical correctness thus:

"No energy or expenditure of power is absolutely necessary to direct or deflect this motion either to the right hand or to the left. All that is required is that the deflecting force should act at right angles to the direction in which the particle of body is moving. Deflection to any amount can thus be produced without work. A planet, for example, moving in a circular orbit, is being continually deflected by gravity; and gravity in doing this performs no work."

This doctrine seems to be as old as Descartes.

"Descartes had maintained that the quantity of motion in the universe was constant, and could neither be augmented or diminished. Will, he argued, cannot create motion—cannot move a body; but, he asserted, it may direct motion, for the directing of motion is totally different from the producing of it. Leibnitz, on the other hand, maintained, in opposition to Descartes, that will could no more direct motion than it could create motion; that in order to direct motion bodies must be deflected from their former course, but that, in consequence of the law of inertia, a body could not thus be deflected without an expenditure of force, and that will, therefore, could no more direct motion than it could originate it. It follows, then, he argued, that the motion of our body obeys the command of our will, not because the will has any direct control over them, but because these motions have been pre-arranged to agree with the volitions of the will."

On which Dr. Croll comments thus:

"Had Leibnitz been aware that motion can be directed without any expenditure of force, he would have found that his theory of pre-established harmony is superfluous, even if it were true that will cannot move matter."

In all this there is a want of clearness caused by the meaningless phrase, "expenditure of force." If it is to be interpreted as expenditure of energy, then the statement attributed to Leibnitz is not true. If, on the other hand, it means merely exertion of force or action of force, the statement is true, but no such deduction can be drawn from it as is drawn; for the deduction tacitly supposes the word force to be used in the sense of energy, i.e., in the sense of a thing of which conservation may be predicated.

Whatever difficulty there may be in analysing action into its ultimate constituents, or in stating what it is that arranges or has arranged things to act as they do, there is no need to boggle over the initial physical statement. Yet this is continually being done. Metaphysicians have erected great superstructures of generalisation on their negligence and ignorance of elementary physics, and on confusions concerning facts brought about by an unprecise use of language. Thus, if one may trust Dr. Croll's quotations, Lange disproves the existence of matter apart from force by an elementary confusion about the term elasticity, not knowing apparently that there are two kinds of elasticity, that of shape and that of size, so that a continuous and perfectly incompressible substance may nevertheless have elasticity of shape, and hence that an "elastic body" need not "consist of discrete particles." Again, Hartman is said to deny the existence of mass in an atom, because it is a unit of mass, and it is senseless to ask what is the mass or number of unity!

Now Dr. Croll, wishing to emphasise the fact that no expenditure of energy is needed to direct the motion of matter, does so by denying that force is competent to direct it; and when confronted with the clear untruth of this proposition, modifies it by saying that it is not really the force but the something which directs the force.

"Determination is effected by the magnitude and direction of the component forces," "not by the forces but by the determination of the forces." "The swing of a pendulum is determined, not by the force of gravity, but by the way in which the force acts." "In other words, it is due not to force, but to the determination of the force. Again, the determined magnitude of the swing is the result not of force, but of the determined magnitude of the force."

These extracts trend perilously near the absurd, at least in their mode of expression. However, what he means is, of course, that though force may be the proximate cause of motion it cannot be the ultimate cause, and we must go on to ask what it is that exerts the force.

Speaking of the building of a crystal or of organic forms, he says:

"The mystery is not—What are the forces which move the particles, but what is it that guides and directs the action of the forces so that they move each particle in the particular manner and direction required? Force gives motion to the particles; but we are not concerned about the cause of motion, only about what directs the motion." "What guides the force?"

"If anyone imagines that he can conceive motion as being directed or determined by a force, he will find on subjecting his thoughts to a proper analysis that the determination is not due to the force which he imagines, but is due to the direction in which the imagined force exerts itself. The determination results not from his imagined force, but from the way in which his force acts."

Now these statements are scarcely physically satisfactory. The motion of a body is determined and can be definitely predicted, given two sets of data—viz.: (1) The forces acting on it from instant to instant; (2) the initial conditions, or state at some definite epoch. The first is usually expressed in mathematical physics by a differential equation; the second by the value to be attributed to the arbitrary constants introduced by its integration.

It would have been better and clearer if Dr. Croll had admitted this, instead of only saying that something more than force was necessary, and trying to personify "the determination of the force." Given all the forces acting at every instant, and given the state of the body at some one instant, then its whole motion is completely determined during the continuance of those forces. There can be no doubt about that; and there is still plenty of room for any amount of question as to what subjected the body to these conditions, and why the forces act as they do. But to such questions as these physics gives no reply.

The physical part of the intended statement is simple enough, and may be put thus. To change the amount of motion in a body, work must be done and energy must be transferred from other bodies to it, or vice versa. No increase in motion can be brought about except by a disappearance of some other form of energy. But to alter the direction of motion no work need be done, force alone is sufficient. The body which exerts the force need lose no energy, motion and matter may be directed without the performance of work or expenditure of any energy, simply by the exertion of force.

The next step is not so simple, and rapidly ceases to be physical. What makes that body exert force? What makes a bullet, for instance, strike a particular target; the force of the powder, combined with the constraint of the barrel. What directed this bullet in this direction at this time? We may go on answering such questions for a time, but ultimately we are unable to answer anything better than the man who pulled the trigger or the officer who gave the word of command. And this leads us straightway into the blind alley of the free-will controversy. Can the trigger be pulled, can motion be determined, by an act of will.

Dr. Croll does not shirk this controversy, however, but boldly plunges in and makes a statement of his position which amounts to about this. Our actions and volitions are entirely determined by the pre-existing facts if taken in their entirety, and inclusive of the facts of self as well as of the external world. To suppose that action can be made arbitrarily independent of what has gone before is stigmatised as leading to antinomianism in its subjective aspects, and being as objectively absurd as to suppose that a thing can happen without a cause. The dependence of our acts on the totality of previous circumstances he holds as essential to our sense of morality and responsibility; and so he denies that will can be really a determining cause, because it is itself determined. Though how to reconcile this foreknowledge and pre-determination with our sense of responsibility and choice, he abandons as an insoluble problem.

By this time Dr. Croll has seriatim considered as possible directing or determining agents in the universe—force, matter, motion, action, persistence of force, natural selection, and will, and has rejected them all. He gets rid of the first four by the ad infinitum argument—that a thing cannot be ultimately caused by itself, or by anything of the same nature as itself. In discussing “persistence of force” as a determining cause, he gropes about in the foggy pincerianism, and asserts that the reality which he finds at the bottom of it is not the “persistence of force,” but “the far more general and distinct principle, namely, that the same cause acting under the same conditions will always produce the same effect.” Natural selection he ultimately dismisses as little better than a “destruction of the on-the-average unit”—a remarkably negative factor for a determining cause. Will he rejects, because, as explained above, he regards it as itself determined, not as self-determining; and so ultimately he comes to the conclusion that the only alternative to an eternal universe with an infinite succession of states all determined by antecedent states is to postulate the existence of a determining Deity.

“Upon teleology,” he says, “determinism throws a new light. The state of the universe at the present moment was determined by its antecedent states. We cannot suppose that one determination has resulted from another in an infinite regression without any beginning, for this would imply that things which are at present in operation are a part of a series which has been in operation from eternity. There must have been a first determination—a commencement of the series.” [This verb must, as Tyndall might say, is logically defective.] “Our proof of the existence of God undoubtedly rests on the principle of causation.” “If we suppose there had been no God, and that matter and motion had been eternal, this would not account for the past history of the universe. Matter and motion will not explain the evolution of things. Evolution is produced, as has been abundantly proved, neither by matter nor by force, but by the determination of matter and force. Eternal matter and eternal force would be impotent to produce the evolution of an orderly universe. The matter and the force must be determined. Whence, then, could they have got their determination had there been no God?”

This is a perilous sort of argumentation. It may be reasonably doubted whether the distinction drawn between the two alternatives, an eternal universe and an eternal God, is so real a distinction as Dr. Croll seems to think; and it is hopeless to try and imagine a beginning of determination, i.e., an epoch before which nothing was arranged, if once one postulates an eternal anything. Again, supposing it granted that matter and energy alone are not sufficient to explain the order of the universe (for it is the order that constitutes the essence of his argument), it is rather a sudden and large demand to straightway requisition a Deity. Moreover, there is nothing new in all this. It is not difficult to admit that either the universe must have existed from all eternity, or else that there must have been a great first cause. There needs no Croll to tell us that. And the order and arrangement prominent in the universe has been a favourite theme for natural theologians from time immemorial.

The real idea in the book is simply that direction of energy can be accomplished without upsetting its conservation, and by an agent with no great store of energy at its disposal. This seems to have been grasped by Descartes (if so, it was a very remarkable achievement at that date), but it has frequently been in danger of being lost sight of. The modern evolutionist and amateur theologian is apt to press the law of conservation of energy into regions where it has no true applicability. There is undoubtedly something more in the universe than matter and motion: to say the least, there is life and mind; and if Dr. Croll's book has the effect of making the path of materialistic monists more thorny, and of recalling some physicists from the attempt to press the laws of physics in ways which are illegitimate, he will have done good service.

OLIVER J. LODGE.

SOME BOOKS OF CLASSICAL PHILOLOGY.

Jahresbericht über die Fortschritte der klassischen Alterthumswissenschaft. Herausg. von Iwan Müller. Achtezelter Jahrgang. (Berlin: Calvary.) The eighteenth issue of this most useful work, containing volumes lxii.-iv., comprises, within its 900 pages, a valuable set of reports. Those dealing with the Greek classics are, perhaps, hardly so interesting as usual, for we have only reports on the rhetors and later sophists, Plutarch's Moralia, the late Greek grammarians, and a few pages on Homeric Realien. But the Latin section includes a very important summary of Plautine literature by Prof. Seyffert, a useful article by Dr. Häussner on Horace, and reports on Lucan, Silius, Lucretius, Valerius Maximus, and several late poets. The third section, “Alterthumswissenschaft,” opens with a long and dull report on the literature of 1887, dealing with the “Encyklopädie und Methodologie der klassischen Philologie”; but it contains capital articles by Dr. Schiller on Roman history and antiquities, and by other writers on science, medicine, trade, &c. There are also good indices to the whole; though we could wish that the table of contents were more “übersichtlich,” and less full of promises about the next “Jahrgang.” Apart from this trifling though annoying defect, the great fault of the work appears to be its tendency—we fancy we might almost say its growing tendency—towards prolixity. Some of the contributors seem hardly clear as to whether they are writing a report or a review, or an original work. Where the writer is the one recognised authority on his subject we can pardon this, even though la sauce vaut mieux que la poisson. But in an ordinary scholar's work, such confusion is regrettable. For instance, we think, far too much space is given to German pamphlets on Roman Germany. If the same space were given to the writings of local archaeologists in England and France and other countries, the length of the report would be portentous. But it should be remembered that all this extra matter does not destroy the value of the really good and excellent work contained in this indispensable publication.

Epitoma Vaticana ex Apollodori Bibliotheca. Edidit R. Wagner. (Leipzig: Hirzel.) Apollodori Bibliotheca Fragmenta Sabbaitica. Edidit A. P. Kerameus. (Bonn.) These treatises originated in two of the discoveries of neglected MSS. which have been common in the last few years. Dr. Wagner, while working in the Vatican Library, came upon a fourteenth century MS. labelled “Fabulae poeticae et quaedam grammaticalia ex Eustathio sine principio et fine”; and further examination showed that these Fabulae were really an abridgment of the mythological treatise known as the Bibliotheca of Apollodorus, and were, indeed, in some ways more complete and correct than the texts of the existing manuscripts. The work, as it was previously known, ended with the slaughter of Sinis by Theseus; the Vatican epitome goes on beyond the Trojan war, and, having restored Menelaus to his home, ends, like a famous resolution of the House of Commons, with the word “and.” The additional matter does not throw fresh light on the date or identity of Apollodorus, nor is it plain to whom we owe the Epitome—perhaps to Tzetzes, as Dr. Wagner hints in a postscript. But the additional matter dealing with the legends of the Trojan cycle is worth the attention of specialists, and a certain amount may be gleaned as to the plots of Euripides and Sophocles' lost plays. The text, so far as we can judge, has been well edited; a few pages of scholarly notes and half a volume of "Curae Mythographae" greatly increase its value. In the former various subjects are discussed. It is pointed out, for instance, that the aorist infinitive in future sense, Cobet's great bugbear, is very common in late Greek, and especially in Apollodorus, to which it may be added that this very fact is no doubt a reason why the idiom appears so often in the MSS. of Attic writers. In the "Curae Mythographae" we have a variety of essays on the shapes of the legends, in which Dr. Wagner has not neglected the evidence supplied by Greek art, though possibly he might have used it more fully. The book concludes with two indices. It is curious that just as Dr. Wagner's work had been almost entirely printed another scholar made a discovery similar to his own. Some fragments of Apollodorus found at Jerusalem continue the text even further than his Vatican Epitome: Menelaus is safely bestowed in Elysium, and the wanderings of Ulysses and the Telegoneia are added. These fragments have been duly published by Mr. Kerameus in the Rheinisches Museum, and since separately. We are glad to note that Dr. Wagner promises "textum bibliothecae omni fere ex parte absolutum."

Zur handschriftlichen Ueberlieferung der Scholia Didymi. Von A. Schimberg. (Göttingen.) These two papers—the one a reprint from the Philologus, the other a Beilage to a school Programm—form a useful contribution to our knowledge of the Scholia Minora to the Iliad. These Scholia have received little critical attention of late years; they have not even been edited since 1825. Dr. Schimberg has now collated portions of the chief MSS. containing them, and has endeavoured to form some conception of their relative value. It appears that, according to him, there are three families of MSS., one of which consists of the editio princeps of Lascaris, for which no MS. source has yet been discovered. At the end the writer promises further collations of other MS. material not yet properly examined. Whenever a proper edition of the Scholia Minora is published, these Vorstudien ought to prove very valuable—which is more, unfortunately, than can be said for the Scholia themselves.

THE AMERICAN PHILOLOGICAL ASSOCIATION.

WE quote the following from the New York Critic:—

"THE twenty-third annual session of the American Philological Association was begun in the afternoon of Tuesday, July 7, at University Hall, Princeton, N. J., Dr. Julius Sachs, of New York, president, in the chair. Prof. Herbert Weir Smyth, of Bryn Mawr, the secretary, reported thirty-seven new members. The treasurer reported a balance of $1126.09, as against $416.41 a year ago. The first paper, by Clarence H. Young, of Columbia, on 'Erchia, the Deme of Xenophon,' was followed by 'Notes on the Roman Census in the Republican Era,' by Dr. E. G. Sihler, of New York. Andrew Ingraham, of the Swain Free School, New Bedford, contributed a paper on 'Word Order in Lucan'; and Prof. Clement L. Smith, of Harvard, read one on 'Catullus and the Phasellus of his Fourth Poem.' Copies of the poem were distributed, and the paper gave rise to discussion. The last paper of the afternoon was that of Prof. Thomas Dwight Goodell, of Yale, on 'Aristotle on the Public Arbitrators.' In the evening an address of welcome was delivered by President Patton, of Princeton. This was followed by the address of President Sachs, upon 'Alexandrine Art.'

"The association resumed its work on Wednesday morning with a considerably increased attendance, other colleges represented besides Princeton being Yale, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, Cornell, Columbia, Wooster, Wesleyan, Vanderbilt, Trinity, Hamilton, Miami, Union, Vassar, Smith, Bryn Mawr, Wabash, and Lafayette, as well as a number of schools. The first paper of the day was presented by Prof. Charles Forster Smith, of Vanderbilt, on 'Traces of Tragic Usage in Thucydides'; it was followed by interesting comments by Prof. Gildersleeve, of Johns Hopkins. The second was Prof. Theodore W. Hunt's 'English Lexicography,' which awakened universal interest. Prof. Hunt went over the whole ground of lexicography, historically and critically. Prof. March, of Lafayette, spoke with special reference to the Encyclopaedic Dictionary and its usefulness in comparison with others. The third paper was by Prof. H. W. Smyth, of Bryn Mawr—'Notes on Digamma.' Dr. Smyth was followed by Prof. W. A. Merrill, of Miami, on 'The Signification and Use of the Word "Natura" by Lucretius.' Prof. Gildersleeve took part in the discussion. The final paper of the morning was by Prof. Edward B. Clapp, of Illinois University, on 'Conditional Sentences in the Greek Tragedians.' The literary session of the afternoon was omitted, and the members accepted the invitation of the professors of Princeton to inspect the grounds and buildings, the library and the museums of the old college. A reception was given to the association by President and Mrs. Patton.

"On Thursday, Prof. William J. Seelye, of Parsons College, Fairfield, Iowa, presented some 'Metrical Translations from Sophocles's "Oedipus Coloneus."' Edward Capps, of Yale followed with a paper on 'The Greek Stage according to the Extant Dramas,' endeavouring to deduce evidence in opposition to the generally received opinion, that the ancient orchestra and stage were upon the same level. The next paper was by Prof. Andrew F. West, of Princeton, on 'Lexicographical Gleanings from the Philobiblon of Richard de Bury,' revealing the peculiar difficulties under which he laboured in his late translation of that work. A paper by Prof. W. G. Hale, of Cornell, on the 'Syntax of the General Condition and the Comparative Clause in Latin,' was succeeded by the following, which, owing to pressure of time, were given rapidly and with little discussion:—Dr. George B. Hussey, of the Western Reserve Academy, Hudson, Ohio, 'A Note on the Testimonia Belonging [sic] of Plato, Respublica, 398 A'; Dr. A. Gudeman, of Johns Hopkins, on 'A New Fragment of Cicero's Hortensius and of Aristotle's Protrepticus'; Prof. T. D. Seymour, of Yale, 'Notes on Adrastea,' correcting the popular notion of Nemesis as an avenging fury, especially of homicide; Prof. W. G. Hale, of Cornell, 'The Mood with quod sciam, restrictive'; and Prof. F. C. March, of Lafayette, 'Law of Language, especially Verner's Law.'

"Reports of various committees were received and considered. Among these was that of the committee on spelling reform, through its chairman, Prof. March. This emphasized the importance of the committee appointed by President Harrison upon the orthography of biographical names, the object being to secure uniformity in public documents. It was stated also that this committee had adopted the principles already sanctioned by the Government of Great Britain (?) and the Philological Association of London. The committee on the time and place of the next annual meeting reported several invitations; and upon ballot that of the University of Virginia was accepted, and the date fixed for the second Tuesday of July, 1892.

"The following were chosen as officers for the ensuing year:—President, Prof. Samuel Hart, of Trinity College, Hartford, Conn.; vice-presidents, Profs. W. G. Hale, of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y., and I. M. Garnett, of the University of Virginia; secretary, treasurer, and curator, Prof. Herbert Weir Smyth, of Bryn Mawr College, Penn.; executive committee—the above-mentioned officers and Profs. B. L. Gildersleeve, of Johns Hopkins, F. A. March, of Lafayette, W. W. Goodwin, of Harvard, Miss Leach, of Vassar, and W. D. Whitney, of Yale.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

AMONG the original MSS. to be exhibited at the International Congress of Orientalists is one that has been found among the Bataks of Sumatra, in which various diseases are ascribed to minute organisms or microbes. The microbes are roughly drawn on a large scale, sometimes covering a whole page. The curious thing is that medical and other literature only exists among those Bataks who have never been in contact with Europeans. The others are, as is known, cannibals. M. Claine, the first explorer who has been right through Sumatra, is now arranging his collection and photographs, with a view of illustrating his communication regarding the Bataks at the Congress. Afterwards he will return to the scene of his explorations.

IN the section on oriental art will be shown a curious Persian MS on the history of the shawl manufacture, beginning with the simplest alphabetic designs in white and black, and ending with elaborate many-coloured drawings of shawls, one of which indicates the sinuous course of the Jhelum river, as seen from the top of the Takht-i-Suleiman hill in Kashmir. A linguistic interest also attaches to the shawl manufacture; for it is based on instructions connected with a technical language of the weavers, in which have survived fragments of dialects older than those now spoken in the country, and many beautiful patterns thus resolve themselves, as it were, into a literary communication. Other oriental handicrafts have also a cunning of their own, and contain the remnants of a special learning, as will be shown in connexion with a book of about 100 Kashmir pictures, exhibiting men engaged in a variety of occupations, with complete sets of the implements belonging to each.

FINE ART.

THREE NUMISMATIC BOOKS.

Trade Tokens issued in the Seventeenth Century. By George C. Williamson. Vol. II. (Elliot Stock.) We congratulate Mr. Williamson on the completion of the task which he undertook nine years ago, of revising Boyne's standard treatise on the tokens of the seventeenth century. The original quarto is now augmented to two volumes of nearly 1600 pages; and it may safely be asserted that, from the point of view of a numismatic catalogue, but little is left for any future collector to glean. As we remarked when noticing the first volume, Mr. Williamson has wisely depended to a large extent upon county sub-editors, who can alone possess the local knowledge that turns these little bits of inscribed metal into intelligible documents, valuable alike for municipal history and for genealogical evidence. A good example of such research is to be found in his own notes on the tokens of Surrey, and especially of Guildford, where he has been able to recover the personal history of most of the issuers. Other counties have been less fortunate, notably Oxfordshire, which seems to be altogether destitute of local numismatists and antiquaries. And yet the Oxfordshire series is by no means without interest. It possesses, at Thame, a unique proof of a token struck in gold; and one of the city pieces bears the mysterious legend "Mallia Cadreene," which has not yet been explained. We may also mention that the names of most of the token issuers of Oxford city are to be found in the list of assessments to the hearth tax of 1665, just published by the Oxford Historical Society. Here the two lists are contemporary; but on comparing the names on the Somersetshire tokens with those in the Wells Wells of 1528-1536, printed by Mr. F. W. Weaver, we have been unable to discover a single one identical. Another instance of what local enthusiasm may do is afforded in the case of Kilkenny in Ireland, where almost all the issuers of tokens are brought back to life. The work concludes with no less than twelve separate indexes. From the first of these we learn that the total number of tokens here described is 12,722, of which Scotland supplies only 1. Northumberland 10, Cumberland 5, and Westmoreland 19; while London alone has 3543 (not counting 501 for Southwark and 259 for Middlesex), and Kent 595. The counties next most numerous represented are Yorkshire, Suffolk, Devon, Essex, Norfolk, and Somerset. Another index gives the places, with subordinate headings for London and Southwark localities. Then follow lists of exceptional shapes and of trades, &c. Next we have the names of the issuers, classified under both their Christian and their surnames—from which some interesting inferences might be drawn; and, lastly, catalogues of the devices and armorial bearings exhibited on the tokens. Enough has been said to prove that Mr. Williamson has spared no pains to make his work final and exhaustive. It is issued only in a limited edition, and deserves the support not only of numismatists proper, but also of all English antiquaries.

Supplement to the Coins of the Ancient Britons. By John Evans. (Quaritch.) After an interval of twenty-six years Dr. Evans has brought out a Supplement to that classical treatise on The Coins of the Ancient Britons, which not only illuminated for the first time the darkest period of our national history, but also inaugurated a new method of numismatic research—that of tracing the evolution of types. The Supplement is pagged to follow the original work, and the plates are also lettered and numbered so as to form a continuous series. Since the death of Mr. Fairholt, Dr. Evans has been unable to find a competent English engraver; and, as he disapproves of the autotype process for the reproduction of worn coins, he has had recourse to a French artist, M. Paul Sellier. An entirely new feature is a large map, showing the localities where inscribed British coins have been found, and also indicating the special types—from which the predominance in the south-east half of England becomes very apparent. In an introductory chapter, Dr. Evans re-states his well-known theory as to the origin of the ancient British coinage in an imitation of the Greek Philippus, though he is now disposed to extend the date to the beginning of the second century B.C.; and he criticises another view suggested by Prof. Ridgeway in a recent number of Folklore. Among the numerous subjects discussed in this Supplement, we can mention only a few. Special mention is made of what has been called the Selsea Find—the discovery along the shore near Selsea of British gold coins that have been washed down from the cliff. As described by Mr. Willett, these number 265, of which 96 belong to the earlier or un-inscribed series. Other numerous finds have been made at Alresford, Chardstock, and Birchington. Of peculiar interest is the discovery of a silver coin bearing the legend CARA, which Dr. Evans has little hesitation in completing as Caractacus, though he does not feel equally certain that it can be assigned to the historic personage of that name. It is also curious to learn that a base-gold coin of the Yorkshire type has quite recently been found in Denmark. With reference to Cunobelinus, Dr. Evans has something new to say about his legendary place of burial at Kimble, on the Chiltern Hills. Among the Stowe MSS. is a record of King Eadweard (A.D. 903), repeating an earlier lost document, which recites that the boundary at one part runs “andlang Eadrices gemære þæt innan Cynebellinga gemære andlang gemære þæt on Icenhylte.” This, at least, proves that the traditional connexion with “Cynbel” = Cunobeline goes back for more than a thousand years.

Prof. Reginald Stuart Poole, keeper of the coins in the British Museum, to whom the learned world is already so greatly indebted for the noble series of catalogues describing the treasures under his charge, has recently issued two new volumes, dealing with Mohammedan coins. These have both been compiled by his nephew, Mr. Stanley Lane-Poole, and are in form supplemental to the eight volumes of the Catalogue of Oriental Coins, published between 1875 and 1883. Since those dates, the Museum has received a very considerable number of additions, partly by the incorporation of the India office collection, and partly by purchase. The total number of new pieces, in this department alone, approaches 3000. In some cases, the representation of a single dynasty has been more than doubled. For example, the Spanish series, thanks to Don Francisco Codera, has been increased from 182 to 490; while the Ghaznawees (the dynasty of Mahmud) are now represented by 400 instead of only 180 coins. Of modern issues, we may mention the mints of El-Mahdee of Khartoom, and of the Sultan of Zanzibar. Advantage has also been taken of this Supplement to include the series of bilingual coins, Arabic and Greek, and Arabic and Latin, which were issued by the earliest Mohammedan dynasties in Syria, North Africa, and Spain. From the evolutionist point of view, expounded by Mr. C. F. Keary, this series is particularly instructive; for it must be admitted that otherwise the interest of Mohammedan coins is mainly historical, as fixing dates and mints. The two volumes are illustrated respectively with 21 and 13 autotype plates representing typical specimens; and at the end of the second is a most elaborate index to the whole series of ten volumes of Oriental Coins under three headings—years, mints, and persons. There is also a table for converting the years of the Hijrah into those of the Christian era. The system of transliteration is that of Lane, which looks rather strange to those who have familiarised themselves with the modified Jonesian orthography approved by the Indian Government.

CORRESPONDENCE.

BOOK-PLATES.

Buxton, August 3, 1891.

In an appreciative notice of the article on Book-Plates, in the July number of the Livre Moderne, the ACADEMY'S reviewer very nearly implies that, however different may be the case in France, it is in England practically impossible to obtain book-plates not “ill-done” or in a “stereotyped manner.” May I demur to this conclusion? I do not myself believe that it is within the bounds of possibility to invent a wholly new method in book-plates any more than it is in book-binding. The cycle of each art, very likely, is completed, in the sense that its best principles have been already understood and applied. But there exists in England, at this moment, more than one artist whose book-plates have at least that measure of originality which is sanctioned by good taste; and one of them—Mr. C. W. Sherborn, whose work it has been, at several times and places, my privilege to praise—is endowed, I think, with nothing less than a singular genius for this order of decorative design. Mr. Sherborn applies the true principles of ornament—such as they were understood, for example, by the German Little Masters—never fantastically or arbitrarily: always with restraint, yet always with spirit.

FREDERICK WEDMORE.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY

THE trustees of the Chantrey Fund have lately purchased Mr. J. W. North's landscape exhibited at the New Gallery, which was entitled “Autumn” in the catalogue, but which (we are told) ought to have been called “The Winter Sun in Wild Woodland.” Altogether, 54 pictures and 7 works of sculpture have been bought under the terms of the Chantrey bequest, at a total cost of £39,245.

Two pictures of the Sieneese school have recently been presented to the National Gallery: a “Transfiguration,” by Duccio de Buoninsignia; and “The Virgin and Child surrounded by Cherubim,” by Bernardino Fungai.

THE following is the programme of the annual meeting of the Royal Archaeological Institute at Edinburgh next week. On Tuesday the president, Sir Herbert E. Maxwell, will deliver his address at noon, in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery; and in the evening Dr. John Evans will open the antiquarian section. On Wednesday morning Linlithgow and Stirling will be visited; and in the evening Dr. T. Hodgkin will open the historical section. On Thursday the Bishop of Carlisle will open the architectural section in the morning, the ancient buildings of the city of Edinburgh will be inspected in the afternoon, and there will be a conversazione in the Museum of Antiquities in the evening. On Friday, an excursion has been arranged to St. Andrews; on Saturday, to Glasgow and the Roman Wall at Dullatur; on Monday, to Roslin, Borthwick, and Crichton Castle; and on Tuesday, to Dunfermline, the Forth Bridge, and Craig Millar.

THE Cambrian Archaeological Association, which went a couple of years ago to Brittany, will this year join the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland at the Killarney meeting, which begins on Tuesday next, August 11. Among those who have promised to be present are Prof. Rhys and Prof. Sayce.

THE project of a “British museum of photographic portraits,” which was conceived as long ago as 1864 by Mr. James Glaisher, has now attained realisation, thanks to the discovery and perfection of the process of permanent carbon-printing, and to the energy of Mr. Arthur J. McIlhish, the hon. secretary of the Amateur Photographic Association. Nearly two hundred large-sized portraits of men of distinction in politics, art, science, letters, and the learned professions have been deposited in the South Kensington Museum; and about as many more are ready to be sent. Of these latter there was a private view last Saturday, at Mr. McIlhish's studio.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a little volume by Mr. Hume Nisbet, entitled Lessons in Art, with twenty-two illustrations, by the author.

MR. J. STANLEY LITTLE'S paper in the current number of the Nineteenth Century, on “The Prospects of English Landscape,” is one to which we feel justified in calling the attention of readers, as it is written thoughtfully and—as may be supposed by those who have any knowledge of the writer—with marked independence of view.

AT a recent meeting of the Académie des Inscriptions, M. Casati read a paper on the bronze lion upon the Piazzetta column at Venice, which has lately been lowered for purposes of necessary repair. The origin of this piece of sculpture is altogether unknown. There is no mention of it in any early document, and the most diverse theories have been advanced as to its history. Some would attribute it to the middle ages; others have seen in it Assyrian workmanship. M. Casati compared it with various Etruscan monuments, particularly with a chimæra that bears in Etruscan characters a dedication to Jupiter. M. Menant remarked that the Assyrian hypothesis is, at all events, untenable.

The sympathy between France and Russia is to be signalised by a great Russian exhibition at Paris next year. The municipal council have allotted for the purpose, and on the most favourable terms, the Palais des Machines and the Galerie de Trente Mètres in the Champ-de-Mars.

WE would call attention to a little pamphlet on the ancient camps on the Malvern Hills—known as Midsummer Hill and Herefordshire Beacon—by the late W. H. Lins (Worcester: Humphreys). If we cannot assent to all the views here somewhat dogmatically laid down after the fashion of local antiquaries, we can cordially praise the careful observations of the author with regard to the ramparts, the gates, and the remains of hut dwellings. Above all, the rough plans prefixed to the paper, from drawings made by him more than twenty years ago, are highly instructive.

THE STAGE.

STAGE NOTES.

THE continued appearance of Miss Alma Murray in a first piece, which we will not depreciate by calling it a lever de rideau, at the Vaudeville Theatre, is an event which should not pass without notice. This justly admired actress of juvenile heroines—a young leading lady of singular refinement, subtlety, and intellectual achievement—appears nightly in a drama by Mr. Louis Parker, entitled "The Sequel," playing, of course, the best character which the piece affords to any artist.

THE three short pieces lately performed together at Terry's Theatre have been transferred to the Shaftesbury, of which temporary possession has been taken by the insatiable Mr. George Edwardes, who will shortly sigh for having no more playhouses to conquer. Miss Linden and Miss Sybil Gray disappear from the cast of the pieces, of which, as the French say, "it is question;" while Miss Beatrice Lamb, and we believe Miss Norreys, become visible to the frequenters of the theatre.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Additional Exercises to "Harmony;" Key to Harmony Exercises and to Additional Exercises; Additional Exercises to "Counterpoint." By Ebenezer Prout. (Augener.) These new Harmony Exercises are intended for students who have already been through the author's work entitled Harmony: its Theory and Practice, but who desire further training; and the additions are, as one indeed would expect, of a higher grade of difficulty. Mr. Prout in his Harmony tried to make that study attractive by numerous illustrations from the works of the great masters; and so here his exercises are not basses on which to build a series of dry chords, but, to quote his own words, "the basses of little pieces, varying in length, . . . and containing considerable diversity, both of rhythm and of cadence." It has been customary to write harmony exercises to illustrate the use of some particular chord, and to introduce that chord as frequently as possible. Mr. Prout, however, has introduced the various discords much "as a composer might use them in the course of a piece." By the "piece" form of the basses, and by the natural introduction of discords, students will be learning not only the use of chords, but, to a certain extent, the art of composition. The two books containing Keys to the Exercises demand a word or two of comment. If properly used, they will certainly be found useful; but it cannot be denied that undue advantage might be taken of them by students who lack perseverance. Mr. Prout himself, in the preface to his Additional Exercises, in speaking of some of the more difficult ones, says that the student may be inclined, after one or two failures, to conclude that they are impossible. For a student of this kind, a Key would prove a dangerous help. Mr. Prout remarks that the student, "after completing his own work," may learn much from consulting the Key; but we cannot put old heads on young shoulders. As stated above, the exercises are "pieces," and it is an advantage to know the author's intentions. For ordinary chord progressions capable of many solutions a Key would be of little service. Additional Exercises to Counterpoint is the title of the last of the set of books before us; and to many such a collection may appear quite unnecessary, considering the large number of canti fermi to be found in treatises on counterpoint, ancient and modern. A glance, however, at the contents of the volume will show that Mr. Prout's additions have in them elements of novelty. In his Counterpoint he drew attention to the value of harmonising melodies as a useful preliminary to the study of counterpoint; and in the volume under notice he gives a number of the best old Chorales, a selection of national melodies, and one hundred melodies selected from works of the great masters with which the average student would probably be unacquainted. In providing material of this kind, the author gives practical help to students; for in harmonising these melodies, they will feel almost as if they were composing, rather than studying with a view to composition. The third part of the book contains unfigured basses, also selected from the great masters. The canti fermi in the first part include many written expressly by the author, and the requirements of modern tonality have been kept in view. Students and teachers will find these harmony and counterpart exercises not only profitable but pleasurable. Mr. Prout has certainly done his best to remove from the study of harmony and of counterpoint the reproach of dryness, a term frequently in the mouths of those who have looked upon them only as a means to an end.

Pictorial Tutor for the Pianoforte. ("Magazine of Music" Office.) There is much that is good in this Tutor. The articles are admirable, especially those on Rubinstein's "Bach," on "Touch" and "Technique," &c.; and there is also much in the various portions dealing with the rudiments—scale practice, finger exercises, position of body and hands, and so on—that can be unreservedly praised. Further, of the numerous illustrations, many are excellent. The selection of portraits, however, is scarcely likely to give the pupil accurate ideas respecting the relative importance of the great musicians. For instance, Handel and Bach are omitted, while Sullivan and Hegner have each a full page. Then, again, the arrangement of the rudimentary matter is not always satisfactory. The assistance of an experienced teacher would, to some extent, remedy this defect.

Ruines d'un Chateau. Réverie for Pianoforte. By Herbert F. Sharpe. (Woolhouse.) Imaginative and expressive players can easily supply a programme to this picturesque composition, as it abounds in clever musical suggestions of the pageantry and departed glories of the ruined castle. It is moderately difficult.

Schnsucht, Hoffnung. Two Solos for Violin with Pianoforte Accompaniment. By F. Clarisse Mallard. (Woolhouse.) The melodies of both are pleasing, and the accompaniments are well harmonised. The second is a Tempo di Mazurka, rather Chopinesque in style.

The Water Wheel. Characteristic Piece for the Pianoforte. By A. W. Brooks. (Woolhouse.) This is a simple unpretentious piece, suited to elementary players. The fingering is carefully added.

The following are from Weekes & Co. :—

Adieu. Song. Words by H. de Windt. Music by Adrienne Ardenne. This is a commonplace song, and monotonous, for the first phrase occurs twice in each of the three verses.

The Mother to Her Child. With English and German Words and Violin Obligato. Composed by J. Matthews. Simple and reposeful in character, but there is nothing distinctive in the violin part. The accompaniment is quite suitable to a cradle song.

Break, Break, Break. Song. Words by Lord Tennyson. Music by Adrienne Ardenne. This is an inadequate setting of the well-known lines.

Wenn zwei von einander. Lied. Words by Heine. Music by Adrienne Ardenne. This is a commonplace song, unworthy of the poem.

A Legend of the Woods. For Violin and Piano. By J. Matthews. A verse of Heine's has inspired this graceful little romance. The melody is very suitable to the poet's idea, and the pianoforte part is well written. The violin part requires rather an advanced performer to do it justice.

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.	HALF-YEARLY.	QUARTERLY.
	£ s. d.	£ s. d.	£ s. d.
If obtained of a News-vendor or at a Railway Station	0 13 0	0 6 6	0 3 3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0 15 2	0 7 7	0 10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0 17 4	0 8 8	0 4 4

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.

JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
To-night, at 7.45, a new and original drama, by Geo. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled,
THE TRUMPET CALL.
Scenery by Bruce Smith and W. Hann. Produced by Mr. F. Glover.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechmere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Templar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, F. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

GRAND THEATRE.

To-night, at 7.35, Wilson Barrett and his specially organised Company, in the most successful drama of modern times,
THE SILVER KING.
Monday next, August 10, Wilson Barrett in "The Lights of London."

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Ulmar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schuberth, Ellis, and Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Manager, W. W. KELLY.
At 8, Grand revival of Sardou's
THEODORA.
Messrs. Fuller Mellish, Murray, Cerson, G. W. Cockburn, T. W. Percyval, Leslie Corcoran, F. Victor, Henry de Solla, Aiker, Ludlow, Warton, &c.; Mesdames Bertie Willis, Lilian Secombe, Louisa Wyatt, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE of WALES' THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
Preceded, at 8.15, by THE GYPSIES.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

To-night, at 8, FATE and FORTUNE; or, the Junior Partner, by James J. Blood, by arrangement with Mr. William Calder.
Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Geo. Barrett, W. R. Sutherland, Bassett Roe, Stephen Caffrey, H. Bedford, W. Cheesman, Henry Payden, T. F. Doyle, Huntley Wright, John M. East, C. Medwin, &c.; Mesdames May Whitty, Cicely Richards, Sallie Turner, May Protheroe, &c.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'VLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Sautmarcz, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
At 9.15, A COMMISSION.
And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL.
Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Maxwell, and W. Grossmith; Mesdames E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Norreys.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDUOIN.
Every Evening, at 8.45,
THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Eversfield, Hawtrey, Cape, Barraclough, and H. Standing; Mesdames Fanny Brough, Edmund Phelps, Eva Moore, and Venie Bennett.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cuninghame, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

Established 1857. Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES OF THE WEEK.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—NEW ORDERS, &c.—COURTS.—PENDING LEGISLATION.—LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.—PARLIAMENT AND LEGISLATION.—THE PRACTICE UNDER THE NEW RULES.—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—REVIEWS.—APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.

SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s.; when paid in advance.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.

 The JOURNAL and REPORTER can be ordered from any date, and a proportionate reduction will be made in the Subscription up to the end of the current volume.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums of deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

FURNISH your HOUSES or APARTMENTS THROUGHOUT

MOEDER'S HIRE SYSTEM,

The original, best, and most liberal. Suits all.
FOUNDED A.D. 1868.
Furnish direct from the Manufacturer, from £10 to £10,000.
Cash prices. No extra charge for time given.
Catalogues, Estimates, Press Opinions, Testimonials Post Free.
F. MOEDER,
248, 249, 250, Tottenham Court Road, W. (Kindly note numbers.)
Goods carefully Removed and Warehoused.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application.
FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS, and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

THE ACADEMY:

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND

VOL. XL, commenced July 4th.

Terms of annual subscription, 15s. 2d.; foreign, 17s. 4d.

Edited by J. S. COTTON.

Among the Contributors to THE ACADEMY are:

Acton, Lord
Aitken, G. A.
Alexander, S.
Allen, Grant
Allen, J. B.
Arnold, Arthur
Axon, W. E. A.
Bain, R. Nisbet
Ball, Rev. C. J.
Balzani, Count Ugo
Barnett, P. A.
Bayne, Rev. Ronald
Beazeley, M.
Beeching, Rev. H. C.
Bell, H. T. Mackenzie
Benn, A. W.
Bennett, A. W.
Bensley, Prof. R. L.
Bezold, Prof. C.
Blind, Karl
Boase, Rev. C. W.
Bonaparte, Prince Louis-
Bonar, J. [Lucien
Bradley, Henry
Bradley, J. W.
Brown, Dr. Robert
Brown, H. F.
Brown, R., Jun.
Browne, E. G.
Browne, J. W.
Browne, Prof. G. F.
Bryce, Prof. J.
Buchanan, Robert
Bühler, Prof. G.
Burton, Sir Richard
Bywater, I.
Caine, Hall
Campbell, Prof. Lewis
Canton, W.
Capes, Rev. W. W.
Cheetham, Archdeacon
Chester, Greville J.
Cheyne, Prof. T. K.
Church, Prof. A. H.
Clouston, W. A.
Collins, J. C.
Conway, W. Martin
Cotterell, G.
Cotton, H. J. S.
Courtney, W. P.
Crawford, O.
Creighton, Prof. M.
Davidson, John
Dawkins, C. E.
De Vere, Aubrey
Dickins, F. V.
Doble, C. E.

Dobson, Austin
Dore, J. R.
Douglas, Prof. R. K.
Dow, J. G.
Dowden, Prof. E.
Doyle, J. A.
Driver, Prof. S. R.
Drummond, Rev. R. B.
Dryden, Sir Henry
Duff, E. Gordon
Dunlop, R.
Earle, Prof. J.
Ebers, Prof. G.
Edgeworth, Prof. F. Y.
Edinburgh, The Bishop of
Edwards, Miss Amelia B.
Ellis, Robinson
Elton, C. I.
Elton, Oliver
Ely, Talfourd
Evans, Arthur
Field, Michael
Firth, C. H.
Fita, Padre F.
Fitch, J. G.
Fortnum, C. Drury E.
Fowler, Prof. T.
Fowler, Rev. J. T.
Frazer, J. G.
Freeman, Prof. E. A.
Freshfield, Douglas W.
Friedländer, Dr. M.
Furnivall, Dr. F. J.
Gaidoz, H.
Gairdner, J.
Galton, Arthur
Gardiner, S. R.
Gardiner, Mrs. S. R.
Garrod, H. B.
Gonner, Prof. E. C. K.
Grant-Duff, Sir Mount-stuart E.
Grant, Col. F.
Gray, J. M.
Greenhill, Dr. W. A.
Grey, William E.
Groome, F. H.
Hager, Dr. H.
Hamerton, P. G.
Hamilton, J. A.
Hardy, W. J.
Haverfield, F.
Hawkins, F.
Herford, Prof. C. H.
Hessels, J. H.
Hewlett, H. G.
Hickey, Miss E. H.

Hicks, Rev. E. L.
Hodgetts, E. A. Brayley
Hodgkin, Dr. T.
Hodgson, Shadworth H.
Houghton, Rev. W.
Howlett, R.
Howorth, H. H.
Hunter, Sir W. W.
Ingram, J. H.
Ingram, Prof. J. K.
Jacobs, Joseph
Jevons, F. B.
Johnson, Lionel
Jolly, Prof. J.
Jones, Rev. W. H.
Keane, Prof. A. H.
Keene, H. G.
Kingsford, C. L.
Kirkup, T.
Lang, Andrew
Lankester, Prof. E. Ray
Leach, A. F.
Lee, Miss Jane
Lee, S. L.
Lee, Vernon
Le Gallienne, R.
Legge, Prof. J.
Lewin, Walter
Lewis, Prof. W. J.
Lindsay, W. M.
Lyll, C. J.
Lyster, T. W.
Macdonell, Prof. A. A.
Macdonell, G. P.
Mackay, J. S.
Mahaffy, Prof. J. P.
Mann, J. S.
Margoliouth, Prof. D. S.
Markham, Clements R.
Markheim, W.
Martin, C. Trice
Marzials, F. T.
Mayhew, Rev. A. L.
Merk, Rev. C.
Merry, G. R.
Minchin, J. G. C.
Minchin, James Innes
Minto, Prof. W.
Monkhouse, Cosmo
Moore, Rev. Dr. E.
Morfill, W. R.
Morris, Rev. Dr. R.
Morris, Judge O'Connor
Morshead, E. D. A.
Muir, Dr. Thomas
Müller, Prof. F. Max
Murray, A. S.

Murray, George
Murray, Dr. J. A. H.
Myers, Ernest
Myles, Rev. W. Percy
Napier, Prof. A. S.
Nettleship, Prof. H.
Nettleship, J. T.
Neubauer, Dr. A.
Newton, Sir C. T.
Nicholson, Cecil
Nicholson, Dr. E.
Nicholson, E. B.
Noble, J. A.
Noel, Hon. Roden
O'Grady, Standish H.
Oman, C. W. C.
Patterson, Arthur J.
Paul, C. Kegan
Peacock, E.
Pearson, Prof. Karl
Pelham, Prof. H. F.
Peterson, Prof.
Phillips, Claude
Pinker, J. B.
Pollard, A. W.
Poole, R. S.
Postgate, Prof. J. P.
Powell, F. York
Raine, Canon J.
Ramsay, Prof. W. M.
Rashdall, Rev. H.
Reid, J. S.
Rhys, Prof. John
Rhys-Davids, Prof. T. W.
Richards, F. T.
Richards, H. P.
Richter, Dr. J.-P.
Robertson, Prof. Edmund
Robertson, Prof. Eric
Robinson, Rev. C. J.
Roby, H. J.
Rolph, J. F.
Rolleston, T. W.
Rudler, F. W.
Rye, Walter
Ryland, F.
Saintsbury, G.
Salmon, Prof. G.
Salmoné, Prof. H. A.
Sanday, Prof. W.
Sandys, Dr. J. E.
Sargent, Rev. H.
Sayce, Prof. A. H.
Sayle, C.
Secley, Prof. J. R.
Sharp, William
Shedlock, J. S.

Simcox, G. A.
Simcox, Miss Ed
Simpson, W.
Skeat, Prof. W.
Smith, G. Barne
Smith, Miss L. I
Sommer, H. Osk
Sonnenschein, P.
Stephens, H. Mo
Stephens, Prof. C
Stevenson, W. E
Stewart, J. A.
Stokes, Whitley
Strachey, G.
Strong, S. Arthu
Sully, James
Sweet, H.
Symonds, J. A.
Symons, Arthur
Taylor, Canon I.
Temple, Capt. R.
Temple, G. T.
Terrion de La
Thompson, E. M
Toynbee, Paget
Tozer, Rev. H. F
Tucker, R.
Twiss, Sir Trave
Tyler, Thomas
Tylor, E. B.
Vambéry, Prof.
Venables, Prece
Villari, Linda
Vinson, Prof. Ju
Wallace, Prof. W
Wallace, W.
Warren, Rev. F.
Waters, E. Chest
Watkins, Rev. M
Watson, W.
Watts, Theodore
Wayte, Rev. W.
Weale, W. H. Ja
Webster, Rev. W
Wedmore, Frede
West, Dr. E. W.
Westlake, Prof.
Westwood, Prof.
Wharton, E. R.
Wharton, H. T.
Wheeler, Stephe
Wickham, W.
Wicksteed, Rev.
Wilkins, Prof. A
Wilson, C. E.
Wilson, H. F.
Wollaston, A. N

PUBLISHED AT THE OFFICE, 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

To be had at all Railway Stations, and of all Newsvendors in Town and Country.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1006.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 15, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.	PAGE
RYLE AND JAMES'S PSALMS OF THE PHARISEES, by THOMAS TYLER	127
GORSE'S POETICAL WORKS OF BEDDOES, by ARTHUR SYMONS	128
FRASER'S DISRAELI AND HIS DAY, by J. A. HAMILTON	129
WALLACE'S RURAL ECONOMY AND AGRICULTURE OF AUSTRALIA, by WILLIAM WICKHAM	131
NEW NOVELS, by G. BARNETT SMITH	132
SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS	133
NOTES AND NEWS	133
ORIGINAL VERSE: "SHAIKH MUSLIH-UD-DIN SA'DI," by CHARLES SAYLE	134
THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY	134
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	135
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	136
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Did Tighath-Pileser III. carry into Captivity the Trans-Jordanic Tribes? by C. W. P. ORTON; Some Notes on the "Fairy Queen," Book I., by H. M. PERCIVAL; The Three Fragments of "The Romance of the Rose," by Prof. Skeat	136
THREE BOOKS ABOUT THE NEW "ARISTOTLE," by F. T. RICHARDS	137
THE NEW SANSKRIT MS. FROM MINGAI, by G. BÜHLER	138
THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891	139
CORRESPONDENCE:—
The Etymology of "Hatchment," by John O'Neill	139
SCIENCE NOTES	139
MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES	140
NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY	140
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	140
OBITUARIES: AUGUSTE VITU; HENRI LITOLFF	141
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	141

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S NEW BOOKS.

NEW NOVEL BY F. MARION CRAWFORD.
Just ready, 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

THE WITCH OF PRAGUE.

By F. MARION CRAWFORD.

NEW BOOK BY RUDYARD KIPLING.
Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

LIFE'S HANDICAP:

BEING STORIES OF MINE OWN PEOPLE.

By RUDYARD KIPLING, Author of "The Light that Failed," "Plain Tales from the Hills."

NEW BOOK BY THE AUTHOR OF "ROBBERY UNDER ARMS."

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d.

A SYDNEY SIDE SAXON.

By ROLF BOLDFREWOOD.

NEW WORK BY PROFESSOR HENRY SIDGWICK.

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 14s. net.

THE ELEMENTS OF POLITICS.

By HENRY SIDGWICK, Litt.D.

Knightbridge Professor of Moral Philosophy in the University of Cambridge, Author of "The Methods of Ethics," "The Principles of Economics," &c.

Professor Sidgwick has here attempted to expound, in as systematic a form as the subject-matter admits, the chief general considerations that enter into the rational discussion of political questions in modern States.

NEW VOLUME OF POEMS.

Just ready, crown 8vo, cloth, 7s. 6d.

DAPHNE, AND OTHER POEMS.

By FREDERICK TENNYSON,
Author of "Isles of Greece," "Sappho and Alceus."

NEW VOLUME OF THE "NATURE SERIES."

Just ready, 8vo, cloth, 4s. 6d.

THE RIGHT HAND: LEFT HANDEDNESS.

By Sir DANIEL WILSON, LL.D., F.R.S.E., President of the University of Toronto.

MACMILLAN & CO., LONDON.

LITERARY WORK desired with companionship by gentlewoman. Rapid writer. Invaluable to author and delicate lady.—ALPHA, Kensington House, Bury St. Edmunds.

PRIZE NOVELS of £200, £150, and £100, for Serial Publication, invited by the GLASGOW WEEKLY HERALD Proprietors.—Particulars of Competition given in the Weekly Herald or in the Glasgow Daily Herald.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELORS' QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HOUSEKEEPER, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, 63, Chancery Lane.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

PUBLISHERS send for printed manuscript of the "LAY OF THE SEAMLESS COAT OF JESUS CHRIST AND ORENDEL OF TRIER" to J. H. BECKER, 19, Munster Square, Regent's Park, N.W.—Fit for sale to the million. 384 lines. Here ye the ancient story here: "When sixteen years old, him the King Engel ruled in olden Trier; Two elder sons his heirs became, Orendel was the third one's name. His father gave, and sent him to seek as bride of noble breed King David's daughter, Virgin Bride."

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS. PROCEEDINGS of the GENERAL MEETINGS for SCIENTIFIC BUSINESS of the ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON for the Year 1891. Part II., containing the Papers read in March and April, with 13 Plates, price 12s. is now ready, and may be obtained at the Society's Office (3, Hanover Square, W.), at Messrs. LONGMANS, the Society's Publishers (Paternoster Row, E.C.), or through any Bookseller.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS. LONDON, 1st to 10th proximo. OFFICE: 20, Hanover Square, W. Patrons—H.R.H. the DUKE OF CONNAUGHT; H.H. ARCHDUKE RAINER. Hon. Presidents—MARQUIS of DUFFERIN and the EARL of LYTON. President of Organising Committees—The Right Hon. LORD HALSBURY. 500 Members in 35 countries, and 140 "papers" can be counted on, 9 Governments, and 36 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous of sending Delegates or of informing the Congress of their original work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers, to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. Leitner, Woking, who will supply the Programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members. Member's Subscription, £1; Non-Member's Subscription for Congress Publications, £3.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The CHAIR of GREEK is now vacant through the election of Professor Roberts, Principal of the University College, Aberystwyth. The Council will proceed to the appointment of the new PROFESSOR in September next. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before Tuesday, September 8th, 1891. For further information apply to, Ivor JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 4th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INDEPENDENT and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, October 5th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning Scholarships, &c., apply to University College, Cardiff, August 11th, 1891. Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in GEOLOGY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a DIRECTOR of the STAFF of TRAVELLING TEACHERS in TECHNICAL SUBJECTS, to be established under the provisions of the scheme of the Technical Instruction Committee, of the County of Monmouth. The stipend of the Director will be £350 per annum. Candidates for the post must send in their applications, together with testimonials and references, to the undersigned, on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8th, 1891. For further information, and for copies of the above scheme, apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of MINING. The stipend of the Professor will be £250 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN. The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical subjects for the County of Glamorgan:—

A LECTURER in MATHEMATICS and THEORETICAL MECHANICS.
A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY.
A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.
ONE OR TWO LECTURERS in MECHANICAL ENGINEERING

The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained. Ivor JAMES, Registrar. Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

HEAD MASTERSHIP. ROYAL INSTITUTION SCHOOL, LIVERPOOL.

The Committee will proceed in October next to fill the above vacancy caused by the appointment of Mr. E. H. Cully to the Head Mastership of Monmouth School. Salary £400 per annum, with a Capitation fee of £2 a boy. No house. Applications and testimonials should be sent not later than 15th SEPTEMBER, to the SECRETARY, who will supply necessary information.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD. Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge. Professors—Seeley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph, (Lowman, Louis Diel, Signor Garcia, Larrent, Ferrero, (Hurton Collins, &c. Full list and references on application. Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

TO BE OBTAINED AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

The NOVELS of JESSIE FOTHERGILL

ALDYTH.

(The Popular Edition now first issued will be ready immediately.)

THE "FIRST VIOLIN." BORDERLAND. HEALEY. KITH and KIN. PROBATION.

Each in uniform binding, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

ALSO

MADE or MARRED. ONE of THREE.

BY THE SAME AUTHOR.

Each in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 2s. 6d.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

By the Author of "Mr. Bazalgette's Agent."

VIOLET MOSES.

By LEONARD MERRICK.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

By the Author of "Her Own Counsel."

EVELYN'S CAREER.

By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney."

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

SO NEAR AKIN.

By M. A. BENGOUGH.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"So Near Akin" is a clever story, and if it is a first book we shall look forward with interest to its successor." Standard.

By the Author of "The Duke's Marriage."

The ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN

By JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The Alderman's Children" is throughout a sensible and well-executed story. Mr. Brinsley Richards is a deft hand both in construction of plot and in descriptive matter. His book is thoroughly enjoyable." Academy.

By the Author of "A Hurricane in Petticoats."

THE HALLETTS:

By LESLIE KEITH.

In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

New and Popular Editions at all Booksellers.

BY MARIE CORELL.

The Author of "A Romance of Two Worlds."

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY AN ANONYMOUS AUTHOR.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

By the Author of "Nancy."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

Forming the latest addition to BENTLEY'S FAVOURITE NOVELS.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

TEXTS and STUDIES: Contributions to BIBLICAL and PATRISTIC LITERATURE. Edited by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Christ's College, Cambridge.

NOW READY.

Vol. I., No. 1.—THE APOLOGY of ARISTIDES on BEHALF of the CHRISTIANS. Edited from a Syriac MS. with an Introduction and Translation by J. RENDEL HARRIS, M.A.; with an Appendix containing the main portion of the Original Greek Text, by J. ARMITAGE ROBINSON, B.D. Demy 8vo, 5s. net.

No. 2.—THE PASSION of PERPETUA. With an Appendix containing the Original Latin of the Acts of the Sicilian Martyrs. By the EDITOR. Demy 8vo, 4s. net.

No. 3.—THE LORD'S PRAYER in the EARLY CHURCH. By F. H. CHASE, B.D., Christ's College. Demy 8vo, 6s. net.

NEARLY READY.

No. 4.—THE FRAGMENTS of HERACLEON. By A. E. BROOKE, M.A., Fellow of King's College.

THE HISTORY of the LAW of PRESCRIPTION in ENGLAND. Being the Yorke Prize Essay of the University of Cambridge for 1890. By T. A. HERBERT, B.A., LL.B., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law. Demy 8vo, 10s.

NATURAL RELIGION in INDIA.

The Rede Lecture, delivered in the Senate House, on June 17, 1891, by Sir ALFRED LYALL, K.C.B., K.C.I.E. Cloth, 2s.; paper cover, 1s.

New Volumes of the Pitt Press Series.

CAESAR, DE BELLO CIVILI, LIB. I.

With Introduction, Notes, and Maps. By A. G. PESKETT, M.A. 3s.

"The pleasant anticipations with which an edition of Caesar by Mr. Peskett will be opened are not likely to be lessened when many notes are seen to bear the initials 'J. S. H.' Dr. Reid's school editions well exemplify the truth of maxima debetur puera reverentia. No less perfect Latin scholar could speak with the certainty and precision which produce the only lasting effect on a youthful learner. As heretofore, so in this work, his notes—grammatical, critical, and historical alike—are those of a master, and we only wish they were more numerous. Mr. Peskett's work will sustain his reputation as an editor. The introduction is concise, and gives an intelligible and connected account of the events of the epoch, while admitting the controversial nature of many of the data. The text again, which presents a difficult problem to an editor, is given in a form which, if not flawless, is sufficiently readable; an appendix on the text supplies the more important conflicting views. The notes, without being unduly long, give all that is required to make the text intelligible and interesting to learners." Athenaeum.

XENOPHON, CYROPAEDEIA.

Books VI.—VIII. With Notes, by the Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, M.A., LL.D. 5s. Books I.—II., 6s. Books III.—V., 5s.

"Dr. Holden's new volume of the Cyropaedia has all the characteristics of its predecessors. No more complete edition for school purposes could be conceived, and many ripe scholars will find much pleasant reading in the notes. The accuracy of all the apparatus supplied is little short of marvellous." Athenaeum.

THUCYDIDES.—Book VII. With

Notes, Maps, and Introduction by Rev. H. A. HOLDEN, LL.D. Price 5s.

LUCIAN.—MENIPPUS and TIMON.

With Notes and Introduction by E. C. MACKIE, M.A. [Shortly.]

MILTON'S ODE on the MORNING of CHRIST'S NATIVITY, L'ALLEGRO, IL PENSEROSO, and LYCIDAS. With Introduction, Notes, and Indexes, by A. WILSON VERITY, M.A., sometime Scholar of Trinity College, Cambridge. 2s. 6d. [Immediately.]

New Volumes of the Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges.

THE BOOK of EZEKIEL. By the Rev. A. B. DAVIDSON, D.D. [Nearly ready.]

THE PSALMS. Book I. Edited by the Rev. Professor KIRKPATRICK, B.D., Regius Professor of Hebrew in the University of Cambridge. 3s. 6d. [Now ready.]

New Volumes of the Smaller Cambridge Bible for Schools.

THE BOOK of JOSHUA. By J. S. BLACK, M.A. [Nearly ready.]

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING to ST. JOHN. By Rev. A. PLUMMER, D.D. With Map. 1s.

LONDON: C. J. CLAY & SONS,
CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE, AVE MARIA LANE.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c.

SECOND EDITION.

3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.
"One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE

By AVERY MACALPINE.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the dénouement."—Times.
"An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

LOW'S STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

At prices ranging from TWO to SIX SHILLINGS.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

Cloth gilt, 6s. each.

IN SILK ATTIRE.
A DAUGHTER of HETH.
THREE FEATHERS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
KILMENY.
SUNRISE.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition.)
CLARA VAUGHAN.
MARY ANERLEY.
CRIPPS THE CARRIER.
CHRISTOWELL.

By THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
TWO on a TOWER.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A LAODICEAN.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Crown 8vo volumes, various prices.

THE HUNDREDTH MAN. 6s.
THE LATE MRS. NULL. 6s.
THE BEEMAN of ORME. 5s.
ARDIS CLAVERDEN. 6s.
THE CASTING AWAY of Mrs. LECKS and Mrs. ALESHINE; and "The Dusantes" } bds., 2s.
THE MERRY CHANTER. (Illustrated.) 2s. 6d. } clo., 2s. 6d.

*• OTHER VOLUMES IN OCTOBER.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUG. 15, 1891.

No. 1006, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Psalms of the Pharisees, commonly called the Psalms of Solomon. Edited, with Introduction, Translation, and Notes, by Herbert Edward Ryle and Montague Rhodes James. (Cambridge: University Press.)

THE syndics of the Cambridge University Press deserve to be congratulated on the publication of this book. Hitherto the Psalms bearing the name of Solomon have been but little known in this country; yet to the student of the religious history of Israel they are of great importance, forming a link between the Old Testament and the New, and preceding the Christian era by only a short interval. In the present work the Greek text, newly revised, moreover, from all the MSS., is published for the first time in England. Of the two scholars whose names appear on the title, the first is Hulsean Professor of Divinity at Cambridge, and the second is Fellow and Divinity Lecturer of King's College.

As to the date of the Psalms of Solomon, Messrs. Ryle and James assent to the opinion, now commonly accepted, which places their composition generally at or about the dates of certain events in the history of Pompey, as there are allusions scarcely to be mistaken to circumstances connected with his invasion of Judea in B.C. 63, and his death in B.C. 48. When Pompey appears on the scene the princes Hyrcanus II. and Aristobulus II. are at war; Hyrcanus opens the gates of Jerusalem to the Roman commander, who finds the city prepared and adorned to receive him, and "he enters in as a father entereth into his sons' house, in peace" (viii. 19, 20). But the party of Aristobulus, occupying the stronghold of the Temple, make a determined resistance. Pompey, accordingly, brings the battering-ram to bear on the walls (ii. 1), and eventually succeeds in effecting a breach. Then the sacred enclosure was defiled by Gentile feet (ii. 2), and the blood of the inhabitants of Jerusalem poured out as unclean water (viii. 23). Further, though there are possibly some slight touches of poetical exaggeration in the passage, yet that Pompey's death in B.C. 48 is described seems sufficiently obvious when we read of the body pierced in Egypt, and contemptuously left to the buffeting of the waves, with none to bury it (ii. 30, 31). Noteworthy also, as tending to fix the date of the seventeenth Psalm—a psalm which is especially important on account of the Messianic prophecy it contains—is the allusion to the sending of Aristobulus and his family to Rome, to adorn Pompey's triumph: "In his wrath he sent them away even to the West. And the princes of the land he devoted to mocking, and spared them not" (xvii. 14).

To the question, Is the Greek text of these Psalms the original or a translation? the answer to be given is not perhaps quite so decisive as that respecting the time of their origin. But, though the high authority of Hilgenfeld is in favour of a Greek original, modern scholarship seems to incline towards the conclusion that they were written in Hebrew. This hypothesis affords a reasonable explanation of some very obscure passages, as, for example, ii. 29. As Messrs. Ryle and James observe, if the authorship of these Psalms is to be ascribed to a Pharisee, or Pharisees, residing in Jerusalem, the hypothesis of a Hebrew original naturally suggests itself. A collection of Psalms breathing hostility to the Hellenising Sadducees, and modelled after the pattern of the national Psalter, would be, in all probability, composed in Hebrew, and not in Greek or Aramaic.

For fuller evidence as to the Pharisaic origin of these Psalms the reader must be referred to the work under review. Two or three points only can be here indicated. The "righteousness" portrayed is "the righteousness of the Pharisees"—the δικαιοσύνη προσταγμάτων, xiv. 1. It consisted in great measure of deeds which carried out the rules, or avoided the violation of the ceremonial law. Thus:

"The righteous man maketh inquisition continually in his own house to the end that he may put away iniquity. With his trespass offering he maketh atonement for that wherein he erreth unwittingly, and with fasting he afflicteth his soul" (iii. 8, 9).

Another matter of great interest is the contrast between the doctrines of the Pharisees and Sadducees concerning predestination and free will. This contrast, if we trust Josephus (Ant. xviii. 1, § 2)—and his testimony in this respect seems to me credible—we must refer to the contact of Greek thought with Judaism; a contact, of which, in my judgment, the first conspicuous monument is the Book of Ecclesiastes. It would appear that the Pharisees were involved in the same difficulty as the Stoics with respect to the reconciliation of predestination with moral responsibility. In one place Josephus tells us (Bell. Jud. ii. 8, § 14) that "the Pharisees ascribe all things to Fate and God," yet elsewhere (Ant. xiii. 5, § 9) that, according to their doctrine, it rests in the power of man to perform or not to perform some actions. On the other hand, the Sadducees, like the Epicureans, maintained the perfect freedom of the will, and refused altogether to recognise Fate or predestination. Now there is in these Psalms a verse (ix. 7) the translation and interpretation of which may reasonably go far towards making us accept or reject the theory of the Pharisaic origin. Curiously enough, Messrs. Ryle and James give one view in their translation, and another in an appended note. This is the verse according to the translation:

"O God, our works are in our choice, yea in the power of our own soul: to do either righteousness or iniquity in the works of our hands."

Hitzig, taking a similar view of the passage, maintained that the Psalms were not Pharisaic, but Sadducean. But in the note the present editors pronounce in favour of the following interpretation, as probably true: "Our deeds are in the choice (of God), and at the same time we have power," &c. The Greek text, as translated, is:

Ὁ θεός, τὰ ἔργα ἡμῶν ἐν ἐκλογῇ καὶ ἐξουσίᾳ τῆς ψυχῆς ἡμῶν, τοῦ ποιῆσαι, κ.τ.λ.

The interpretation is based on a text differing merely in the absence of the iota subscript beneath the final letter of ἐξουσία. Authority is cited in favour of this reading, but, apart from any authority, there need be little difficulty in allowing the change. It is pointed out with much force that ἐκλογῇ is used in one other passage in these Psalms (xviii. 6), and seven times in the New Testament, but always of God's choice, not man's.

The remark also is very pertinent, that "four of the seven passages are in the Epistle to the Romans, the work of one who had been a Pharisee of the Pharisees, and whose evidence is therefore of importance in this connexion."

And as to the contradiction involved, our authors observe

"that in Pirge Aboth iii. 24 (ed. Taylor, p. 73), we have the same paradox very similarly expressed. 'Everything is foreseen; and free-will is given. And the world is judged by grace; and everything is according to work.'

I doubt, however, the probability of the sense being that God chooses the deeds of men. I should rather take the words in question (ἐν ἐκλογῇ), in agreement with the New Testament usage, as referring to the election of persons, and as meaning "in accordance with our election"—a sense which, grammatically, would be quite tenable. The seventeenth and eighteenth verses tell of the choice of the seed of Abraham above all nations, and of God's unceasing purpose towards his people. At the eighteenth verse, Messrs. Ryle and James have taken the liberty of departing from the Greek (οὐ καταπαύσῃ εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα), and of giving a translation which is, I venture to think, indefensible, "and thou wilt abide (among us) for ever." They say, however,

"the reading of all the MSS. can only bear one meaning. Thou wilt not desist for ever—desist, that is, from setting thy name upon us, or from choosing us."

Whether we like the doctrine or not is a distinct question; but this psalm seems to contain a presage of St. Paul's great argument in the eighth and ninth chapters of the Romans. Rom. viii. 30 may be regarded almost as an expansion of the words just discussed.

It need not be in any way asserted that the Jews derived from Greek sources either the doctrine of a future life or that of the resurrection; but there are strong reasons for recognising Greek influence on both the language and the thought of Jewish and even Christian eschatology. So great indeed was this influence that we find in the New Testament such philosophical terms as παλιγγενεσία (Matt. xix. 28) and ἀποκατάστασις, words used no doubt to express ideas to some extent different, but which must not be regarded as having lost entirely their old meaning. The last of these words is found in Acts iii. 21 ("the times of restoration of all things," R.V.)—a place which has puzzled the commentators, but which becomes more intelligible when brought into relation with the doctrine of the cycles, and the restoring or bringing back again in due order in the next cycle all things which have happened in this. And though there was some difference of belief among the Stoics, it may be regarded as the more orthodox opinion that the souls of the good and virtuous would survive in a state of happiness till the end of the cycle—an existence which might well be called αἰώνιος—while the souls of the wicked would endure only for a shorter time in punishment, and would then perish. This accords entirely with the teaching of Ps. Sol. xiii. 9, 10: "The life of the righteous is for ever (εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα). But sinners shall be taken away into destruction; and the memorial of them shall no more be found." And it can scarcely be alleged that there is any discrepancy when it is said (xiv. 6), "Their inheritance is Hades, and darkness and destruction: and they shall not be found in the day of mercy for the righteous." On iii. 13, our authors observe:

"This passage and the whole context contemplate the annihilation of the 'sinner.' For him there is no hope, no mercy, now or hereafter. . . . Our psalmist nowhere favours the view that any existence worthy of the name awaited the 'sinner.'"

Elsewhere, with some inconsistency, resulting perhaps from the dual authorship, Messrs. Ryle and James say:

"The future condition of the wicked is stated in terms which leave the reader in doubt whether a doctrine of annihilation is intended."

This last remark might perhaps be made with regard to the teaching of the New Testament, where, however, we find expressions agreeing, in form at least, with the doctrine of the Stoics, such as ἀπόλλυμι, ἀπόλωα, θλέρω. As to the difference between the belief of the Pharisees and that of the Sadducees, cf. Acts xxiii. 6-8, Matt. xxii. 23, &c.

But the Psalter of Solomon derives its greatest interest and importance from the Messianic prophecy contained in Psalms xvii. and xviii. And here comes before us the question as to the true import of χριστός κύριος in xvii. 36. In treating this question it is perhaps scarcely possible to put entirely aside all prepossession and prejudice, though it is exceedingly important that the documentary evidence should be dealt with in a purely scientific spirit, without reference to what may or may not be otherwise objectively true. Messrs. Ryle and James say—

"The Messiah of this Psalm is not divine. Divinely appointed, divinely raised up, endowed with divine gifts he is; but he is nothing more than man. Neither of supernatural birth nor of pre-existence in the bosom of God or among the angels of God do we find any trace. If he is called Lord (? xvii. 36), the word is only used of him as it might be of an earthly lord. However high the conception of his moral character and spiritual qualifications, he is man, and man only."

This is sufficiently definite and categorical; but, on the ἐν ἀνάξει χριστοῦ αὐτοῦ of xvii. 6, which is translated "when he shall bring back his anointed,"* there is a somewhat more hesitating utterance. This "bringing again" might be taken, it is said, to "indicate a belief on the part of the writer in a doctrine which we know to have been anterior to his time—the pre-existence of the Messiah." "The Messianic ideas of the xvii. Psalm, however, show no trace of any mystical doctrine of the kind, if we except the difficult phrase χριστός κύριος."

Of this word κύριος (xvii. 36) it is said by Messrs. Ryle and James that "of course" it does not represent Jehovah. I fail to recognise the necessary inference. Prof. Robertson Smith, in his article "Messiah" in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, observes:

"The great Judean prophets of the eighth century connect the Salvation of Israel with the rise of a Davidic king, full of Jehovah's Spirit, in whom all the energies of Jehovah's transcendental kingship are, as it were, incarnate. . . . This conception, however, is not one of the constant elements of prophecy; and the later prophecies of Isaiah take a different shape, looking for the decisive interposition of Jehovah . . . without the instrumentality of a kingly deliverer."

Under these circumstances—and apart altogether from other considerations—it is not very difficult to understand how "Jehovah" itself might be in time regarded as a Messianic name, especially when these glorious predictions (Isa. xl.-lxvi.), not having been fulfilled on the return from the Captivity, were thrown forward and connected with the Messiah's advent. And it is worthy of notice that in the verses immediately preceding Ps. Sol. xvii. 36 there are conspicuous references to passages in the later Isaiah, in the description of the Messiah's transcendent glory.

The assertion, which has been repeatedly made, that for χριστός κύριος we ought to read χριστός κυριού is, to a certain extent, met by the fact that the former expression is found in the LXX. translation of Lamentations iv. 20, concerning which Messrs. Ryle and James observe that, though it occurs here by mistake, yet the "mistake points to the currency of the expression." Of much greater importance is the occurrence of the same expression in Luke ii. 11, "For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord (χριστός κύριος)."^{*} Messrs. Ryle and James remark on the interesting "similarity in phraseology between our Psalms and 'the Songs' in Luke i., ii." But, as may be seen from comparing with a Greek concordance to the New Testament the "Index Verborum in Psalmis Salomonis" which Messrs. Ryle and James supply, the similarity goes a good way beyond the first and second chapters of Luke, and may be said not only to include the Gospel of Luke and the Acts, but generally to be co-extensive with the influence of Paulinism. Certainly, thus tested, the relation of the Psalms of Solomon to the first and second Gospels appears much less close. The suggestion thus emerges, that these Psalms give evidence of the pre-existing influences which, to a great extent at least, moulded Paulinism, and formed its cradle. From this point of view there is little difficulty in understanding the use of κύριος as a pre-eminent divine name in Ps. Sol. xvii. 36. The Pauline doctrine with respect to this name as a Messianic title is shown not only by what is said in Phil. ii. 9-11, of the "granting" of "the name which is above every name" as a mark of surpassing exaltation—language which, coming from a Jew and a Pharisee like St. Paul, could have but one meaning—but also by various other quotations and allusions. It is worthy of notice, too, in connexion with what is said above, that the passage in the Philippians contains a quotation from Isa. xlv. 23.*

* Other translators have understood the expression differently, evidently connecting κυριός with δύσσω. Thus Wellhausen: "wenn sein Gesalbter die Herrschaft antritt." Pick (American), Presbyterian Review, October, 1883—"in the kingdom of his anointed."

On the supposition of a Hebrew original, to reproduce that original from the translation is not an easy matter. In Ps. Sol. xvii. 14, ἐν ὀργῇ κάλλους αὐτοῦ is pretty evidently wrong. It is an ingenious conjecture of Messrs. Ryle and James that an original reading יָפִי had been by an easy error changed into יָפִי "his beauty." But, as a matter of fact, the phrase employed in the Biblical books is יָפִי; the dual not being used in this connexion. Then, in the account given of καὶ συντελεσθήσονται, ii. 26, there appears to be, to say the least of it, some haziness about the force of the Vau conversive. But, notwithstanding these or other faults, the work is a valuable contribution to English biblical and theological literature.

THOMAS TYLER.

The Poetical Works of Thomas Lovell Beddoes.
Edited, with a Memoir, by Edmund Gosse. In 2 vols. (Dent.)

No one who cares to haunt the byways of English literature can fail to be grateful to Mr. Gosse for his careful and excellent edition of the poetical works of Thomas Lovell Beddoes. With the strange fortune that always accompanied him, in life and in death, Beddoes has not merely escaped the indiscriminate applause which he would never have valued, but he has remained a bibliographical rather than a literary rarity. Few except the people who collect first editions—not, as a rule, the public for a poet—have had the chance of possessing Death's Jest-Book (1850) and the Poems (1851.) At last Beddoes has been made accessible, thanks to the learned and sympathetic industry of Mr. Gosse, who has never employed to better purpose his fine talent for literary discovery and revival. In his first and discriminating introduction Mr. Gosse has told for the first time the real story of Beddoes' death—that suicide so much in the casual and determined manner of one of his own characters. The two volumes contain, besides "The Improvisatore," published during Beddoes' lifetime, and everything to be found in Kelsall's collected edition, a few unpublished poems.

* Some facts relating to the use of κύριος in St. Luke, which considerations of space forbid me to reproduce, were given in a communication of mine to the ACADEMY, July 13, 1878, on "Christ's title 'the Lord' in the Third Gospel."

"The power of the man is immense and irresistible." Browning's emphatic phrase comes first to the memory, and remains always the most appropriate word of eulogy. Beddoes has been rashly called a great poet. I do not think he was a great poet, but he was, in every sense of the word, an astonishing one. Read these lines, and remember that they were written just at that stagnant period (1821—1826) which comes between the period of Keats, Shelley, and Byron, and the period of Browning and Tennyson. It is a murder who speaks:

"I am uncouled, dishumanised, uncreated;
My passions swell and grow like brutes conceived;
My feet are fixing roots, and every limb
Is billowy and gigantic, till I seem
A wild, old, wicked mountain in the air:
And the abhorred conscience of this murder,
It will grow up a lion, all alone,
A mighty-maned, grave-mouthed prodigy,
And lair him in my caves: and other thoughts,
Some will be snakes, and bears, and savage wolves,
And when I lie tremendous in the desert,
Or abandoned sea, murderers and idiot men
Will come to live upon my rugged sides,
Die, and be buried in me. Now it comes;
I break, and magnify, and lose my form,
And yet I shall be taken for a man,
And never be discovered till I die."

How much this has of the old, splendid audacity of the Elizabethans! How unlike timid modern verse! Beddoes is always large, impressive; the greatness of his aim gives him a certain claim on respectful consideration. That his talent achieved itself, or ever could have achieved itself, he himself would have been the last to affirm. But he is a monumental failure, more interesting than many facile triumphs.

The one important work which Beddoes actually completed, Death's Jest-Book, is nominally a drama in five acts. All the rest of his work, except a few lyrics and occasional poems, is also nominally dramatic. But there never was anything less dramatic in substance than this mass of admirable poetry in dialogue. Beddoes' genius was essentially lyrical: he had imagination, the gift of style, the mastery of rhythm, a strange choiceness and curiosity of phrase. But of really dramatic power he had nothing. He could neither conceive a coherent plot, nor develop a credible situation. He had no grasp on human nature, he had no conception of what character might be in men and women, he had no faculty of expressing emotion convincingly. Constantly you find the most beautiful poetry where it is absolutely inappropriate, but never do you find one of those brief and memorable phrases—words from the heart—for which one would give much beautiful poetry. To take one instance, an Arab slave wishes to say that he has caught sight of a sail nearing the coast. And this is how he says it:

"I looked abroad upon the wide old world,
And in the sky and sea, through the same clouds,
The same stars saw I glistening, and nought else,
And as my soul sighed unto the world's soul,
Far in the north a wind blackened the waters,
And, after that creating breath was still,
A dark speck sat on the sky's edge: as watching

Upon the heaven-girt border of my mind
The first faint thought of a great deed arise,
With force and fascination I drew on
The wished sight, and my hope seemed to stamp
Its shade upon it. Not yet is it clear
What, or from whom, the vessel."

In scenes which aim at being passionate, one sees the same inability to be natural. What we get is always literature; it is never less than that, nor more than that. It is never frank, uncompromising nature. The fact is, that Beddoes wrote from the head, collectively, and without emotion, or without inspiration, save in literature. All Beddoes' characters speak precisely the same language, express the same desires; all in the same way startle us by their ghostly remoteness from flesh and blood. "Man is tired of being merely human," Siegfried says, in Death's Jest-Book, and Beddoes may be said to have grown tired of humanity before he ever came to understand it.

Looked at from the normal standpoint, Beddoes' idea of the drama was something wildly amateurish. As a practical playwright he would be beneath contempt; as a writer of the regulation poetic drama he cannot be considered successful. But what he aimed at was something peculiar to himself—a sort of spectral dramatic fantasia. He would have admitted his obligations to Webster and Tournour, to all the macabre Elizabethan work; he would have admitted that his foundations were based on literature, not on life; but he would have claimed, and claimed justly, that he had produced, out of many strange elements, something which has a place apart in English poetry. Death's Jest-Book is perhaps the most morbid poem in our literature. There is not a page without its sad, grotesque, gay, or abhorrent imagery of the tomb. A slave cannot say that a lady is asleep without turning it into a parable of death:

"Sleeping, or feigning sleep,
Well done of her: 'tis trying on a garb
Which she must wear, sooner or later, long:
'Tis but a warmer, lighter death."

Not Baudelaire was more amorous of corruption; not Poe was more spellbound by the scent of graveyard earth. So Beddoes has written a new Dance of Death, in poetry; has become the chronicler of the praise and ridicule of Death. "Tired of being merely human," he has peopled a play with confessed phantoms. It is natural that these eloquent speakers should pass us by with their words, that they should fail to move us by their sorrows or their hates: they are not intended to be human, except, indeed, in the wizard humanity of Death.

I have said already that the genius of Beddoes is not dramatic, but lyrical. What was really most spontaneous in him—nothing was quite spontaneous—was the impulse of song-writing. And it seems to me that he is really most successful, not in the delirious burlesque of "The Median Supper," but in sweet and graceful lyrics like this "Dirge"—so much more than "half in love with easeful death."

"If thou wilt ease thine heart
Of love and all its smart,
Then sleep, dear, sleep;
And not a sorrow

Hang any tear on your eyelashes;
Lie still and deep,
Sad soul, until the sea-wave washes
The rim o' the sun to-morrow,
In eastern sky.

"But wilt thou cure thine heart
Of love and all its smart,
Then die, dear, die;
'Tis deeper, sweeter,
Than on a rose-bank to lie dreaming
With folded eye:
And then alone, amid the beaming
Of love's stars, thou'lt meet her
In eastern sky."

A beautiful lyricist, a writer of charming, morbid, and magnificent poetry in dramatic form, Beddoes will survive to students, not to readers, of English poetry, somewhere in the neighbourhood of Ebenezer Jones and Charles Wells. Charles Wells was certainly more of a dramatist, a writer of more sustained and Shakespearian blank verse; Ebenezer Jones had certainly a more personal passion to express in his rough and tumultuous way; but Beddoes, not less certainly, had more of actual poetical genius than either. And in the end only one thing counts—actual poetical genius.

ARTHUR SYMONS.

Disraeli and his Day. By Sir William Fraser.
(Kegan Paul & Co.)

THERE is always a certain hardihood, not to say improvidence, in publishing a volume of anecdotes: it must impoverish the raconteur and may fail to enrich the author. Told after dinner, or skilfully set in an address to a Primrose Habitation, anecdotes of Disraeli have always a certain vogue, and for a unique mot, or even an "artist's proof" of one, the price is high. But an anecdote in print is like an air on a hurdy-gurdy: it has fallen from grace. To a nice taste, and this ought to hold equally good with the teller and his hearers, a published anecdote becomes ipso facto "unfit for publication." A very little of "grouse in the gunroom" is enough, and when a man passes from anecdote to authorship he must forswear his most cherished reminiscences; whoever else may find table talk in his book, he must not.

Still, there are some whose voracious appetites, indiscriminating and keen, can and do devour books of stories and books of jests from cover to cover. To such this volume will appeal. Encouraged by the not inconsiderable success of his book upon Wellington, Sir William Fraser has published a second instalment of his recollections, which, in spite of grave faults, is often amusing and sometimes fresh. He may perhaps be acquitted of prodigality as a private wit, since his store of recollections is still immense. "That is Another Story" is a bid that he can make for our gratitude (p. 245) as well as Mr. Kipling, and among his "favours to come" he promises tales of Samuel Warren, Tom Moore, Napoleon III., Thackeray, Dickens, Gustave Doré, Lytton, Emile Augier, Dumas père, O'Neill, Regnier, Macready, Kean, Mme. Vestris, and Count Rossi. Let us possess our souls in patience; they "deserve collectively a volume" (p. 442) and they are to have it.

A commonplace book is generally the refuge of a commonplace mind, but, as appears from Sir William's own passing accounts of himself, his mind is not commonplace. He keeps no note book; he writes from memory alone, of high affairs of state, quorum pars magna fuit. It is true that he stoops to trivial topics and records matters which charity—charity to himself even more than to his victims—would have discreetly passed by. He tells us how Disraeli wore plush waistcoats and gold chains, rings over his gloves and stays under his coat. He chronicles Lord Derby's high shirt-collars and Lord Melbourne's tartan neckcloth; Lord Derby's light pantaloons and the Prince Consort's decent trousers of Oxford mixture, of whom he says reverently, "he certainly reached the ideal as regards appearance." He records that Palmerston was "a very coarse feeder," apparently because he could drink House of Commons tea; that Disraeli ate sparingly, or, as he paraphrases it, "wisely economised his interior space"; and that Lord Huntly, who was poor, went to balls, as he believes, for the sake of the supper, which, if the supper was good, was a very sensible thing for even a rich man to do. But Sir William's gifts are not all lavished on the topics of a tailor or a pastry-cook. There are anecdotes of his own extraordinary memory, his exceptional presence, and his fund of pungent criticism. He could quote passages from a striking speech within an hour or two of having heard it (p. 395), and foretell to Disraeli the ignominious withdrawal of a hostile motion, upon which Disraeli himself was so certainly anticipating defeat that at the very moment of the prophecy he was arranging the details of his resignation. Looking forward to the general election of 1880 he could foresee inevitable disaster, and looking back upon it he declares oracularly that the constituencies were induced to support Mr. Gladstone by the expenditure of enormous sums, which the Russian Government supplied for the purpose of dislodging its enemy, Lord Beaconsfield. So witty was he that he fastened upon Macaulay, whom he only heard once, the immortal sarcasm, "He is like Palmerston with a cold in his head," and crystallised the true inwardness of the "fixed points" of the Reform Resolutions of 1867 in the instant exclamation "gooseberry bushes." The obscurity of these gems surpasses even the most darkling brilliancy of Mr. George Meredith. Sir William lived on terms of such intimacy with Disraeli that the great man did not consider it necessary on occasion to conceal how very much he could be bored by his friend (p. 150); yet the intimacy appears at other times to have been of such a kind that Sir William was almost affected when Disraeli spoke to him in the street (p. 320), and that Disraeli was only formally polite when Sir William spoke to him in a club (p. 377). One of the best things recorded in the book is this:

"Disraeli said, 'When I meet a man whose name I cannot remember, I give myself two minutes; then, if it be a hopeless case, I always say, And how is the old complaint?'"

It would be interesting to know whether Sir William Fraser's "old complaint" was not now and then the object of Disraeli's tenderest solicitude.

In the matter of anecdotic accuracy Sir William is rather a purist and stickler for correctness. None the less there are several points in which he would have done well to have trusted his memory less implicitly. Dr. Kenealy sat for Stoke, not for Stafford; the Under-Secretary of State for India is Sir John, not Sir R. Gorst. Brougham's paragraph in the Times, which betrayed the King's dismissal of Lord Melbourne, did not begin but ended with the words, "the Queen has done it all." Sir William refers (p. 37) to Disraeli's terrible passage:

"Some lines, for example, upon friendship, written by Mr. Canning and quoted by the right honourable gentleman! The theme! the poet! the speaker! what a felicitous combination! the effect in debate must be overwhelming, and I am sure, were it addressed to me, all that would remain for me would be thus publicly to congratulate the right honourable gentleman, not only on his ready memory, but on his courageous conscience."

But the version which he gives is a paraphrase that would not have been creditable even to the Hansard that he derides. Considering that Sir William piques himself upon his memory and observes elsewhere "so perfect was his style that I found little difficulty in repeating many of his sentences word for word immediately after hearing them delivered," it is odd that in quoting one of Disraeli's best known and most highly polished passages he should have so signally missed the point and denuded the quotation of every vestige of style. These things need careful revision. Still more care should be given to his English. "The characters of Cobden and Bright were nearly so different as those of Don Quixote and Sancho Panza" is a construction which occurs on nearly every page of this book and in none of any other. It would be well in future to resort to the good offices of some friend who is acquainted with the commoner rules of English composition and the standard books of references for contemporary politics.

There is a downright partisanship about Sir William Fraser, truceless and unceasing, that would be amusing if it were not occasionally so brutal. To Lord John Russell he is bitter; for Lord Palmerston he has hardly a good word; but it is for Mr. Bright that he reserves his most acrid hatred. At the mention of this name his gorge rises—bile tumet jecur. He takes leave at once of good feeling and good sense. Having elaborately praised Cobden as "a born logician. Like all masters of that great art he scorned to be base; a man who will knowingly use false arguments is quite capable of stealing, if he thought he would not be detected,"

he proceeds—

"a greater contrast could hardly have been seen to him than Bright. Bright was believed by some to be honest because he was fat and rude. A plain-spoken man, that is to say, one who has that name, is in nine cases out of ten utterly insincere; his roughness is a brutal attempt to cover his deceit. There can be no greater mistake than to suppose that Bright was, as Cobden was, a power in the House of Commons; he was nothing of the sort, to speak, of course, of his best days; once in office he sank into obscurity."

This astounding passage demolishes at once Sir William Fraser's reputation for trustworthy criticism. He goes on:

"Bright had been away from the House for upwards of two years. On coming back he looked particularly neat and smart, as a man does who has not had on his best clothes for some time; his hair was very carefully brushed. On that evening a debate took place on the genial subject of turnpikes. . . . Turnpikes, I suspect, were a subject in which Disraeli was not deeply versed. Anticipating this, Bright rose, and in a most offensive manner recommended Disraeli to listen to the sage counsel of the Baronet, who had just sat down. Disraeli followed, alluded to the arguments of the Baronet, and then said, 'I now come to the member for Birmingham.' Bright immediately 'pavonered' himself, threw his shoulders back, and obviously anticipated that Disraeli would say in the conventional manner, 'whom we are all glad to see back again.' Disraeli had no intention of the sort. He placed his glass in his right eye, looked at Bright, and calmly said, in a tone of depreciation which cannot be described, 'of whom we have not seen much of late.' Bright turned livid. I never saw a human countenance express passion so deeply. We of course laughed."

To any one who remembers why Bright had been away from the house it will be obvious that nothing could have been in worse taste than this scene except the record of it now.

But in spite of its note of "personal journalism," its chronicles of dead and gone hairdressing and tailoring, and its superfluous résumés of defunct debates, this book contains many excellent stories, and of these the only criticism is quotation. Lord Henry Bentinck, "almost if not quite the best whist player in England," was visiting Lord Jersey at Middleton Park. A whist party was made up for him with the three best players in the county, who had been specially invited to meet him.

"After half an hour or so Lady Jersey, approaching the table, said 'Lord Henry, how do you get on? How do they treat you?' He turned to her and said 'Lady Jersey! what do you call this game? It is very amusing.'"

Something similar is this of General Foley:

"One of the legends that linger within the gloomy chambers of Dublin Castle is that Captain Foley, who had been for many years on the staff of successive Lords Lieutenant, was asked at dinner by His Excellency 'What regiment are you in, Foley?' 'Upon my word, Sir, I don't know: my servant is in the room: I have no doubt that he knows.'"

Nothing of their kind could be better than these three. The first is of Sir Fitzroy Kelly's readiness when called upon to speak against time:

"The 'Whip' of the day handed him a slip of paper—he was seated on the front Opposition bench—on the paper was written, 'Speak for twenty minutes.' He instantly rose, and with a dignity and impressiveness never surpassed, raising his hand to heaven, exclaimed, 'My grey hairs forbid me to be silent!'"

Sir Erskine May is the hero of the next:

"Speaker Denison was not conspicuous for his readiness of resource in dealing with the very complicated rules and practices of the House of Commons. A difficult question on order arose. Speaker Denison, as was his wont, touched the senior clerk, Sir Thomas Erskine May. Sir Thomas, rising, was asked by the Speaker what on earth he recommended him to do. The legend tells that Sir Thomas whispered, 'I recommend you, Sir, to be very cautious'; then vanished through the door at the back of the chair."

Lord Adolphus FitzClarence was very happy in the following retort. Being in France in attendance on the Queen, who was visiting Louis Philippe, he met the Prince de Joinville, who, as a French admiral, professed to be patriotically bellicose towards England in particular.

"He said to Lord Adolphus in a friendly manner, 'You, my Lord, and I are seamen—I have had one dream in life: to command a smart French frigate, and to lay my own alongside of an English ship of the same strength for twenty minutes.' Lord Adolphus replied in a perfect spirit of courtesy, and with the quickness of his family, 'I think, Sir, that ten would be enough.'"

This is the true British note, and, perhaps, by itself, would have justified the publication of this book.

J. A. HAMILTON.

The Rural Economy and Agriculture of Australia and New Zealand. By Robert Wallace. (Sampson Low.)

PROF. WALLACE has adopted a judicious plan in the arrangement of his book. He gives first a diary of his travels in Australia, Tasmania, and New Zealand in the year 1889, and then a series of special chapters on the various agricultural industries of those countries. Strange to say, there is no special chapter on the cereals; it would seem, therefore, that they are the least important of all the agricultural productions of these colonies. He tells us that in Victoria the uncertainty of climate is so great that a really good agricultural season does not occur oftener than about once in seven years, and much of the land capable of cultivation is best under pasture; again, in Queensland, wheat is so liable to suffer from rust that a crop can only be depended on to ripen in a year now and then—viz., about once in seven years. It is usually cut green and made into hay. At Oamaru, near Christchurch, in New Zealand, the author visited a large farm of beautiful rich brown alluvium, on which sixty bushels of wheat had been grown to the acre; but this must be very exceptional. On the whole, from the little that Mr. Wallace tells us of wheat-growing in Australasia, our farmers at home have little to fear from that branch of agricultural industry in that quarter of the globe. Their great antagonists are the sheep-farmers of New Zealand. Our author gives a full and valuable account of the frozen mutton trade, the vast development of which is such that whereas in 1883, the first year of which we have any statistics, the number of cwt. exported was 86,994, it had grown in 1890 to 1,365,689. The profits to the New Zealand sheep-farmer in frozen mutton is 2d. per lb., a profit so satisfactory that it has been the means of raising the value of land from 25 to 30 per cent. But in Queensland a return of 1d. per lb. would yield a handsome profit to the up-country runholder, for at the present time mutton can be produced at a much smaller cost in Australia than in New Zealand. For various reasons it is much more difficult to freeze beef than mutton. This is, however, less to be regretted, as mutton is the natural product of the Australian colonies, except where cattle are required to trample down new country, or in some few districts which are unwholesome to sheep.

The subject of sheep farming necessarily leads to that of pasture. Our author has some interesting remarks on grass growing in Australasia. A number of the best native grasses of Australia have been eaten down by sheep, and more recently by rabbits, and so prevented from seeding, with the result that they have disappeared from fenced-in pastures in which they were formerly abundant, though they may be seen still by the roadsides.

In Australia hay may be said to make itself.

"The dry season of the year is a decided advantage to Australian flocks, provided it is not too long continued. After the growth for the season, which follows the advent of the rains, all grass left on the ground in November is dried up by the heat of the sun, and though not stored is preserved in good condition as hay where it stands, and is what the sheep live and do well upon till the rains come again next season. By this time the growth of the former year is pretty well cleared away, and the surface left smooth on land fully stocked with sheep. In our own islands, grass left over at the end of the grass-growing season has the soluble portion or strength washed out of it by the succeeding winter rains soon after it withers. When summer rains fall out of season in Australia, they wash away the strength of the grass, and sheep fall off quickly in condition. Any young growth which comes is quickly burnt up in the hot sun."

It is remarkable that in Australia, and especially in New Zealand, British grasses, like rabbits, increase their vitality and thrive and grow more luxuriantly. Their seeds are more perfectly developed than at home, with the result that New Zealand grass seeds have a superior appearance, and have a good name in our home markets. With grass seeds many injurious plants have been introduced. Thistles of various species have spread at a marvellous rate, and continue to grow with great vigour.

"In many parts the thistle plague is only second to the rabbit plague. Nevertheless, in New Zealand, under certain exceptional circumstances, thistles are looked upon with favour. It has been demonstrated that if they fully occupy the land for a time, they are certain to disappear in a few years, leaving the soil in a much better state of fertility than before. Their deep fleshy roots go down into a heavy clay soil and open it up for the admission of air and water." Mr. Wallace asserts that "above and beyond all this, the soil is improved by being densely covered with foliage and obscured from the sun. Although the fact is perhaps not widely known in Britain, the surface shading by a bulky root crop is one of the important features in the preparation of the land for a good grain crop. After a good crop of thistles has grown and has disappeared, either grass or grain will thrive admirably. So much was this the case in some parts of New Zealand that thistle seed has been bought at high prices, and sown as a means of breaking in land for cultivation; but thistle seed is now so abundant that the practice is unnecessary."

Thistles when cut green make excellent silage.

Sweetbriar is another hurtful importation, and Lithospermum arvense, the English corn-gromwell, grows so luxuriantly that, in some places in Australia, it is necessary to fallow arable land every third year, to get rid of it. In parts of South Australia common bracken grows abundantly; the only way to keep it under is to take two or three successive crops of wheat from the same soil. There is a chapter on the rabbit plague. The author considers the worst of it to be over, still, the New Zealand and Australian Land Company are spending from £8,000 to £10,000 a year in killing rabbits.

Prof. Wallace visited the vineyards of St. Hubert, the creation of Mr. Hubert de Castella, whose pleasant little work, Notes d'un Vigneron Australien, published in 1882, was noticed in the ACADEMY. The vineyards occupy 260 acres, in which thirty men are constantly employed, being paid 15s. a week, with food and an unfurnished room. These do not seem high wages for what is somewhat in the nature of skilled labour, and we doubt the men being better off than the labourers in our own hop gardens, who for almost every operation receive extra pay, and can make extra money by task work.

One of the serious drawbacks to colonial advancement is the extortionate charges of the middleman. According to Prof. Wallace, these "social parasites" sprang into existence at a time of great prosperity, when the large landowners as squatters were making so much money that they were glad to employ agents to do their business in the towns. These men gradually got a complete control over business, until bad times came and profits fell. They kept the upper hand, and exacted the same commission as in the prosperous days. Squatters, like farmers in our own country, cannot combine effectually, and, our author states, are deliberately robbed of their property by agents living in towns, who band themselves together and pass regulations and resolutions against which the unfortunate producer is powerless. Possibly the middleman may have something to say in self-defence. The analytical chemist, who professes to deal with the nature and capacity of soils, also comes under the lash of our author. In his opinion a farmer had much better carry out simple manurial experiments while his crops are growing, than go to the expense of a worse than doubtful analytical test. He is probably right.

The condition of small owners, even in the colonies, is not all that certain doctrinaires would have us believe. Prof. Wallace writes:

"When the pinch comes, the small occupier—even of his own land, so-called—is found to be hard up (if he is not supported by some larger owner, for whom he can work, and thereby earn the means to purchase his independence from the store-keeper and money-lender). This fact must hang like a millstone about the necks of those who advocate a universal system of small freeholds."

Prof. Wallace has undertaken a large and serious task, but he is thoroughly fitted for it and has fulfilled it well. He is always sensible and intelligible, free alike from pedantry and affectation, and we cannot doubt that his book will be widely read. There is much in it to interest the general reader, but all who are concerned with the Australasian colonies, or with agriculture everywhere, will find it a mine of valuable information, and just conclusions. It is profusely illustrated, and contains some useful maps.

WM. WICKHAM.

NEW NOVELS.

Haythorne's Daughter. By Paul Warren. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)

Master of Her Life. By Lady Constance Howard and Ada Fielder-King. In 3 vols. (F. G. White & Co.)

A Political Wife. By Mrs. Herbert Bourke. (Eden Remington & Co.)

Cornered. By Norman Porritt. (The Leadenhall Press.)

Those Western Girls. By Florence Warden. (Bentley.)

Strangers and Wayfarers. By Sarah Orne Jewett. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

Ryle's Open Gate. By Susan Teackle Moore. (Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

A Strange Prison, and other Stories. By W. H. Stacpoole. (Dean.)

THERE is some good as well as amusing writing in Haythorne's Daughter, but the novel is far too lengthy. One volume would have amply sufficed for such story as the author had to tell, and he has severely handicapped himself by his second volume. This is a pity, for Mr. Paul Warren, whose name is new to us, is certainly not without promise as a novelist. He has a keen eye for the peculiarities and angularities of character, and he has also some skill in the delineation of nature. The scene of his story is at first laid in India, Stuart Haythorne, the father of his heroine, being deputy-commissioner for the district of Dullerabad. To him goes out Olive Haythorne from England, and as she is the only fascinating young lady in Dullerabad she makes a legitimate sensation. All the misogynists who declaimed bitterly against her before her arrival became in the end her abject slaves. Major Danvers, a thoroughly heartless and selfish officer, is thought to be the favoured swain, but he is rejected in favour of Francis Roden, Haythorne's successor in the deputy-commissionership. While strictly just and honourable in all his relations, Roden is apparently a man of hard, unbending nature; but he is in reality quite the contrary, and his love for Olive burns within him like a volcano. They are driven apart by painful misunderstandings, and the narrative is mainly occupied with clearing these up and revealing the strong affection which really subsisted between husband and wife. The machinations of treacherous friends are finally exposed and overthrown. In the latter part of the novel the scene changes to England. We hear a great deal of the National Co-operative Labour Association, which is supported by Lady Muriel de Beauvoir and many other aristocrats; but it suddenly collapses on the flight of the manager with all its funds. A good many speeches are reported for and against strikes, &c., and this portion of the story might have been condensed with advantage. The fun of the narrative is provided by a young American widow of enormous wealth, who captures an English colonel. In the final scene she scores heavily against the villain, Major Danvers, producing a will which shatters all his brilliant prospects. If this be a first work, as we presume it is, we may reasonably expect that Mr. Warren will be heard from again; but he would do well rigidly to discountenance superfluities in future.

The novel by Lady Constance Howard and Miss Fielder-King is a feverish kind of book, with no repose in the characters or incidents. The same remark applies to the style of the writers. Strenuous efforts have apparently been made to eke the work out into three volumes; but as it is, the volumes are very thin, and we meet again and again with almost precisely similar remarks about the Grand Duke Loris, a prince of brutal and sensual character, who hunts the long-suffering heroine almost to death. Stella Ancaster is the "most beautiful English woman of her time." In her first youth she has loved Arthur Loraine; but a wicked aunt, Lady Popham (a very masculine personage who drinks brandies and sodas) has driven them apart. Then she marries Prince Trotsoi, a Russian aristocrat, who has been a terrible rake all his life, but is suddenly reformed by Stella. The marriage, from being one of convenience, develops into one of the strongest affection, until husband and wife become so devoted that they cannot bear even momentarily to be out of each other's presence. The Grand Duke, failing in his assaults upon Stella's virtue, plots the ruin of her husband, has him arrested, and hopes to be able to deport him to Siberia. The tables are turned upon his imperial highness, however, in a surprising manner, which readers must discover for themselves. The Countess Stroganoff, who also plays a conspicuous part in the endeavour to crush the Trotsois, is nothing less than a shameless courtesan, and her diabolical conduct seems scarcely conceivable. The pictures of St. Petersburg life do not give one an exalted idea of the virtue of Russian ladies of high position, or of the honour of Russian noblemen. Surely, even in the northern capital, diamonds are not so plentiful as to hang in ropes and coils all over the dresses and the hair of Russian ladies, as we are assured they did at one of the Imperial balls. We read of a tiara of diamonds a foot high, and a bandeau of diamonds ten inches deep. The printers, we suppose, are responsible for such words as conspicuous and magnificent, but scarcely so for the phrase war à l'outrance. Quotations from Congreve and other writers appear more than once, and a well-known Scriptural injunction is called a maxim, and terribly mangled, as follows: "When thou thinkest thou standest, take heed lest ye fall." Altogether this is a very poor novel, badly, and, as it seems to us, hurriedly written

When will ladies give up writing political novels? They exasperate, but never convince. Whichever side may be espoused, offence is sure to be given to the other. As novel readers, moreover, embrace persons of all shades of political opinion, it is manifestly unwise policy to indulge in polemics. A Political Wife, by Mrs. Hubert Bourke, is no exception to the rule that debatable questions ought to be eschewed. In this case the Radical candidate, Mr. Wilkins, is little short of a fiend incarnate; while Colonel Hammond, the Conservative, whom he ousts from his seat, is a paragon of all the virtues. Miss Margaret Broughton, a young lady who does a great deal of canvassing for the gallant Colonel, inveighs strongly against Radical bribery, yet she has no objection to do a little herself, only it must be after the election. But as she makes the promise of wine and soup before the contest, there does not seem much to choose between her and the opposition. Her lover, Hugh Ravenswood, is on the other side, so she declines to marry him until their political views coincide. As she absolutely refuses to give way one iota, the disconsolate but accommodating lover goes to Ireland a Home Ruler, and returns a Unionist, developing subsequently into full-blown Conservatism. Then we are led to suppose they will marry, but the story breaks off most abruptly in the middle of a page, and with actually no conclusion of any kind. There are many ridiculous things in this volume if it were worth while to point them out.

Cornered throws a lurid light on the dark and devious ways of the Stock Exchange; and the author exposes in the most forcible manner the evil doings of that jackal of the community, "the outside broker." But it is to be feared that the instance cited here of the banker Matterson, who speculated so heavily that he was obliged to steal securities and commit suicide in the end, is typical of too many cases that are constantly occurring in the city. Mr. Porritt trenchantly exposes the heartless villainies of the floaters of public companies and the gamblers upon the Stock Exchange.

Curiously enough, "the outside broker" is again in evidence in Those Western Girls, so that his circulars must be permeating everywhere. Here his principal victim is a country rector, who in his quiet parsonage conjures up an El Dorado of wealth as the result of the tempting schemes which are lavishly put before him. So terrible is the fascination that even he, a clergyman, when drawn into the vortex of speculation, commits forgery to save himself, and only escapes prison through the intervention of the man whose name he has forged, and who is his daughter's lover. Apart from this episode, however, Miss Warden's latest story gives an admirable and interesting picture of country life.

A delightful little volume is the series of sketches by Miss Sara Orne Jewett, entitled Strangers and Wayfarers. They are evidently very faithful transcripts of transatlantic life, with all its dry humour and tragic pathos.

As an example of the first, "A Winter Courtship" is almost as good in its way as Uncle Toby and Widow Wadman. Nothing could be better than the "making-up" of the old carrier Jefferson and Widow Tobin, and their recital of the doings of their youth. Recalling the prowess of Tobin, the widow remarks that "ef he hadn't been a church-member he'd 'a been a real fightin' character." But even as a church-member his belligerent deeds were by no means contemptible. Sketches of a totally different character are the "Mistress of Sydenham Plantation" and "In Dark New England Days," the pathos of which is most natural and affecting.

Another American story, of genuine but unstudied merit, is Ryle's Open Gate, by Susan T. Moore. We cannot pay this little volume a better compliment than to say it is true to human nature throughout. It breathes of real life, and is the work of an accurate observer. No one could read unmoved of the sorrows of the little cripple Andy, or of the noble and godly life of Aunt Dorothy, whose house was an asylum, a hospital, a life-saving station both for the homeless among men and the brute creation. She had a great heart and a pure spirit, taking loving care of those whom the world despised. One rises up the better for reading a story of this kind, which revives our faith in humanity.

Mr. Stacpoole's short stories are scarcely so uncommon in their incidents as those in his previous volume, but they are all nevertheless entertaining and full of "go." This is especially the case, perhaps, with "A Strange Prison" and "The Eighth Day." The latter narrates one of those simple tragedies which are unfortunately too common in commercial life, owing to the feverish and criminal existence which leads so many to ruin and a violent death.

G. BARNETT SMITH.

SOME BIOGRAPHICAL BOOKS.

Swift: The Mystery of His Life and Love. By James Hay. (Chapman & Hall.) These pages show great enthusiasm for the dean's fair fame, and the writer frequently puts his points with much effect. But the proper appreciation of such merits is often impaired by the excessive vein of rhetoric which runs throughout the volume. It is not necessary in these days to draw out a lengthy comparison between Swift and Johnson, or to contrast at still greater length the different careers of Swift and Addison, with a plentiful display of such phrases as "Swift lived in storm; Addison in sunshine." The mystery which hangs over the life of the Dean and Stella is accounted for by Mr. Hay by the suggestion that they "were both children of Sir William Temple;" and if the exigencies of time and space could be so arranged as to bring such a relationship into the range of possibility, the explanation might be accepted as being quite as good as any which the wit of man could devise. Swift's political position, up to the date of his alliance with Harley and St. John, is defined by Mr. Hay as that of High Church Whiggism; and against such a theory no legitimate exception can be raised. There are one or two indications in this volume of an imperfect supervision of the proofs. The statement that the court favourite, Lady Suffolk, implored that Swift might not be made a bishop, comes like a rude shock upon that lady's admirers. The see of "Hertford" has not yet been created even at these days of new bishoprics. "Mr. Crocker" as a biographer or a critic is alike unknown to us.

Journal of Emily Shore. (Kegan Paul & Co.) The genuine record of any human life cannot fail to possess some interest; and this journal, begun by its writer when under twelve years of age, and ending with her life eight years afterwards, is such a trustworthy record. Emily Shore, the daughter of a country clergyman whose reputation for scholarship stood high, displayed in her brief life not only that precocity of intellect which is often associated with physical weakness, but also an amount of careful, systematic labour, extraordinary for her years, if, indeed, it should not rather be termed unexampled. Her journal (of which only extracts are given) occupies twelve octavo volumes, written throughout in a printing hand. Besides this she composed a local Natural History, with observations on the habits of birds, beasts and insects; a History of the Jews, with twelve illustrations; a History of Greece, abridged from Malkin's; a History of Rome; numerous poems and works of imagination, and, among the last, a Collection of Celebrated Parliamentary Speeches, never delivered. She was a clever artist, and her passion for nature showed itself in many ways. Darwin himself would have commended the following remark:

"In the study of natural history it is particularly important not to come too hastily to conclusions, but to study facts from observation frequently and most carefully before any inference is drawn from them. . . . What led me to these remarks is that I greatly suspect I was mistaken in attributing the sound 'chick-check' to the marsh-tit, and I am pretty sure it is the chaff-chaff."

She was about fifteen when she wrote this, and made also this apt criticism upon another subject:

"I very greatly prefer Greek to Latin. The Greek is in every respect a finer language, far more copious, fuller of those little niceties and distinctions which form the beauty of a language, yet less artificial, particularly in the order of the words in a sentence, and fitter for more various styles and sorts of writing."

Even before the days of High Schools and girl graduates, woman's intellect could assert itself, though the chances of wide and early recognition of precocious talent were—for better or for worse—less abundant than nowadays.

Early Days Recalled. By Janet Ross. (Chapman & Hall.) Mrs. Ross has inherited much of the skill in composition which her mother, Lady Duff Gordon, and her grandmother, Mrs. Austin, displayed, and has thus been able to construct out of rather slender materials a very pleasant little volume. It will interest many and fatigue none, and may help to preserve the memory of not a few men and women who deserve a less fugitive reputation than has fallen to their lot. It is rather sad that the present generation scarcely knows the names of the leader-writers who made the Times newspaper the powerful organ which thirty or forty years ago it was allowed to be. Mrs. Ross was fortunate in knowing them in private life; and about them and other literary, political, and social "eminences" she has something to tell us. The following scrap of history is new to us:—

"A friend of my mother's, M. de Banneville, after spending some time in the Crimea, came to Esher. His first words were, 'Within a year or eighteen months, you will have a rebellion in India.' This statement, coming from any one else, would have been treated with scornful hilarity; but Banneville was so uncommon a man, and his marvellous insight into character and habit of dissecting every one he came into contact with, and forming generally a correct opinion, was so well known that this confident announcement was rather startling. . . . My father was so impressed by the statement that he reported it to Lord Palmerston, who pooh-poohed the whole thing and said he knew better."

Lady Belcher and her Friends. By the Rev. A. G. L'Estrange. (Hurst & Blackett.) The wife of Captain Sir Edward Belcher, of Arctic fame, lived a long life, and came in contact with a good many people of more or less distinction. But her recollections of them in her old age were often indistinct (unless we are to ascribe the inaccuracy of the narrative to the imperfect memory of the editor), and we fail to see what good purpose has been served by reproducing them in print. To whom would such extracts as the following be of interest?—

"I dined at Sir R. Alcock's on Tuesday, a small but pleasant party. The Chinese traveller, Baber, very interesting. I am going to ask him to dine with them and Sir Lewis and Lady Pelly. . . . My old man's treat went off well. Ida Layard sang beautifully, and this and the ginger-wine and good cheer so inspired them that they volunteered songs, poor old things!" &c.

The craving for gossip must indeed be insatiable if such trivialities as these are in request. It is amusing to find "Baber, the Chinese traveller," spoken of as though of equal fame with Baber, the conqueror of Hindustan.

Stafford House Letters. Edited by Lord Ronald Gower. (Kegan Paul & Co.) The editor's father, George Granville, second Duke of Sutherland and the writer of most of the letters in this pleasant collection, was a good deal mixed up with the chief political personages of his time, and, of course, occupied a high social position both at home and abroad. Those who delight in such matters will find notices of "everybody who was anybody" during the first-half of the present century, while others who wish to learn the opinion of contemporaries upon the great events of that period will not be disappointed. The letters are not remarkable for wit or wisdom, but they are unaffected and wonderfully free from ill-natured gossip. The details of life in Rome, Paris, St. Petersburg, and other foreign capitals are often interesting; and the two portraits with which the volume is embellished are not only excellent examples of art, but are also representations of a high type of refined physical beauty.

NOTES AND NEWS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & Co. have just issued the first part of a new Dictionary of Political Economy, edited by Mr. R. H. Inglis Palgrave, very much on the same lines as Sir George Grove's well-known Dictionary of Music. The appearance of so elaborate a work is certainly significant of the growing interest taken in economic questions in this country. Its design is to give an account of the principal subjects recognised as coming under the domain of political economy, together with a concise statement of cognate terms in history, commerce, and law, and also biographies of deceased writers. Special attention has been given to recording the exact titles and dates of books. The mode of publication is in quarterly parts of 128 pages each; and it is expected that the whole will be completed in twelve or fourteen parts. A convenient feature, not usually found in alphabetical works, is the index at the beginning. The most important series of articles in the present part is that connected with banking, which fills altogether twenty-two pages in double column, classified under twenty-seven headings. The biographies include Bastiat, Bagehot, and Babbage, and also Aristotle, St. Thomas Aquinas, and Edmond About. Under Sir John Barnard we should have expected some allusion to the statute restricting gambling on the Stock Exchange to which he gave his name; and every reader will at once see that James Anderson, the contemporary of Adam Smith who is credited with anticipating the theory of rent, has been treated twice over, by two different contributors.

Messrs. Funk & Wagnalls of New York furnish us with a prospectus of their new Standard Dictionary, a work which has been now for some time in preparation and promises to be, when completed, of great literary and educational importance. One of the most noteworthy features of this Dictionary is the introduction into it of the phonetic element, and in regard to this point it has obtained the express approval of Prof. Skeat and Dr. Murray. The substantial accuracy and thoroughness of the work are guaranteed by the names of the eminent scholars in editorial charge of its different departments, many of them men of world-wide reputation, such as Profs. Huxley and Max Müller, Prof. Shaler, of Harvard, Prof. Theo. N. Gill, Prof. Simon Newcomb, Prof. R. Ogden Doremus, Ex-Minister E. J. Phelps, of Yale, Hon. T. M. Cooley, Chairman of the U. S. Interstate Commerce Commission, William R. Harper, President of the University of Chicago, Prof. Francis E. March, of Lafayette College, &c. In addition to the many distinguishing features of their undertaking, the editors claim special credit for their attempt to solve the perplexing problem of compounds. This department has been placed under the care of Mr. Horace F. Teall, author of The Compounding of English Words, and it is believed that this is the first serious endeavour made in a single-volume dictionary to reduce this class of words to something like system. The illustrations are abundant and well executed. Criticisms and suggestions are invited from all who take an interest in the appearance of the work.

Edward Arnold's Literary List contains some interesting remarks, of a popular kind, upon that astounding puzzle, the new American Copyright Act. Probably the furor created by this most commendably-intentioned and satisfactory piece of legislation is less alarmingly developed on this than on the other side of the Atlantic, where Mr. Spofford, the librarian of Congress, has more than enough to do in the way of satisfying bewildered correspondents. But there is no question that a number of English authors are seriously in doubt at this moment whether to publish in London or to transfer their patronage to New York, in view of ulterior profits. Upon this point the words of Mr. Arnold's article may with advantage be quoted. "It is clear that . . . the advantages of copyright will be only within the reach of those English authors who enjoy an assured popularity with an American public. These, comparatively few in number, the new Act will decidedly benefit and protect. For the future there will be no cheap unauthorised versions of works such as Prof. Bryce's American Commonwealth or Mr. Booth's In Darkest England, though it is quite possible that even Mr. Bryce's work might not have been copyrighted under the new law, and its somewhat unexpected popularity would have helped, as is now the case, to float the business of some pirate publishing firm. But the popularity of the great mass of books, even of works of high literary skill and general interest, would not justify a twofold outlay on their production, a separate publication and printing in England and the United States."

It is proposed to prepare a register of Harrovians, giving the names and short biographical notices of all boys who have been at the school since the beginning of the century. But there is a difficulty in making the register complete for the earlier years, especially from 1800 to 1830; for it appears that, just as at Winchester, former headmasters failed to preserve, or at least to leave behind them, lists of the boys they entered. Mr. R. Courtney Welch, the editor, will be glad of any old school records or other similar papers, addressed to him at 8, Southwick-place, Hyde Park.

MR. PERCY FITZGERALD has written a life of James Boswell, of Auchinleck, with an account of his sayings, doings, and writings. It will form two volumes, with four portraits, and will be published by Messrs. Chatto & Windus.

THE latest number of the Danish periodical, Illustreret Tidende, contains a study of the writings of Mr. Edmund Gosse, by the Danish poet, Alfred Ipsen, who has already shown his interest in modern English literature by his excellent translations from Matthew Arnold and Mr. Swinburne.

THE fifth edition of Joseph Hatton's By Order of the Czar having been rapidly exhausted, Messrs. Hutchinson have a sixth edition in the press.

THE same publishers also announce the immediate issue of a second edition of Literary Opinion for the current month.

THE German translation of the Bible of the middle-ages (Die deutsche Bibelübersetzung des Mittelalters, von Wilh. Walther, P. Dr. theol.) will be edited in October next, and published by Herr Wollerman, of Brunswick. This work has attracted much attention throughout Germany, Switzerland, Holland, and France.

MISS CUSACK, the "Nun of Kenmare," has now returned from America to this country, and is engaged in writing The Story of my Life, which will take the place of her former work, published in America under the title of The Nun of Kenmare. The work will be published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

A NEW volume of Sonnets and Poems translated from the Italian, French, German, Dutch, and Spanish languages, by Collard J. Stock, will be issued shortly by Mr. Elliot Stock.

MESSRS. SUTTON, DROWLEY & Co.'s list of new and forthcoming works includes Folios IV. and V. of Wood Carvings from South Kensington Museum; Coriolanus, with Notes by Mr. Benjamin Dawson; Charming to Her Latest Day, by "Alan Muir," with twenty-four illustrations by Hal Ludlow; a cheap edition of Mr. J. Littlejohn's The Flowing Tide; The Confessions of Vyrian Carruthers; A Story of Hypnotism, by "Philip Kyme"; The Blakely Tragedy, by Mr. G. R. Murphy; a cheap illustrated edition of Captain Jacques, by Mr. Someville Gibney; and a Marive Extravaganza by Mr. John Gibart, entitled The Rose, Ring, and Pearl.

THE prospects of the Folk-lore Congress, to be held in London during the first week of October, under the presidency of Mr. Andrew Lang, are very promising. Papers will be forthcoming from Sir Frederick Pollock, Profs. Rhys and Sayce, Dr. E. B. Tylor, Messrs. E. Clodd, J. G. Frazer, G. L. Gomme, F. Hinds Groome, E. S. Hartland, Joseph Jacobs, Alfred Nutt, besides others from foreign folk-lorists.

MR. W. H. K. WRIGHT, borough librarian of Plymouth, who has for some years past made a special study of the literature and bibliography of the Western counties, is now engaged upon a volume describing the lives and works of the poets of Devon and Cornwall. The series begins with such names as Ford, Rowe, Sir Walter Raleigh, Herrick, and Carew, and is continued down to their not unworthy followers in our own time. The volume will be abundantly illustrated with portraits and views.

THE first part of the Anglo-American Hebrew Lexicon, to be published by the Clarendon Press, is advancing rapidly towards completion. Though Prof. Francis Brown (of Union Seminary, New York), who takes the lion's share of the work, is less known to fame than either Prof. Driver or Prof. Briggs (the hero of a great heresy trial at New York), we are sure that his work will be as accurate and as elaborately complete as that of any living scholar in Europe.

MESSRS. HUTCHINSON will shortly issue a volume by Mary C. Rowsell, entitled Petronilla, and Other Stories.

MR. E. M. NORRIS's story Misadventure, A Born Coquette, by the author of "Molly Bawn," and Mr. Rider Haggard's Allan's Wife, will be added shortly to Messrs. Griffith, Farran & Co.'s Standard Library of Fiction.

MESSRS. SIMPKIN, MARSHALL & Co. will publish in a few days Old Church Lore, by Mr. William Andrews, of Hull. It will be on similar lines to his Curiosities of the Church, which has just passed into a second edition.

MR. T. FISHER UNWIN will publish immediately the second edition of Mr. Watson's Wordsworth's Grave and Other Poems, which he has enlarged since the first appearance of the book. The publication of The Story of the Filibusters, by James Jeffrey Roche, in the "Adventure Series," and that of The Great Cockney Tragedy, told in sonnets, by Ernest Rhys, and illustrated in black and white by Jack B. Yeats, will take place at the same time. Mr. Unwin also announces that he is reprinting the Lives of Robert and Mary Moffat in his "Lives Worth Living Series," together with Miss Morris's Famous Musical Composers.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

SHAIKH MUSLIHÜD-DIN SA'DI.

Died, A.H. 690, A.D. 1291.

I.

Six hundred years since good Shaikh Sa'di died,
That bowed himself in prayer at Yah'ya's* side
Six hundred years, and still the sages kneel,
And still men question of the Crucified.

II.

"Fourteen to Mecca? Fourteen did he make Journeys, you tell me, for the Prophet's sake?—
What profit then to kneel at Yah'ya's side?"
—Ah, Friend! What Sa'di did, will you mistake?

III.

Rests he beneath his roses,† would you know?
Ask at Shiraz, ask of the pilgrims. Lo!
They stand beside his sepulchre. Ah me!
As he once stood by Yah'ya's long ago.

CHARLES SAYLE.

THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

SPECIAL QUOTATIONS WANTED.

I.

WILL any one kindly send quotations for some of the desiderata in the following list, and so help us to complete the literary history of some of the words of the next Part? As in previous lists, when the date stands before a word, an earlier quotation is wanted; where the date follows, a later instance is wanted; for words without a date all quotations will be welcome. The list contains many modern words and senses for which earlier quotations than those of the dates here given ought to be, and no doubt will be, found. Besides these, good quotations

* St. John the Baptist's tomb at Damascus (see Gulistan, i. 10).

† Bustan, iv. 16.

for words noted in ordinary reading are still welcome; and we often want instances of very common idiomatic phrases, verbal constructions, colloquial uses, and the like. Every quotation should be furnished with as full a reference as possible to date, author, work, edition, volume, chapter, page, &c., and sent to me addressed, "Dr. Murray, Oxford."

J. A. H. MURRAY.

- fa (Music)
- fabaceous
- 1809 fabian, a. 1813
- 1852 fabiform, a.
- 1767 fable (plot, of a play)
- 1606 fabled, ppl. a.
- 1678 fablemonger. 1730
- 1852 fabledom
- 1548 fabler
- fabling 1823
- 1483 fabric
- 1623 fabric, r. 1698
- 1777 fabricant
- 1598 fabricate (construct)
- 1779 fabricate (forge)
- 1660 fabrication (construction)
- 1802 fabrication (invented story)
- 1793 fabricative
- 1650 fabricator (constructor)
- 1788 fabricator (inventor)
- fabricatress
- 1600 fabricature 1677
- Fabrician, a.
- 1611 fabrile, a. 1664
- 1567 fabular, sb. 1567
- 1800 fabular, a.
- 1624 fabulate, r.
- 1678 fabulator
- 1627 fabule 1631
- fabuler 1624
- 1600 fabulist
- 1630 fabulistic, a. 1630
- 1612 fabulize, v. 1638
- 1600 fabulosity 1800
- 1561 fabulous
- 1501 faburden 1789
- 1596 faburden, a. 1596
- fac (facsimile)
- 1717 façade
- 1588 face (front or forepart)
- face (of a clock)
- 1697 to put a new face upon 18th c.
- 1841 to bear on the face of 1841
- 1552 face (confidence, impudence)
- 1700 to have the face
- 1600 face (grimace), to make a
- 1680 face (courtcard) 1680
- face (astrol.) 1655
- 1880 face (printing) 1880
- 1817 face (of a solid)
- 1765 face of, upon the
- 1689 face of, to fly in the 1689
- face, to look (a person) in the 17th and 18th c.
- 1884 face to, to set one's
- 1867 face against, to set one's
- face, to show one's
- face, to throw in one's
- 1440 face, v. (confront)
- 1500 to face (a thing) out 18th c.
- 1670 to face (with something)
- to face (tea)
- 1561 to face (a garment)
- 1847 face, Right-about
- 1634 face, v. (turn)
- 1645 to face about
- 1746 face (a card)
- 1590 face (dissemble)
- 16.. to 18.. faceless
- faced, ppl. a.
- 15.. facer (a boaster) 1611
- 1610 facet
- 16.. facete
- 1605 facetious, -ness
- 1703 facia
- 1609 facial, a. (face to face) 1711
- 1825 facial (angle)
- 1817 facial, sb.
- 15.. facile, a. (easy to do)
- 16.. facile (yielding)
- 15.. facile (easy of access) 18th c.
- 15.. facile (easily persuaded) 18th c.
- 1850 facile (ready)

- facileness 1670
- 1621 facilitate
- 1530 facility
- 1800 facility (means)
- 1538 facing (covering)
- 1635 facing (Milit.)
- 1746 facings (of uniforms)
- facingly
- 1548 facinorous
- 1800 facinorousness
- 1627 fack (coil of rope) 1692
- 1691 facsimile
- 1530 fact (deed) reality
- 1490 fact, in
- 1712 fact, in the
- 1817 fact, in point of 1817
- 1581 fact, matter of
- 1676 faction (doing or making) 1689
- 1509 faction (party)
- 1593 faction (party spirit)
- 1609 faction, v. 1721
- 1650 factional 17. to 18..
- 1555 factionary 17. to 18..
- 1611 factionate 1642
- factioner 1644
- 1710 factioneer
- 1609 factionist 18th c.
- 1570 factious, -ness
- 1650 factitious
- 1609 factive 1649
- 1491 factor (agent)
- 1561 factor (steward)
- 1673 factor (Arith.)
- 1611 factor r. 1611
- 1613 factorage (commission)
- factorage (an agency)
- 1627 factoress 1722
- 1869 factorial, sb. (Math.)
- factorize
- 1598 factorship 17th and 18th c.
- 1618 factory (manufactory) 18th c.
- 1603 factory (merchant's establishment)
- 1702 factory (body of factors) 1777
- 1584 factory (office of factor)
- 1656 factotum (printing) 1656
- 1870 factrix
- 1846 factual
- 1642 factum (Law)
- factum (Math.)
- 1601 facture (construction)
- facture (invoice)
- 1669 factus (Math.) 1669
- 1560 faculent 1560
- 1648 facultate 18th c.
- facultative (conferring a faculty)
- 1490 faculty (capacity)
- 1576 faculty (medicinal virtue) 1710
- 1534 faculty (right, privilege)
- 1690 faculty (trade, occupation)
- 1382 faculties (property) 1649
- facund, sb. 1485
- 1387 facund, a. 18th c.
- 1548 facundious
- facundity 1690
- fad (faddish person)
- fad (a coloured bull)
- fadaise
- 1865 faddiness
- 1881 faddish, -ness
- 1883 faddist
- faddle, v.
- 1824 faddy
- 1775 fade, sb. 1775
- fade, a. 17th c.
- fade, v. trans. 1795
- 1652 fadeless
- 1633 fadeable 1633
- 1596 faded
- 1489 fadellage 1489
- fadeness
- 1573 fadge, v.
- 1692 fadoodle 1692
- 1750 fady, a. 1765
- faeryfayry (fairyland) 17th c.
- 1789 fator (odour) 1803
- 1570 fag, v. (grow weary) 1570
- 1793 fag, v. (work hard)
- 1806 fag, v. (at school)
- 1846 fag, v. (reap) 1846

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE August number of the Expositor contains a delicate little essay on the temper of mind required for the interpretation of the life of the early Church, by Mr. Lock, of Keble College, who points out two factors in that life, blindness to which makes an interpreter's work necessarily inadequate. Dr. Candlish discusses once more, but not once too often, the moral character of the pseudonymous writing of antiquity. Mr. F. C. Conybeare concludes his collection of pre-Hieronymian Latin Biblical fragments. Dr. S. Cox and Dr. A. B. Grosart represent that side of exegesis which deals with the suggestions rather than the expressed thoughts of the Biblical writers. Dr. Marcus Dods surveys recent literature on the New Testament, and Dr. Cheyne notices Dillmann's admirable examination of the Septuagint text of Job with respect to its omissions. The latter work has a special interest for readers of Dr. Hatch's latest non-posthumous work. Dr. Cheyne also gives a gentle hit at Klostermann for his attack on current Pentateuch criticism, and an explanation of a difficult passage of Isaiah (lxv. 15).

THE Expository Times in its August number contains Part III. of Prof. Cheyne's dissertation on "Possible Zoroastrian Influences on the Religion of Israel." Part I. was historical; Parts II. and III. are exegetical, but with a view to historical results, and with an eye upon possible Zoroastrian affinities. Discussion of older views is avoided, but Prof. Kirkpatrick's popular but scholarly commentary on Book I. of the Psalter is twice criticised. Perhaps the first of these criticisms may need the attention of special scholars. The gist of Prof. Cheyne's argument is apparently much the same as that of his eighth Bampton Lecture; but it is somewhat more fully stated and with some fresh illustrations. The critical results assumed are those of his recent work on the Psalms, and of his dissertation on later additions to the work of the Second Isaiah (in the Jewish Quarterly Review). One of the minor points of detail on which his Isaiah criticism is based is discussed in the Expositor (see above). Theologically, Prof. Cheyne's comparison of the Biblical and the Zoroastrian conceptions of the divine glory may deserve criticism. The peroration addresses itself to a wider audience than the Expository Times can command.

THE most notable article in the Antiquary for August is an unsigned paper criticising the report of the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the want of space for monuments in Westminster Abbey. The Commissioners were divided in opinion; we cannot, however, doubt that the writer of the article before us takes the common-sense view. That the new building should be a chapel attached to the church, not a big room more than a hundred feet away, must be obvious to everyone who has considered the question. Mr. Shore's paper on "Ancient Mills in Hampshire" is valuable as containing a catalogue of the mills in that county of which we find mention in Domesday. This list forces on our attention the fact that there is still no exhaustive index to that priceless record. Surely someone will come forward to fill up the blank. Had the Conqueror's great survey been the property of France or Germany, this great omission would have been supplied long ago. Mr. Bailey's paper on wall-paintings and "The Elizabethan Grub Street" are worth reading. The latter would have been better had the introductory paragraph been omitted.

MR. ANDREW LANG, in an article—probably the first of a short series—which he calls "Adventures Among Books," in the forthcoming September Scribner's, makes the following general answer to many inquiring admirers:

"One good thing, if no more, these memories may accomplish. Young men, especially in America, write to me and ask me to recommend 'a course of reading.' Distrust a course of reading! People who really care for books read all of them. There is no other course. Let this be a reply. No other answer shall they get from me, the inquiring young men."

THE second number of the Journal of the Ex Libris Society (A. & C. Black) maintains the promise of the first. Mr. Arthur Vicars contributes the first instalment of a catalogue of the class of book-plates called "library interiors," that is those exhibiting views of libraries or of portions of a room, both ancient and modern, foreign and English. Unfortunately, this article is not illustrated. It is to be followed by similar lists of the literary and book-pile series. An excellent account of book-plates engraved by Cork artists, by Mr. Robert Day, is reprinted from an old number of the Journal of the Royal Historical and Archaeological Society of Ireland. Mr. John Leighton, in a note upon early book-plates, suggests that their freehand touch and flow of line shows that the engravers had worked upon such soft material as tankards, platters, and even pewter pots. The illustrations in this number, with a single exception, are from the blocks used in Mr. C. M. Carlander's volume on Swedish Ex Libris.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- ALIS, H. A la conquête du Tchad. Paris: Hachette. 5 fr.
BOUCHOT, H. Inventaire des dessins exécutés pour Roger de Gaignières, et conservés aux départements des estampes et des manuscrits. Paris: Plon. 30 fr.
COURTOIS, Edm. Le Tonkin français contemporain. Paris: Charles-Lavauzelle. 7 fr. 50 c.
HUBET, Jules. Enquête sur l'évolution littéraire. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
RAGUSA-MOLETTI, G. Poesie dei popoli selvaggi o poco civili. Turin: Loescher. 5 fr.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- DREYER, G. M. Analecta hymnica mediæ ævi. X. Sequentiæ ineditæ. Leipzig: Reiland. 10 M.
ROLAND'S, nachmals Papstes Alexander III., Sentenzen. Zum ersten Male hrsg. v. A. M. Gietl. Freiburg-L.-B.: Herder. 9 M.
VOIGT, H. G. E. verschollene Urkunde d. antimontanistischen Kampfes. Die Berichte d. Epiphanius üb. die Katsaphryger u. Quintilianer, untersucht. Leipzig: Richter. 8 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- BURGHARD, W. Die Gegenreformation auf dem Eichsfelde vom J. 1574—79. 2. Thl. Vom Regensburger Kurtag 1575 bis zum J. 1579. Leipzig: Fock. 80 Pf.
CASTERAS, P. de. La Société toulousaine à la fin du 18e siècle. Paris: Picard. 3 fr. 50 c.
CHAIEMARTIN, A. Proverbes et maximes du droit germanique. Paris: Retaux. 10 fr.
DES ROBERT, Le Cardinal de Lattier de Bayane, 1730—1818. Paris: Picard. 2 fr. 50 c.
EKKEL, F. Studien zur Geschichte der Karolinger in Bayern. Straubing: Hirner. 2 M.
ERRERA, P. Les Muséums: recherches sur quelques vestiges des formes anciennes de la propriété en Belgique. Brussels. 16 fr.
GARDTHAUSEN, V. Augustus u. seine Zeit. 1. Thl., 1. Bd., u. 2. Thl. 1. Halbbd. Leipzig: Teubner. 16 M.
POMERANZ, B. La Grèce et la Judée dans l'antiquité. 1re partie. Wien: Lippé. 2 M. 40 Pf.
ROSSI, V. Pasquinate di Pietro Aretino ed anonime per il Conclave e l'elezione di Adriano VI. Turin: Loescher. 4 fr. 50 c.
SCHINDLER, H. Die Kreuzzüge in der altprovenzalischen u. mittelhochdeutschen Lyrik. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M.
SCHWAB, L. Geschichte der archäologischen Sammlung der Universität Tübingen. Tübingen: Fues. 1 M. 80 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- ABHANDLUNGEN, palæontologische, hrsg. v. W. Dames u. E. Kayser. Neue Folge. 1. Bd. 4. Hft. Jena: Fischer. 10 M.
APPELT, O. Beiträge zur Geschichte der griechischen Philosophie. Leipzig: Teubner. 10 M.
BUCHKA, K. v. Die Chemie d. Pyridins u. seiner Derivate. 2. Lfg. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 14 M.
HÜBNER, Th. Fauna germanica. Hemiptera heteroptera. 1. Hft. Pentatomides, Coreides, Berytides. Berlin: Dames. 3 M.
SCHROEDER, E. Vorlesungen üb. die Algebra der Logik (exakte Logik). 2. Bd. 1. Abt. Leipzig: Teubner. 12 M.
ULLRICH, E. Das Rechnen m. Duodecimalzahlen. Heidelberg: Winter. 1 M. 80 Pf.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- ABEL, C. Nachtrag zum offenen Brief an Prof. G. Meyer in Sachen der ägyptisch-indogermanischen Sprachverwandtschaft. Leipzig: Friedrich. 1 M. 30 Pf.
ARISTOTE. La République athénienne, traduite en français pour la première fois par Théodore Reinach. Paris: Hachette. 1 fr. 50 c.
ARISTOTELIS quæ ferunt 'Αθηναίων Πολιτεία. Post Kenyonem recensuerunt H. van Heuvelen et J. van Leeuwen. Leiden: Sijthoff. 6 M.
BEHRINGER, E. Zur Würdigung d. Heliand. Aschaffenburg: Krebs. 2 M. 40 Pf.
BLUMER, J. Zum Geschlechtswandel der Lehn- u. Fremdwörter im Hochdeutschen. 2. Thl. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 50 Pf.
DIONYSI Halicarnasensis antiquitatum romanarum quæ supersunt, ed. C. Jacoby. Vol. III. Leipzig: Teubner. 3 M.
GORTZINGER, W. Die Romanischen Ortsnamen des Kantons St. Gallen. St. Gallen: Huber. 2 M. 40 Pf.
GUTHMID, F. Ueb. Konsonant-Assimilation im Französischen. Heidelberg: Siebert. 3 M.
INSCRIPTIONES antiquæ oras septentrionalis Ponti Euxini graecæ et latinæ. Ed. B. Latyschev. Vol. II., inscriptiones regni Bosphorani continens. Leipzig: Voss. 30 M.
KONIG, A. Aruch completum sive lexicon, vocabula et res, quæ in libris targumicis, talmudicis et midraschicis continentur, explicans, auctore N. filio Jechielis. Tom. VII. Wien: Lippe. 15 M.
LAGARDE, P. de. Mittheilungen. 4. Bd. Göttingen: Dieterich. 12 M.
LEIPOLD, H. Ueb. die Sprache d. Juristen Aemilius Papinianus. Passau: Copenrath. 1 M. 10 Pf.
RADLOFF, W. Das Kudatku Bilik d. Jusuf Chass-Hadscheb aus Bilasagun. 1. Thl. Leipzig: Voss. 13 M. 50 Pf.
REGEL, W. Analecta Byzantino-Russica. Leipzig: Voss. 7 M.
RUDOLPH, F. Die Quellen u. die Schriftstellerei d. Athenais. Göttingen: Dieterich. 1 M. 20 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

DID TIGLATH-PILESER III. CARRY INTO CAPTIVITY THE TRANSJORDANIC TRIBES?

Leicester: July 28, 1891.

It is generally said that Tiglath-pileser III., of Assyria, carried away captive the Transjordanic tribes together with the tribes of Naphtali. I do not think that this view is in accordance with the accounts in Tiglath-pileser's annals and in 2 Kings xv.

On Tiglath-pileser's cylinder we read:

"The towns of Gil[ead] and Abel-[beth-maachah], in the provinces of Beth-Omri (Israel), the widespread [district of Naphtali] to its whole extent I turned into territory of Assyria."

Here the territory annexed is summed up as Naphtali, and a town Gilead is mentioned along with Abel-beth-maachah, which was a town in Naphtali. Also in 2 Kings xv. 29 we read:

"In the days of Pekah, king of Israel, came Tiglath-pileser, king of Assyria, and took Ijon, and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and Kedesh, and Hazor, and Gilead, and Galilee, all the land of Naphtali."

Here again Naphtali is represented as the sum total of the land annexed by Assyria, and the Gilead mentioned was in Naphtali, as it is placed among several towns which were certainly in the territory of that tribe.

Accordingly it seems to me that Tiglath-pileser III. annexed only the tribe of Naphtali, while the rest of Israel was allowed to remain under its native king Hoshea, and that the Gilead of the Assyrian annals and 2 Kings xv. was not the well-known district of Gilead on the eastern side of Jordan, but either a town or a district of Naphtali.

C. W. P. ORTON.

SOME NOTES ON THE "FAERY QUEEN," BOOK I.

Calcutta: June 16, 1891.

I ask the favour of your allowing this a place in the ACADEMY. I would respectfully draw Dr. Skeat's attention to the first point (on "fell" and "felon"); and regarding the others, I shall feel gratified if your readers consider them an additional mite contributed to the fund of Spenser elucidations. They are not noticed in Todd, and the tenth vol. of Dr. Grosart's edition has not reached me: I do not know if it is out. All the points arise out of the text of the Faery Queen, Book I.

(1) C. ii., st. 10, l. 6, "fell" and iii., 29, 3, "fellow": Dr. Skeat's Etymological Dictionary leaves the connexion between these two words as doubtful. Do the uses noted below bring it nearer certainty? In Old Fr. the meaning of "fel" was "treacherous" (as well as "cruel" as now); that of "felon" was "cruel" (as well as "treacherous" as now.) Thus, in the extracts from the Passion du Christ in Bartsch's Chrestomathie, coll. 9, 10, Judas Iscariot is more than once called "Judas li fel," while the Jews who demanded Barabbas are called "li felun Juden"; so in the Chanson de Roland, ib., col. 31, the two have the same meanings:

"Dient paien 'feluns humes ad ci: | Gardez, seignurs, que il n'en algent vif. | Tut par seit fel ki nes vait envair | E recréant ki les lerrat guarir."

So in Scotch: Barbour has "bataille felloun" and "fellow stormes"; Blind Harry has "a fellow man of wer" (in Skeat's Specimens, and Jamieson's Dictionary). To this I may add Chaucer, C. T. 7584; Tyrwhitt, referred to in Strattmann and Skeat, but without a note as to the peculiarity in meaning; Faery Queen, III., i. 65, and IV., ii. 32; and Occleve, De Reg. Princ. 607, "felle man and prudent" (Skeat's Spec. iii.). From all these instances of the interchange of the present meanings of the two words, it follows that the usage of old writers favours the inference that the two are the same in derivation. It remains now to ascertain if the principles of etymology are against it; a matter I leave in more competent hands than mine. The Prompt. Parv. I may add, is on the wrong scent altogether (felle or fers: fellitus, bilosus.)

(2) iii., 16, 2, Cusseiopeias chaire; Milton (II Pens. 17) and Tennyson (Princess, iv.) have the same reason as Spenser for making the "starred Ethiop queen" shed influence over darkness and sleep. It matters very little whether astronomically Aldeboran can ever "mount hie above" this constellation; i.e., be in about the same meridian; but in Stow's Annals (1st ed., published before the Faery Queen) p. 673, ed. of 1615, under the year 1572, occurs a mention of this constellation in connexion with one of those "blazing stars" Stow is so frequently noticing, that may, I think, have been in Spenser's mind when he wrote this line.

(3) iv., 23, 7, Dry dropsie: Collier "emended" this to "hydropsy," and Upton proposed the reading "dire" instead of "dry," supporting it from Horace, Odes, ii., 2. 13. If he had only read on to the next line in Horace, he would have seen that no emendation was called for. Dante, Inferno, xxx., 52 sq. and 121 sq. refers to the same symptom of this disease. Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. (Chalmers's Poets, xii., 460 fin.), and Fletcher, Purple Island, vii. (ib. vi., 113 init.) have imitated Spenser and explained his meaning. In Uncertain Authors, quoted by Richardson, from Chalmers, no doubt, occurs the expression "dropsy drowth," though the meaning is different.

(4) x., 58, 6, Panthea: this is Westminster Abbey. Todd's commentators pass this over in silence, and the suggested allusion in Dr. Kitchen's note in the Clarendon Press edition is unsupported: in fact, is incorrect. The Pantheon at Rome was dedicated to all the gods of the Julian race: the French imitated this when they converted Ste. Geneviève at Paris into a Panthéon, with the dedicatory words "Aux Grands Hommes la Patrie reconnaissante." By Cleopatra and Panthea Spenser means the city of the living Gloriana and the resting-place of her illustrious ancestors—particularly the Shrine of Edward the Confessor and Henry VIII.'s Chapel.

(5) xi., 30, 8, Cephise: Todd's note on "Hebrus" gives the right allusion (to Ovid, Met. xi., 50 sq.), but does not point out that this is meant to be an unworthy parallel to Scripture (John iv. 24, Colossians ii. 13.) There is a similar parallel meant between "Cephise" and Isaiuh, i. 18. The explanation is found in Pliny, Hist. Nat., ii. 106 (Tauchnitz) which Todd does not notice:

"In Falisco omnis aqua pota candidos boves facit: in Boeotia amnis Melas oves nigras: Cephissus, ex eodem lacu profluens, albas; rursus nigras Penius; rufasque juxta Ilium Xanthus, unde et nomen amni."

Let me take this opportunity of inquiring whether any investigation has been made into the subject of the so-called "Irish" pronunciation. The Lady Una joins to her Irish name the Irish brogue and an Irish idiom (see i. 13, 5; vii. 41, 1; ix. 53, 3; and vi. 39, 2, "And he the stoutest knight"). This might have laid the question at rest, but unfortunately these very Irishisms occur in purely English writers, like Browne (in his Britannia's Pastorals); and the inference is that the Irish pronunciation is merely the English pronunciation, as it was when the Irish began to speak this language, i.e. of the sixteenth century. This view is confirmed by Ellis, Early English Pronunciation, viii., § 5 sq. But then comes the difficulty: why has the Irish pronunciation remained fixed at what it was in Spenser's days, say, while the English pronunciation has changed since then?

H. M. PERCIVAL.

THE THREE FRAGMENTS OF "THE ROMAUNT OF THE ROSE."

Cambridge: Aug. 10, 1891.

If I had nothing new to say about "the Romaunt of the Rose," I should not be writing this letter. But I have so much to propose, in the way of a new theory, that I can only give the outline of my scheme. Any one with a turn for arithmetic can check the results.

Dr. Max Kaluza claims for Chaucer ll. 1-1704; because ll. 1705 and 1706 do not rime, and because of the change of style in the translation.

I have a small correction to make. Chaucer's portion is ll. 1-1705, i.e., I claim for him one more line. It has not been observed that l. 1705 is all right, but begins a new sentence, which is never completed, and has no verb (for dide is only an auxiliary verb); so that there is a palpable gap in the sense at the end of it; see the French text. Consequently, the break is at the gap; and l. 1705, preceding the gap, belongs to what precedes, and to Chaucer. It is l. 1706 that brings in the false rime, and that does not join on.

That we can now see the gap, is really a great gain. It separates fragment A from fragment B quite definitely. The rest I can only sketch out; it runs into minute arithmetical details.

There are two extant authorities for the text, not one; these are (1) Thynne's print; and (2) the Glasgow MS. Thynne is independent of that MS., for he gives the last six lines correctly, which the MS. does not.

But both are from one common MS., which I call X. For both exhibit some extraordinary transpositions of the text. In both, l. 7010 (mismumbered 7014 in Morris), is followed by l. 7107 (7111 in M.); with like changes elsewhere.

These transpositions occur in fragment C. The fragments are: A (1-1705); 1705 lines. B (1706-5810 [5813 in M.]); 4105 lines. C (5811-7696 [7698 in M.]); 1886 lines. The printed texts give only 1884 lines to C; but two lines are missed at line 7170 (7174 in M.), as shown by the French text.

Now the arithmetical tests and the facts of the case prove that C was copied from an original which usually had 24 lines, but rarely 25 lines, on a page. This is quite common in MSS. It happens to be a peculiarity of the Glasgow MS. mentioned above. This fragment consisted of 3 sheets of 16 pages each, with 24 lines to the page; followed by a fourth sheet, having 12 pages of 24 lines and 4 pages of 25 lines, which sheet was so transposed as to bring the middle pair of leaves next to the outer pair of leaves. After which came 14 more leaves, 4 having 24 lines, and 10 having 25 lines. Total: $3 \times 16 \times 24 + 12 \times 4 + 4 \times 25 + 4 \times 24 + 10 \times 25 = 1182$ lines, as extant. Or, if the MS. actually missed the 2 lines already alluded to, then 5 leaves had 24 lines, and 9 had 25. We cannot tell, and it does not matter. Any way, the fifth sheet was incomplete, and had its last leaf torn away, as is so often the case.

The arrangement of lines in the fourth sheet was as follows, taking a, b, c, to represent its successive pages, and noting that the leaf g, h, was moved up so as to follow b, whilst leaf i, k, was moved down: (a) 6963-6986; (b) 6987-7010; (g) 7107-7131; (h) 7132-7156; (c) 7011-7034; (d) 7035-7058; (e) 7059-7082; (f) 7083-7106; (l) 7206-7229; (m) 7230-7253; (n) 7254-7278; (o) 7279-7302; (j) 7157-7180; (k) 7181-7205; (p) 7303-7326; (q) 7327-7350.*

This is quite certain (within two lines); for the dislocations in Thynne's text show it at once.

As to fragment A, I have little doubt that it was copied in X, from another MS. altogether, viz., from one that normally had 25 lines, not 24, to the page; and occasionally had 26. This MS. contained 4 sheets with 25 lines to the sheet, making 1600 lines; and another quarter-sheet, or four leaves, making 100 lines more. Five of the pages had 26 lines, making 5 lines more. Total: 1705 lines.

Of fragment B we can make nothing, because we do not know where it began to join on; probably in the middle of a page, which may have been anywhere in the sheet. So we must leave it.

There is, however, a high probability that A and C differed as above. Further, that A presented a sheet and a quarter, and was then torn away. And further, that C was imperfect both at the beginning (for it does not join on), and at the end (for it ends suddenly); and, if so, we know, from the transpositions in the fourth sheet, that it consisted of four complete sheets, and a fifth sheet of seven leaves only.

Fragment B stands clear out from the other two by its use of a strongly Northern dialect, and by the diffuseness of the translation. The author gives over 11 lines of English for every 10 of the French, whereas A and C run nearly line for line.

Fragment C is most decidedly not Chaucer's. That Chaucer's piece should come at the beginning is precisely what we should expect.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

SCIENCE.

THREE BOOKS ABOUT THE NEW "ARISTOTLE."

Aristotle on the Athenian Constitution. Translated, with Introduction and Notes, by F. G. Kenyon. (Bell.)

Aristotle on the Constitution of Athens. Translated by E. Poste. (Macmillans.)

Literarische und historische Forschungen zu Aristoteles' Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία. Von A. Bauer. (Munich: Beck.)

VERY many are the advantages which even a finished scholar derives from setting himself to translate exactly a classical text, and instances in which the authors of great editions have supplemented their commentary and their readings by a translation are not far to seek. But few scholars can have been in the position which Mr. Kenyon occupies—the position of a man who has given to the world an editio princeps, and has also translated his text into his own language before any other translation appeared. It would be safe to prophesy that Mr. Kenyon is glad to have had this double experience, and among the advantages which he cannot fail to have derived from it is certainly to be reckoned the advantage of seeing more fully than would in any other way have been possible the innumerable shortcomings of the published text of the new Ἀθηναίων Πολιτεία. Many a queer construction is passed, many an awkward collocation of clauses allowed to stand, many a time is an editor content with an à peu près understanding of what his author was driving at, until the necessity of putting the work into English—or French or German—compels him to let nothing pass unchallenged. It is evident that Mr. Kenyon is now pretty fully awake to the deficiencies of the text, which, he admits, "is not yet in a settled condition, and will not be so for a long time to come." In fact, he now translates from a text very different from the first, or even the second, edition. We are glad of course to know from him in a certain number of passages what conjectural emendation he thinks plausible, and what suggested correction he now finds to be the true reading of the MS. But still this state of things makes it harder to judge his translation by making it a version of such Greek as no reader has before him. However, judging as well as we can from the published text, we must say that Mr. Kenyon has done his work plainly and faithfully. He has not cared to write scholarship-notes, but his notes contain some history and some emendation, and his translation seems generally correct. Even where we question it, he may be choosing to render a reading not yet received into the text. This is perhaps the case with c. 3, ll. 22-26 of the Greek. (Mr. Poste's version, too, is here a very free handling of the original.) But we doubt whether, with any reading, κρίσις can, as Mr. Kenyon makes it, mean "executing judgment." In c. 15 it is awkward to make Pisistratus, when he wished to return from exile, "descend on Eretria," as if Eretria were a place in Attica. "He proceeded to Eretria" (Poste) is better. But readers will find in Mr. Kenyon's very prettily got-up little volume a good clear version of what the author of the treatise meant, so far as scholars have yet been able to settle it.

* I give the right numbering; Morris's is sometimes three or four lines out. His printers counted 10 lines sometimes as 11, and sometimes as 9. And they counted lines 4659, 4660 as 5 lines instead of 2.

Much the same must be our verdict on the work of that veteran student of Aristotle, Mr. Poste. He, too, translates in many passages an amended text. (But has anyone altered the reading of c. 28, δωβολίαν, where Mr. Poste talks of three obols?) He has limited the usefulness of his book by giving it no index, and few notes; but he has paid more attention to style—English style—than Mr. Kenyon has, and his version is therefore a little, but only a little, more readable. It is sometimes even flowery, as in c. 27, where συνέβη θαρρήσαντας τοὺς πολλοὺς ἄψασαν τὴν πολιτείαν μᾶλλον ἄγειν εἰς αὐτοῖς becomes "he led the masses, intoxicated by success, to grasp an ever-increasing monopoly of power." Mr. Kenyon's translation is here preferable, and more like the plain, straightforward style of the author. In c. 29 a clause or qualification is omitted (ἔπερ τετταράκοντα ἔτη γεγονότας); and, in c. 30, κατὰ πειθήμερον cannot mean "for five days at a time, with intervals of five days." (Mr. Kenyon says "once every five days.") But, as a rule, where we do not agree with Mr. Poste, we see that the matter is fairly open to doubt. Thus, in c. 29, l. 19, we should suppose that the nominative to αἰρῶνται is the commissioners—συγγραφεῖς, or whatever they were called. But Mr. Poste may well be right in taking it of the commons, and Mr. Kenyon agrees with him.

With Herr Bauer's essays we pass from the text to the matter. While Mr. Kenyon retains the name of Aristotle for the treatise "as being at least the outcome of his inspiration and direction," and thinks that it is chiefly in supplementing authorities like Herodotus and Thucydides, "and in giving precision where they are obscure, that the value of the new material is greatest," Herr Bauer holds that Aristotle is the author, and he finds it full of valuable matter which will not be exhausted for a long time. Of the firstfruits of his own study of it he gives us some excellent specimens. Remembering his penetrating essay on Themistocles (1881), we looked with interest to see what he makes of the chronological difficulties which follow if, with the author of the treatise, we suppose that Themistocles was in Athens as late as 462-1. He apparently makes it possible for Themistocles, after staying so late in Athens, to have passed Naxos during the siege in his flight by removing the date of the siege itself lower down. Indeed, the table of reconstructed dates which he prints at the end of his book reminds us greatly of a game of "General Post." But his scheme is, in all seriousness, very ingenious and well worked out. A survey of how history was written by Greeks leads on to a consideration of how Aristotle wrote it. The creation of a new branch is claimed for him—the history of constitutions; but he (i.e., the author of the new treatise) is shown to be much nearer in genius to Thucydides than to any other Greek historian. On the fact that both writers were of Thracian origin Herr Bauer wisely lays no stress. It is more important to remember that both brought forward the search for causes and really explained the present from the past, and that both "argued back" from traces surviving in the present to a past of which no history had come down to them. Herr Bauer rejects the views of Causer on the treatise (ACADEMY, June 6) and the theory of Schwarcz that Demetrius of Phalerum was the author; but he has a venturesome theory of his own—that the writer meant to reconcile the Athenians to their loss of freedom, and to show them (by a sympathetic sketch of Pisistratus) how pleasant life might be under a wise and good monarch. How this view stands to the common view—that the Constitution of Athens is one of a series of Constitutions meant to serve as materials for political research—he does not clearly tell us.

FRANKLIN T. RICHARDS.

THE NEW SANSKRIT MS. FROM MINGAI.*

At the monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal on November 5, 1890, Colonel Waterhouse exhibited a birchbark MS., obtained by Lieut. Bower from the ruins of the ancient underground city of Mingai, near Kuchar, in Kashgaria. According to the notes in the Proceedings (No. ix. of 1890 p. 223), the MS. consists of 56 leaves, most of which are written on with black ink on both sides. A string runs through the middle of the leaves, and two boards protect the volume. According to the same authority, the MS. was made over for deciphering to Babu Sarat Chandra Das, who, however, as well as Lama Phantshog, failed to make out its contents. The notice concludes with the remark that, as the MS. appears to be particularly rare and interesting, heliogravures of two leaves are published in the Plate III., added to the number of the Proceedings, "in the hope that some of the members may be able to decipher it."

As the photo-etchings, which give the sāṅkaprishthas of fols. 3 and 9, are very good, and as the MS. really possesses a very great interest for all Sanskritists, I subjoin my reading and translation of the piece on fol. 3, together with some remarks on the alphabet, language, and contents of both the pieces.

By the shape of its leaves the Mingai MS. differs from all other birchbark MSS. known to me. All those which I have seen in Kashmir, as well as the Bakhshali MS., consist of sheets of quarto size. The leaves of the Mingai MS., on the other hand, are narrow, long strips, cut according to the usual size of the palm-leaves. Like the palm-leaf MSS., they are held together by a string, which is not used for any other birchbark volume, because the brittle nature of the material would make such a proceeding dangerous for its preservation.

The writing on fol. 3, which is very large and clear, exhibits the type of the characters of the Gupta period. There are only two letters which slightly differ from those used in the Gupta inscriptions. The initial a (see anavatap-tena, L. 5) shows a peculiar form in which the upper half of the left limb, represented by a curve open to the left, has been placed in front of the lower half and has been connected with it by a short stroke. Further, the left limb of sa shows mostly a wedge (as in the Horiuzi palm-leaf) instead of a small circle.

The writing on fol. 9 shows in general the same type as that of fol. 3. But it is very much smaller, and there are a few more advanced cursive forms. The initial a looks exactly like the a of the Horiuzi palm-leaf. For the ya we find besides the old tripartite form, a peculiar looped one, and the form of the Horiuzi palm-leaf. In the letter śa the continuity of the top line is mostly broken. There are also several instances of a sa with an open wedge in the syllable śya. Among the numerals the figure 3 shows the ancient Gupta form, consisting of three horizontal lines one above the other. The figure 9 resembles those occurring on the Valabhi plates and in the Śāradā MSS. In fol. 3 two different signs of interpunction are used. Between words to be taken separately, and at the end of half verses and verses occurs a short horizontal stroke or a small curve, open to the left. Once, in L. 2 after svāhā, we have two upright strokes with hooks at the top.

Babu Sarat Chandra Das is no doubt right, when he says (Proceedings, loc. cit.), that the Mingai MS. appears to have been written by different hands. The volume may even be made up of different pieces, written at different times. The parts resembling fol. 3 belong, to judge from the characters, to the fourth or to the fifth century A.D. Those resembling fol. 9 may be somewhat later. But it is not impossible that the cursive forms already existed during the earlier period named, and that the exclusive use of more antiquated signs on some sheets is owing to individual idiosyncrasies of the writers. These questions can only be settled when the whole MS. has been thoroughly examined. For the present, this much only appears certain: (1) that the MS. contains a page showing the same characters as the Gupta inscriptions; (2) that both the leaves, published in facsimile, look older than the Horiuzi palm-leaf; and (3) that the Mingai MS. has, therefore, a claim to be considered the oldest Sanskrit MS. hitherto found.

As regards the contents of the MS., fol. 3 apparently contains a charm which is intended to force the Nāgas or snake-deities to send rain. The mutilated line 1 enumerates, it would seem, various plants which are to be used as ingredients for an oblation. L. 2 gives the Mantra for the oblation, which ends with the word svāhā. The latter word, as is well known, always indicates the moment of the tyāga, when an oblation is thrown into the fire. The Mantra probably consisted originally of an entire Anushtubh S'loka, the first half of which may have begun with the mutilated word madana (?) in line 1, which and certainly ended with the syllables ka me in line 2. The end of line 2 and the following lines down to the end of the page contain the so-called Anumantrana, a further invocation of the snake-deities, intended to propitiate them by a declaration of the worshipper's friendly relations with various individual Nāgas. This snake-charm, which appears to be Buddhist, was probably composed in Southern India. For it mentions "the district on the banks of the Golā," i.e., the Godāvāri which, rising near Nasik, flows through the whole Dekhan until it reaches the Bay of Bengal in the Madras Presidency.

The language of this piece is the incorrect Sanskrit, mixed with Prakrit forms, which is common in the Buddhist works of the early centuries of our era, as well as in the Buddhist and Jaina inscriptions of the same period, and is found also in the mathematical Bakhshali MS. In line 2 we have the faulty Sandhi devo samantena; in line 3 the faulty compound nāgarājñā; in line 4 the insertion of a meaningless m between vāsukinā-m-āpi, which in Pali is commonly used in order to obviate a hiatus, and the faulty compound nandopanando; in line 5 the Prakritic form pi for the particle api. It is also possible that parivelāya in line 2 may be a Prakritic locative for parivelāyām.

The metrical portion consists of exceedingly irregular Anushtubh S'lokas. The Mantra ought to end in samanantatah instead of in samanāntena and has one syllable in excess. The last three verses of the Anumantrana have also more syllables than they ought to have. It is noteworthy that this small piece contains a dozen words and meanings not traceable in the dictionaries.

TRANSLATION OF FOLIO 3.

... "Dundubhi, Gārjanī, Varshawī, cucumber, Patanī, Terminalia Chebula. Hārīnī, Kāpana. . . .

* This paper has already appeared—with the original Sanskrit of the passages here given only in translation, and also accompanied by notes—in the Vienna Oriental Journal, vol. v. No. 2.

... May the god send rain for the district on the banks of the Golā all around; Iikisi Svāhā!

I keep friendship with the Dhritarāshtras, and friendship with the Nairāyānas. I keep friendship with the Virūpākshas and with Krishna and the Gautamakās. I keep friendship with the king of snakes Māni, also with Vāsuki, with the Dandapādās, with . . ., and ever with the Pūrṇabhadras. Nanda and Upananda, [as well as those] snakes of [beautiful] colour, of [great] fame and great power, who take part even in the fight of the gods and the demons—[with all these], with Anavatapta, with Varuṇa and with Samhāraka I keep friendship. I keep friendship with Takshaka, likewise with Ananta and with Vāsumukha, with Aparājita and with the son of Chhibba I keep friendship; likewise always with great Manasvin."

The contents of fol. 9 seem to be different. All the portions which are legible in the facsimile contain medical prescriptions for the cure of disease and for giving to sickly children vigour and health. In line three we have at the end of a prescription which is not entirely decipherable:

"[This is a medicine] which increases the body of a lean boy or of one who is in a decline."

Immediately after these words follows another prescription:

"I will declare the most effective prescription [which gives] strength and a [healthy] complexion. Kusā-grass, Moringa pterygosperma, the root of Andropogon muricatus, grapes. . . . A decoction of these, [mixed] with sugar, must be given to a lean person; or let him smear on Ghī, boiled with those [above-mentioned ingredients] and with Jiraniya."

Again I read in lines 10-11:

"Schreberia Swietenoides, Curcuma longa, Rubia Munjistā, pepper and Pinus Decodaru—clarified butter mixed with a powder of these [ingredients], also (?) white Moringa pterygosperma (?), Clitoria ternatea and pomegranates, mixed with water, one shall prescribe for a child, that is suffering from thirst, looks ill and is in a decline. Pounding Aglaia odorata, or also Cyperus into a paste, one shall give it, together with rice-water and mixed with honey."

These specimens are amply sufficient in order to establish the character of the contents of the second page. Possibly they may have been extracted from the chapter of a medical work on bātchikitsā. I may add that the whole page will become probably legible, if the leaf is well soaked in water and afterwards dried, as the Kashmirians invariably do with old birchbark MSS.

Lieutenant Bower believes the ruins of Mingai and the MS. to be Buddhistic. The latter conjecture is, as already stated, probably correct. For, verse 101 of the Khandavatta Jātaka (FAUSBÖLL Jātakas, vol. ii., p. 145),

*Virūpakkhehi me mettāṃ mettāṃ Eriṇṇāhehi me |
Chhābhūyiputtehi me mettāṃ [mettāṃ] Kamhāgōta-makehi chā ti ||*

corresponds with portions of the first and last verses of the Anumantrana on fol. 3. This agreement shows at all events that similar verses occurred in Buddhist literature.

I trust that Dr. A. F. R. Hoernle, the able and learned secretary of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, will take the volume in hand, and give us a full account of its contents. If the society wishes to render a real and great service to the students of Indian palaeography it will publish photo-etchings of the whole volume. Every line of the MS. is of the highest importance.

G. BÜHLER.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891.

M. GUILLAUME CAPUS, the explorer of the Pamir, will make one or more communications to the Oriental Congress regarding his journey, his imprisonment in Chitrāl, his stay in Wakhan, and his views about the prehistoric character of the Arnyia language. He has photographs with him that will add to the interest of his communications.

Another sympathetic explorer, Captain Binger of Kong celebrity, will give an account of that secluded Mohammedan kingdom in which "the three paths of Judaism, Christianity, and Islam," are on exactly the same footing, where all are educated and which, in other respects also, gives lessons of toleration.

It is doubtful whether Mr. Moser will be able to come. His panorama of Russian battles waged in Central Asia is a great attraction to the more scientific part of his ethnographical collection regarding the tribes either independent or under Russian protection in that part of the world. The lay figures of Khivans, Bokhariots and others attending to camp, tent, and domestic life, the splendid dresses or ornaments, now supplanted by gaudy nothings from Europe, the MSS., and, above all, the weapons, are such as recall a state of things which the advance of civilisation has already made past and irrecoverable.

Mr. Tsuboi, the discoverer of several hundred artificial caves near Tokiō, the seat of the Imperial University of Japan, which sends him as a delegate to the Congress, has much to say regarding the antiquities of his country, and his communications are likely to interest not only the Japanese section, but also a general meeting of the Congress. The first Dravidian prehistoric discovery has also just been made near Bellary by Mr. R. Sewell and Mr. F. Fawcett, who has come to the Congress to explain it. In addition to a Summary of Research in Chinese since 1886, written by Prof. Cordier, "Sinology" will have the advantage of two papers from Prof. Schlegel on "The Causes of Antiphrasis in Language," "The Position of Women in Ancient and Modern China." The Rev. Dr. Edkins will contribute two papers, one showing the influence of nomad life on the language of the Tartars, the other comparing Chinese and Japanese modes of thought. "The Astrological Myths in Ancient Chinese History," and other quaint inquiries, form the subject of papers from Mr. Kingsmill and others.

The advance in philology is very marked in the Congress by the addition of a Section explaining the influence of customs in the formation of so-called grammatical rules in a number of languages.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ETYMOLOGY OF "HACHEMENT."

Trafalgar House, Belling: August 6, 1891.

The second volume of Littré, which contains hachement, bears the date of 1863. But in 1853 M. Adalbert de Beaumont in his Recherches sur l'origine du Blason (Paris: Leleux) had already (pp. 37 to 39) pointed out the true source of the old heraldic term hachement, which gave place to lambrequin. Littré's definition, "liens de panache à divers noeuds et lacets, et à longs bouts voltigeants," was not incorrect; but his etymology, from acesmer—orner, was rubbish founded on a worthless assertion that hachement was a false spelling of a-ces-me-merit. Acesmer, in Low-Latin acosmare, can by no possibility have anything to do with hacher, from which came hachement.

The old heraldic meaning of hachement is inseparable from its general meaning, which Cotgrave duly recorded as "a hacking, shredding, slicing; hewing or cutting in pieces." And Godefroy's definition is heraldically quite correct as "lambrequin ou chaperon d'étoffe qui enveloppe le casque" . . . The hachement or lambrequin was in fact what English heraldry calls the "Contoise, a flowing scarf worn attached to the helm before 1350," as described in Mr. C. Boutell's "English Heraldry" (4th ed. pp. 111, 218).

But M. de Beaumont pointed out—and any one else who has been, as he was, among the Arabs must confirm him—that the true origin of this scarf or lambrequin (which Western heralds eventually mistook for a mere ornament) was the head-scarf or Keffiyeh fastened on with its silk and camel's hair thick cord, the 'okāl, while its pendant ends and fringes are left to flow down over the neck and shoulders, to ward off the sun.

Now as this scarf in ages gone by covered the helm, it came in for its share of hard knocks and sword cuts, and the more it was sliced and shred and haché and lambrequiné in actual fight the more honourable it was, like having the colours shot through. It is worthy of note (and has not yet been stated in these discussions) that Sherwood's English-French Dictionary, appended to Cotgrave's, gave "A hatching (the hilt of a sword), Hachement." M. de Beaumont drew side by side (1) the conventional and preposterous lambrequin depending from the helm; (2) the blazon of a "prince baronnet" from the Encyclopædia heraldica; and (3) an Arab of the Suez desert with the Keffiyeh on his head. The fidelity of this last, and its close resemblance to the lambrequin or hachement of the prince baronnet, are incontestable; and it is now a good many years since I came to the conclusion that M. de Beaumont had solved the question.

But as to the thing thus called in old French a hachement becoming the other thing called in heraldic English a hatchment, I cannot see that anyone has as yet (in electrician's phrase) made the connection or completed the circuit: and until this be done the attractive theory that the word hatchment is the word hachement must, as it seems to me, remain not proven.

JOHN O'NEILL.

SCIENCE NOTES.

MR. F. HOWARD COLLINS, of Edgbaston, known as the compiler of An Epitome of the Synthetic Philosophy, has issued a pamphlet (Williams & Norgate), in which he supports the Spencerian tenet—that acquired faculties are inherited—from the diminution of the jaw in civilised races as an effect of comparative disuse. Taking a series of skulls in the museum of the College of Surgeons, he calculates that the mass of the jaws stands in the following ratio; Australian aborigines, 1948; ancient British, 1135; modern English, 1030. That is to say, the first is almost twice as massive as the last. Further, he argues that this difference cannot be due to natural or sexual selection, but must be the effect of disuse.

At a recent meeting of the Académie des Sciences, Prof. S. P. Langley read a preliminary paper upon experimental researches which he has been carrying on during the past few years connected with the subject of mechanical flight. He hopes ultimately to be able to demonstrate that, with motors having the same weights as those actually constructed, we possess at present the necessary force for sustaining, with very rapid motion, heavy bodies in the air—for example, inclined planes more than a thousand times denser than the medium in which they move. Further, from the point of view of these experiments, and also of the theory underlying them, it appears to be demonstrated that if, in an aerial movement, we have a plane of determined dimensions and weight, inclined at such angles and moving with such velocities that it is always exactly sustained in horizontal flight, the more the velocity is augmented the greater is the force necessary to diminish the sustaining power. It follows that there will be increasing economy of force for each augmentation of velocity, up to a certain limit which the experiments have not yet determined.

THE annual report of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution for 1890 (Washington: Government Printing Office) contains an account of a visit paid by Mr. Frederic A. Lucas in 1887 to Funk Island, to search for remains of the great auk or garefowl. Funk Island lies off the north-east coast of Newfoundland, within a day's sail of St. John's; and there can be no doubt that it was the home of the great auk described by early voyagers. It has twice before been visited by collectors—by Peter Stuvitz in 1841, and by Prof. J. W. Milne, in 1874; while in 1863 a party in search of guano brought back three "mummies" or dried bodies of the bird. Mr. Lucas describes the surface soil of great part of the island as being entirely composed of debris of the great auk, including fragments of eggshells, which latter are so numerous as to give the deposit a yellowish grey colour. The pounds into which the birds were driven for slaughter can still be traced. Though numbers of terns, puffins, &c., still inhabit the island, substantially all the remains are those of the great auk. During a stay of only two days, the party collected several thousands of bones in good preservation, though no entire skeleton; nor was any "mummy" found, and only one membranous lining of the egg. The material brought away comprised two cubic feet of earth, as nearly as possible undisturbed, in order to show the bones in situ; a barrel of miscellaneous remains; and another barrel of the best preserved bones that could be found. From these last, about half a dozen perfect or almost perfect skeletons have been made up. One has been placed in the exhibition series of the U.S. National Museum, two have been presented to American museums, one was exchanged with the museum at Sydney, and another has found its way to the museum of Science and Art at Edinburgh. Mr. Lucas concludes his paper with a technical discussion of skeletal variation in the great auk, and with a bibliography. Illustrations are added, from photographs, of a stuffed specimen and an egg, in the U.S. National Museum. Both the bird and the egg seem to have come from Europe. We may add that other birds on the coast of Newfoundland, such as the gannet, seem to be in danger of extermination from parties of "eggers."

MEETINGS OF SOCIETIES.

PALESTINE EXPLORATION FUND.—(Tuesday, July 21.)

THE annual meeting of the General Committee was held at the office, 24, Hanover Square, James Glaisher, Esq., F.R.S., in the chair. The report contains mention of Herr Schick's successful endeavour to find the continuation of the rock-cut channel south of the Virgin's Fountain, and alludes in regretful terms to the theft (or, as the report calls it, "removal") of the famous Siloam inscription, which was cut out of the rock tunnel and carried away some time during last year. Through the active efforts of the Committee the fragments of the inscription, which was broken in removal, have been recovered; but the circumstance has aroused suspicion among the Turkish authorities, and several difficulties have consequently occurred in the work of exploration. Among the more important discoveries of the year are:—(1) An elaborate rock-cut tomb, and an ancient bath and cistern near Bethany. (2) Some fine mosaic work in three colours at the so-called "House of Caiaphas." (3) Another rock-hewn chapel with a Greek inscription at Silwan. (4) The springing of an arch in "Solomon's Stables" by Mr. Lees. The lower masonry and the part of the arch left are similar to Robinson's Arch, and the fragment of an arch near the south-east corner. A paper on this subject by Mr. Wrightson, C.E., a report with plans by Herr Schick, and a photograph of the arch by Mr. Lees, have been published in the Quarterly Statement.

ROYAL BOTANIC SOCIETY OF LONDON.—(Monday, August 10.)

DR. ST. GEORGE MIVART, F.R.S., in the chair. The record of scientific and other work drawn from the annual report shows a continued increase in the general utility of the society. The gardens and greenhouses containing the exotic collections have seldom been in better condition, the long winter doing no further damage than increasing the fuel account, while the showery summer has given a great impulse to the general verdure of the more hardy trees and shrubs. The various exhibitions and filices have been successfully held; but the weather has not been altogether favourable, and owing to this the attendance and receipts have been somewhat less than last year. The exhibits, however, were above the average, and show in a remarkable manner the perfection to which the art of floriculture has attained. The number of new varieties to which certificates have been awarded, with the increased size and beauty of old favourites, as well as the many new plants from all parts brought for judgment to these exhibitions, attest at once their usefulness, the importance of the trade, and the skill, energy, and capital employed in it. As a meteorological station for London, the site has long been noted, and the action of the society in publishing the automatic daily sun records for the past four years has earned the thanks of all interested in meteorological science. The series of lectures on botanical subjects by well-known professors given during the season were very largely attended; while the notes of new and rare plants, &c., published in the quarterly Journal of the society, give it an ever-widening interest. The Council this year presented a large number of specimen trees, palms, &c., to the People's Palace in the East of London. As the only botanic garden in the metropolis, and bearing in mind the increasing popularity of the science of botany among all classes—even the elementary schools making it a subject—it is not surprising that the facilities which the gardens afford for study are each year more and more taken advantage of. The number of students and teachers seeking admission is yearly on the increase—the total on the books this session (over 800) never before having been reached; to each of these free tickets of admission of from one to three months have been issued, as well as many thousands of illustrative cut specimens to such, and to the various colleges, medical and other schools. Admission to the gardens has also been enjoyed by a number of scientific societies, natural history clubs and schools in large communities, under their leaders and teachers. The practical information and samples afforded to a large variety of commercial and manufacturing interests has been another item in the year's work, and one which commends itself most readily to the English public. Prof. Groves was elected a member of council for the ensuing year; the Duke of Teck, K.C.B., and H. L. Antrobus being re-elected president and treasurer. The meeting closed with a vote of thanks.

FINE ART.

NATIONAL PORTRAIT GALLERY.

THE thirty-fourth annual report of the National Portrait Gallery, which has just been issued, shows that ten works have been acquired by gift and bequest during the past year. These include a half-length portrait of Richard Fox, Bishop of Winchester, the early patron of Wolsey, an old copy after Johannes Corvus; a miniature on copper by an unknown hand of Richard Baxter, the celebrated Nonconformist divine; an oil portrait on panel of Richard Hooker; and a copy in water-colours by Powell of a portrait of Richard Scroope, the Archbishop of York of Shakspeare's Henry IV., beheaded in 1405, from a stained glass window formerly in York Minster, destroyed by the fire of 1829; also, among more modern portraits, an oil picture, by J. P. Davis, of Richard Colley, Marquess Wellesley, K.G., eldest brother of the Duke of Wellington, a portrait by Fagnani of William Bulwer, Baron Dalling, and Bulwer, G.C.B., elder brother of Lord Lytton, and marble busts of Sir Edwin Chadwick, K.C.B., the social economist, by Adam Salomon, and of Robert Southey, the poet, a posthumous work by John Graham Lough. The purchases for the year number twenty-six. Eleven of these are works in plaster by the late Sir J. E. Boehm, R.A., which no doubt the trustees intend to reproduce as permanent bronze electrotypes. They include busts of H.M. the Queen, Archbishop Tait, the Earls of Beaconsfield, Iddesleigh, and Shaftesbury, Lord Napier, of Magdala, General Gordon, Sir Henry Cole, John Leech, and the Right Hon. John Bright, and a full-length recumbent statue of Dean Stanley. The more important of the other purchases are half-lengths of the first Earl of Hardwicke, in his chancellor's robes, by T. Hudson; of Speaker Sir John Glanville, by an unknown painter; of Charles I., probably by "Old Stone" after Vandyck; of Richard Bentley, by Sir J. Thornhill; of the first Earl of Pembroke, by an unknown artist; and of Thomas Hood and his wife, attributed to Masquerier; a miniature of William Combe, author of the "Tours of Dr. Syntax," by Cosway; a full-length chalk drawing of Alexander Pope, taken surreptitiously, by William Hoare, R.A., when its original was in conversation with Mr. Allen in the gallery at Prior Park; a half-length oil picture, by Hoare, of the Right Hon. Henry Pelham, M.P.; pencil drawings of Sir Joseph Banks, F.R.S., by Sir Thomas Lawrence, and of Dante Gabriel Rossetti, by himself; and a portrait of Sir Robert Peel, as a boy, attributed to Romney. The report makes no reference to the new galleries, whose erection is now happily begun, or as to the probable date when they will be ready to receive the national collection of portraits.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MR. GEORGE REID, R.S.A., one of the most capable and cultured of Scottish painters, was elected by the Royal Scottish Academy, on Saturday, to succeed Sir William Fettes Douglas as their president. Mr. Reid was born at Aberdeen in 1842, and received his earliest instruction in art in the Trustees Academy in Edinburgh. He afterwards studied in Utrecht under Mollinger, and in Paris under Yvon, and painted for a time with Israels at the Hague. His earlier works were characterised by the subdued colouring and quiet tonality that marks the productions of the modern school of Holland, but he has gradually introduced more force and richness of hue, with more brilliancy of lighting, into his pictures. In their sound and thorough draughtsmanship, their searching modelling, and their mastery over character and expression his portraits will bear comparison with any that are now being produced in our country; and he is also a refined and sensitive landscapist, and a flower painter of exceptional dexterity. As a book illustrator he is known by such works as his volumes of Tweed and Clyde sketches, by his city subjects in Mrs. Oliphant's "Royal Edinburgh," and by the landscapes and especially the portraits, in Mr. Alexander's "Johnny Gibb of Gushetneuk," which display a skill that fully justifies the praise bestowed upon him by a brother book-illustrator, Mr. Pennell, who styles him "perhaps the best pen draughtsman in Great Britain to-day."

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Association for the Promotion of Art and Music in Glasgow, held last week, it was intimated that progress had been made towards the erection of the proposed new art galleries, the minimum sum of £16,000 required before the contract with the corporation became operative having been subscribed by forty-three persons. It was resolved that a double competition of designs for the buildings should be held, the first to include all architects who chose to compete, and from these at least five are to be selected to send in final designs, one of which will be selected. Mr. Alfred Waterhouse, R.A., was appointed assessor to guide the committee in arranging the competition and in the final selection of a plan, and it is expected that the building will be begun in April, 1892, and the foundation stone laid in August.

MR. A. STAPLETON has reprinted from the Mansfield and North Notts Advertiser a pamphlet on The Crosses of Nottinghamshire, Past and Present, some part of which originally appeared in the Antiquary a few years ago, and was noticed in the ACADEMY at the time. He has now considerably corrected his material from subsequent information, and has re-arranged it in alphabetical order. Nottinghamshire does not appear to be very rich in ruined crosses, at least in comparison with the western counties; but Mr. Stapleton is able to recover a number that have altogether disappeared, mainly from early perambulations of boundaries. He has also done good work in exploding several misleading traditions, notably in the cases of Newark and Wakeringham. By far the most interesting cross in the county is that of Stapleford, which has fortunately attracted the attention of Prof. G. F. Browne, of Cambridge. Repeated visits have enabled him to make out the details of its Celtic ornamentation, and the symbol of St. Luke the Evangelist. It thus ante-dates the dedication of the parish church, which is to St. Helen; and it is particularly interesting to learn that the village feast is still fixed by a complicated calculation with reference to Old St. Luke's Day.

We have had sight of a prettily illustrated Catalogue compiled by Mr. Percy Horne, the well-known collector, and entitled the Engraved Portraits and Fancy Subjects Painted by Gainsborough and Romney. Mr. Horne's Catalogue is based chiefly, no doubt, upon the resources afforded by his own cabinet of prints. He is an authority on the subject of mezzotint, and it can hardly be necessary to inform our readers that it was in mezzotint that the finer—nay, nearly all—of the subjects after Gainsborough and Romney were engraved. The Gainsborough prints were published between 1760 and 1820, the Romneys between 1770 and 1830; and it will possibly surprise some to be made aware of the fact that while the prints after Gainsborough reached the number of eighty-eight, those after the more immediately popular, and certainly the very delightful, master obtained the figure of 145. In each case the majority of the subjects engraved are portraits, and only the minority "fancy" subjects. We said that Mr. Percy Horne's dainty Catalogue—which Eyre & Spottiswoode issue—is prettily illustrated. So indeed it is. A score of rare and charming prints are reproduced by a process principally, if not wholly, photographic. Among them is the Rowney portrait of Burke, the Gainsborough of the Hon. Mrs. Watson, the exquisite Rowney of the Lady Derby of his day, and several more delightful things. We are not ourselves professedly experts in the matter of the engraved subjects of the artists under notice, but it is easy to know enough to be convinced that Mr. Horne has executed the Catalogue proper with care and devotion to his theme. Criticism of course is no part of his vocation, and he does not in any way enter upon it.

AMONG the recent art publications in Germany, The Art-Treasures of Italy, edited by the well-known Dr. Carl von Lützwow and published by the great firm of F. Engelhorn, of Stuttgart, takes one of the first places. Of this work a new and cheap edition has a few weeks ago been arranged, and it has now a great sale in Germany. This magnificent book, containing upwards of 500 folio-pages with 348 text illustrations and 50 etchings by the first masters of Germany, appeals to the general public as well as to the lover of art, all its plates having been executed in the daintiest manner and with superior skill and showing the new method of reproduction at its best. In fact it is considered by some German critics the standard work of German Art Literature, and as such will soon make its way into other countries.

THE STAGE.

OBITUARY.

AUGUSTE VITU.

THE death of M. Auguste Vitu is the event of the dramatic week. He was, as most men are aware, the theatrical critic of the Paris Figaro—a post necessarily influential, but liable in feeble, or in not particularly scrupulous hands, to be abused. Auguste Vitu held the place honourably, and was rightly influential for many years. In England his writing is not so well known as is that of many more flashy, more cranky, or more obviously self-satisfied men. He did not go in for popular effect. He did not indeed adopt either of the two courses by which a theatrical critic may hope to become popular or, at the least, notorious—he neither expressed in his own gushy manner the purely commonplace judgment of his troop of commonplace readers, nor did he cherish his own particular fads and become the persistent advocate of the outlandish and the nasty. He neglected both of these receipts—and both are almost infallible ones—for the attainment of a large publicity; nor was he perhaps quite as conspicuously distinguished as his confrère, M. Francisque Sarcey for the possession of a robust good sense. His was not the voice even of the intelligent bourgeois—of the bourgeois who thinks. Still, he made his mark—made it even in a daily newspaper, where the theatrical writing, executed immediately after a performance, has time perhaps to be vigorous, but has not time to be polished. He was denied those opportunities for the careful literary essay which are enjoyed by those of his brethren who work upon the weekly feuilleton—M. Francisque Sarcey, for instance, in the Temps, and M. Jules Lemaitre in the Débats. It was his function, rather, to furnish the reader at the earliest possible moment, with a fairly vivid, a generally accurate and detailed, and a certainly impartial account of the piece and of the performance of which he had just been the witness. Thus he stood on the border-land—and yet, somehow, on the happier side of the border-land—which divides the territory of the just intelligent reporter from that of the well-endowed critic.

MUSIC.

OBITUARY.

HENRI LITOLFF.

IN Henri Litolff, who has just died, after a stormy and chequered career, near Paris, at the age of seventy-three, there has passed away a musician who is probably best known to the present generation by the "Collection" of classical music which bears his name. Born in London, of a French father and an English mother, he became the favourite pupil of Moscheles, and at the age of eighteen settled at Melun, in France, where, owing to an imprudent marriage, he passed for some years a miserable existence, but began his fame as a pianist. Losing his wife and children, he came, in 1839, to Paris, where he was heard in many concerts, and subsequently visited Belgium, Germany, and England, achieving everywhere uninterrupted success, his overture to Catherine Howard being specially appreciated. Thrown into prison, as the result of an action brought against him by his wife's family, he managed to escape, and in 1850 appeared in Hamburg, where he married the widow of Meyer, a music publisher, who subsequently obtained a divorce from him. His last wife was the daughter of Count Wilfrid de la Rochefoucauld. His works comprise an oratorio, half a dozen operas, and upwards of a hundred smaller compositions, including the well-known "Spinnlied." Among his most popular productions may be reckoned a few of his overtures, and his symphony concertos, especially Nos. 3, 4, and 5. As a whole, his compositions display great inequality, brilliant genius being constantly marred by eccentricities and want of order. M. Hector Berlioz, however, speaks of him in terms of the warmest praise:—"Litolf," he says, "is a composer of the highest rank. He possesses at once inspiration, scientific knowledge, and judgment. A devouring ardour burns within him, and would tend to lead him into a certain violence and exaggeration, from which often the beauty of his productions would necessarily suffer, did not a profound acquaintance with the actual restrictions of his art and a sane judgment keep in its bed this boiling torrent of passion and prevent it from overflowing its banks. He belongs, besides, to the race of the great pianists, and his touch—nervous, powerful, but always clearly-timed as that of a virtuoso—bespeaks these qualities that I have just indicated in him as a composer." Not much has been heard of this artiste of late years.

MUSIC PUBLICATIONS.

Loewe-Album. In 2 Vols. (Schlesinger.) These thirteen ballads are edited by Mr. A. B. Bach, the author of The Art Ballad, reviewed last year in the ACADEMY, and in that volume he announced that he was about to publish some of Loewe's Ballads, with both German and English words. Mr. Bach's admiration of the composer knows no bounds. He concludes his preface with "the ardent wish that Loewe's Ballads, like Handel's Oratorios, may take firm hold in Great Britain, and like them become favourites with the whole nation." Mr. Bach's wish will, we fear, never be fulfilled; for while Loewe at times shows dramatic power, and while his music is often of great interest, he is now and again dull, and even trivial, and his lengths cannot be accounted "heavenly." We have often tried over his Ballads, noting here a clever thought, there a clever treatment. We have admired his skill in word-painting, his dramatic instinct; but familiarity with his ballads—a few excepted—has bred fatigue, and made us long for the Ballads of Schubert, which, if not always perfect from a dramatic point of view, are always interesting, and for the most part inspired. There is a great charm about simple music, and at times Loewe catches the true folksied spirit, as in "The Lost Daughter" or "The Clock," but frequently he is content with trivialities both of melody and harmony. These two volumes contain some of Loewe's best Ballads, such as "Edward," "The Erl King," "The Fisherman." Tone and word may not always fit like a glove, but on the whole the English translations deserve commendation. We cannot accept Mr. Bach's high estimate of Loewe, nor share his enthusiasm; but, for all that, we can praise him for trying to win recognition for a composer who has not hitherto received his due meed of praise.

We have received from Weekes & Co.:

Classical Gleanings Ancient and Modern. By Eugene St. Ange. Teachers often find it difficult to select classical pieces for pupils who are not very advanced, for frequently passages are found containing some technical difficulty, complication of rhythm, or uncomfortable stretch out of keeping with the general character of the music. A selection ready to hand is therefore welcome. The pieces under notice are described on the title-page as "without octaves." They ought to have been announced as "arranged for small hands," for the removal of octaves has led to other alterations. There may be no harm in simplification, but it is surely not right to give the slow movement from Beethoven's Sonata in G (Op. 14, No. 2) in mutilated and incoherent form. Again, why should Bach's Prelude in C from the Wohltemperiertes Clavier be entitled "La Voix Celeste"? Some of the numbers from Haydn, Boccherini, Dussek, will be found useful. We would advise M. St. Ange in continuing the series honestly to indicate any departure from the composer's text, and he will be wise to select pieces which require but little modification.

Lullaby, for Pianoforte, by Theo. Ward, is a pleasing little piece, and not difficult. Gavotte, by Th. Maas, is light and graceful; but it does not begin on the correct beat, and the close is weak. Again, why write f flat (p. 4, bar 7) instead of e natural; the former is confusing both to the eye and to the intellect.

The Golden Harps, a March, by Godwin Fowles, is rather a good piece, and not difficult.

Six Songs with Pianoforte Accompaniment. By Henry J. Wood. (Op. 15.) Of these six clever songs four are set to words by Heine, and in them the music faithfully reflects the spirit of the words, though it can scarcely be said to intensify them. "A Flower thou resemblest" and "Every morning rise I, crying," please us most. The accompaniment, however, to No. 2 is heavy, and the arpeggios at the close tawdry.

Songs. By E. J. and G. F. Armstrong. Set to music by J. C. Culwick. These are well-written songs, and show both feeling and imagination, but the composer requires to have his gifts under better control. No. 1, "Storm," seems to us the best of the set; it is terse and vigorous.

The Tear of Repentance: a Melologue. By John Greig, Mus. Doc. Oxon. The libretto, compiled by Mr. D. B. Munro, is founded upon Moore's "Paradise and the Peri." Hymns and hymn-tunes are no doubt admirable things in their way, but is it legitimate to pad out Moore's poetical fairy-story with them? The reciter tells of the Peri weeping to think her recreant race should e'er have lost "that glorious place," in answer to which the chorus sings a hymn "O Paradise!" And in this fashion does Moore become one of the prophets. Besides hymn-tunes, there are songs of an ordinary ballad type.

Pater Noster: Meditation on J. S. Bach's Prelude in F minor. (Wohltemperiertes: E. Klavier.) Book 2, No. 12. By Richard Farrell, Mus. Bac. Cantab. If Gounod put a melody and words to the C. Major Prelude, why should not Mr. Farrell do likewise to the one in F minor? One might rather ask, Why should he? Gounod succeeded, and was forgiven for tampering with Bach's text; but Mr. Farrell's melody merely spoils the Prelude, and besides is not suited to the words. The transcriber himself probably felt that there was no special connexion between tone or word, for he writes on title-page "for soprano or tenor voice (or violin)."

Nothing venture, nothing have and Only Just a Story, by J. M. Palmer, are two simple ballads.

This second has the inevitable valse refrain. Lullaby, by Samuel Weekes, is a quaint and pleasing song; the coda is, however, a shade spun out. Love's Broken Spell, by Edith Farries, is indeed a poor ballad; its faults are both positive and negative. St. Agnes's Eve. By Arthur Esmond. Tenyson's lines are set to music of steady, if not distinctive, character.

Come unto Me, ye weary. Vocal Duet. By C. Warwick Jordan. This is not a strong specimen of sacred music. There are one or two good phrases in the duet section, but on the whole we find the song commonplace.

The Chorister's Dream. Words and music by A. Holmes-Dallimore. The words are sentimental, and the music vulgar. It is really a pity such music can be printed. It is not only lacking in refinement but is clumsily written. The King and the Miller. By Henry J. Wood. A pleasing ballad, and the words point a good moral. This is the Day, an Easter Anthem by Charles Edwards, is smoothly written, and in its way fairly effective. The Beloved of the Lord, Anthem by Leigh Kingsmill, is not an ambitious work, but contains some really good and varied writing.

MUSIC NOTE.

MR. JAMES WALKER, of Aberdeen, has just presented to the public library of the city his valuable collection of musical literature, consisting of over 400 volumes, thoroughly representative of music in its various branches. The collection is specially remarkable for its wealth of old Scottish music, both vocal and instrumental, and includes several works of great value and interest from their rarity and in some cases uniqueness.

CALVINISTIC METHODIST or WELSH PRESBYTERIAN THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

PRINCIPAL—REV. T. C. EDWARDS, D.D. (late Principal of the University College of Wales, Aberystwyth).

This College, first established in 1837 for the training of Ministers among the Welsh Calvinistic Methodists, will be OPENED next SEPTEMBER as an exclusive Theological College, into which all will be admitted whether candidates for the ministry or laymen. A fee of £5 for the Session will be charged in the case of Students not candidates for the ministry among the Calvinistic Methodists.

BOROUGH of NOTTINGHAM MUSEUM and ART GALLERY, NOTTINGHAM CASTLE.

ELEVENTH AUTUMN EXHIBITION of PICTURES and SCULPTURES.

The above Exhibition will OPEN on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. Works will be received between the 4th and 8th of August, inclusive. Forms and all particulars can be had on application.

G. H. WALLIS, Director and Curator.

Nottingham Castle, July 10th, 1891.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION for the ADVANCEMENT of SCIENCE, 22, Albemarle Street, London, W.

CARDIFF MEETING, AUGUST 19th to 26th.

President-Elect—

WILLIAM HUGGINS, Esq., D.C.L. LL.D., F.R.S., Hon. F.R.S.E., F.R.A.S.

The JOURNAL, PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS, and other Printed Papers issued by the Association during the Annual Meeting will be forwarded daily, by post, to Members and others unable to attend, on application and prepayment of 2s. 6d. to the Clerk of the Association, Mr. H. C. STEWARDSON, on or before the first day of the Meeting. G. GIFFERT, Assistant General Secretary.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS and HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.

Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY, 74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

F. V. WHITE & CO'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.

By Mrs. Alexander.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," "By Woman's Wit," "Mona's Choice," "Blind Fate," &c.
3 vols. [Shortly.]

II.

By Lady Constance Howard,

Author of "Sweetheart and Wife," "Mollie Darling," "Mated with a Clown," &c., and

Ada Fielder King,

Author of "It is Written," "Lionel Villiers," &c.

MASTER of her LIFE.

3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

".....Is a readable story....."—Court Circular.

III.

By Mrs. Alexander.

WELL WON.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," &c.
In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
[Shortly.]

IV.

By Helen Mathers.

MY JO, JOHN.

By the Author of "Comin' thro' the Rye," "Sam's Sweetheart," "The Mystery of No. 13," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.
[Aug. 17th.]

V.

By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

THE CRITON HUNT MYSTERY.

By the Author of "The M.F.H.'s Daughter," "£100,000 versus Ghosts," "A Distracting Guest," &c.
Cloth, 2s. 6d. [Shortly.]

NOTICE.

Serial Tales by B. M. Croker and Mrs. Robert Jocelyn are continued in "BELGRAVIA," and Serial Tales by Mrs. Oliphant, and Curtis Yorke (Author of "Hush!" "The Mystery of Belgrave Square," &c.) in "LONDON SOCIETY," Magazine for August.

The CATALOGUE of WORKS in PRINT—by John Strange Winter, Mrs. Edward Kennard, Hawley Smart, B. L. Farjeon, Fergus Hume, Mrs. Lovett Cameron, "Rita," Mrs. Hungerford (Author of "Molly Bawn"), Helen Mathers, B. M. Croker, Florence Fraser, Mrs. Alexander, F. C. Phillips, Mrs. Alexander Fraser, Justin McCarthy, M.P., and Mrs. Campbell Praed, Bret Harte, Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Sir Randal Roberts, Bart., Lady Margaret Majendie, The Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh, Marie Corelli, Alfred C. Calmour, Mrs. Houston, May Crommelin, Florence Marryat, The Hon. Mrs. H. W. Chetwynd, Katharine Chetwynd, Col. Rowan Hamilton, William Day, and other Authors—will be sent on application.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,

31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

TRISCHLER & CO'S
LIST OF NEW BOOKS.

Now ready, at all Booksellers and Libraries.
FRENCH FICTION OF TO-DAY. By Madame VAN DE VELDE. Beautifully Illustrated with Twelve Fronts.
Daily News says: "Madame Van de Velde has written two serious, yet light and amusing, volumes on French Fiction of To-day. The authoress renders full justice to the exquisite sense of style in most French fiction."
"Readers will gather from the book more information regarding contemporary French novelists than from any other single book with which we are acquainted."—Glasgow Herald. In Two vols.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE SCUDAMORES."
JARDYNE'S WIFE. 3 vols. By C. J. Wills.
Glasgow Herald says: "Judged as a novel, the work is exceedingly clever. The parodies of the characters introduced are gems in their way. Altogether the novel is very enjoyable."

NEW BOOK BY B. L. FARJEON.
FOR THE DEFENCE. Dundee Advertiser.—"A clever and ingeniously constructed story." The Gentlewoman.—"Mr. Farjeon's name is always a guarantee for a story with a strong sensational interest and a great amount of originality." Paper cover, 1s.; cloth boards, 1s. 6d.

NEW PRIZE NOVEL.—ONE SHILLING.
THE ONLY WITNESS. By E. J. Goodman, Author of "Too Curious," "Paid in his Own Coin," &c.

PRIZES OF £30, £15, and £5
Are offered by the Publishers for the three best solutions of the mystery contained in this story and to be revealed in the last chapter, at present placed in a sealed packet and deposited on the hands of Mr. GEORGE AUGUSTUS SALLA.

WALTER BESANT says: "It is a story worthy of Gaboriau." The Evening News says: "The story is highly sensational, and the developments are of so startling a character, and are told with such terse rapidity, that when the early chapters are read one hurries on to the last with ever-growing curiosity and eagerness. The break is made at a point which plunges the reader into endless conjectures."

TRISCHLER & CO., 18, New Bridge Street, Blackfriars.

THE MAORI-POLYNESIAN COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY.

By EDWARD TREGEAR, F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S.,
President of the Wellington Philosophical Society, New Zealand.
700 pp., royal 8vo, cloth lettered, 21s.
Wellington, N.Z.: LYON & BLAIR.

THE COLONY of NEW ZEALAND:
its History, Vicissitudes, and Progress. By WILLIAM GIBBORNE, Esq., formerly resident in the Colony for thirty-three years. Re-issue, with Statistical Information brought down to 1890. Crown 8vo, with Three Maps, 6s.

"A valuable book for such as really desire to know the story of our colony and its resources. . . . A good, solid book."—Otago Times.

THE COMMON SALVATION: Notes of a Study of Romans 1. 17-viii. 39. By JOHN W. OWEN B.A. (Oxon.). 8vo, 6s. net.
E. A. PETHERICK & Co., 33, Paternoster Row, E.C.; Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide.

PRICE SIXPENCE.
NEW MID-MONTHLY SERIES.—No. 1, Vol. I., for AUGUST 15, of ILLUSTRATIONS.
Conducted by FRANCIS GEORGE HEATH.
PRINCIPAL CONTENTS.

THE HEIR of HERONS COURT. (Chaps. I. and II.)
HOLIDAY PLACES—Richmond-on-Thames, and Iona and Staffa.
THE BATHS of GASTEIN.
NATURE in JAPANESE ART.
THE DOCTOR'S BRIDE.
STICKLEBACKS and SEAHORSES.
MEN and WOMEN of the DAY—Sir Frederick Leighton, P.R.A.
MUSICAL NOTES.
THE LADY of GRISTWOOD.
FERN GOSSIP. By the Editor.
THE EDITOR'S PORTRAIT.
A STUDY of the MONTH.
REPRODUCTIONS of NATIONAL GALLERY PICTURES.
BITS of OLD ENGLAND.

FIFTY ENGRAVINGS.
Beautifully printed on superfine paper.
Specially Liberal Terms to the Trade.
"ILLUSTRATIONS" COMPANY, LIMITED, 1, St. Swithin's Lane, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR
TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
THE BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and editions de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

POPULAR EDITION.
Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO'S AI SAUCE,
SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and
POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,
ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,
TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other
SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.
THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.
ESTABLISHED 1857.
Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.—LEADING ARTICLES.—RECENT DECISIONS.—CASES of the WEEK.—CASES BEFORE THE BANKRUPTCY REGISTRARS.—SOLICITORS' CASES.—REVIEWS.—NEW ORDERS.—GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.—COURTS.—PARLIAMENT and LEGISLATION.—APPOINTMENTS and OBITUARY.—SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER. £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.
WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free Single Number, 1s.

The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.
Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
To-night, at 7.45, a new and original drama, by Geo. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled,
THE TRUMPET CALL.

COMEDY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechmere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vano Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled, MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olooff, Templar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, F. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

LYRIC THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15. LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schuberth, Ellis, and Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Manager, W. W. KELLY.
At 8, Grand revival of Sardou's
THE ODORA.
Messrs. Fuller Mellich, Murray, Cerson, G. W. Cockburn, T. W. Percival, Leslie Corcoran, F. Victor, Henry de Solla, Alker, Ludlow, Warton, &c.; Mesdames Bertie Willis, Lillian Secombe, Louisa Wyatt, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
To-night, at 8, FATE and FORTUNE; or, the Junior Partner, by James J. Blood, by arrangement with Mr. William Calder.
Messrs. W. L. Abington, Geo. Barrett, W. R. Sutherland, Bassett Roe, Stephen Caffrey, H. Bedford, W. Cheesman, Henry Pagden, T. F. Doyle, Hindley Wright, John M. East, C. Medwin, &c.; Mesdames May Whitty, Cicely Richards, Sallie Turner, May Protheroe, &c.

SAVOY THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LYLY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Sautmarck, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LANSHIRE SAILOR.
At 9.15, A COMMISSION.
And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL.
Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Maxwell, and W. Grossmith; Mesdames E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Norreys.

STRAND THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDGUIS.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edgouis, Eversfield, Hawtrey, Cape, Barn-clough, and H. Standing; Mesdames Fanny Brough, Edmund Phelps, Eva Moore, and Vemie Bennett.
At 8. BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cunningham, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED
Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
COCOA
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW HUMOROUS TRAVEL BOOK.—Now ready, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

TWO GIRLS ON A BARGE.

By V. CECIL COTES. With 44 Illustrations by F. H. Townsend.

Small demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

LIFE OF JANE WELSH CARLYLE.

By Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND, Author of "Selections from the Works of Charles Reade." With Portrait and Facsimile Letter.

"Mrs. Ireland may be said to have completed what Froude began. There is nothing but unstinted praise to be awarded for its rigidly conscientious thoroughness, as well as for a charm of style which is due as much to the heart as to the head of the writer."—Liverpool Post.

"This life of Mrs. Carlyle is a sweet and sad story, told with all tenderness and sympathy. We have the whole tale of her life put together with symmetry."—Daily News.

"The volume is deeply interesting, and Mrs. Ireland has done her work so well that the biography deserves to rank very highly in Carlyle literature."—Morning Post.

"We may confidently refer our readers to the book itself. It will kindle fresh interest in a brilliant and fascinating personality, and will earn the thanks of the multitude of readers whose sympathy had already been roused by the half-told tale of Mrs. Carlyle's life."—Manchester Guardian.

"Mrs. Ireland's book is no mere echo. It is a careful, earnest, and independent piece of literary work."—Spectator.

"Mrs. Ireland's volume is the best balanced and most authoritative study of Mrs. Carlyle that has yet been published."—Academy.

"Many people will be grateful for this sensible presentation of the facts of the case, and for the skilful manner in which the salient incidents of a pathetic story are grouped in this gracefully written volume."—Locks Mercury.

"This is a modest but a most welcome addition to the books which have to do with the life of Thomas Carlyle and his wife. Mrs. Ireland has added some most suggestive material to the stock previously available."—Standard.

THE NEW "LIFE."—On September 10, 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

LIFE of JAMES BOSWELL (of Auchinleck); with an Account of his Sayings, Doings, and Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD, M.A. With 4 Portraits.

DR. ANDREW WILSON'S NEW BOOK.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

GLIMPSSES of NATURE. By Dr. Andrew Wilson, F.R.S.E. With 35 Woodcut Illustrations.

"The art of recommending science to the unscientific is understood by no one better than by Dr. Wilson. It is amazing how interesting the creepiest things may become in his hands. In his new volume he is as fresh as if he were looking at a stretch of blue water or green field for the first time. The more readers he imparts his enthusiasm to, the better for the race."—Scottish Leader.

Crown 8vo, handsomely printed, and bound in buckram, with Steel-Plate Portrait, 6s.

SELECTIONS from the WORKS of CHARLES READE. Edited, with an Introduction, by Mrs. Alexander Ireland.

"It was decidedly a happy thought to weave together into one convenient volume 'Selections from the Works of Charles Reade,' and Mrs. Ireland deserves credit for the judgment and skill which she has brought to an obviously difficult task. The book abounds in clever sayings and speaking portraits. Every phase of Reade's literary work is, we think, adequately represented, and the value of the book is certainly enhanced by the warm-hearted but not too laudatory criticism which stands by way of Introduction. Another attraction is a capital portrait—the best, indeed, we have yet seen."—Locks Mercury.

HUME NISBET'S NEW BOOK.—Immediately, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

LESSONS in ART. By Hume Nisbet. With 22 Illustrations in facsimile of the Author's Drawings.

"A COMPETITIVE UTOPIA."—On September 1, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 6s.

FREELAND: a Social Anticipation. By Dr. Theodore Hertzka. Translated by Arthur Ransom.

"Early last year Dr. Hertzka, a well-known Viennese political economist, published a book entitled 'Freeland: a Social Anticipation.' The book quickly ran through several large editions, and before the year ended societies were being formed in different parts of Germany and Austria preparatory to the organisation of a colony in which Dr. Hertzka's new economic views might be practically tested. The author has been called a 'high priest of the Manchester school,' and 'one of the most acute of the acute epigones of Ricardo.'"—Gentleman's Magazine.

Immediately, NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION, REVISED AND CORRECTED.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

MYTHS and DREAMS. By Edward Clodd, Author of "The Story of Creation."

"The author of that charming book, 'The Childhood of the World,' has returned at last, in a delightful volume, to his first love, and has given us, in surprisingly small compass, a summary of all that has been thought or proved of late years about the origin of myths and popular religions. His pleasant little book skims so lightly over the whole ground of comparative mythology, without dwelling too long upon controverted points, that the general reader as well as the professed anthropologist cannot fail to extract from it an immense amount both of amusement and profit. The style is easy, incisive, and often brilliant; the examples are carefully and piquantly chosen; and the book as a whole is a welcome contribution to the literature of the subject with which it deals."—Pall Mall Gazette.

NEW LIBRARY NOVELS.

OLGA'S CRIME. By Frank Barrett, Author of "Fettered for Life," &c. 3 vols., crown 8vo. [Shortly.]

DUMARESQ'S DAUGHTER. By Grant Allen, Author of "The Tents of Shem," "The Devil's Die," &c. 3 vols. [Shortly.]

MISS MAXWELL'S AFFECTIONS. By Richard Pryce, Author of "Just Impediment." 2 vols., crown 8vo. [Shortly.]

ST. KATHERINE'S by the TOWER. By Walter Besant, Author of "All Sorts and Conditions of Men," &c. With 12 Illustrations by Charles Green. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A CHILD WIDOW. By Mrs. F. H. Williamson. 3 vols., crown 8vo.

A NEW ADVENTURE STORY.—Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

THE FOUNTAIN of YOUTH: a Novel of Adventure. By Erasmus Dawson, M.B. Edited by Paul Devon. With 2 Illustrations by Hume Nisbet.

"The Fountain of Youth' is to be commended to every one who likes a rattling good story, full of fun, and abounding in incidents of the most startling and sensational character. It is seldom that a scoundrel is depicted with such power. Whether we regard its humour, or its pathos, or the remarkable descriptions of things seen or heard in lands as strange to most people as any under the sun, the work is one which every reader will enjoy."—Spectator.

MISS ALBERT'S NEW NOVEL.—Post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

BROOKE FINCHLEY'S DAUGHTER. By Mary Albert.

"Fearfully and wonderfully tragic is the life of 'Brooke Finchley's Daughter,' and strangely ingenious is the method adopted by Miss Albert of guiding her heroine through the labyrinthine mazes of a mysterious and distressing parentage to the happy culmination awaiting all interesting heroines at the end of their sorrows."—Glasgow Herald.

DICK DONOVAN'S NEW DETECTIVE STORIES.—Immediately, post 8vo, illustrated boards, 2s.; cloth limp, 2s. 6d.

A DETECTIVE'S TRIUMPHS. By Dick Donovan, Author of "Tracked and Taken," "Who Poisoned Hetty Duncan?" &c.

GEORGE R. SIMS'S NEW BOOK.—Immediately, crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

DAGONET DITTIES (from the "Referee"). By George R. Sims, Author of "How the Poor Live," "The Dagonet Reciter," &c.

MR. BESANT'S ROMANCE OF TO-DAY.—Immediately, Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

ARMOREL of LYONESSE: a Romance of To-day. By Walter Besant. With 12 Illustrations by F. Barnard.

"Mr. Besant has seldom, if ever, written a better or more interesting story. When we compare it with average fiction, we feel almost inclined to fall down and worship the volume."—Spencer.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE. One Shilling Monthly. Contents for August:—Captain Kitty: a Salvationist

Sketch, by Lillias Wassermann.—A MOORLAND SHEEP-FARM, by George Radford.—VERNON and the JENKINS' EAR WAR, by H. P. Roberts.—SUMMER BEVERAGES for FAT PEOPLE, by Dr. N. E. Yorko-Davies.—LIFE in an ALGERIAN HILL-TOWN, by J. E. Taylor, F.L.S.—FLOWERS and the POETS, by Spencer Moore.—A GREAT RAILWAY CENTRE, by John Sansome.—SOME ENGLISH EXPLETIVES, by Thomas H. B. Graham.—THE CRY of the SAXON, by M. A. Curtiss.—PAGES on PLAYS, by Justin Huntly McCarthy, M.P.—EFFORTS towards the PERFECTING of the BOOK, by Sylvanus Urban.

SCIENCE-GOSSIP: an Illustrated Medium of Interchange for Students and Lovers of Nature. Devoted to Geology, Botany, Physiology, Chemistry, Zoology, Microscopy, Astronomy, Telescopy, Physiography, Scientific Photography, &c. Edited by Dr. J. E. TAYLOR, F.L.S., &c. Price 4d. Monthly; or 5s. per year, post free.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, 214, PICCADILLY, W.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1007.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 22, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
HERBERT SPENCER'S JUSTICE, by Prof. BROUGH	147
THE WORLD'S GREAT EXPLORERS, by W. O'CONNOR MORRIS	149
MARIE ANTOINETTE, JOSEPHINE, AND MARIE LOUISE, by F. T. MARZIALS	150
DR. WETZ'S SHAKESPEARE, by Prof. HERFORD	151
NEW NOVELS, by WILLIAM WALLACE	152
TWO SOCIOLOGICAL BOOKS	153
NOTES AND NEWS	154
UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS	154
ORIGINAL VERSE: "NATURE'S SOLILOQUY," by T. GORDON HAKE	155
OBITUARY: JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL, by WALTER LEWIN	155
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	155
HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE	156
THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY—II.	156
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	157
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Old French "Fol, Felon," by Paget Toynbee; The Nuptial Number , by J. Adam; Kyle's Spanish Tragedy , by A. Brandl	157
SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY	158
THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891	158
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Notes on some Bili and Jaina-Prakrit Words , by Dr. R. MORRIS	159
SCIENCE NOTES	159
THE EDINBURGH CONGRESS OF THE ROYAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE	159
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	161
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	162

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

SCIENCE MASTER WANTED, qualified to earn grants from the Science and Art Department. £100 per annum guaranteed, but energetic teacher would earn considerably more. Address, stating qualifications, &c., to E. S. PERKIN, Director, Technical Schools, Tottenham.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO BE LET,
excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has uninterrupted north-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HOUSEKEEPER, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, 64, Chancery Lane.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class

BOOK ILLUSTRATION

Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers. For specimens, prices, &c., apply to the Manager.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., Oulless, R.A.; Pettie, R.A.; Prinsep, A.R.A.; of the Fresco in Guy's Hospital; "SPRING," by Herbert Draper, &c., &c.; also examples of Auto-Gravure Reproductions of Photographs from Art Objects, and from Nature, can be seen at the Autotype Gallery—

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: a Decorative and Educational Art," post free to any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence.

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

SECOND EDITION NOW READY.

WORDSWORTH'S GRAVE, and other Poems,

By WILLIAM WATSON. Frontispiece, fcap. 8vo, half-bound, paper boards, 3s. 6d.

"NOTE ON A NEW POET.

"Mr. William Watson has set forth a dainty volume of poems entitled 'Wordsworth's Grave,' which has found readers and admirers, no doubt, since the edition is now well nigh exhausted, but which, nevertheless, has failed as yet to obtain in full the high recognition it deserves in critical quarters. It was only the other day, indeed, that Mr. Howells chanced upon it, and spoke for it a few words of hearty commendation from the Editor's chair in Harper's; only the other day that Mr. Walter Besant picked it up in a friend's house, and wrote well of it thereafter in the Littell as a rare and precious treasure of contemporary poetry."—GRANT ALLEN, in the Fortnightly Review, August.

THE PSEUDONYM LIBRARY.

Paper, 1s. 6d.; cloth, 2s.

THE BEST BOOKS FOR HOLIDAY READING: HANDY FOR THE POCKET IN SIZE AND SHAPE.

"Delightful books to hold."—SATURDAY REVIEW.

"Dainty little volumes."—ATHENÆUM.

1. MADemoiselle IXE. By Lanoe FALCONER. Seventh Edition.
2. THE STORY of ELEANOR LAMBERT. Second Edition.
3. A MYSTERY of the CAMPAGNA, and A SHADOW on a WAVE. Second Edition.

4. THE SCHOOL of ART. 2nd Edition.
5. AMARYLLIS. 2nd Edition.
6. THE HOTEL D'ANGLETERRE, and other Stories. By LANOE FALCONER, Author of "Mademoiselle Ixe." Second Edition.
7. A RUSSIAN PRIEST. 2nd Edition

LONDON: T. FISHER UNWIN, PATERNOSTER SQUARE, E.C.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The CHAIR of GREEK is now vacant through the election of Professor Roberts as Principal of the University College, Aberystwyth. The Council will proceed to the appointment of the new PROFESSOR in September next. The stipend of the Professor will be £500 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before Tuesday, September 8th, 1891. For further information apply to, Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, October 5th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning Scholarships, &c., apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

University College, Cardiff,
August 11th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in GEOLOGY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a DIRECTOR of the STAFF of TRAVELLING TEACHERS in TECHNICAL SUBJECTS, to be established under the provisions of the Scheme of the Technical Instruction Committee, of the County of Monmouth. The stipend of the Director will be £500 per annum. Candidates for the post must send in their applications, together with testimonials and references, to the undersigned, on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8th, 1891. For further information, and for copies of the above scheme, apply to, Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical subjects for the County of Glamorgan:—

- A LECTURER in MATHEMATICS and THEORETICAL MECHANICS.
- A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY.
- A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.
- ONE OR TWO LECTURERS in MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 8th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of MINING. The stipend of the Professor will be £500 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the ensuing Session, a COURSE of LECTURES on "THE DECAPOD CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology. The Lectures will be given twice weekly, commencing SATURDAY, October 17th, at 10 a.m. The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, suitable for Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London, commences MONDAY, October 5th, at 4 p.m.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE,

FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton, Cambridge).

Professors—Seeley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis D'ail, Signor Garcia, Larpent, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

Full list and references on application.

Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION for filling up about FOURTEEN VACANCIES in the FOUNDATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 30th. For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

SCHOOL for the DAUGHTERS of GENTLEMEN.—Sea air and home life, with thorough education and good masters. Only twelve are received. Reference is kindly allowed to the Right Rev. the Lord Bishop of Chichester, the Ven. the Archdeacon of Chichester, also to Miss Clarke, Broussard Park, London, N.W., and others.—Address E. A. B., Underdown, West Worthing.

ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY'S LATEST PUBLICATIONS.
PROCEEDINGS of the GENERAL MEETINGS for SCIENTIFIC BUSINESS of the ZOOLOGICAL SOCIETY of LONDON for the Year 1891. Part II., containing the Papers read in March and April, with 33 Plates, price 12s. is now ready, and may be obtained at the Society's Office (3, Hanover Square, W.), at Messrs. LONGMANS, the Society's Publishers (Paternoster Row, E.C.), or through any Bookseller.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS of ORIENTALISTS.

LONDON, 1st to 10th proximo. OFFICE, 29, Hanover Square, W.
Patrons—H.R.H. the DUKE of CONNAGHT; H.H. ARCHDEAK RAISER
Hon. Presidents—MARQUIS of DEVEREAUX and the EARL of LYONS.
President of Organising Committee—The Right Hon. LORD HATFIELD
600 Members in 37 countries, and 150 "papers" can be counted on 9 Governments, and 36 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous of sending Delegates or of informing the Congress of their Oriental work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers, to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. LEITNER-WALKING, who will supply the Programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members.
Member's Subscription, £1; Non-Member's Subscription for Congress Publications, 2s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

TO BE OBTAINED AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

The NOVELS of JESSIE FOTHERGILL

A LDYTH.

(Popular Edition, now first issued, will be ready immediately.)

THE "FIRST VIOLIN."
BORDERLAND.
HEALEY.
KITH and KIN.
PROBATION.

Each in uniform binding, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

JUST READY.

RULING THE PLANETS.

By MINA E. BURTON.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MR. BAZALGETTE'S AGENT."

VIOLET MOSES.

By LEONARD MERRICK.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HER OWN COUNSEL."

EVELYN'S CAREER.

By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY.

SO NEAR AKIN.

By M. A. BENGOUGH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A clever and original novel told with a humorous and artistic detachment which promises well for the future of the author."—Queen.

"So Near Akin" is a clever story, and if it is a first book we shall look forward with interest to its successor."—Standard.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE DUKE'S MARRIAGE."

The ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN

By JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"Throughout a sensible and well-executed story. The author is a deft hand both in construction of plot and in descriptive matter. His book is thoroughly enjoyable."—Academy.

New and Popular Editions at all Booksellers.

BY MARIE CORELLI.

The Author of "A Romance of Two Worlds."

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY MARY LINSKILL.

BETWEEN the HEATHER and the NORTHERN SEA.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY AN ANONYMOUS AUTHOR.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NANCY."

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton.

In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street, Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

WARD & DOWNEY'S NEW BOOKS.

THE INSANITY of GENIUS, and the GENERAL INEQUALITY OF HUMAN FACULTY PHYSIOLOGICALLY CONSIDERED. By E. J. NISBET, Author of "Marriage and Heredity." 1 vol., demy 8vo, 11s.

In a Letter about this Book, Professor HUXLEY writes:—

"Genius to my mind means innate capacity of any kind above the average mental level. From a biological point of view, I should say that a genius among men stands in the same position as a 'sport' among animals and plants, and is a product of the variability which is the postulate of selection both natural and artificial."

"Mr. Nisbet's recent book on the insanity of genius contains much evidence which appears to show that the most distinguished men of each generation have had some morbid element which has crossed, or perhaps even constituted, their greatness."—Times (Leading Article).

"The book is a curious and interesting one."—Times.

"Open its pages where one will, one is confronted with matter of interest alike to the scientific inquirer and the mere seeker of entertainment."—Saturday Review.

TWO YEARS AMONGST the SAVAGES of NEW GUINEA. With an Introductory Chapter on North Queensland. By W. D. PITCAIRN, F.R.G.S. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 5s.

"His experiences remind us very forcibly of those of the early navigators. At one time his small vessel is surrounded by a swarm of natives, with whom his party does battle with drawn swords in hand, loaded revolver in belt, and Winchester rifles lying handy in the cabin; at another, he himself is ashore, keeping a bold front in face of the treacherous mob, but feeling desperately nervous."—Times.

ANTHROPOLOGICAL STUDIES. By A. W. BUCKLAND, Member of the Anthropological Institute. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"Has certainly brought together an immense wealth of facts, and besides giving us his own criticisms, he has stated the theories held by our leading authorities in paleontology, so that his book is a storehouse of information and speculation on the obscure beginnings of our race."—Daily Telegraph.

"The book deserves to be widely read."—Morning Post.

NOTES ON MEN, WOMEN, and BOOKS. By LADY WILDE. 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

"The whole is of a quality to ensure a warm welcome for the volumes to follow."—Westminster.

AN OCTAVE of FRIENDS. By Mrs. LYNN LINTON. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"The book will be warmly welcomed."—Saturday Review.

A SUMMER IN KIEFF. By Isabel MORRIS. With Illustrations by Cochrane Morris. 1 vol., demy 8vo, 10s. 6d. Now ready.

NEW NOVELS.

HUMBLING HIS PRIDE. By C. T. C. JAMES, Author of "The New Faith," "The Blindness of Memory Earle." 3 vols., 31s. 6d.

"It has good points and an excellent tone. Consistent vigour is shown in the sketch of the central figure."—Morning Post.

"Page after page shows that the author possesses true humour."—Speaker.

ORLANDO FIGGINS. By Mrs. Alfred MARKS (Mary Hoppus). Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Orlando Figgins" is a little tragedy in homespun, told with the greatest art and delicacy."—Illustrated London News.

CAPTAIN LANAGAN'S LOG. By EDMUND DOWNEY (F. M. Allen), Author of "Through Green Glasses." 3s. 6d.

"This volume more than maintains the reputation its author has made."—Star.

THE TRIAL OF PARSON FINCH. By SOMERVILLE GIBNEY, Author of "John o' London," &c. Crown 8vo, 6s.

"Is written with a simple directness which gives it an air of reality, and the character of the parson is especially well drawn."—Standard.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's NOVELS.

AT ALL LIBRARIES.

DONALD ROSS OF HEIMRA

By WILLIAM BLACK,

Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. SECOND EDITION.
3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Illustrated London News.
"One of the very best of Mr. Black's works, and his best is very good indeed."—Illustrated London News.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE

By AVERY MACALPINE.

2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his careful analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the denouement."—Times.
"An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Saturday Review.
"A delightfully pleasant novel."—Graphic.

STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

At prices ranging from ONE to SIX SHILLINGS.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

Cloth gilt, 6s. each.

IN SILK ATTIRE.	THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-BOAT
A DAUGHTER of HETH.	THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THREE FEATHERS.	THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.	STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON.
KILMENY.
SUNRISE.
IN FAR LOCHABER.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition)	MARY ANERLEY.
CLARA VAUGHAN.	CRIPPS THE CARRIER.
	CHRISTOWELL.

By THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.	THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.	TWO on a TOWER.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.	THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.	A LAODICEAN.

By FRANK R. STOCKTON.

Crown 8vo volumes, various prices.

THE HUNDRETH MAN.	THE CASTING AWAY of MRS. LECKS and MRS. ALESHINE, and THE DUSANTES. Boards, 2s; cloth, 2s. 6d.
THE LATE MRS. NULL.
THE BEEMAN of ORME.	THE MERRY CHANTER. (Illustrated) 2s. 6d.
ARDIS CLAVERDEN.

* Other Volumes in October.

By W. CLARK RUSSELL.

Half-leather, 3s. 6d. each.

AN OCEAN FREE LANCE.	A SAILOR'S SWEETHEART. ("VENOR")
THE FROZEN PIRATE.	THE WRECK of the "GROSLITTLE LOO."
A SEA QUEEN.	JOHN HOLDSWORTH, CHIEF MATE.
THE LADY MAUD.	BETWINT the FORELANDS. (Shortly.)
MY WATCH BELOW.
JACK'S COURTSHIP.
A STRANGE VOYAGE.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

Paper covers, 1s. each.

SOLDIERS THREE. (Seventh Edition.)	WIE WILLIE WINKLE. (Sixth Edition.)
THE STORY of the GADSBYS. (Fifth Edition.)	UNDER the BEODARS. (Fourth Edition.)
IN BLACK and WHITE. (Sixth Edition.)	THE PHANTOM 'RICKSHAW. (Third Edition.)

London: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd., St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane, Fleet Street, E.C.

WARD & DOWNEY, YORK STREET, W.C.

SATURDAY, AUG. 22, 1891.

No. 1007, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

Justice: being Part IV. of the Principles of Ethics. By Herbert Spencer. (Williams & Norgate.)

IN each of the three sciences which Mr. Herbert Spencer has already surveyed in the light of his theory of evolution, namely, biology, psychology, and sociology, he has first collected data from less complex sciences and stated inductions made independently of evolution, and has then proceeded to the main task of establishing principles of development. The science of ethics fell subsequent to sociology in his plan of publication, but fear of failure in health led him in 1879 to publish the Data of Ethics, while as yet only one out of three projected volumes on sociology had been completed. The leading divisions of the Sociology were afterwards executed; but in 1886 Mr. Spencer's health failed so completely that nothing was done for four years. At the beginning of 1890, he tells us, "it became again possible to get through a small amount of serious work daily." Completion of the Principles of Ethics was decided upon.

"Led by my belief that my remaining energies would probably not carry me through the whole . . . passing over Part II.—'The Inductions of Ethics'—and Part III.—'The Ethics of Individual Life'—I devoted myself to Part IV.—'The Ethics of Social Life; Justice.'"

The Inductions of Ethics Mr. Spencer described in his original prospectus, issued in 1860, as "Those empirically-established rules of human action which are registered as essential laws by all civilised nations: that is to say, the generalisations of expediency." The Ethics of Individual Life treats of that class of actions which can be judged right or wrong without bringing into consideration the interests of people other than the agent himself; it lays down "the conditions to complete individual life." The Ethics of Social Life, on the other hand, deals with actions which, "though their results to self are not to be ignored, must be judged good or bad mainly by their results to others." Justice is only one department of the Ethics of Social Life, and is concerned with the mutual limitations of men's actions necessitated by their co-existence as units in society." Before Mr. Spencer's treatment of Ethics closes, it will comprise a Part V.—Negative Beneficence, or self-repression to avoid giving pain; and a Part VI.—Positive Beneficence, or effort to give pleasure.

In the Data of Ethics, Mr. Spencer professed to indicate in outline a scientific basis for the principles of right and wrong. He did not set forth the specific conclusions, but the Data implied these "in such wise that, definitely to formulate them" required "nothing beyond logical deduction." A careful reader of the Data and of other previous divisions of the Synthetic Philosophy, will therefore not expect any great intellectual surprises from this new part. Indeed, as Mr. Spencer mentions in his preface, it covers a field which, to a considerable extent, coincides with that covered by Social Statics, published in 1850. And he has not waited for the present opportunity before elaborating his views on the nature of the state and the limits of state inference in essays and magazine articles. Already books have been written in reply to them. The chief interest of the present volume will therefore lie not so much in the political views advocated, as in the method of connecting them with truths of Biology and Sociology already woven into the same general system of philosophy. Mr. Spencer has discarded the supernaturalistic interpretation of the ethical end which he had allowed to stand in his Social Statics. He no longer speaks of human happiness as a Divine end. And to this, which is perhaps little more than a choice of suitable expressions, he has added a definite deductive affiliation of Ethics on Biology and an habitual appeal to sociological inductions in support of deduction. We notice also with satisfaction among matters of style that in the later book Mr. Spencer is able to dispense with much verbiage originally intended to attract the popular ear, and, consistently with the scientific structure of his whole system, to replace it with a wealth of illustration and suggestion from his accumulated stores of scientific and historical knowledge. And these improvements are of the more importance because to our mind it is a characteristic of Mr. Spencer's method, that while special arguments taken severally leave the impression of logical feebleness, or at any rate, of vulnerability, any considerable body of his doctrine, read as a whole, either produces discipleship or at least impresses powerfully the imagination, and decidedly "limits the freedom" which a critic feels in questioning its truth.

In the Data of Ethics, morality was regarded as an aspect of conduct at large; the flower of animal manners; that by virtue of which life might lengthen, deepen, and mature. This was not to be sought only at the apex of development, among the human kind, but was discernible along the whole line of evolving animal nature.

"By implication," Mr. Spencer says, "there is a conduct proper to each species of animal, which is the relatively good conduct—a conduct which stands towards that species as the conduct we morally approve stands towards the human species."

A reader of Mr. Spencer's Justice is too late to raise the question whether or not the conditions of animal life can, with a due regard to logic, be erected into measures of right and wrong. That question was raised in the Data, and the new volume is only for readers who have decided in his favour, or who are curious to see the detailed deductions which can be made. "It suffices for the present purpose, indeed, to set out with a hypothetical postulate, and to limit it to a single species. If the preservation and prosperity of such species is to be desired"—there emerge the conclusions which now interest us. The real nucleus of Mr. Spencer's interest appears to lie in human morality, and animal morality is only read as an introduction or a sidelight. The ethical view, therefore, need not sweep the animal kingdom as a whole; and need not discover that conduct which directly subserves the abundance of animal life in general without regard to species. At any rate, Mr. Spencer does not here attempt such a survey; and unless the forthcoming Ethics of Beneficence should supply hints, we are apparently left without ethical guidance so far as the dealings of man with other species of animal are concerned. Indeed, even international morality is only casually or indirectly indicated. The assumption is that Nature works towards life in general by preserving species singly, just as a futher assumption is that the life of a species is the aggregate of the lives of individuals belonging to it. Ethics begins, therefore, by generalising the conditions of preservation of the animal self and offspring, and now and again of wider, but still restricted, areas of life. Such generalisations Mr. Spencer entitles Animal Ethics, and he states three main ones—

- (1) Among adult animals individuals must receive benefits in proportion to their fitness to the conditions of existence, their power of self-sustentation.
- (2) During early life benefits received must be inversely proportionate to such power of self-sustentation.
- (3) There must be a partial or complete sacrifice of individuals where the number of the species can be better maintained in that way.

The third condition only applies where gregarious life prevails; and if niceties of definition were not out of place in estimating work so continuous and inter-connected as the Synthetic Philosophy, we might question whether Mr. Spencer is justified in discussing in his chapter on Sub-human Justice, the conditions of solitary animal life. He does little more, however, than point out the very limited extent to which the scale of perfectness in individual constitution decides the allotment of life as between the several members of any species. Among the lower types, life is threatened by multitudinous causes against which individual superiority does not avail. It is as organisation becomes higher, and the roaches of practical adaptation become wider and more complex, that excellence gains room, as it were, to tell its tale, and "individual differences of faculty play larger parts in determining individual fates." What is meant by Justice becomes more clearly exemplified when we pass to the discussion of gregarious life. We have here in the first place a passive co-operation, in which a number of animals join one another in performing the same acts, and, in the second place, an active co-operation, in which they divide functions, some watching, say, while others graze; a distinction very familiar to political economists. And wherever co-operation of either kind is profitable, there descends upon the free activity of animals a law of limit. "The acts directed to self-sustentation which each performs are performed more or less in the presence of others performing like acts," and each must perform them subject to the restriction that they "shall not seriously impede the like pursuits of others." Here, it is clear, we have duties imposed by virtue of the social state. The "rogue" elephant who is expelled the herd for aggressiveness, or the beaver who is expelled the colony for idleness, are transgressors who prove to us the law.

In impressiveness and importance of justice, there is progress when we pass to the higher animals, further progress from animals to man, and still further from savages to civilised man. Finally we have our elaborate systems of law and of moral opinion.

After picturing thus the emergence of justice as a feature of conduct and habit, Mr. Spencer thinks well to describe psychologically the growth of the sentiment and idea which support it. The mechanism of psychical adaptation in general is the growth of sensations, instincts, emotions, and intellectual aptitudes, parallel to organic changes. The soul, as well as the organism, is moulded into fitness for the requirements of life by constant converse with those requirements. Mr. Spencer knows that there is a logical snare awaiting him at this point in the argument. The law of adaptation has been generalised by survey of the lower orders of life. Is there not danger in extending it to social life? He ventures, nevertheless, to infer that the highest type of living being, no less than all lower types, must go on moulding itself to the requirements which circumstances impose; and he tries to identify psychologically the process in the special case of justice. He uses for this purpose the substance of some of the corollaries which close his Principles of Psychology. The foundation is love of freedom, an egoistic sentiment. The "ego-altruistic" sentiments of the Psychology he now names "pro-altruistic," showing how they initiate social cohesion, and so call forth and foster the strictly altruistic sentiment of justice. When feeling has thus come into play it sustains a guiding idea. The freedom, impulsively cherished, is found to have a limit imposed no less impulsively. The limit is not to the blessings we may enjoy. On the contrary, inequality is protected by it. But the limit is to the sphere of each man's pursuit of blessings, and it is the same for all men. No doubt practical men and even philosophers have ignored these characteristics of justice; they simply have not appreciated and distinguished them. Glaucon's famous depreciation of Justice is quoted as showing how equality of social freedom may be overlooked; while the just inequality of personal blessings has been denied by the Utilitarians, whose guidance in this question Mr. Spencer now once more repudiates. It therefore lies on the modern moralist to formally express the idea of Justice implicit in developing human intelligence, and this he does by restating the formula, which in Social Statics appeared as the "first principle of ethical science." It now stands thus—every man is free to do that which he wills, provided he infringes not the equal freedom of any other man.

The sterility and emptiness of a somewhat similar formula given by Kant for Individual Ethics has often been noticed by critics, including Mr. Spencer himself. Kant's special formula for Justice is now quoted in a note, and Mr. Spencer claims, perhaps too anxiously, that his own was framed before he had made acquaintance with it. He supplements his own formula, however, by an interpretation, intended to prevent a "possible misapprehension," which gives it a substance of an analogous kind to the implied hedonism which has sometimes been read into Kant. The freedom it refers to is the freedom to act for the sustentation of life. Here, as throughout the book, theory is illustrated and supported by sociological facts. Among primitive societies, the avenger of blood incarnates, as it were, the wrong use of freedom, and the limit which merely equalises aggressions. Judicial institutions, also, are at first the mere substitutes and instruments of retaliation. But in the finished conception of Justice aggression is seen to be immoral, and punishment ceases to be vindictive.

The statement of the supreme formula is followed by a chapter on its authority, which shows us what kind of proof Mr. Spencer considers adequate for his principles. The conception of Justice could not be expected to evolve and become definite otherwise than by gradual approximation. And a gradual approximation is actually furnished in the historical course of religious, moral, and legal theory. The Old and New Testaments, Kant, Roman juriconsults, Blackstone, Mackintosh, and others are quoted. That these authorities have merely dogmatised on the basis of a priori beliefs is an anticipated criticism which gives him occasion to re-state his well-known views as to the validity of intuitions generally. Our intuitions have been stamped upon the racial intellect by long ancestral converse with facts; and, moreover, their validity cannot be impugned without using in the argument intuition itself. With regard to ethical intuitions in particular, Bentham and Mill and their communistic disciples do not stir a step without unconsciously taking an intuitional foothold. The strength of the evolutionist formula consists in the corroboration which intuition and science afford to each other. The formula is an immediate dictum of the human consciousness, after this consciousness has been subjected to the discipline of prolonged social life; and it is also a condition scientifically deduced and historically verified, under which alone social life is possible.

A similarly comprehensive interest in the a priori and the a posteriori he during the remainder of the book carries through detailed topics of legislation and politics. Lawyers have derived from the adjective "right" an abstract noun denoting the privilege which legal rulers confer upon persons protected. This term Mr. Spencer uses, and personal rights, property rights, and rights constituting the imperfect status of women and children, are successively reviewed, though under a more special list of titles. These topics occupy 116 out of the 286 pages of the book, while about ninety pages follow devoted to so-called political rights, to the nature, constitution, and duties of the State and to the limits of State duties.

Mr. Spencer's views on political principles are already familiar and fresh in the public mind. Of the other topics, land ownership is one worthy, perhaps, of special notice here, both because it comes, in order among the rights discussed, at a place where the application of the formula begins to have an appearance of artificiality, and because, perhaps, in consequence of this artificiality, Mr. Spencer has now arrived at a conclusion contradictory to his original one. Men have equal claims to the use of the media, light and air, in which they are immersed, and similarly equal claims to their standing room on our globe, and to the material from which their means of life must be wrung. As historical verification, he quotes the customs of ownership among our ancestral tribes and marks, and the still surviving customs of Russian villages. Modern ownership law in our country bears traces both of the original common right and of subsequent monopolisation by conquering invaders, and at present unites supreme ownership of the people with a delegated ownership distributed among individuals. In Social Statics an inference had been drawn from the law of equal freedom, that the State should resume its right to actual management of the land, after compensating present holders. But now Mr. Spencer sees that this change, besides its impracticability, would imperil the connexion which binds benefit to productive effort under the present system. The principle of ownership has apparently come into collision with a principle for distributing personal wealth discussed in the following chapter as the right of property. Labour must enjoy its own products. This latter principle is one recognised by very different systems of law, and by thinkers so different as, for example, Wollaston and Bentham. And consequently it has been commended by a strange variety of arguments. Mr. Spencer specially notices Locke's justification, and claims that his own is a more valid deduction. The historical variations of ownership law have been partly due to need of adjusting the principle of giving to labour its own products, with the principle of men's equal right to earth's stores of material. The counter maxim of the Communists is virtually "equal division of unequal earnings."

Mr. Spencer's deduction of copyright and of reputation as species of ownership is not so convincing as his chapter on the right of property generally. This is not merely because they are less generally recognised by legislators. But the truth is that our supreme formula might be carried through the species of legal rights more easily and convincingly if a more suitable preliminary classification of such rights were made. Mr. Spencer himself has too much other work on hand to undertake the task, but there are political writers who might do signal service to social science by undertaking a new classification of legal rights, on the basis of their effects on the fortunes and actions of men, and their consequent significance for legislators. Such a classification would in my opinion remove copyright, for instance, to a class of quasi-contractual rights; and would invite for it a new theoretical justification. And it would also distinguish between legislation affecting the constituent rights of ownership as an institution, and legislation affecting the distribution of those rights among claimants. To the first kind the law of equal limits would apply, to the second the law of unequal benefits. JOSEPH BROUGH.

“THE WORLD’S GREAT EXPLORERS.”

Life of Sir John Franklin and the North-West Passage. By Capt. A. H. Markham, R.N. (George Philip & Son.)

THIS volume, one of the “Great Explorers” series, records the career of one of the famous mariners who have entered the most inhospitable parts of the earth, and have enlarged the circle of human discovery. It is hardly correct to say that Sir John Franklin found a navigable way, through the Arctic Sea, from the Western Atlantic to the Pacific; in the existing state of our knowledge, indeed, the exploit seems to be nearly impossible. The honour of accomplishing the North-Eastern Passage, from the shores of Norway to Behrings Straits, is due to Nordenskiöld, a noble Swede; McClure all but completed the North-Western Passage, but from east to west, not from west to east, in the Investigator in 1850-52; and no ship has yet left the coasts of Greenland and made her way safely to those of Alaska. But Sir John Franklin explored the seaboard of North America and its frozen wastes with an energy and success that have not been equalled; he added a large domain to the sphere of geography; he laid down his life in a brave attempt to effect the mysterious North-West Passage; and possibly he has indicated the true course to be followed in making that dread adventure. He was, also, a seaman of rare gifts, possessing the true heroic nature; and though the importance of a way through the Arctic Sea, in the interests of commerce, is comparatively small, and not what it was deemed to be in the seventeenth century, he not the less deserves the honour of England, as one of her best and greatest explorers. We have read Captain Markham’s book with unflagging interest, and it admirably fulfils its proposed object. It gives us a succinct but full account of the incidents of Franklin’s noble life; brings out clearly his grand and simple character; and with a little exaggeration, perhaps, but, in the main, with a just regard to fact, describes the results of his discoveries, and marks out his place among the renowned mariners, of whom Cook was, perhaps, the most splendid specimen. The volume, we should add, is very well got up, and the illustrations and maps are good.

John Franklin, born in 1786, was a scion of a thriving trading family which had settled at Spilsby in the eighteenth century. The boy learned the rudiments at the grammar school of Louth—the seminary of Tennyson, and of Hobart Pacha—but at an early age he showed that passion for the sea which has inspired so many of our famous seamen. He entered the navy when in his fifteenth year, and took part, but as a subordinate only, in several of the great engagements of the Revolutionary and Napoleonic wars with France. He was a midshipman in the Polyphemus at Copenhagen, a ship in the hottest of the Danish fire; was signal officer of the Bellerophon at Trafalgar, and was praised by his captain for “zeal and activity”; and fought gallantly in the remarkable action of Commodore Dance with Admiral Linois, in which Indians defeated a strong French squadron. He received a medal, also, for the heroism he showed in the operations around New Orleans; and it was his fortune to escort the Duchesse D’Angoulême—the one man of the Bourbons in Napoleon’s phrase—on the return to France at the Restoration of 1815. Exploring, however, was the real sphere, as was soon seen, of the genius of Franklin; and he had gained distinction in this while still in his teens. During the armed truce of the Peace of Amiens he served under Flinders—a great discoverer—in his voyage round the Terra Australis, then a land of Spanish and Dutch legends; he shared in the disaster of the Porpoise, a wreck, like many others, which fully brought out the courage and skill of the English sailor; and that he was well spoken of may be gathered from the fact that his name was given to a group of the Australian islands. At the close of the war the strong impulse of the English race towards exploring revived; and Franklin was placed in command of the Trent, with orders to try to reach the North Pole, in company with Buchan in the Dorothea. The expedition was one of great danger, and only attained the northern edge of Spitzbergen; but it gave Franklin a large Arctic experience; and it revealed to him the vision of Arctic adventure which he was to pursue through his subsequent life. In 1819 the Admiralty made a bold effort—the first of a succession of the kind—to explore the north of the American Continent, and, if possible, to discover the North-West Passage—the darling object of great Elizabethan mariners. Parry—an honoured name in Arctic discovery—was to proceed by sea on the Hecla and Griper, and to make westwards through Baffin’s Bay; Franklin was to lead an expedition by land from the settlements in the bay of the Hudson Company.

We have no space to follow this voyage of Parry; and shall merely remark that the Hecla and Griper made their way through Barrow Strait into Melville Sound, crossed the 110th meridian, never crossed before, and accomplished half of the passage to Behrings Straits, the extreme limit of this Arctic quest. The journey of Franklin is of the greatest interest; it is a tale of wonderful courage and fortitude; and it made a large addition to our knowledge of the earth. In command of a small party of picked men he left York Factory in the autumn of 1819; and having crossed the Saskatchewan and reached the Great Slave Lake, he wintered at a spot he called Fort Enterprise, far beyond the last of the company’s stations. From this point, in the following summer, the travellers descended the Coppermine, a stream discovered in 1771 by Hearne, one of the company’s servants; and their canoes were on the Arctic Ocean in July, 1820, threading the intricate coasts of an unknown continent. Franklin explored the seaboard for hundreds of miles, making eastward in order to draw near Parry; but he was compelled to turn back at the approach of autumn, having approached, however, that region of the coast which he maintained thenceforward was the true direction in which to seek the North-Western Passage. The return journey was one of appalling hardships; all the Canadian attendants, save one, perished; and Franklin, two Englishmen, and the single Canadian, haggard spectres, stricken by cold and famine, reached Fort Enterprise as 1820 closed. These sufferings, however, could not daunt an heroic nature, and Franklin was ere long on his quest again. In 1824-5 the Admiralty tried to enlarge the sphere of the recent discoveries. Parry was again directed to proceed westward, from Greenland, into the Arctic Sea; Franklin was to explore again the northern verge of America, from the Hudson Bay Settlements; and the double expedition was to be seconded by Beechy advancing from Behrings Straits, and endeavouring, in this way, to join hands with Parry. This voyage of Parry was less successful than the last, and Beechy did not get much beyond Icy Cape, discovered by Cook in 1778, on the northern edge of the Alaskan seaboard. But the expedition of Franklin was of extreme importance, if not marked with the tragic scenes of that of 1819-20, and it produced results of the greatest value. Starting, as before, from the shores of Hudson Bay, he attained the banks of the McKenzie, another river discovered by a man of the company, and going down its waters, he again reached the Arctic Ocean in the summer of 1826. He now divided his party into two groups; at the head of one he made his way westward, and reached a point only 160 miles from that which had been touched by Beechy; the other group proceeded towards the east, and attained the mouth of the Coppermine River. In this way an immense space of the northern coast line of the American Continent was seen by civilised man for the first time, and brought within the sphere of his knowledge; and it seemed probable that the North-West Passage would soon be an accomplished fact. The expedition was home safe in 1827, after an absence from England of more than two years.

These discoveries of Franklin, it might have been thought, would have given a strong impetus to British exploring. But the failure of Parry in 1825-7 to force the icy barrier of the Northern Sea, diverted attention from this region; and Polar expeditions were not made for some years. Franklin, who had been knighted after his last journey, was given a command in the Mediterranean, and he was Lieutenant-Governor of Tasmania from 1837 to 1843, when, owing to a dispute with the late Lord Derby, he was inconsiderately removed from his post. By this time the entire coast line of North America had been traversed; interest in the North-West Passage had revived; and Franklin, though close on his sixtieth year, volunteered to attempt the daring venture. He set off on his last voyage, in the Erebus and Terror, in the spring of 1845, accompanied by a band of experienced officers, and by carefully chosen and seasoned crews; and he felt assured that he would fulfil his mission. We can only glance at the mournful incidents and terrible results of this fatal quest; they will long dwell in the minds of Englishmen. Franklin was convinced that the best chance of effecting the passage was to be found in following, at sea, the coast line of the continent he had nearly explored; and he declared that could he once attain the point reached by him in 1819-20, it would "be plain sailing then as far as Behrings Straits." Having passed from Lancaster into Barrow Straits he wintered his ships at Beechy Island, on the extreme verge of the east of North Devon; and when the ice began to yield, in the summer of 1846, the Erebus and Terror made their way slowly through the straits leading to the more open sea, which extends to Behrings Straits from the west of the Coppermine. The ice, however, closed round the ill-fated mariners, as they approached the shores of King William's Island, after passing the coast of North Somerset, and they were imprisoned, in this way, for more than twenty months, though at a short distance only from Victoria Strait, which they hoped would take them into the wide Arctic Ocean. In the spring of 1847 a party reached the land, and left a record of what had occurred; and a few weeks afterwards Franklin died, still confident that the brave men he led would successfully accomplish the mysterious passage. The Erebus and Terror, however, could not break through the icy walls in which they were pent; and the ships were abandoned in the spring of 1848, the crews evidently being in the extreme of want. Not a single man of the ill-fated band ever saw England and her skies again.

Expedition after expedition was despatched from our shores to discover the fate of Franklin and his men. America, too, gave noble aid; but though Collinson and McClure made important additions to our knowledge respecting the Polar zone—McClure, indeed, we have said, well-nigh accomplished the North-West Passage by sea from the east—the search was fruitless for a series of years. The devotion of Lady Franklin, and the skill of McClintock, at last laid bare the mystery long concealed, and proved what had befallen the doomed adventurers. The party, 105 in number, reached King William's Island, from the ships, on the ice, and they tried to make their way to the Great Fish River on the mainland, still at a far distance, in the hope of finding Eskimos and assistance. They were unable, however, to cross the frozen desert; a few attempted to return to the abandoned ships, but miserably perished in the attempt, the rest sank down, as they toiled onward, and died where they fell, one after the other. The record of 1847, and another record left behind by Captains Crozier and FitzJames—in command after the death of Franklin—when they set off on their last journey, some skeletons bleaching on the island wastes, and traditions of the Eskimo tribes, are nearly all that has been discovered about an enterprise begun under the fairest auspices, but ending in an appalling tragedy. Since that time, however, much has been done in exploring the spaces of the Arctic Seas; an Austrian expedition has discovered Franz Joseph Land, an unknown region; Nordenskiöld, we have said, has made the North-East Passage; and the Archipelago of Arctic islands, which spread westwards from Baffin's Bay, has been visited and surveyed to a great extent. Yet the North-West Passage, as a navigable way, remains a secret of the Northern Pole; there is reason to believe it does not exist; and the subject has lost its peculiar interest. All honour, nevertheless, to Franklin and to his brave followers in their many wanderings. They enlarged the estate of civilised man; they added fresh lustre to the British name; and their chief has a just claim to the poet's epitaph:

"Not here! the White North hath thy bones, and thou Heroic Sailor Soul!
 Art passing on thy happier voyage now
 Towards no earthly pole."

WILLIAM O'CONNOR MORRIS.

MARIE ANTOINETTE, JOSEPHINE, AND MARIE LOUISE.—Marie Antoinette and the End of the Old Régime; Citizeness Bonaparte; The Happy Days of the Empress Marie Louise; Marie Louise and the Decadence of the Empire; Marie Louise, the Island of Elba, and the Hundred Days. By Imbert de Saint-Amand. (Hutchinson.)

THESE are five interesting books, one may even call them very interesting books; and it is rendering no more than justice to M. de Saint-Amand to say that the interest is of a perfectly legitimate kind. Dealing as he does with court life in the last days of the old monarchy, with the society in which Mme. Tallien, "Our Lady of Thermidor," played the most conspicuous part, with the intrigues that surrounded Josephine's first elevation to power, with the influences that led to the practical divorce a mensa et thoro between Napoleon and Marie Louise, he yet eschews scandal. Not his at all the erotic lens through which Michelet surveyed the pageant of history.

Indeed, a certain sanity of vision is one of M. de Saint-Amand's characteristics. He can scarcely be a very young man if, as I gather, he won university honours in 1848, among such competitors as Taine, About, Sarcey, Paul Albert, Prevost-Paradol, and Victor Hugo's son, François Victor; and whether it be that "years" have brought "the philosophic mind," or that his judgment is naturally sober and equitable, he evidently finds it no difficult task to do justice to Legitimist and Imperialist, to the old world that came to an end with the Revolution, and to the new world that sprang from the old world's ashes. Nor do his qualifications as a popular historian end here. He has the gift of so marshalling his facts as to leave a definite impression. These are but short books on great subjects; for M. de Saint-Amand is not at all content to chronicle the court life of his three heroines, and writes almost more fully about their times than he does about themselves; but yet, comparatively short as the books may be, they tell their story, in many respects, better than some histories of greater pretensions. We seem, as we read, almost to see the crumbling of Napoleon's empire after the retreat from Moscow. We are, in some sort, witnesses of his gigantic efforts to keep Europe under his heel, efforts that culminated in the victories of Lutzen and Bautzen. We watch him falling a victim to his own overweening arrogance. And last of all, after the ultimate disaster of Waterloo, we are made to feel how broken he is, what a wreck of the old hero and king of men. All this is well told, with graphic touches every now and again, and not without the help of some original research among the archives of the French Foreign Office.

"Elle était plus femme que les autres" has been said of the Princesse de Lamballe, and of Marie Louise it may, I think, be said that she was "moins femme" than Marie Antoinette or Josephine. Of course great allowance must be made. She was scarcely more than a child when married to Napoleon. She had been brought up in a home which had reasons enough and to spare for execrating his name. The marriage itself was entirely one of policy, and in no sense of inclination. But still, when all has been said, the woman who abandons her husband in misfortune—who refuses to share his exile after sharing his throne—such a woman is not a sympathetic figure. No doubt the Emperor Francis, her father, was glad enough to have her, and the little King of Rome, for hostages, and in his power. He could scarcely have so far braved public opinion as to compel her to remain separated from her husband if she had manifested any strong persistent desire to rejoin him at Elba or Saint Helena. "She should tie her sheets to the window and escape in disguise—that is what I should do in her place," said her grandmother, Maria Caroline, Queen of the Two Sicilies, who yet had no cause to love the Corsican usurper. Shallow-hearted, with the duchy of Parma dangling before her eyes, with another husband in posse so soon as Napoleon should have shuffled off his mortal coil, Marie Louise shines neither as a wife nor as a mother: "Moins femme que les autres."

As to Josephine, the whole story of her relations with Napoleon, from first to last, has a strong interest. It is clear that in the early days of their courtship and marriage she was rather startled than attracted by the ardour of his passion. There is a curious letter of hers, not quoted by M. de Saint-Amand, at least in these volumes, but probably genuine, which gives expression to the feeling with which she regarded her ardent young lover:

"I am frightened at the kind of authority he wishes to exercise over all who surround him.

There is something in his piercing look that is strange and inexplicable, and yet inspires with awe even our Directors: think how a woman must be intimidated by it! Nay, that which ought to please me—the force of a passion which he describes in terms so energetic that I cannot doubt of its sincerity—is precisely what makes me hesitate . . . Being no longer in the first flower of my youth, can I hope long to retain a love so violent as almost to seem like delirium?"

No longer young, as she here says, essentially a woman of the old régime—a woman moreover who had seen much of life and had had no very happy experience of marriage—it is evident that, after her union with Napoleon, the ardour of his passion, the vehemence of love breathed in his correspondence, proved as before rather repellent than attractive. M. de Saint-Amand quotes several of the letters written by the young general to his wife during the brilliant Italian campaign of 1796. They are sincere without doubt, though the real feeling in them takes Rousseau's declamatory form. They must often have seemed strangely excessive to the indolent Creole who was lightly passing her days in the Paris drawing-rooms. That her social charm, her grace, her tact, were of great use to Napoleon is, however, unquestionable; as also that she came to love him as Marie Louise never did.

The translation of these books may be described as fair—hardly more; the rhetorical and less purely narrative passages of the original having suffered most in their transit from French into English. A somewhat better rendering of one of the volumes, The Happy Days of the Empress Marie Louise, appeared in England five or six years ago, under the title of The Memoirs of the Empress Marie Louise. In the volumes now before me there are occasional Americanisms of spelling and typographical arrangement—"revery" for "reverie," and the like—to which one accustoms oneself with difficulty.

FRANK T. MARZIALS.

Shakespeare vom Standpunkte der Vergleichenden Literaturgeschichte. Von Dr. W. Wetz. Band I. (Worms: Reiss.)

STRASSBURG, which from the strategic point of view bars the road from Paris to Berlin, forms in the intellectual world, as it did in the days of Goethe, rather a link between them—a point at which the inflow of alien ideas in both directions is, in spite of political antipathies, relatively facile and free. Of this fact we have been once more reminded by the treatise of Dr. Wetz, a privat-docent at the Strassburg University. It differs, though hardly so much as its author assumes, from most of its German predecessors. If it applies with unparalleled perseverance (and, we must add, with almost unparalleled prolixity), the distinctively German comparative method to Shakspeare, on the other hand the limits within which the method is applied, as well as the entire conception of Shakspeare which dominates the whole, are as distinctively French. The pursuit of psychological analysis which occupies so much of French literature and French criticism to-day has found in Dr. Wetz an advocate and exponent of ability, though his hand is somewhat heavy and his touch somewhat over-urgent and peremptory. His conception of Shakspeare, again, is essentially that of M. Taine, and, like his, is coloured by the habit of contrasting him with Corneille. The same unmeasured insistence on "passion," the same neglect of "understanding" as a factor in his dramatic world, meets us here. Corneille is, obviously, very unlike Shakspeare; and the comparison of the two is in many ways very instructive; but it is one of the dangers of the comparative method that a very great unlikeness is easily identified with an absolute antithesis, and then becomes merely a seduction to error. This danger has not, we think, been wholly avoided by Dr. Wetz. The contrast with Corneille certainly enables him to bring out some good points—e.g., the rarity in Shakspeare of purely moral motives and purely moral conflicts; the obscuration by passion of understanding and of conscience; the prevalence of incomplete self-consciousness, that is, in the last resort, of illusion. But he presses these, in themselves valid ideas, very hard. Thus, he appears to us to abuse language when (p. 186 f) he represents Brutus' "reason" as the "corrupt advocate of passion." Dr. Wetz thinks the soliloquy, "It must be by his death," &c., a final proof of his case. By reason Brutus is led to a conclusion opposed to reason; he is therefore "blinded by passion." But to be blinded by passion is to ignore what in calmer moments one perceives. Yet we have no reason to suppose that Brutus' conclusion was one of which at any time of his life he would have disapproved; it is the legitimate and even inevitable outcome of his principles and character. Nor does the reasoning itself show any trace of passionate precipitance. It advances slowly, reluctantly, by main force driven to its goal; and the conclusion is not triumphantly embraced, but sternly and sadly submitted to. It sounds odd, again, to have adduced as a "kindred" instance of reason brought to the service of "passion," the jesting arguments which the sworn bachelor Benedict ("Much Ado," ii. 3) discovered for consenting to be married:

"Love me! why, it must be requited. . . . By my troth it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her! . . . No, the world must be peopled. When I said, I should die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married."

Upon which Dr. Wetz remarks, guilelessly, that "his young love is not less fertile in reasons for its own justification, than his previous repugnance to marriage had shown itself." But Benedict, of all Shakspeare's lovers, is the least passionate and the least liable to illusion at his own hands. He knows what he is about, and is concerned, not in the least to satisfy his moral sense that it is right to love, but to discover witty retorts to the "odd quirks and remnants of wit" which I "may chance to have broken upon me, because I have railed so long against marriage." With even greater perversity a "moral blindness" is ascribed to Falstaff, who (under the influence of passion) persuares himself, and in part actually believes, that his base conduct is not really such? Alas, the moral self-questionings of Falstaff and the flattering unctious which as their result he laid to his soul form a chapter of his history which Shakspeare has not written and could not write. They concerned, not his glorious old pagan, whose only "passion" was humour, and for whom conscience was at most something which made Hal at times an uncompliant comrade, but some ex-Puritan elder of the next age, continuing in his debasement the old habits of self-questioning, but finding difficult answers. Even where "passion" really exists, Wetz appears to exaggerate its illusive power. Chapter IX. opens with a glowing description of the passion of love in Shakspeare:

"Love has with him something of the force of a natural power, and yet at the same time some of the sanctity of a religion. It overcomes the lovers like a destiny—nothing can make head or prevail against it. For the youths and maidens whose heart is touched by the sweet passion, no happiness, no aim, exists beside the object of their love."

And so forth. These eloquent sentences obviously fall in very aptly with Dr. Wetz's general formula of Shakspearean action, which we may express by "Passion + x = Passion." They express very well the quality of one class of Shakspearean lovers, with Romeo and Juliet at their head. But they leave out of sight another equally characteristic class, who in their turn have been specially singled out by Kreyssig, those whose love, though deep and strong, is as far as possible from blinding them to other aims and considerations. Portia, who risked the loss of Bassanio rather than break her father's mandate, and who on the eve of her wedding had detachment of mind enough to undertake, half for the jest's sake, a difficult enterprise in the service of his friend, was not the sort of lover who, to quote Wetz once more, "forgets father and mother and whatever was dear to them before as soon as these come in conflict with their love," and for whom "only one being in the world exists, to whom they belong with every fibre of their nature."

It will be seen that the defect of Dr. Wetz's laborious book is the common one of attempting to express by a too elementary equation the unexampled diversity of Shakspearean phenomena. The antithesis of passion and reason, which he illustrates with great ingenuity but little self-control, seems to be a particular and limited case of the profounder and really universal law, that with Shakspeare all expression whatever is a function, not of universal reason, but of individual character. Notwithstanding this defect, however, the book is strewn with suggestive and often felicitous observations, and, if not exactly epoch-making, deserves note as a vigorous essay in that science of Shakspeare's art towards the construction of which modern criticism is slowly advancing.

C. H. HERFORD.

NEW NOVELS.

- The Three Miss Kings.* By Ada Cambridge. (Heinemann.)
- Humbling his Pride.* By Charles T. C. James. In 3 vols. (Ward & Downey.)
- Whom God hath Joined.* By Fergus Hume. In 3 vols. (White.)
- On Heather Hills.* In 2 vols. (Alexander Gardner.)
- The Risen Dead.* By Florence Marryat. In 2 vols. (Spencer Blackett.)
- The Magic of the Pine Woods.* By Rosa Mackenzie Kettle. (Fisher Unwin.)
- A Group of Noble Dames.* By Thomas Hardy. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

It would not be a very difficult matter to pick holes in The Three Miss Kings. The author is occasionally too effusive about female dress and personal appearance. Then she seems to set herself somewhat strenuously to demonstrate how it is possible to combine the opposite attractions of Robert Elsmere and of Molly Bawn, to preach ultra-liberal theology and prattle with girlish enthusiasm about Nellie King "looking dazzlingly fair under the gaslight in the white dress that she had worn at the club ball, and with dark roses at her throat and in her yellow hair," and "playing Schubert's A. Minor Sonata ravishingly," not to speak of "Mr. Westmoreland, who, leaning over the other end of the piano on his folded arms, was openly sighing his soul into his lady's face." But it will be impossible for any fair-minded reader of The Three Miss Kings to keep up an attempt to read it hypercritically for any length of time. For Miss Cambridge has the power of infecting others with her own "go," and her enthusiasm for the three girls of her creation. Elizabeth King's association with Kingscote Yelverton, the rather too middle-aged lay preacher whom she secures as a husband, may be a trifle improbable, and her rejoicing over her happiness in securing him may be excessive. Patty teases her newspaper man, Paul Brion, too much; and Eleanor should either have married the wooden Westmoreland at once, or not have married him at all. But the three girls, fresh from their native seclusion in Australia, will, by their simple natural beauty, lift off their feet all who read of them here, just as they lift off their feet Mrs. Duff Scott, the indomitable match-maker, and all with whom they come in contact in Melbourne and England. The Three Miss Kings is full of movement—the movement of real, unconventional, and yet not Bohemian life. It is a relief after the appalling amount of introspection we have recently had in fiction.

Humbling his Pride is a thoroughly conscientious three-volume performance, and a strong novel besides, although of a rather old-fashioned kind. It contains a plethora of villains and villainies. Oscar Gliddon, Dr. Specifer, and the Rev. Henry Marden are, in fact, almost incredible scoundrels. It seems impossible that a girl, in herself so simple and pure as Laura Delius, should have allowed herself to be attracted, much less seduced, by a dilettante voluptuary like Gliddon, while the motive for Specifer's maniacal hatred to John Horlock, the blacksmith hero of the story—the mere fact that he is the son of the woman Specifer did not marry—is preposterously inadequate. John Horlock, however, the blacksmith who is conscious of a destiny above the anvil and even the duties of a churchwarden, but who is nevertheless ready to be hanged for a crime of which he is innocent rather than disclose the secret of the woman he loves, is a good sketch. Henry Marden, also, Specifer's accomplice and tool, who yet turns upon his master in the end like the grotesque Sancho Panza that figured in Mr. Julian Hawthorne's torso of a novel, Fortune's Fool, is very effective. But out of sight the best portraits in Humbling his Pride are those of the rough, trustful, but sagacious farmer, who brightens the whole book, his rather querulous wife, their daughter Rose, and her unfortunate and inarticulate but loyal lover, Lang Willum. These four are better than anything of the kind that has appeared in fiction for some years. The plot, too, is exciting, well thought out, and well worked out. The close, however, is rather weak and boarding-school girlish.

The author of The Mystery of a Hansom Cab both descends and ascends in Whom God hath Joined. There is in it not nearly so much cleverness of the amateur detective sort as there is in the story which first brought Mr. Hume into repute, or even in his much more recent Monsieur Judas. On the other hand, it is much the most careful piece of writing that Mr. Hume has given to the public. It is indeed too ambitiously conventional, in the lesson which it teaches—that a woman ought not to devote herself to her child to the neglect of her husband—in the portrait of the sensual Creole adventuress, to whom the neglected husband flees, and in the contrast between the husband with "his sunburnt face, fair moustache, merry blue eyes, and stalwart figure," and the wife "with her fragile frame, her pale serious face and smooth coils of lustrous golden hair." The character of Eustace Gartney, the cynic and poet, who is sorely tempted to become a scoundrel, and who sees no particular harm in trying to seduce his cousin's wife, but who yet acquits himself nobly, is drawn with care, while the Scotch Master of Otterburn, and the sprightly Australian girl who teases him, are good foils to that painfully sombre couple the Erringtons. Still, as already said, all this is conventional, though good in its way.

In spite of crudities and inequalities of all sorts, On Heather Hills is an exceptionally promising story. The first chapter is the worst. In it the author, who is evidently of Scotch blood, sets himself deliberately to play to an English gallery by producing that hideous burlesque of Northern humour known as "wut." He tells us that "the chief products of Scotland are deer, grouse, sheep, whisky, and poor students; its principal amusements, curling, theological discussions, and heresy hunts," and that "suicide is practically unknown north of the Tweed, it being nearly impossible to find a tree large enough to hang one's self on." Fortunately the author virtually exhausts this weak vein in the first chapter, although it is to be regretted that when he was engaged in limning the company assembled in the Highland country house of the Earl of Mayfair, he should have given to one of them the name of "Professor Tinder" and to another the name of "Professor Roughskin." Perhaps also the tragical adventures of the Mellis-Strong party in a bleak Highland district savour a little too much of the incredible. But once this is got over, it must be allowed that strength—of feeling, of style, of everything—is the note of On Heather Hills. Never surely was a man born with such a positive genius for self-sacrifice as Malcolm Strong. He watches over May Mellis while her parents are still alive. When they are dead he marries her, much more to protect her than to please himself. Then, that she may legitimately gratify a passing fancy by marrying his cousin, Gerald Balfern, he obligingly allows himself to be considered drowned. When Gerald proves unworthy of the trust reposed in him and becomes a dangerous drunkard, Strong once more appears on the scene as May's protector in the character of the deaf pock-pitted menial Robson. Finally, when Gerald dies, Strong allows May to return to Australia without revealing himself, an ending which most readers of On Heather Hills will declare to be a mistake. Strong may be an unnatural, but he is a very striking character. The politics and socialism of the writer of On Heather Hills, as they are reproduced in the remarkable conversations which take place in Lord Mayfair's country-house, and in Strong's life at the London Docks, may be notable for ambition rather than performance. But although he—or is it she?—has not disciplined his (or her) powers of thinking and of writing, there is no doubt whatever as to the reality of these powers or as to the moral certainty that their author will yet do something notable in fiction.

The writer, who is still best known as Miss Florence Marryat, is seen to greater advantage in The Risen Dead than in most of the stories she has published for some time. Not, indeed, that the plot is an exceptionally strong one, or that any morally distinguished personages are associated with it. But there are not too many incidents crowded into it; and Miss Marryat's aristocracy are, for once, not odiously vulgar, even although they include "three ladies in fashionable evening wraps with tasteful negligés upon their heads." The Risen Dead is, too, wonderfully free from slang and solecisms. Then, what with a baronet who believes he has committed bigamy, but has not, and is saved from committing suicide by his own son, only to do his best to blow that young man's brains out; a wife who is believed to be dead, and believes herself to be dishonoured, but is neither; a preternaturally shrewd family lawyer; and a youth who knows neither his father nor his mother, the reader fares very well indeed. The story is very badly off for a heroine, for that eminently book-muslin young woman, Lily Osprey, does not count for much. Yet Miss Paget, who is really Lady Diana Loftus, and Lady Culwarren, the mother of the second most important young man in the book, are among the best of Miss Marryat's female creations—although Lady Culwarren is a trifle too fussy for her "station" in What-is-called-Society.

There is nothing very remarkable in The Magic of the Pine Woods; it is, like most stories from the same pen, a trifle too sweetly pretty. It contains some exceptionally attractive girls and their "aunts," who, including at least one of the aunts, are quite ready to get married when asked in the right way by the right men; a live lord who is a good man; and a very fine specimen of the country parson—not to speak of Mark Avenell, who is temporarily doubtful about his parents' marriage certificate. Then there is no more startling incident in the story than a poaching affray. Nor is there any truly bad character in it. There is indeed a siren, Melanie by name, who has in her time flirted too much with both Lord Danebrook and Mark Avenell, and who, even in these pages, flirts too much with the fine specimen of a country parson. But then she repents of such very mild sinning as she does indulge in; and she has also the art of dressing with taste, for does she not know the value of "some bit of bright colour, a scarlet cloak, flower, or feather, a touch of maize or crimson to stand out from the sombre green of the pine woods and purple heather beds?" As all ends well, The Magic of the Pine Woods is likely to be enjoyed at least as much as any other of Miss Kettle's books, and is more artistic than the majority of them.

Mr. Hardy's volume of stories, told somewhat after the Decameronian fashion by members of a Wessex Field and Antiquarian Club, as a relief from "the regulation papers on deformed butterflies, fossil ox-horns, prehistoric dung mixens, and such like," is so characteristic of him in style, in humour, and in general conceptions of life, that even if one had stumbled on it published anonymously at a railway book-stall, one would have declared it to be by the author of A Pair of Blue Eyes. For nearly all "the noble dames" whose stories are told here have nearly as tragic a fate in store for them as the girl with the blue eyes who loves not wisely, but once too often. There is hardly one of them but succeeds in securing at least two husbands. Sometimes she is married to the two at one and the same time; but oftener she marries her lovers in succession, who treat her very differently. Even Mr. Hardy's fantastic humour has never taken a more gruesome shape than in the fearfully and wonderfully barbarous device resorted to by Lord Uplandtowers to destroy his wife's affection for his predecessor. Some of Mr. Hardy's clever feats, indeed, savour too much of the character of tours de force; thus the double passion for and rejection of Dorothy in "Lady Mottisfont" involve too large a draft on one's credibility. Yet there is not one that is not worthy of the author. The first and the last stories are the most enjoyable of the series. Mr. Hardy's power of plot construction was indeed never more strikingly illustrated than in "The Honourable Laura."

WILLIAM WALLACE.

TWO SOCIOLOGICAL BOOKS.

Modern Humanists. By John M. Robertson. (Sonnenschein.) The author terms his essays "sociological studies," and his "humanists" are Carlyle, Stuart Mill, Emerson, Matthew Arnold, Ruskin, and Spencer. In theology, Mr. Robertson is a disciple of the late Mr. Charles Bradlaugh. He belongs to that rigid school of anti-theists who like the name "Atheist" better than the more fashionable and also more flabby name "Agnostic." This school prides itself on its Biblical criticism and its philosophy. The former consists mainly in the detection of verbal inaccuracies and the adoption of the most heterodox of the ideas of the German thinkers. The quality of its "philosophy" may be judged from Mr. Robertson's remark that "the consistent Pantheist, if such a one there be, knows that between him and the philosophical Agnostic or Atheist there is no difference save that of name; that the position of Spinoza, logically worked out, is just the position of Mr. Bradlaugh or Mr. Spencer, stripped of certain irrelevancies of formula" (p. 18). The members of this school are, for the most part, honest and sturdy champions of the right as they see it. Their defect is mental rather than moral. They want imagination, and, as a consequence, their sense of humour is weak. This causes them to see things out of their due proportion, and makes them bad critics. Evidently, Mr. Robertson has done his best to understand and render justice to the eminent men about whom he discourses. His failure is due to a want of understanding rather than to defective knowledge. His theological bias is as great and of the same order, though differently developed, as the theological bias of any pastor of Little Bethel or high Anglican priest. Just as these would fail to appreciate rightly Carlyle, or Ruskin, or Arnold, or Spencer, so Mr. Robertson fails. He does not understand them all round, but only in relation to his dogma. In Carlyle, for instance, he discerns one who "blustered privately of an 'Exodus from Houndsditch,' but never spoke publicly a plain word to such effect." Nevertheless, the fact is that, somehow, Carlyle's attitude toward Christianity was never really misunderstood, although he was not accustomed to express himself on the subject in the terms which would have most delighted a Hall of Science audience. But this, to Mr. Robertson, is a fatal defect in character, and he finds in Carlyle's portrait "an innate oppugnancy, written also in the harsh and indelicate mouth, with its dyspeptic fold" (p. 9); and in Carlyle himself, "antagonism, oppugnancy, negation, clearness of conviction only that people are wrong" (p. 8). In the same way Emerson, who, Mr. Robertson admits, has merits, becomes "as conventional, as inanely clerical as Carlyle" when he says "unlovely, nay frightful, is the solitude of the soul which is without God in the world." And Mr. Matthew Arnold stands condemned for maintaining (as Mr. Robertson fancies) that "the legality of marriage with a deceased wife's sister is incompatible with a sound remnant and his dogma that nothing is righteousness but the method and secret of Jesus Christ." When we read comments like this we realise how needful is the sense of humour to critical sanity; and we wonder why a man of Mr. Robertson's temperament seems fated to choose humourists, of all others, as the subjects of his study. Mr. Robertson is painstaking and careful, and scattered through his book are thoughtful and suggestive passages.

Yet, taken as a whole, it must be admitted his confessed "sense of the inadequacy of the studies" is well grounded. He pleads "lack of due leisure," a poor excuse, for there is no obvious reason why the book should have been published at present. As it stands, it is not enlightening, and, if he had delayed, he might possibly have produced something better. The reading world would have found it quite convenient to wait.

Outlooks from the New Standpoint. By Ernest Belfort Bax. (Sonnenschein.) We cannot congratulate Mr. Bax on his latest book, or, to speak more accurately, his latest collection of miscellaneous papers. We opened it with high expectations, based on some excellent work already done by Mr. Bax with which we were acquainted. But the further we read the more were we convinced that the present volume is not worthy of its author. It is divided into three parts, the first containing two historical papers, very readable, and probably the best part of the book; the second containing six papers more or less socialistic, in all of which strong bias is more visible than critical insight; and the third containing three philosophical notes, none of them important, but reminding the reader of the time when Mr. Bax was an authority on such subjects. It is impossible to avoid the conviction that this work has been put forward, not because Mr. Bax had anything very particular to say to the world, but because his purpose was to make a book; and that, in the absence of such a purpose, few, if any, of these papers would have appeared or reappeared, as the case may be, in a volume. Nevertheless, while we feel bound to give emphatic expression to our opinion that the publication is a mistake, we would not have it supposed that the book, even as it stands, is without value. It may fall short of Mr. Bax's best, and yet be far from worthless. The paper called "The Curse of Law" would have been more effective if the subject had been treated critically and in its historical aspects—the causes of the existence of civil law being recognised, and its uses admitted, in place of a too sweeping denunciation on account of abuses—still, it is timely and, in its own way, useful. The present complications of civil law probably do more harm than good. Many actions covered by it might with advantage come within the scope of simpler criminal jurisdiction or be liberated from law altogether. The voluntarism which Mr. Auberon Herbert wants to introduce into taxation might well be encouraged in many dealings between man and man now regulated by law. As Mr. Bax says:

"It is no use saying that law exists only for the man who is insusceptible of honour. It creates the man insusceptible of honour. . . . If we are to be subject to coercive law, let us be subject to it; if to morality or honour, let it be so; but do not let us attempt to link in an unnatural wedlock the two principles, and appeal promiscuously first to one and then to the other" (p. 101).

The application of the term "debt of honour" to debts which cannot be recovered by process of law is really significant of the prevailing sentiment on the subject; and, with less of meddlesome law, it may be readily believed more debts would become debts of honour. How far Mr. Bax's argument helps forward the cause of Socialism, which he has so much at heart, is best known to himself. To us it, and much else in his book, seems like a plea on the other side. Socialism, as at present advocated, certainly does not tend to diminish the sphere of government. In discussing "Individual Rights under Socialism," Mr. Bax remarks that "the opinion is commonly held by those whose views of the things are determined by the sound of words," that the "chief aim" of Socialism "is the annihilation of the freedom of the individual." In saying Socialism does not tend to diminish the sphere of government, and we might add does tend to diminish individual liberty, we by no means assert that this is its aim, and so far as we are aware no one has ever brought such a charge against it. All that is said by those who are opposed to its methods is that it aims at liberty, but its aim is so unskilful that it must inevitably miss its mark. Mr. Bax would be a more useful advocate if he understood the position of his opponents better; unless indeed—a not unlikely contingency—he then felt bound to go over to the other side. His tone and temper in the present work cannot be commended. Instead of trying to see all round a subject, as a philosopher should, and doing justice to every aspect, he shows impatience at opposition, uses epithets intended to be offensive far too freely, and is continually misunderstanding—not wilfully, perhaps, but at least with culpable carelessness—the position and meaning of his opponents. And he is too much inclined, as modern Socialistic agitators generally seem to be, to attribute existing customs and arrangements to base motives consciously acted upon—a view of social conditions far from scientific, and an attitude of mind not worthy of a wise man. When not under his socialistic bias, Mr. Bax's ethical standpoint is high. He is, or was, a disciple of Kant, with a clear understanding of the bearing of Kant's principles on duty and conduct generally. His essay in the present volume, which he entitles "A Socialist's Notes on Practical Ethics," contains many indications of the clearness of his moral insight. Indeed this essay, if only he could have kept his "King Charles's head" of Socialism out of it, would have been a piece of work well worthy of him. Looking at some of Mr. Bax's past work, and comparing it with that now before us, our conclusion is that his possibilities are still great, though his latest achievement is disappointing.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE Clarendon Press will publish, early next month, an edition of the Tenth Book of Quintilian's Institutio Oratoria, by Dr. W. Peterson, Principal of University College, Dundee. Besides a revised text, based on an independent collation of several important codices, the volume will contain Introductory Essays on Quintilian's life and work, literary criticism, style and language, &c. It will be enriched, also, by a facsimile of the hitherto neglected Codex Harleianus—possibly the very manuscript which Poggio discovered at St. Gall, in 1416. Those who know what progress has been made in the criticism of Quintilian on the continent within recent years will look forward with interest to the volume, which is put forward at present as an instalment of a complete edition of Quintilian's great work.

WITH regard to the investigations contemplated by the India Office authorities among the archives at Lisbon for documents and records throwing light on the period of the Portuguese ascendancy in India, "A Portuguese" points out in a letter to The Times that a very complete and interesting collection of official documents has been published for some years at Lisbon, which embraces from the period of the conquest of India by the Portuguese in 1498 until the end of the eighteenth century, under the title "Collecção de Tratados e Concertos de pazes que o Estado da India Portuguesa fez com os Reis e Senhores com quem teve relações nas partes da Asia e Africa Oriental," por J. F. Judice Biker, Lisbon.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. have in preparation a new series, entitled "The Victoria Library for Gentlewomen," which will be written and illustrated exclusively by gentlewomen. The Queen has ordered two copies of each volume for the royal library, and the Princess of Wales is also a subscriber. The first volume of the series, which will be ready in September, will be by Lady Violet Greville on The Gentlewoman in Society, and she will be followed by Dr. Kate Mitchell, who will write on Hygiene for Gentlewomen. The claims of fiction will not be disregarded, arrangements having been made for new novels by, amongst others, Mrs. E. Lynn-Linton, Mrs. Alexander, Miss M. Betham-Edwards, Miss Iza Duffus-Hardy, and the author of the Anglo-Maniacs. Besides writing the first volume, Lady Greville will also edit two volumes devoted to Gentlewomen's Sports, the contributors to which will comprise, amongst others, the Marchioness of Bredalbane, Lady Colin Campbell, and Miss Leale. Other volumes include The Home, by Mrs. Talbot Coke, Culture for Gentlewomen, by Miss Emily Faithfull, also works on painting, music, gardening, &c.

THE Executive Committee of the Marlowe Memorial announces that the monument, which has been executed by Mr. E. Onslow Ford, A.R.A., will be unveiled at Canterbury, on September 16, by Mr. Henry Irving.

A RICH legacy for all admirers of Dickens has just been brought to light. The familiar letters written by Dickens to Wilkie Collins during the years of their most intimate companionship and literary co-operation will be published for the first time in Harper's Magazine. These letters, edited by Georgina Hogarth, and further commented upon by Laurence Hutton, will be given in three instalments, the first of which will appear in the September number. They represent Dickens at his best, in the most active and successful period of his literary career (1851-1869), and they give us new and precious glimpses of the man as well as of the author. The same magazine will open its September number with Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," with Edwin A. Abbey's illustrations, and comments by Andrew Lang. There will also be an article on "Germany, France, and General European Politics, by Mr. de Blowitz; on "The Merchant Princes of London in the Plantagenet Period," by Mr. Walter Besant; a contribution entitled "Under the Minarets," by Mr. F. Hopkinson Smith, containing reproductions of paintings made by him in Constantinople, with descriptive letterpress and anecdotes; and a description of Chinese Secret Societies, by Mr. Frederick Boyle.

MR. THISELTON DYER has in the press his new work Church Lore Gleanings, upon which he has been engaged for some time. The book is to be published by Messrs. A. D. Innes & Co.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. announce that they will shortly issue a new and popular edition of Mrs. F. H. Burnett's Little Lord Fauntleroy, the circulation of which has now reached its one hundredth thousand; and will shortly after publish reissues of Sara Creve, and Little Saint Elizabeth, by the same author.

MESSRS. D. C. HEATH & Co., Boston, have just published a Manual of Plane Geometry, on the Heuristic plan, with numerous extra exercises, both theorems and problems, for advanced work, by G. Irving Hopkins, Instructor in Mathematics and Physics, Manchester High School, N. H., with an introduction by Prof. Safford, of Williams College. The book is designed primarily for the author's pupils, and secondarily for the constantly increasing number of teachers who are getting more and more dissatisfied with the old methods of teaching geometry.

AMONGST works recently issued by the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge are The Ethics of Labour, by the Rev. E. Fischer; How Three Halfpence built a Church, by Louisa Thompson; Strength made Perfect in Weakness, edited by C. H. Cope; the quarterly paper of the Archbishop's Mission to the Assyrian Christians, printed for the Mission; and The Unfinished Promise, a hospital patient's story.

MR. W. DAVENPORT ADAMS is about to publish, through Mr. Elliot Stock, a volume of essays on literature and the drama, entitled With Poet and Player.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will shortly add Shirley, by Charlotte Bronte, to their Crown Library, by arrangement with Messrs. Smith, Elder & Co.

ONE of our contemporaries remarking upon the growing difficulty in finding new subjects of interest for the exhibitions that are becoming an annual institution among us—now that fishermen, inventors, health conservators and restorers, Colonials, Americans, Spaniards, French, Italians, Danes, and Germans, together with our own army and navy, have all had their innings—urges the claims of literature to have an exhibition in its turn. It is pointed out, no doubt with considerable truth, that the vast stores of the British Museum are practically closed to the casual sight-seer, "Nor," it is naively added, "would our national storehouses stand any chance of rivalry with a vastly inferior show that was accompanied by the more sensuous delights of the exhibition à la mode." Of course such a scheme would include graphic illustrations of the entire process of book and newspaper production, the details of typography, the entire processes of printing and binding, the manufacture of paper, with other kindred and subsidiary industries. The writer of the article will, no doubt, have the publisher and printer on his side; if he can show any benefit likely to result to the author, he may perhaps secure Mr. Walter Besant, and other literary champions, for his scheme.

UNIVERSITY JOTTINGS.

THE annual report for the year ending July 31, 1891, which has just been issued, shows that during the past twelve months the University Extension work under the supervision of the Oxford delegates, has made greater progress than in any previous year. Since June, 1890, 192 courses had been delivered in 146 centres by 33 lecturers. The courses were attended by 20,248 persons, and the average period of study covered by each course was 12½ weeks. Examinations were held at the end of 132 courses; 1370 candidates entered for the examinations, and 1165 candidates received certificates, of which 501 were certificates of distinction. The following figures show the growth of the work in the last six years:—
Number of courses delivered—1885-86, 27; 1886-87, 67; 1887-88, 82; 1888-89, 109; 1889-90, 148; and 1890-1, 192. Number of lecture centres—1885-86, 22; 1886-87, 50; 1887-88, 52; 1888-89, 82; 1889-90, 109; and 1890-91, 146. Number of persons reported by the local committees as having been in average attendance at the courses—1885-86, not recorded; 1886-87, 9908; 1887-88, 13,036; 1888-89, 14,351; 1889-90, 17,904; and 1890-91, 20,248. Average duration of the period of study covered by each course, counting from the date of the first lecture of the course to the last lecture, or, when held, to the date of the final examination—1887-88, 8½ weeks; 1888-89, 9½ weeks; 1889-90, 10½ weeks; 1890-91, 12½ weeks. During the year 90 courses were delivered on historical subjects; 64 courses on natural science; 33 courses on literature and art; and five courses on political economy. The delegates note with pleasure that at several centres in the North of England the courses of lectures are regularly attended by many hundreds of artisans. The Union of working men's co-operative societies has provided six small scholarships to enable the students who have been most successful in certain educational classes arranged by the union to attend the summer meeting of University Extension students in Oxford.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

NATURE'S SOLILOQUY.

How Nature's sunny musings feed our sense,
Her voice into the heart of all things stealing;
How dream-spelled ears divine her utterance,
Each concord more than musically feeling!
Glazed in a whirl of sunshine while it listens,
The earth sees heaven its audience proclaim,
And as the charm in more than language glistens,
They seem to call each other by their name.
Death, too, has musings where he lies in state,
One thought upon his moveless lips reposing:
It is of Peace, beyond the range of Fate,
His pledge of Ever to his dead disclosing.
Less than a breath there lingers yet to die,
But, O how deathless his soliloquy!

THOS. GORDON HAKE.

OBITUARY.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL.

JAMES RUSSELL LOWELL was one of the young men who gave eager heed to those "voices in the air," to which Mr. Matthew Arnold, in one of the finest passages in his writings, has made reference. He was nineteen years of age, and a graduate of that year (1838), when Emerson delivered his famous address to the Divinity Class of Harvard. Emerson became his spiritual guide, as he became the spiritual guide of many other young men, then and afterwards. Thirty years later Mr. Lowell wrote of him, "there is no man living to whom, as a writer, so many of us feel and thankfully acknowledge so great an indebtedness for ennobling impulses." It was Emerson who set the "ferment of wholesome discontent at work," which determined the subsequent conduct of Mr. Lowell's life. The new doctrine, or rather the old doctrine newly stated, which in those days, in New England, was known as "transcendentalism," has left its impress on American life and letters ever since; and in Mr. Lowell we have a striking example of the manner of man it was destined to produce.

Mr. Lowell has been described variously as poet, humourist, critic, and man of affairs. In one degree or another he was all these. A few of his sonnets were printed in the Dial as early as 1841, and from time to time he continued his verse writing, all through his life. If he cannot be ranked as a great poet, yet his serious verse is always pleasing, while some of it is of a high order. He wrote verse when verse seemed the most appropriate way of expressing himself, and not otherwise. There was no falling off in power in this respect as he grew older; some of his best short pieces are to be found in Heartsease and Rue, his last collection. His skill in happy phrases often gave a worth to the setting when the thought enshrined was not important, so that productions of his, comparatively trivial, were never commonplace. Comparing for a moment his occasional pieces with those of the great master of occasional pieces, Dr. Oliver Wendell Holmes, we find somewhat more dignity if less of sunny amiability in them than in the work of his fellow-countryman and friend, whom he addressed as:

"Master alike in speech and song
Of fame's great antiseptic—style."

A certain seriousness of feeling and purpose, not always to be found in the work of the ever-genial autocrat, is, in truth, a characteristic of everything Mr. Lowell has done. He is usually classed amongst the humourists; it would perhaps be more accurate to describe him as a man of wit, for in such productions as The Biglow Papers, A Fable for Critics, and the fragment Fitz-Adam's Story (which awakens a regretful consciousness that a fine work has been lost because its author never gave it form), the wit is more visible than pure humour. In all these cases, however, the wit and the humour alike are those, not of one amused who wishes to amuse, but of a man who is in earnest to remove abuses and make things better than he found them, though he chooses the weapon of ridicule for his purpose. There was nothing easy-taking about Mr. Lowell; his very laughter was not frivolous; and though persons who met him in society describe him as a pleasant companion, genial in manner, well able to hold his own in small talk, they admit that only when some serious topic was introduced did the real man whom they knew in his books, become manifest in the person.

As a critic, Mr. Lowell takes a front rank among his countrymen; but it must be admitted that, as yet, the standard of American criticism is not very high. America is making a literature of its own at present; its era of criticism will follow at the proper time. Mr. Lowell had all the scholarship and the literary skill; but not quite the perfect judicial balance of mind for a critic of the first order. His ardour for what he considered to be good causes was so great that it made him too much an advocate to be a perfect critic. On Mr. Matthew Arnold's showing, the critic can maintain his integrity only by keeping aloof from "the rush and roar of practical life." Mr. Lowell did not keep aloof, and did not try or wish to keep aloof. His point of view was, to a great extent, if not mainly, that of "the practical man," and whenever public or private wrong offended him he was incapable of taking a complete or all-round view. Contrast, by way of example, his manner of treating the Mason and Slidell affair in the later series of Biglow Papers with Thackeray's "Roundabout" paper on the same topic; or consider that distressingly inadequate estimate of Coleridge contained in his address on the unveiling of the bust of the poet in Westminster Abbey. Coleridge's especial weakness was one which a man of Mr. Lowell's steadfast and dogmatic and somewhat opinionated character, could neither understand nor tolerate. Accordingly, he saw in him one whose feebleness of will had frittered away the possibilities of a transcendent genius, instead of what he really was, a man who, with all his infirmities, still stands head and shoulders higher than nearly all his contemporaries and successors.

Moreover, there was in Mr. Lowell, as Emerson perceived, an excess of "self-consciousness," and this sometimes barred him from forming an impersonal and impartial estimate. Margaret Fuller said harsh things about him—unjust things, and, read in the light of his whole career, now obviously false and foolish things. She said what she really thought, but her judgment was at fault. She does not seem to have been actuated by any animosity. But Mr. Lowell was wounded too deeply ever to forgive her, and in his Fable for Critics he presented her in mere offensive caricature. Another person who wounded his self-esteem was Thoreau, and his estimate of Thoreau is as perverse as Margaret Fuller's estimate of himself. When his self-consciousness was excited, his criticism was hopeless.

As regards literature, Mr. Lowell's temperament made him more of a scholarly lover and student of books than an accomplished and trustworthy critic. His best criticism is of the appreciative kind, applied to subjects which lie wholly beyond the range of modern public affairs. His article on the "Library of Old Authors" is a good example of this, although it is not one of his most interesting essays. Better still are "A Good Word for Winter," and the study of "Chaucer." In these cases he had the requisite knowledge for an efficient treatment of his subject, while there was nothing in the occasion to arouse his pugnacity.

If, however, we wish to see Mr. Lowell at his best, and to understand what his truest service to the world has been, we must consider him, not as a critic nor as a man of wit, not even as a poet, but as a man of affairs. When thinking of his relation to the politics of his own country, I am always reminded of Emerson's saying that "Men of character are the conscience of the society to which they belong." Mr. Lowell was a man of the world, strongly tinctured with transcendentalism. He was a fine type of the Transcendentalist as citizen, and as such exercised a wide influence for good. Mr. George William Curtis, still, happily, with us, must be named in the same connexion. These two men, with a few others, have, for a number of years past, been the conscience of the political life of the United States. Mr. Curtis, besides being an eminent writer, is a public man of sterling merit and long-proved usefulness. In more than one revolt against corrupt government he has been a leader. It was Mr. Curtis of whom Mr. Lowell said that he ought to have been sent Minister to London instead of himself. At one time he had been offered this as well as other high official positions, but he refused them all: thus and in every other way jealously guarding his independence. That Mr. Lowell, in respect to office, adopted a different course is no demerit. He yielded none of his integrity, and was able to increase his usefulness. As a diplomatist he proved his greatness by taking a large view of his duties. He came among us in no carping and suspicious spirit, to spy out grievances and imagine wrongs, but bent on increasing brotherly goodwill between his country and ours, to the advantage of both. At home he has always risen above party interests for the sake of principles. His admirable address on "The Place of the Independent in Politics" states his own position as a public man.

Of Mr. Lowell's writing, the best available and the only complete edition is the Riverside, in ten volumes, published in this country by Macmillan, but of some of his prose and his verse other cheap and satisfactory editions exist. Herein the author is visible to us in his various aspects. For, although Mr. Lowell was an excellent talker and an attractive public speaker, he was pre-eminently, in all he attempted, a man of letters. That is to say, literature was the true channel for his expression of himself. His lectures are the compositions of a writer rather than a speaker. "I am a book man," he said; and so he was. He was a book-man who loved to read, whose great gift it was to write, and who, whatever his hand found to do, did it in a spirit of unflinching integrity with the enthusiasm of humanity in his heart.

WALTER LEWIN.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

THE stories in the September Scribner are by Thomas Nelson Page, who tells pathetically, in "Run to Seed," of a Southern family of high degree, impoverished by the war: "Captain Joe and Jamie," a sketch of a great flood-tide on the Tantramar Marshes; and the continuation of "The Wrecker," the new story by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne, which grows in interest and fun with each instalment. Mr. Felix Moscheles, the painter, and friend of the late Robert Browning, has an article on "Browning's Asolo." He tells of a visit made, since the poet's death, to the little house in the sleepy old Italian village where he wrote his last poems, and lived during the last months of his life. It is of unusual interest on account of the details it gives of Browning's life and surroundings. The illustrations by the author include views of the room in which "Asolando" was written, and of picturesque Asolo sheets.

THE Century for September will contain the last of Mr. Kennan's articles, which will describe "A Winter Journey through Siberia." An article on play in Provence, entitled "A Painter's Paradise," written and illustrated by the Pennells, and a paper on "The Possibility of Mechanical Flight," will also appear, the frontispiece being a portrait of Thomas Bailey Aldrich, the editor of the Atlantic Monthly.

THE August Livre Moderne opens with certain "Notes sur la Crise de Librairie Contemporaine," which with a few touches of probably intended exaggeration, seem to reveal something really rotten in the Paris book trade. If Mouzanne is right in anticipating as the result of the book Krach which he foresees, the cleansing as well as the restricting of the output, it will in future be "no sae illa hearin'." And we do not know but that some of his remarks about the multiplication of new and speculative publishing firms may not have a bearing a little nearer home than Paris. Anybody who takes an interest in La Terre may find abundant autograph inedita by the creator of that earth; and M. Gausseron continues his ingenious reviews in masquerade. There is no single illustration of mark in the number, but M. Mass's little figurine vignettes in the text of the opening jeremiad are ingenious and cleverly executed.

HONORARY DEGREES AT CAMBRIDGE.

THE following are the speeches delivered by the Public Orator, Dr. Sandys, on the occasion of the visit of the members of the International Congress of Hygiene and Demography on August 15, when the honorary degree of LL.D. was conferred on (1) Dr. Paul Brouardel, President of the Permanent International Committee of Hygiene, and Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in Paris; (2) Dr. Alfonso Corradi, Professor in the Royal University of Pavia; and (3) Dr. Josef von Fodor, Professor in the University of Buda-Pesth:

"Dignissime domine, domine Procancellarie, et tota Academia:

"Nescio quo potissimum exordio hospites nostros, qui de salute publica nuper deliberaverunt, senatus nomine salutare debeam. Ad ipsos conversus, illud unum dixerim:—qui aliorum saluti tam praeclare consulistis, vosmetipsos omnes iubemus salvere. Ea vero studia, quae vobis cordi sunt, gloriamur in Britannia certe Academiam nostram primam omnium adiuvisse. In salutis publicae ministris nominandis valent plurimum diplomata nostra, valent etiam aliarum Academicarum, quae, exemplo nostro incitatae, laudis cursum eundem sunt ingressae. Hodie vero collegarum vestrorum nonnullos, qui gentium exterarum inter lumina numerantur, diplomate nostro honorifico decorare volumus. Nemini autem mirum sit, quod viros medicinae in scientia illustres iuris potissimum doctores hodie nominamus. Etenim Tullium ipsum in libris quos de Legibus composuit, scripsisse recordamini populi salutem supremam esse legem.

"(1) Primum omnium vobis praesento gentis vicinae, gentis nobiscum libertatis bene temperatae amore conjunctae civem egregium, Parisiorum in Academia medicinae forensis professorem praeclarum, facultatis medicae decanum dignissimum, salutis denique publicae annuum editorem indefessum. Olim Caesar omnes medicinam Romae professos civitate donavit; nos non omnes certe, sed, habito delectu aliquo, unum e reipublicae Gallicae medicis illustrissimis, qui admirabilem in modum medicinae et iuris studia consociavit, corona nostra ob cives etiam in pace servatos libenter coronamus. Duco ad vos Paulum Camillum Hippolytum Brouardel.

"(2) Quo maiore dolore Austriae et Germaniae legatos illustres absentes desideramus, eo maiore gaudio Italiae legatum insignem praesentem salutamus. Salutamus Academiae Bononiensis, nobiscum veteri hospitii iure coniunctae, alumnum, tribus deinceps in Academicis, primum Mutinae, deinde Panormi, denique Ticini in ripa professorem, qui medicinae scientiam cum rerum antiquitus gestarum studiis feliciter consociavit, quique in Italiae scriptoribus eximis, non modo in Boccaccio sed etiam in Torquato Tasso, artis suae argumenta non indigna invenit. Quondam imperator quidam Romanus Roma in ipsa augurium salutis per annos complures omissum repeti ac deinde continuari iussit. Quod autem salutis publicae consilio Londinensi etiam Italia interfuit, velut augurii felicitis omen accipimus. Recordamur denique poetam antiquum urbis aeternae de nomine his fere verbis non inepte esse gloriatum:

Roma ante Romulum fuit;
non ille nomen indidit,
'sed diva flava et candida,
Roma, Aesculapi filia.*

Duco ad vos Aesculapi ministrum fidelissimum, Alphonsum Corradi.

"(3) Quis necit urbem florentissimam quod Hungariae caput est, nomine bilingui nuncupatam, fluminis Danubii in utraque ripa esse positam. Quis non inde nobis feliciter advectum esse gaudet salutis publicae professorem insignem, virum titulis plurimis cumulatum, qui etiam de Angliae salubritate opus egregium conscripsit. Idem, velut alter Hippocrates, de aere, aquis et locis praeclare disseruit. Olim Hippocrates ipse corona aurea Atheniensium in theatro donatus est: nos Hippocratis aemulum illustrem laurea nostra qualicunque in hoc templo honoris libenter ornamus. Duco ad vos bacteriologiae cultorem acerrimum, Iosephum de Fodor."

THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

SPECIAL QUOTATIONS WANTED.

II.

Will any one kindly send quotations for some of the desiderata in the following list, and so help us to complete the literary history of some of the words of the next Part? As in previous lists, when the date stands before a word, an earlier quotation is wanted; where the date follows, a later instance is wanted; if a century is mentioned, a quotation is wanted within the limits of that century; for words without a date all quotations will be welcome. The list contains many modern words and senses for which earlier quotations than those of the dates here given ought to be, and no doubt will be, found. Besides these, good quotations for words noted in ordinary reading are still welcome; and we often want instances of very common idiomatic phrases, verbal constructions, colloquial uses, and the like. Every quotation should be furnished with as full a reference as possible to date, author, work, edition, volume, chapter, page, &c., and sent to me addressed, "Dr. Murray, Oxford."

J. A. H. MURRAY.

fagging-hook

- 1794 fag, sb. (hard work)
1785 fag (at school)
1586 fag (knot in wool) 1659
1580 fag (fringe or loose end, remnant) 1620 fag-end
fage (flatter) 1570
1810 fagged, a.
1853 faggery 1853
1810 fagging
1540 faggot (iron) 18th c.
1699 faggot (dummy) 1755
1598 faggot, v.
1783 fahrenheit (thermometer)

* Mariani Lupercalia, p. 384, Baeherens, Frag. poet. Rom.

- 1713 falence
fail, without 17th and 18th c.
1612 fallance 1696
1622 failure (act of failing)
1659 failure (shortcoming)
1702 failure (bankruptcy)
1654 failure (decay) 1700
1609 faineant
faint-heart 17th and 18th c.
faint-hearted 18th c.
faint, v. (to swoon) 16th and 17th c.
1526 faint, v. (grow feeble)
1667 faintish
1710 faintishness
1600 fair, a. (wind)
fair (speech) 1670 fair (unobstructed) 1600-1800
fair (to speak) 18th c.
1684 fairway (channel)
1748 fairweather, a.
fair (a day after the) 18th c.
fairhead (beauty) 1560
1577 fairing (gift)
1847 fairish
1590 fairly (honestly)
1590 fairly (clearly)
1590 fairly (completely) fairness (impartiality) 15th and 16th c.
fairy (magic) 1532
1667 fairyland
1698 fairy-ring (on grass)
1782 faith (to pin one's) 1782 faithful (full of truth) 1610
1834 fake, v. (steal)
1812 fake, v. (get up as a sham)
1860 fake, v. (to coil) fake, sb. (sham, swindler) 1812 fakement
faker 1613 fakir
fa-la (Music) 1674
1714 falcated
1646 falcation
1787 falciform, a.
1548 falcon (cannon)
1559 falcond (cannon)
1575 falconry
1603 faldstool fall v. (of rain, &c.) 18th c.
fall v. (subside)
1860 fall v. (of mercury in barometer, temperature, &c.)
1875 fall v. (of night) fall v. (to sin) 18th c.
fall v. (price) 18th c.
fall v. (lame, sick, &c.) 18th c.
1590 fall v. (in battle) 18th c. fall v. (happen) 1764 fall v. (result) 1700 fall v. trans. (drop) 1700
1867 fall (be captured)
1611 fall (of the countenance)
1859 fall (of a wicket) fall (be born) 1750 fall astern
fall away (in flesh) 1709 fall away (revolt) 17th and 18th c. fall away (in religion) 1750 fall away (decline) 1750
1709 fall back
1841 fall back on fall in (ground, a wall)
1800 fall in (soldiers)
fall off (receipts, revenue)
1832 fall out (leave the ranks)
1850 fall through (come to nought)
1682 fall due 18th c.
1800 fall sb. (of snow, &c.)
fall (of mercury) 1860
1850 fall (of a city)
1690 fall (in price or value) fall (moral) 1826 fall (Astrol.) fall (Bot.) 1800
1712 fall (Adam's)
1801 fall (of woodcocks)
1647 fallacious
1664 fallacity 1773
1532 fallacy (Logic)
1775 fal-lal, sb.
1748 fal-lal, a. 1807
fal-lallish
1556 fallax, sb. 1612

- 1621 faller 1725
- 1592 faller off 1621
- 1638 fallibility
- 1411 fallible
- 1638 fallibly 1638
- 1598 falling-band 1637
- falling-sickness 1750
- 1734 falling-star
- 1754 Fallopiian
- fallow (yellow) 1727
- 1516 fallow-deer
- 1534 fallow, v.
- 1583 false (incorrect)
- false (Music) 18th c.
- false witness 1380
- 1709 falset (Singing)
- 1826 falsetto
- 1607 falsification
- 1646 falsify (speak falsely) 1748
- falsify (Law) 1660
- 1889 falutin
- fame, v. 1700
- fameful
- 1598 fameless 18th c.
- 1611 familiar (spirit) 18th c.
- 1541 familiar, sb. (one of the same family) 1672
- 1536 familiar, sb. (a servant) 18th c.
- 1576 familiar, sb. (of the Inquisition)
- 1787 familiarism
- 1726 familiarist 1726
- 1646 familiarize
- 1643 familiarly 1678
- 1643 familism
- 1605 familist (name of sect)
- 1658 familist (head of a family) 1658
- 1638 familist (one of a family) 1638
- famine, v. 1637
- 1535 famish, intr. 18th c.
- 1535 famosity 1535
- 1590 famous (slanderous) 1590
- 1577 famous, v. 18th c.
- 1678 famulative 1678
- 1612 famulist 1612
- 1590 fan (lady's)
- fan, v. (winnow) 18th c.
- 1540 fanatic, a.
- 1660 fanatic, sb.
- 1589 fanatical
- 1652 fanaticism
- 1812 fanaticize
- 1791 fancier
- 1642 fanciful
- 1789 fanciless
- 1845 fancy, a.
- 1768 fandango
- 1555 fang (tooth)
- 1583 fangle, sb.
- 1549 fangle, a.
- fangless 18th c.
- fanion
- 1510 fanner (winnow) 1657
- 1530 farce, sb.
- farce, v. (cookery) 1736
- farce, fig. 18th c.
- 1744 farcical
- farcing, sb. 1631
- farid (paint) 18th c.
- farid, v. 18th c.
- faridage (baggage) 1648
- 1590 farded, v.
- fare (passage) 1557
- 1562 fare (person)
- fare (behaviour) 1634
- fare (condition) 1530
- 1583 farewell, sb.
- 1742 farina (Bot.)
- 1646 farinaceous
- 1593 farm, v. (let on lease)
- 1806 farm (cultivate)
- 1719 farm, intr. 1719
- farm (to cleanse) 1608
- farmery 17th c.
- 1623 farmhouse
- 1807 farmstead
- 1791 farmyard
- 1739 farno, Pharaoh (gaming)
- 1601 farrow (litter of pig)
- fart, v. 1710
- 1627 farthel (to furl) 1692
- 1648 farther, v.
- farthermore 1721
- 1701 farthest

- farthing (of land) 1630
- farthingworth 1719
- 1603 fasces (rods)
- faschia (Architecture) 1827
- 1788 fascia (Anatomy)
- 1708 fascicle
- 1794 fasciculate
- 1777 fasciculated
- 1610 fascinate
- 1605 fascination
- 1677 fascination (binding together) 1677
- 1692 fascine
- fasel (kidney-bean) 1713
- 1750 fash, sb.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- DIDE, Aug. Jules Barni: sa vie et ses œuvres. Paris: Alcan. 2 fr. 50 c.
- GLOCK, J. Ph. Die Symbolik der Bienen u. ihrer Produkte in Sage, Dichtung, Kultus, Kunst u. Bräuchen der Völker. Heidelberg: Weiss. 5 M.
- HAUSSOULIER, Grèce. 2e partie. Grèce continentale et îles. Paris: Hachette. 20 fr.
- HURBT, Jules. Enquête sur l'évolution littéraire. Paris: Charpentier. 3 fr. 50 c.
- MERKEL, F. Jacob Henle. Ein deutsches Gelehrtenleben. Braunschweig: Vieweg. 10 M.
- POTICHE, le Vicomte de. La Baie du Mont Saint-Michel et ses approches. Paris: Baudouin. 15 fr.
- RAYAISON-MOLLIEN, Ch. Les manuscrits de Léonard de Vinci, publiés en fac-similés photographiques. 6e et dernier volume. Paris: May et Motteroz. 150 fr.

THEOLOGY.

- PFELEIDERER, O. Die Ritschl'sche Theologie, kritisch beleuchtet. Braunschweig: Schwetschke. 4 M.

HISTORY, ETC.

- ADAMEK, O. Beiträge zur Geschichte d. byzantinischen Kaisers Mauricius (582—602). II. Graz: Leuschner. 1 M. 30 Pf.
- LEHMANN, K. Die Entstehung der Libri feudorum. Rostock: Stiller. 2 M.
- MATTHIAS, B. Zur Geschichte u. Organisation der Römischen Zwangsverbände. Rostock: Stiller. 1 M. 50 Pf.
- RITTRERG, Karl Graf v. Beitrag zu 1813. Die Belagerung der Festung Spandau. Graudenz: Gabel. 9 M. 50 Pf.
- URKUNDENBUCH, westfälisches. 4. Bd. 3. Abth. Die Urkunden d. Bisth. Paderborn vom J. 1251—1300. 5. Hft., bearb. v. H. Finke. Münster: Regensburg. 7 M. 50 Pf.
- VITA S. Hrodberti primigenia authentica. Ed. B. Sepp. Regensburg: Copenrath. 1 M. 60 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE AND PHILOSOPHY.

- BAILLON, H. Dictionnaire de botanique. T. III. (Haagdorn—Ryzic). Paris: Hachette. 45 fr.
- BOEHM, J. Die Kreidbildungen d. Fürbergs u. Sulzbergs bei Siegsdorf in Oberbayern. Stuttgart: Schweizerbart. 20 M.
- FRIVALDSZKY, J. Aves Hungariae. Berlin: Friedländer. 6 M.
- GRASSMANN, R. Die Ausdehnungslehre od. die Wissenschaft v. den extensiven Grössen in strenger Formel-Entwicklung. Stettin: Grassmann. 2 M. 25 Pf.
- HERMAN, O. J. S. v. Petényi, der Begründer der wissenschaftlichen Ornithologie in Ungarn. 1799—1835. Berlin: Friedländer. 15 M.
- ISKLIN, J. J. Die Grundlagen der Geometrie ohne spezielle Grundbegriffe u. Grundsätze. Bern: Wyls. 6 M.

PHILOLOGY.

- ARISTOTELIS Πολιτεία 'Αθηναίων. Ed. G. Kaibel et U. de Wilamowitz-Moellendorf. Berlin: Wiedmann. 1 M. 80 Pf.
- CULEX, carmen Vergilio ascriptum, recensuit et enarravit E. Leo. Berlin: Weidmann. 3 M.
- EURIPIDIS Hippolytos. Griechisch u. deutsch von U. v. Wilamowitz-Moellendorf. Berlin: Weidmann. 8 M.
- LUTZ, L. Die Casus-Adverbien bei den attischen Rednern. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
- WILKENS, F. Zum hochalemannischen Konsonantismus der althochdeutschen Zeit. Leipzig: Fock. 3 M.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OLD FRENCH "FEL, FELON."

Abersoch, Pwllheli: August 17, 1891.

In some notes on the "Faery Queen," printed in last week's ACADEMY, Mr. H. M. Percival attempts to establish a distinction of meaning between fel and felon in Old French. That no such distinction is possible is perhaps sufficiently obvious from the fact that fel and felon are merely different forms of the same word (sing. nom. fel, obl. felon; plur. nom. felon, obl. felons), just as are ber and baron, lere and larron, &c.

Of course, distinctions of meaning between the oblique and subject forms of the same word may and do exist now, as for instance in the case of seigneur (Lat. seniorem), and sire (Lat. senior), and of homme (Lat. hominem), and on (Lat. homo); but this is possible simply because the origin of the different forms has been lost sight of, owing to the decay of the old declension. How far fell and felon in English are distinct words is another question.

PAGET TOYNBEE.

THE NUPTIAL NUMBER.

Emmanuel College, Cambridge: Aug. 11, 1891.

The solution of Plato's Nuptial Number (Rep. viii. 546 B—C) is as follows:

1. $\epsilon\nu \zeta \text{ πρώτος} - \theta\theta\iota\delta\acute{o}\nu\tau\alpha\upsilon\alpha$ may be expressed by the equation $w^2 + x^2 + y^2 = z$.
2. $\zeta \nu \text{ τρίτος ποσὸν} - \tau\rho\iota\delta\acute{o}\nu\varsigma$ may be expressed by the equations $[(w + x + y) \times 5]^2 = 360^2 \times 100 = 4800 \times 2700 = 12,960,000$.

$w, x,$ and y are respectively 3, 4, and 5, the sides and hypotenuse of the Pythagorean triangle; z is accordingly 216.

The proof, part of which I have already sent to the printer, will shortly be published in full, along with the explanation of the significance of these numbers.

J. ADAM.

KYD'S SPANISH TRAGEDY.

Göttingen: Aug. 3, 1891.

I wish to draw attention to a hitherto unknown copy of the supposed edition of 1594, which is preserved among the treasures of the University Library at Göttingen (cf. Dodsley-Hazlitt, vol. v., p. 2). Its title runs: "The Spanish Tragedie, containing the lamentable End of Don Horatio, and Bel-imperia: with the pittifull death of old Hieronimo. Newly corrected and amended of such grosse faults as passed in the first impression. London, Printed by Abell Teffes, and are to be sold by Edward White, 1594." It is closely related to the undated edition, "printed by Edward Alde, amended of such gross blunders as passed in the first," reprinted by Thomas Hawkins, "Origin of the English Drama," vol. ii., p. 3.

The Teffes copy and the Alde copy have common mistakes, e.g.,

Hieronimo. But here, take this, and this—what, my purse?

Ay, this, and that, and all of them are thine. (cf. Dodsley-Hazlitt, p. 128.)

Hieronimo. But here, take this and this—

Senex. What, thy purse?

Hieronimo. Ay, this and that, and all of them are thine.

But there are mistakes in the Teffes copy which do not occur in the Alde copy, e.g., the letter of Bell-Imperia, Dodsley-Hazlitt, p. 68, is given as if it were a speech of Bell-Imperia; "Mors," p. 124, is corrupted to "iners," &c. The Teffes copy seems therefore to have been pirated by Alde, whose impression is valuable, not for the reconstruction of the words, but as a help in fixing the date of the original.

Doubts having lately arisen whether the drama might not have been written much later than hitherto supposed (Schröer, "Über Titus Andronicus," p. 91), I venture to point out that the dumb-show of the three valiant Englishmen who had already interfered in Spanish-Portuguese affairs (Dodsley-Hazlitt, vol. v., pp. 33-35) could hardly be of much interest to an audience unless the play was brought out during the time of some new interference, such as was undertaken bravely, though not successfully, by Drake and Essex in 1589. This date would, both on external and internal grounds, perfectly suit the play.

A. BRANDL.

SCIENCE.

SOME BOOKS ON CHEMISTRY.

A Text-Book of Chemical Physiology and Pathology. By W. D. Halliburton, Professor of Physiology at King's College, London. (Longmans.) In forty-eight chapters, occupying 852 pages, Dr. Halliburton discusses, with a considerable measure of completeness, the chemical constitution of the human body and the chemical changes which take place within it. There are in the volume many references to phyto-chemistry, but the subject-matter of the book is less general than its title implies. The first Part of this text-book is occupied with the chief methods of research and analysis; in reality these demand a volume of no small dimensions for adequate treatment. For example, how could any one of the three processes for the determination of nitrogen be carried out from the instructions given on pages 22 and 23? There are no illustrative figures, while many minute details and precautions are necessarily omitted. However, although special manuals and practical instruction are needed by the analyst, as Dr. Halliburton himself allows, the student of physiological chemistry may derive some useful information and some indirect benefit from the perusal of these highly-condensed descriptive accounts of methods and apparatus; and he will find out whither he must turn for further aid, especially in the domain of quantitative analysis. Part ii. contains eight chapters, and includes a description of the chemical constituents of the organism. The account of that most important and most perplexing group, the proteids, is particularly worthy of commendation. In the chapter devoted to the carbohydrates we find a too brief and not wholly exact account of dextrin, the results of Mr. C. O'Sullivan's researches on this compound not being noticed. Laeculose ought no longer to be spoken of as "uncrystallizable" (p. 99); nor can the different compounds comprised under the term "cellulose" be regarded as mere "varieties" of a fundamental substance (p. 107). But in noting these and other like defects we have no wish to exaggerate their importance, or to convey the impression that the author has not attained a generally high standard of accuracy and completeness when treating of the carbon compounds which constitute so large a part of the human organism and of the nutritive materials which support it. The tissues and organs of the body are discussed in Part. iii. To the blood in health and in disease and to the blood of invertebrates Dr. Halliburton devotes over one hundred pages. His treatment of this subject, as might have been expected from the special line of his original researches, is characterised by thoroughness. The history and present position of the theory of the coagulation of the blood are carefully given; haemoglobin and allied bodies also receive ample attention. The sixth chapter of this Part is occupied with the subject of respiration; afterwards, muscle, epithelium, connective tissues, the nervous system, and the organs of the body are described from the chemico-physiological standpoint.

Under the general heading "Alimentation" Dr. Halliburton includes the consideration of food, diet, digestion and the digestive juices, and absorption. The chapters on food and diet are less satisfactory than those which deal with digestion and assimilation, not merely because they are more condensed, but because some inaccuracies have crept into the text and the most recent memoirs have not been, in all cases, consulted. For instance, the total percentage of solid matter in average cows' milk is certainly not 15.72 (p. 578), but rather something like 13; it cannot be said that eggs resemble milk in containing carbohydrate (p. 604), for the trace of sugar present in them is a quite negligible quantity; it requires 10,000 not 6000 grams of potatoes (p. 605) to furnish 120 grams of proteid; it is scarcely correct to describe milk (p. 599) as a "concentrated form of proteid"; the early and instructive determinations made by Frankland of the heat evolved by burning certain nutrients and food stuffs (p. 607) have been shown by more recent experiments to be below the truth; and, in like manner, Playfair's analysed dietaries quoted on page 608 should have been corrected by the results of more recent work. In fact, the researches of Payen, Frankland, and Playfair, which were made more than a quarter of a century ago, have been too largely relied on by Dr. Halliburton. Excretion, mainly in regard to the urine in health and disease, is quite adequately discussed in Part v. of this text-book, the subject being treated with clearness, fulness, and accuracy. Under "General Metabolism," the heading of the sixth and last Part, the exchange of material and the source of animal heat are considered. An excellent index of twenty pages concludes the volume, which, as a whole, must be regarded as constituting a valuable addition to the literature of the subject. It abounds in references to original memoirs, and is illustrated by over one hundred figures. The physician as well as the medical student will derive much advantage from the systematic study of its pages.

A History of Chemistry. By E. v. Meyer. Translated by G. McGowan. (Macmillans.) To a work so comprehensive as that before us, justice cannot be done in a brief notice. There are, however, a few general remarks which may, perhaps, be usefully made as to the character and contents of this most interesting and important treatise. First of all, it covers the whole time during which anything that can fairly be called chemistry was in existence; the first beginnings of knowledge being lightly sketched, while the latest developments of the pure science are treated with a fulness proportional to their importance. Biographical particulars concerning the great chemists of recent times and the present day are introduced; the titles and dates of the most important papers and books are given in their proper places. Impartial estimates of the labours of various discoverers are offered, due credit being assigned to chemists who did not happen to be Germans. The work is divided into six chapters of very unequal bulk. The first chapter, of thirteen pages, deals with the "period of crude empiricism with regard to chemical facts." This brief chapter is not altogether satisfactory in regard to its statements and its omissions. We demur, for instance, to the statement (page 15) that "it is doubtful whether tin was ever prepared pure before our era," for examples of this metal in a state of absolute purity have been discovered within the wrappings of Egyptian mummies at least 3000 years old. Then, again, some more definite information might have been furnished concerning ancient varieties of bronze and the metals employed in coinage. It must, however, be owned that matters such as these are of little moment in the estimation of the modern chemist. The second chapter, devoted to the age of alchemy, occupies seventy-five pages; while in the third the period of the phlogiston theory, from Boyle to Lavoisier, is treated. The next chapter, the fifth, forms by far the most important section of the volume, whether its contents or the space it occupies (203 pages) be taken into consideration. The sixth and last chapter is devoted to a brief summary of the history of the various branches of chemistry, from the time of Lavoisier to the present day. The development of analytical chemistry, of inorganic chemistry, of organic chemistry, of physical chemistry are adequately discussed; but the few pages given to the chemistry of agriculture, of plants, of animals, of fermentation, of medicine, and of manufactures are insufficient for the proper treatment of these important branches of the science. An index of authors' names and an index of subjects conclude the volume.

A Dictionary of Applied Chemistry. By T. E. Thorpe. Vol. II. (Longmans.) Besides the editor, no less than thirty-three chemists contribute important articles to this volume, which attains a very high level of general excellence. Specially noteworthy among the longer articles on distinctively technical subjects, we may name the following: Explosives, by Mr. W. H. Deering, of the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich; Extraction Apparatus, by Mr. H. H. Robinson; Fermentation, by Dr. P. F. Frankland; Coal-Gas, by Mr. L. T. Wright; Glass, by Dr. W. Ramsay; India-rubber, by Mr. C. A. Burghardt; Iodine, by Mr. E. C. C. Stanford; Iron, by Mr. T. Turner; Lead, by Dr. Bedson; Matches, by Mr. E. G. Clayton; Mercury, by the editor; and Naphthalene, by Mr. W. P. Wynne. The majority of the shorter articles are also very good; one can only regret that the exigencies of space did not permit, in several cases, of a fuller treatment of the subjects discussed. For this Dictionary is to be completed in three volumes, each containing about 700 pages; and anyone who has followed in some measure the recent developments of applied chemistry will be able to realise the enormous difficulty of compressing their adequate treatment into two thousand pages or thereabouts. To Dr. Thorpe and his coadjutors great credit is due for having done so much towards the solution of a by no means easy problem.

Chemistry in Space. By J. H. van 't Hoff. Translated and Edited by J. E. Marsh. (Oxford: Clarendon Press.) This little volume gives in an English dress a clear and full account of one of the latest developments of theoretical organic chemistry. The hypothesis of Le Bel and van 't Hoff as to the tetrahedral or a symmetric carbon-atom affords a tangible expression and explanation of an immense number of physico-chemical facts, especially those relating to the optical activity of isomers, and is gradually overcoming the hostility which it at first encountered. The editor and translator of Dix Années dans l'Histoire d'une Théorie has augmented and improved the original treatise, with the assistance and advice of the author.

Handwörterbuch der Chemie. A. Ladenburg. Lief. 42, 43, and 44. (Breslau: Trewendt.) The three new parts of this Dictionary now before us carry down the work to page 464 of the ninth volume. The article on phosphorus is completed; fifteen pages are given to a rather inadequate account of photography; under the heading "Phtaleine" a large number of derivatives of phtalic anhydride are described, some of these compounds being colouring matters of importance. The Phtalic acids are next discussed, and then the Pinacone series. In the article on Platinum references are given to no less than 320 papers on the subject of this metal and its compounds. Other articles are on Polyacetylen-compounds, Polymethylen-compounds, the Propionic, and Propylic series, Protoplasm, Pyren, and Pyridine.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891.

HIS HIGHNESS THE KHEDEVE OF EGYPT is taking a great interest in the International Congress of Orientalists which will meet at the Inner Temple Hall and rooms from the 1st to the 10th proximo. He has deputed three renowned Arabic scholars to it, of whom Sheikh Hamza Fath-ullah is one. A number of important communications regarding Mubammadan literature are expected from these scholars and from others of the Azhar University of Cairo.

The Summary of Research in Sanskrit studies compiled for the Congress by the Portuguese scholar, Prof. G. de Vasconcellos-Abreu, will consist of ten sections, embracing bibliography, Vedic literature, philosophy, law, epics, archaeology and epigraphy; reports and catalogues raisonnés, ethnography and geography, Western texts of Sanskrit origin, didacticology and "various." The critical portion mentions sixty-three authors and 115 publications, between 1886 and 1891, that have passed through the learned professor's hands. The summary will thus deal not only with the present condition of Vedic investigations, but also with the modern views that are held by learned pundits as regards the codices, especially the Maunava-Dharma Shastra. An interesting feature of the Summary is the Professor's account of those stories and fables from India that have exercised an influence on Europe through Portuguese media. He also gives "The Present View of the Origin of the Indian Theatre," "The Importance of Epigraphy in the Literary History of India," and Compendia on Modern (Hindu) Views of Ancient (Sanskrit) Facts. The Portuguese scholar finally supplies the Congress with a facsimile of an important Sanskrit inscription, which will be submitted to the consideration of the Aryan section of the Congress.

Prof. Donadiu, the delegate of the University of Barcelona, will read a paper on "The Influence of Hebrew on Spoken Language," whilst Pasteur Fesquet will point out unsuspected analogies between Hebrew and Sanskrit. The Rev. Dr. Edkins of Shanghai also supplies a list of Indo-Germanic words in Chinese and several Tartar languages; so that the section on "Comparative Language" will not only represent orthodox philology, but will also consider a number of suggestive coincidences in separate families of language, such as Prof. Abel's "Indo-Egyptian Affinities."

The London Chamber of Commerce and a number of heads of large companies and firms dealing with the East will assemble at the Examiners' Hall in Chancery-lane on September 7 in order to hear historical accounts of a number of Eastern manufactures so far as their literary and linguistic aspects are concerned; as also suggestions for the promotion of the study of modern Oriental languages in commercial relations with orientals. A number of important papers, designs, and collections will show the practical applicability of Oriental studies to modern requirements, including those of commerce and an improved view of art-industries.

CORRESPONDENCE.

NOTES ON SOME PĀLI AND JAINA-PRĀKRIT WORDS.

Dedham School, Essex: Aug. 14, 1891.

3. Candāla, Candālaka.

"Candālagam ca karagam ca vaccagharam ca āso khanāi."

(Sūyadāngasutta I. 4. 2. § 13, p. 252.)

In Hāla 227, p. 84, we find a reference to candāla-kuti, the former element of which is connected with the Jaina candāлага = candālaka. : Pāna-udā vi jaliuṇa huavaho jalai jama-vidammi." Of pāna-udī we have the following explanations:

"Yajnasthāne 'pi cāmdālāguṇā 'pi yajnakarma. kriyāta ity arthah.—Cūmdāla-kuṭi madirā pāna-kuti vā—pānakuti cāmdālakuṭi."

Prof. Weber is doubtful as to there being such a word as candāla in the sense of vessel; but the Jaina-prākṛit shows that there was a sacrificial vessel called a candāla or candālaka, and the commentators inform us, moreover, that it was made of copper, and that the term was used in Mathurā:

"Cāmdālagam iti devatārcanikādya artham tāmaram ayam bhājanam atacca Mathurāyām cāmdālakatvena pratitam iti."

4. Dhasatti.

"Tao nam sā Dharini devā . . . kottimatalamsi savvameghim dhasatti padiyā" (Spec. der Nāyā-dhammakahā, § 135).

The commentary states that dhasatti is an imitative word. Prof. Jacobi suggests a connexion with Skt. adhastit; but this latter usually becomes hetthā in the various Prākṛits. The scholiast is doubtless right in his explanation of the term; and "dhasatti paḷiyā" means "fell down with a sudden shock." Compare the colloquial phrase "fell down flop," that is, with a sudden flap. Here the word flop was originally an onomatopoeia, imitative of the fall, made by a soft, flabby substance. The imitative element is not dhasatti, but dhasa, the ti standing for ti or iti, after a short vowel. We might for dhasatti write "dhasāti," showing the word to be clearly, as the commentator describes it, an anukarana.

Dhasa may be compared with Marāthi dhas, "a sudden impression of grief or terror"; dhaskā, "a sounding stroke"; dhasdhas, "palpitation, alarm." As English "shock" is probably connected with "shake," so dhasa may be related to the Skt. root dhas or dhras, "to fall." Compare Skt. sā-dhasas; Hindi dhas, "a sloping ground"; dhasna, "a quagmire"; dhaskanā, "to sink"; Marāthi dhāsdhās, "trepidation," dhāslanem, "to give way," "fall to pieces."

But dhasa, though of imitative origin, may be here used adverbially, like Prākṛit jhatt = Skt. jhatiti, "on a sudden," from an anukarana jhat.

5. Añchati and Amchāvei.

The verb añchati, not in Childers's dictionary, occurs in Mijjhima-Nikāya, I. p. 56. Trenckner compares Skt. añch āyame (Westergaard's Rad., p. 347). The causative of this root, añchāpayati or añchāpeti, though not found in Pāli, appears in Jaina-prākṛit under the form amchāvei, glossed ākārsayati (see Kalpa Sutra, § Jinacarita, § 63, and the parallel passage in Spec. des Nāyādhammakahā, § 37).

6. Sāhula, Sāhuli.

IN the ACADEMY for July 12, 1890, No. 949, in discussing the reading Sāhunnavāsi, the form sāhula or sāhula (v.l. sāhuli) in sāhulacivara was noticed with the remark that the meaning is by no means clear.

"Tam en' aññataro puriso telamasikatena sāhulacivarena (v.l. sāhulicivarena) vañceyya" (Majjhima i., pp. 509, 511).

The reading sāhulicivarena seems to show that sāhuli is the right reading, and signifies a sort of coarse robe. In Hāla 607, p. 294, we find sāhuli in the sense of a garment—"Vauvelliasāhuli" = vātuvellita-sāhuli.

Sāhuli = vastrānicala, vastraviçesa. Dr. Weber (269 p. 98) quotes the authority of Pāyialacchi (ed. Pischel) for sāhuli, "a lower dress." The reading sāhuli-civarena would seem to connect sāhuli with the Prākṛit sāhuli, "a branch," from sākhā. Was the sāhulicivara a dress made of "bark fibre"?

R. MORRIS.

SCIENCE NOTES.

THE International Geographical Congress held its closing sitting at Berne on August 14. The jury recommended 14 grand prizes, 14 first prizes, the like number of second prizes, and 40 honourable mentions. The selection of the meeting place of the next Congress fell upon London, with the proviso that negotiations should be entered upon to obtain the assent of the Royal Geographical Society of London. If the society should decline, then Buda-pesth, will be the place of meeting.

PART III. of the Catalogue of Sanskrit MSS. in the Library of the India Office, which has just appeared, is still devoted to scientific and technical literature. Division V., Rhetoric and Poetics (Alamkārasāstra), contains notices, accompanied in most cases by specimen extracts, of 122 MSS. Division VI., Religious and Civil Law (Dharma), is sub-divided as follows: (a) Original Institutes of Law, (b) General Digests of Law, (c) Works on Civil Law (Vyavahāra), (d) Works on Sacred Law (Acāra), (e) Treatises on Worship (Devapūjā). This division contains notices of 559 MSS.

THE Australian Antarctic Committee of the Victorian branch of the Royal Geographical Society announce that only £3,000 is wanted to complete the arrangements for the Antarctic expedition, started by Baron Nordenskiöld's offer to furnish the necessary equipment for such an expedition. The Committee state that the expedition will probably start in about fifteen months; and, in addition to its scientific possibilities, it is hoped that it will be the means of opening up extensive fisheries in the Antarctic seas.

As a result of some inquiries into the duties of the Speaker of the House of Commons, with regard to the periodical inspection of the Parliamentary copies of the imperial standards, it has just been discovered that some standard weights and measures, which were supposed to have been lost when the Houses of Parliament were burnt down in 1834, are still in existence. The most important of the standards thus rescued are the yard measures constructed by Bird in 1758 and 1760.

PROF. GUSTAV OPPERT, of the Presidency College, Madras, wishes attention to be drawn to the following points in his paper on "Indian Theogony," which he has sent to the forthcoming Oriental Congress: Trimurti and Brahmas, pp. 9-20; Vishnu, p. 28; the similarity in the names of Oannes, p. 34; Indian and Turanian computations; on the Saligrama stone, pp. 45-47 (under which Brahman resides), pp. 35-47, and Civa on the Linga, p. 51. The special interest that attaches to Prof. Gustav Oppert's paper is his identification of non-Aryan elements in Sanskrit mythology.

FINE ART.

THE EDINBURGH CONGRESS OF THE ROYAL ARCHAEOLOGICAL INSTITUTE.

THE annual congress of the Royal Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland has this year been held in Edinburgh, where the Society formerly met in 1856. On that occasion a particularly rich "Loan Museum of Antiquities, Works of Art, and Historical Scottish Relics" was brought together; and the final illustrated catalogue of this collection, issued in 1859, still forms a useful work of reference on Scottish archaeology. This year the main attraction for the members of the Institute—in addition to the various buildings and other remains of antiquarian interest in Edinburgh, and within easy distance of the city—has been the Scottish National Museum of Antiquities, a particularly rich and extensive archaeological collection which, long very insufficiently housed in the Royal Institution on the Mound, has been transferred to the eastern portion of the recently erected Scottish National Portrait Gallery, and was formally opened to the public during the sittings of the Congress. The Society of Antiquaries of Scotland have also brought together, for temporary exhibition, a fine series of about four hundred rubbings of the early sculptured stones of Scotland, executed by Miss Maclagan, of Ravenscroft, Stirling, one of the ten lady associates of the Society; and an independent committee, under the presidency of the Lyon King, have organised the Heraldic Exhibition, filling two of the rooms of the National Portrait Gallery, which has already been noticed in our columns, of which—as was the case with the general archaeological collection of 1856—a permanent record is to be preserved by means of the publication of an illustrated catalogue.

The proceedings of the Institute were opened on Tuesday, August 12, in the Lecture Room of the Scottish National Portrait Gallery, when Earl Percy, as President of the Institute, introduced Sir Herbert Maxwell, the President of this year's meeting, who delivered a singularly excellent and telling inaugural address—brightened occasionally with touches of quiet humour—upon the aims and methods of archaeology. Selecting Horace Walpole and Sir Walter as representative of two classes of the antiquaries of the past, the former collecting the antiquarian treasures for their beauty, the latter prizing them for their romantic associations, he went on to indicate that the aim of the archaeologist of the present day must be “a higher aim than either—namely, the attainment of truth,” and that “we have only in recent times learned how best to direct research, by comparative observation, and so have been enabled to dispel much illusion which obscured the early history of our race.” After some practical observations as to the necessity for collectors carefully labelling each object at the time when it is discovered, and for preserving a record of the place and surroundings where it is found, Sir Herbert touched on the lake-dwellings of Scotland and Switzerland, and on the cup-markings and concentric circles which are found in the most widely remote portions of the world, and at present form so perplexing a problem to the archaeologist, making graceful mention of the labours of Dr. Robert Munro in connexion with the former subject, and of the late Mr. Hamilton, of Ardendee, in connexion with the latter, and concluded with a reference to the rich collection of the National Museum of Antiquities, which, through the generosity of Mr. J. R. Findlay, is now, at length, properly arranged, and available for systematic study.

In the afternoon the members, under the guidance of Mr. W. W. Robertson, of H.M. Board of Works, visited the Chapel Royal of Holyrood, which includes the nave of the church of an abbey of the Austin Canon, founded by David I. in 1128, and removed about 1143 to the present site. The greater portion of the existing structure dates from the latter part of the thirteenth century; and the richly-sculptured door of the north aisle was erected by Archibald Crawford, elected abbot in 1457. The palace was next examined, erected by James IV., and rebuilt by Charles II. towards the end of the seventeenth century; and the sundial in the palace garden constructed by Nicholas Stove, the sculptor of Lady Berkeley's monument at Cranford, and the small circular-turreted building known as Queen Mary's Bath, also received notice.

At the evening meeting Dr. John Evans, F.S.A., opened the Antiquarian Section with an address on “The Progress of Archaeology” since 1856, the date of the last meeting of the Institute in Edinburgh, commenting on the new fields of research which had been opened up in connexion with the palaeolithic or river-drift period, on our increased knowledge of the neolithic period through the labours of the London and Scottish Societies of Antiquaries, of the Institute, of the British Archaeological Association, and of such local societies as those of Ayrshire and Galloway, and the formation of great public museums in Britain, on the continent, and in America.

Dr. Evans's address was followed by a well-illustrated paper by Mrs. Ware on “The Seals of Carlisle,” read by the Bishop of Barrow-in-Furness. The seals of twenty-eight of the fifty-eight bishops who have held the see, founded by Henry I., are known to exist, ranging from that of Bishop Bernard, 1156-1218, and including the very beautiful seal of Bishop Ralph de Ireton, 1280-1292.

On Wednesday, the 12th, Linlithgow and Stirling were visited, under somewhat unfavourable conditions of weather. In the former, Mr. T. Ross, joint author of The Castellated Architecture of Scotland, conducted the party to St. Michael's Church, dating from the early part of the fifteenth century, and one of the finest examples of a Scottish parochial church, and to the palace; while at Stirling Mr. Washington Browne assumed the guidance to the parish church, Mr. Ross acting as conductor to the castle, Argyll's Lodgings, Mar's “Work,” &c.

In the evening Dr. T. Hodgkin opened the Historical Section, over which he presided, with an address, in which, after touching in a light and humorous fashion upon the ancient connexion between Edinburgh and Northumbria, he passed to a consideration of the relation of history to archaeology, remarking that for one great portion of history, “that mysterious interval in the story of our country which is covered by the words Britannia Romano,” “the historian has practically to thank the archaeologist for almost the whole of his materials,” and indicating various questions regarding that period which still look to archaeology for an answer. After referring to Sir Arthur Mitchell and Mr. F. Seebohm as “admirable examples of scientific collectors of archaeological facts,” and dwelling on the necessity, in the cause of science, of “such close, attentive, life-long study as the archaeologist bestows on the dialect or the antiquities of a single parish,” Dr. Hodgkin closed by insisting also upon the necessity of the broader method of the historian, who presents “a wide panoramic picture,” without which our knowledge of the past would consist of a multitude of detached fragments.

Mr. Louis Dyer, delegate from the Archaeological Institute of America, having read some notes on the Vitruvian account of the Greek stage, Mr. Albert Hartshorne followed with a minute and careful paper on “The Sword Belts of the Middle Ages,” illustrated by a series of drawings from effigies in the Temple Church and elsewhere, which will form a valuable contribution to the printed Proceedings of the Institute.

On Thursday, the 14th, the Bishop of Carlisle opened the Architectural Section by an address on “The Treatment of Ancient Buildings,” in which he indicated that the best rule with regard to buildings that are purely monumental “was to leave them alone . . . applied in conjunction with another—viz., to take care that other people left them alone also,” while in regard to buildings partly monumental, but partly also in ordinary use for the practical purposes of living men, the same rule should be applied as closely as the condition of things in each case would allow, and that care should be taken “not to introduce new work so carefully and even slavishly copied from the old, as to lay a snare for the feet of future inquirers.”

The Rev. W. S. Calverley followed with a paper on “The Pre-Norman Crosses at St. Wilfred's Church, Halton, Lancashire,” and in the course of his remarks threw out a suggestion that a collection of drawings and casts of old crosses and other similar archaeological relics might be collected and permanently exhibited in the rooms of the Portrait Gallery, which are still vacant.

The Rev. Dr. Cox read a paper by the Rev. Dr. Rowen on “Caledonian Campanology,” and Dr. Clark, of Cambridge, and the Bishop of Carlisle referred in terms of great admiration to the rubbings of sculptured stones by Miss Maclagan, which decorated the walls of the lecture room.

In the Historical Section Dr. James Macdonald read a paper dealing with the question “Is Burghhead on the Moray Firth, the Winged Camp, or Fort of Ptolemy?”

The afternoon was spent in visiting various objects of interest in Edinburgh, St. Giles' Church being examined under the guidance of Mr. George Henderson, the Parliament House and Advocates' Library under that of Mr. Balfour Paul, the Lyon King, while Mr. H. Blanc conducted a party over the Castle and George Heriot's Hospital.

In the evening the members of the Institute were entertained by the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland at a conversazione in the National Portrait Galleries, on the occasion of the opening of the National Museum of Antiquities, in the eastern portion of the buildings. The guests were received by Sir Herbert and Lady Maxwell and Mr. J. R. Findlay, Vice-President of the Society, and Miss E. M. Findlay. Lord Lothian, President of the society, then delivered an address, welcoming the Institute to Edinburgh, declaring the National Museum open, and conveying the thanks of the Scottish nation and of those interested in archaeology generally to Mr. Findlay for his generous gift of the building in which the collection is now preserved. Earl Percy then responded on behalf of the Institute; and Mr. Findlay, having moved a vote of thanks to Lord Lothian for presiding, the rest of the evening was spent by the guests in examining the various objects of interest in the Antiquarian and National Portrait Gallery collections.

On Friday, August 14, the members of the Institute visited St. Andrews under the guidance of Mr. D. Hay Fleming, examining the West Port, the remains of the Blackfriars Monastery; the Parish Church (of which the steeple and session-house are all that survive of the original fifteenth century) with Archbishop Sharp's monument; St. Salvator's College, with Bishop Kennedy's chapel and the fine tomb of its founder; the College Museum; the library of St. Mary's College; the ruins of sixteenth century chapel of St. Leonard's College, of the “Pends” or vaulted entrance to the Priory, of the New Inns erected by James V., and of the cathedral, dating from the middle of the twelfth century. Curiously enough, on the very day of the visit of the Institute, certain excavations conducted by Mr. Hutchison, of Broughty Ferry, at the east end of the choir, had resulted in disclosing, at the depth of two or three feet below the surface, the shafts of two fine sculptured crosses, which had apparently been used simply as building materials in the erection of the cathedral, and incorporated with its foundations. It was moved by Dr. Evans, seconded by Mr. Calverley, that the Board of Works should be requested to have them removed and preserved. The party next examined the chapel of St. Rule, upon which Mr. Micklethwaite delivered an address, and the castle with its bottle-dungeon in which Withart was confined previous to his execution.

In the evening meeting of the Historical Section Mr. Cadwallader J. Bates read a paper on "The Demarcation of Scotland and Northumberland," submitting the problem of how far the English character of the South of Scotland is to be attributed to its having once formed part of Northumbria, which at one time stretched from the Forth to the Humber, and how far it might be the result of events subsequent to the dissolution of that extensive kingdom. In the Antiquarian Section Mr. Balfour Paul directed attention to some of the more important features of the Heraldic Exhibition which had been brought together in Edinburgh on the occasion of the visit of the Institute; and Mr. Emanuel Green gave a brief résumé of his paper on the history and development of "The Union Jack," one of the most skillful and curious heraldic arrangements of modern times, which is to be published in the Proceedings of the society.

On Saturday, August 15, the members of the Institute visited Glasgow Cathedral, and the line of the Roman wall between Bonnybridge and Croy. The party visiting Glasgow were conducted by Mr. John Honeyman, architect, president of the Glasgow Archaeological Society, who indicated the more remarkable architectural features of the Cathedral dedicated to St. Mungo or Kentigern. Another party had started in the morning direct for the Roman wall at Bonnybridge, under the guidance of Mr. W. Jolly, H.M. Inspector of Schools. Here the first object of interest was the restoration, by Mr. James Russell, Longcroft, of a section, twenty-five feet in length, of the wall and ditch in Bonnymuir Wood. At this point the ditch and mounds had been particularly well preserved and clearly defined; and on the original stone foundation a rampart of turf and earth had been erected, ten feet and a half in height, fourteen feet eleven inches wide at the base, and nine feet wide at the top, and the ditch had been cleaned out. In the afternoon the two parties joined each other at Croy, where Mr. Jolly exhibited a collection of fragments of Samian ware and some carved stones, discovered in the Croy Hill camp, probably the largest on the whole line of the wall. The various sections made across the line of the wall, and particularly that at Barr Hill, were next examined, and at Croy Hill, where the ditch was carried along the base of a cliff from twenty to fifty feet in height. The expedition terminated at Dullatur Station.

On Monday, August 17, the members of the Institute drove to Roslin and examined the collegiate church of St. Matthew and the castle there, a very interesting lecture on their architectural features being delivered by Mr. T. Ross, who afterwards guided the party over Borthwick Church and castle and Crichton Castle.

In the evening the annual meeting of the Institute was held in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery. Sir Talbot Baker, Bart., presided. After proposing a vote of thanks to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland, coupled with the names of Dr. Munro and Sir Herbert Maxwell, he went on to comment on the unsafe condition of the tower of Borthwick Castle in consequence of the amount of vegetation on its top; and after some discussion, it was resolved, on the motion of Mr. Albert Hartshorne, seconded by Mr. Micklethwaite, "to suggest that steps should be taken without delay to remove a growing evil that is tending so rapidly to the destruction of this historic monument." Prof. Clark, of Cambridge, moved a vote of thanks to the readers of papers and the guides, and to the Glasgow Archaeological Society, and Mr. E. Green made a similar motion with regard to the delegates from foreign societies.

On Tuesday, the 18th, the members visited Dunfermline Abbey and Palace, under the guidance of Mr. George Robertson; and later in the day the fine Norman Church of Dalmeny and Craigmillar Castle were examined, the party being then conducted by M. Hippolyte J. Blanc, architect.

Wednesday, August 19, the final day of the Congress, was devoted to an inspection of the National Museum of Antiquities, the National Portrait Gallery, the National Picture Gallery, the Museum of Science and Art, and other places of interest in Edinburgh.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

THE late Sir Prescott Hewett, the celebrated surgeon, who was also a distinguished amateur artist, having expressed a desire that part of the collection of water-colour drawings which he had formed should find a home in the galleries of the South Kensington Museum, to which he had been a constant visitor, his only surviving children, Miss Prescott Hewett and Mrs. Hallett, have now given effect to his wishes by offering a selection of fifty of the best and most representative works by various artists—several of whom are at present unrepresented in the historical collection at South Kensington—with one of Sir Prescott's own drawings, to the President of the Council, by whom they have been accepted. The terms of the deed of gift are much the same as those under which the late Mr. Sheepshanks gave his celebrated gallery of pictures to found a national gallery of British art at South Kensington, in connexion with the Museum and School of Art.

W. P. FRITH'S, R.A., charming little picture, "The Sweetest Beggar," which is exhibited in this year's Academy, is being reproduced in pure mezzotint by Mrs. Gertrude Dale, who has so sympathetically rendered T. F. Dicksee's "Sweet Violets."

MR. PYKE THOMPSON'S little gallery at Penarth, near Cardiff—which is known as "the Turner House," and which is probably unique in the character of its contents—has received many additions, and has been rearranged within the last few days, and an enlarged edition of the privately-printed catalogue—with notes by Mr. Frederick Wedmore—has been issued upon hand-made paper. Entirely unlike most art museums, whether metropolitan or provincial, the Turner House contains "not a single oil picture of sensational value or attractiveness." It does contain a beautiful little Poelenberg, from the collection of Mr. Sackville Bale, and an exquisite Schudeken, from the Stovar collection; but what is meant, we presume, is that no concession has been made to popular taste. A gallery, accessible to the public at least twice in the week, is full chiefly of etchings by Rembrandt and Meryon; of more or less educational drawings by our elder English masters, such as Cozens and Girtin, Varley and Barret; of examples of only the most refined of contemporary water-colour painters—Sir James Linton, to wit (by whom there is the beautiful Mary Livingstone of the "Queen's Maries"), Thomas Collier, Albert Goodwin, and John Fulleylove—and of the porcelain of Sèvres and Worcester, Chelsea, Nantgarw, and Swansea, together with a few examples of European enamels, including one of noble old Limoges, and several of the famous Battersea fabric, which flourished during the third quarter of the eighteenth century, and on which the English collector has been declared to have "now wisely set his affections."

MR. JAMES RICALTON, writing of the wonderful old ruins of monuments and shrines at Anuradhapura, the City of the Sacred Bo-Tree in Ceylon, says: "From the days of the mound-builders down to the Eiffel Tower, man has shown himself to be a monument-erecting being; the Christians have their cathedrals, the Mohammedans have their mosques, and the Buddhists have their shrine-tombs, designated differently in different countries as pagoda, tope, and dagoba. The pagodas of China are entirely dissimilar to those of Burmah, and the dagobas of Ceylon are quite unlike those in either country; yet all serve the one purpose of relic-sepulture. They are not altogether a thing of the past; they are still erected near the temples; but those of modern construction are small and unimportant when compared with those that have withstood biennial monsoons for two thousand years; even their half-buried ruins are stupendous."

THE march of improvement and the requirements of the present age have made it necessary that two of the oldest and most interesting houses in Fleet-street should be removed. For centuries they have withstood the tooth of Time, and have witnessed strange transformations in all their surroundings; but at length the safety of the modern Londoner demands that they shall be taken down, lest they fall to the ground without warning. These quaint buildings are numbered 184 and 185 Fleet-street. They are the last survivals of the Tudor style of architecture remaining in "the Flete," and are interesting alike from their architectural and their historical associations. They show the overhanging bay windows, the low roofs, the heavy eaves, and the pointed gables that distinguished the urban mansions of the sixteenth century. When the Great Fire of London was raging in 1666, its devastating career was stayed just before it reached these houses; and even then they were regarded as very old buildings. It is no extravagant estimate to place the date of their construction about 1500. They have recently shown such evident signs of decay that they have been condemned, and are soon to be removed and replaced by a more stately, though not more picturesque building.

THE British Association, which met at Cardiff on Wednesday, August 19, has this year elected to its chair Dr. Huggins, one of the foremost living exponents of astronomical science. The president in his address reviewed the progress of the science during the past thirty years, dwelling in particular upon those newer methods of astronomical research which had followed on the introduction into the observatory of the electroscopes and the modern photographic plate. It is already arranged that the next meeting of the association shall be held at Edinburgh, under the presidency of Sir Archibald Geikie, the eminent geologist, and an invitation has been received from Nottingham for the meeting of 1893.

SEVERAL very interesting bits of Roman remains have been brought to light in the course of excavations that are being made for building purposes at Twyford, near Winchester. About a month ago, a paved way, composed entirely of small red tiles, 6 ft. in width and extending probably a considerable distance (a length of 14 ft. was uncovered), was found while digging on the site for flints. The more recent excavations are 20 ft. west of this passage, and there is now to be seen, in a very perfect state of preservation, an oven or kiln with three openings. Five yards away from this is a chamber about 8 ft. square, paved with tiles, and the sides coated with a reddish plaster. On one side is a ledge 13 in. from the ground, extending the whole length of the chamber; on the floor is a sunk channel with an opening at the end for the water to escape. This chamber evidently represents the bath. Portions of the dividing walls of the different chambers have also been discovered, together with various bones, teeth, horns, and ornaments, but very few coins. It is probable that an alteration in the plans of the house which was about to be built on the spot will be made so as to preserve all the more interesting features of these remains in the basement. These discoveries were made at a depth of only 2 ft. or 3 ft. from the surface of the ground, and are within about a quarter of a mile of other Roman remains which were similarly brought to light a few months ago.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Parsifal, The Finding of Christ through Art, or Richard Wagner as Theologian. By Albert Ross Parsons. (G. P. Putnam's Sons.) A very delightful little book, consisting of a lecture, a preface, and a very full appendix. The author, it may be mentioned, is president of the Music Teachers' National Association, New York and London. The book belongs to a kind not yet numerous enough, though fortunately rapidly increasing—i.e., to those partly metaphysical, partly artistic, partly ethical works which put new life into religious doctrines, and, at the same time, reveal the intimate connexion of art with our deepest and highest wants and activities. It is needless to say that Mr. Parsons belongs to a school of thought in direct conflict with the "Art for Art's Sake" theory. He has little or nothing to say about the technique of art, or about Wagner's innovations in form, &c. The Bayreuth master is here regarded chiefly as a great ethical and philosophical teacher, and his works as revealing and re-crystallising great vital truths which conventional habits have obscured in the religious systems of the day. The average reader will find the book hard reading; there are quotations from the great authors of the last two thousand years. The lecture, indeed, consists almost wholly of quotations, principally from Wagner's writings, arranged so as to prove, step by step, Mr. Parsons' thesis, viz., that Wagner was a deeply religious man, who though not a Christian in the narrower meaning of that term "had found the Christ, the Son of the Living God." Though dealing chiefly with the inner meaning of Parsifal, i.e., that redemption is to be sought in renunciation of self and the destruction of the will, Mr. Parsons discusses also the ethical meaning of Wagner's other dramas. His exposition of the Tristan drama and its lesson is very interesting.

Scottish Church Music — Its Composers and Sources. By James Love. (Blackwood & Sons.) The title is misleading, as the book deals not only with Scotch, but also with German, French, Italian, English, and other hymn tunes. Again the author deals with the music contained in seven Scotch collections, but that does not justify him in describing the contents of such collections as "Scottish Church Music;" as well might we call Hymns Ancient and Modern "English Church Music." Apart from this the book is likely to be very useful, and is certainly interesting. There is an alphabetical list of tunes with their numbers in the Scotch collections, and their composers or sources. Also biographical sketches of the said composers, with notes and illustrative examples; these last, in music type, both of staff and tonic sol-fa notation, are likely to be much appreciated, for they give variations of same melody as found in different collections. The biographies extend from pp. 55 to 313, and are about 500 in number, thus occupying the bulk of the book. The author claims to have corrected many wrong dates, and wrongly-attributed composers' names. The volume will be welcome not only to those concerned in Church music, but also to book collectors.

The Light of Other Days seen through the Wrong End of an Opera Glass. By Wilbert Beale. 2 vols. (Bentley.) This work reminds one of "The Enterprising Impresario" by the same author, but it deals with a greater variety of personages, and contains more amusing matter. Mr. Beale gives many interesting details respecting the Regent-street firm founded by his father and Mr. Addison. J. B. Cramer, the fashionable pianist of his day was taken into partnership, and, as Mr. Beale puts it, "All London flocked to see the popular pianist selling music even as they were wont to do to hear him play." Fancy Pachmann or Padcrewski serving sheet music behind a counter; one may indeed say, "autres temps, autres mœurs." Among the celebrities who figure in these volumes are Balfe, Thalberg, Albert Smith, Blanchard Jerrold, J. L. Hatton, and a host of leading singers and performers of the past forty years. The fondness of the latter for pranks of all kinds furnishes Mr. Beale with a large store of anecdotes, some of which, however, are not new. Vivier, the famous horn-player, Thalberg, Balfe, and the eccentric, but simple-minded George Hodder, are the central figures of some of the most ludicrous. With regard to the more serious parts of the book, there are "appreciations" of Madame V. Garcia's "Orfeo," of Mario and others in some of their favourite parts, and there is a large amount of behind-the-scenes information concerning the innumerable operatic speculations and concert enterprises with which Mr. Beale has been connected. Mr. Beale was a great admirer of Thalberg both as a player and as a composer, but evidently disliked Liszt. "Compare," he says, "the fantasias on Mozart's 'Don Giovanni' by Liszt and Thalberg, and judge between them." It is scarcely necessary to judge at all now; both, happily, have become obsolete.

Voice Figures. By Mrs. Watts Hughes. (Hazell, Watson & Viney.) Chladni was the first to show the intimate connexion between sound and form. He set plates in vibration by means of a violin bow; Mrs. Hughes causes an elastic membrane to pulsate by means of the human voice, the delicate vibrations of which, as she truly remarks, "record and register themselves in several different ways, and with remarkably interesting results." She has not only obtained forms for the different notes of the scale, but has shown that these forms vary with the substance used for producing figures, with the quality of the membrane, and with the pitch, intensity, and so on, of the vocal note. She has made experiments with various musical instruments, but those with the human voice have proved the most wonderful; as regards pitch and maximum strength it may be limited, but "in every other direction its comparative powers are so great as to render it unique." By covering the discs with liquids (water or milk) instead of powder or sand, "regular crispations or wavelets" are obtained, and Mrs. Hughes, with, as it were, magic art, can produce geometrical patterns, or floral (daisy, pansy, primrose, buttercup, &c.) forms by thickening the liquid with powdered water-colour; a small quantity gives the former, a larger quantity the latter. Of these there are many illustrations in the pamphlet. Of the interest of these discoveries there can be no question, and mathematicians and physicists may possibly turn them to some practical account. Mrs. Hughes herself shows how the student of singing can study many points relating to voice production by watching the movements of Lycopodium on the disc. On one occasion she sang a note, and there was a wavering of the lycopodium; another attempt "left on the disc the figure I had looked for." And she adds, "I notice, however, that the intensity of the last note was less than that of my previous efforts. I therefore concluded that the cause of the unusual commotion was the presence of overtones, through singing too loudly. Singing then the octave above, I at once saw before me the very figure which had been struggling for predominance with its companion octave below."

The Alexandra Gymnasium Music. By Howard Talbot. (Augener.) Music here occupies a subordinate place: it is merely an aid to marching, hopping, swinging, &c. As in dance music so here well-marked rhythms are essential, and in this respect all the pieces are satisfactory.

We have received from C. Woolhouse: Twelve Songs for Children. By Mrs. Liebreich. These are for one or two voices (ad lib.), and are intended for children from five to ten years of age. They are short, simple, and pleasing; but the part-writing for the pianoforte is not altogether immaculate.

Shelley-Album. Music by J. Cliffe Forrester. This is an interesting collection of nine songs. The music is clever, and everywhere the composer has sought to intensify the meaning of the words. To set Shelley to music is indeed a difficult task; there is so much music already in the poet's lines, that at times one resents any addition as an impertinence, or longs for strains of the most ethereal kind. Mr. Forrester is not always free enough in his choice of melodies and harmonies. The effect produced by his music is unequal, but the good predominates. "The World's Wanderers" and "Song on a faded violet" are the two which please us best.

Cupid's Mission. By Nilma. A light, and somewhat frivolous song.

Album Leaf, for violin, with pianoforte accompaniment by E. Moira Walsh, is a short, tripping piece. The opening theme, principally through its rhythm, reminds one of Rubinstein's Romance in F (in 6-8 time).

Polonaise, for violin, with accompaniment for pianoforte. By I. A. de Orellana. This piece commences with a slow introductory movement of interesting character. The Polonaise proper is brilliant, but the music is altogether conventional.

Serenade, Nocturne, Caprice, for violoncello and pianoforte. By W. Noel Johnson. The first is soft and graceful, and the second pleasing, though, perhaps, not altogether in keeping with its title. The third is a bristling little piece, and we do not care much for it. They are all effectively written for the 'cello.

Gondoliera, Marcia Funèbre, for pianoforte and strings. By Alex. S. Beaumont. The first is a quartet, the second a quintet. The writing in both is smooth, and they are of Mendelssohnian clearness with regard to form. All instruments are effectively employed, and they will be found useful pieces for ensemble playing.

Melodic Studies, for Pianoforte. By I. A. de Orellana. Books III. and IV. We have already spoken in favourable terms of the first and second books of this series. The new ones are both useful and pleasant. There is a capital study in thirds, another in octaves, another in arpeggio chords, &c.: the last, by the way, recalls a well-known study of Rubinstein's. The one at the end of Book IV. was evidently suggested by the Scherzo of Chopin's "Funeral March" Sonata.

Tarantella, by the same, is not over-interesting, but a good finger piece.

Pensée-Etude, for pianoforte, by Herbert F. Sharpe (Op. 55), is a quaint, flowing morceau de salon.

THE MAORI-POLYNESIAN COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY.

By EDWARD TREGGAR, F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S.,
President of the Wellington Philological Society, New Zealand.
700 pp., royal 8vo, cloth lettered, 21s.
Wellington, N.Z.: LYON & BLAIR.

THE COLONY of NEW ZEALAND:
its History, Vicissitudes, and Progress. By WILLIAM GIBBORNE, Esq., formerly resident in the Colony for thirty-three years. Re-issue, with Statistical Information brought down to 1890. Crown 8vo, with Three Maps, 6s.

"A valuable book for such as really desire to know the story of our colony and its resources.....A good, solid book."—Otago Times.

THE COMMON SALVATION: Notes of a Study of Romans i. 17—viii. 23. By JOHN W. OWEN, B.A. (Oxon.). 8vo, 5s. net.

E. A. PARIBERICK & Co., 33, Paternoster Row, E.C.; Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL, of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this highly celebrated process for large plates, and albums de luxe. For ordinary Book Illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

POPULAR EDITION.
Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V
with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.
Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 5s., post free.

THE HOLY of HOLIES: a Series of Sermons
on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
21 AND 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

ESTABLISHED 1851.
BIRKBECK BANK,
Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.
For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE per CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars, post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,
and

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME
PIES. Also,

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.
SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS
TO
THE ACADEMY.
(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE)

	YEARLY.		HALF-YEARLY.		QUARTERLY.
	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0	13	0	6	0	3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom	0	15	0	7	0	10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0	17	0	8	0	11

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE.
Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GATTI.
To-night, at 7.45, a new and original drama, by Geo. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled,
THE TRUMPET CALL.

COMEDY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrey, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. B. Lechmere, W. Wyes, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled, MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chaucey Olivett, Tomplar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, E. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

LYRIC THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15, LA CIGALE.
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Ponchev, Mudie, and the Chevalier Souvel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schuberth, Ellis, and Jeffries.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.
Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Manager, W. W. KELLY.
At 8, Grand revival of Sardou's
THEODORA.

Messrs. Fuller Mellich, Murray, Carson, G. W. Cockburn, T. W. Perceval, Leslie Corcoran, F. Victor, Henry de Solla, Alker, Ludlow, Warton, &c.; Mesdames Bertie Willis, Lilian Seecombe, Louisa Wyatt, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.
To-night, at 8, FATE and FORTUNE; or, the Junior Partner, by James J. Blood, by arrangement with Mr. William Calder.
Messrs. W. L. Abingdon, Geo. Barrett, W. R. Sutherland, Bassett Roe, Stephen Caffrey, H. Bedford, W. Chessman, Harry Padden, T. F. Doyle, Huntley Wright, John M. East, C. Medwin, &c.; Mesdames May Whitty, Cicely Richards, Sillie Turner, May Protheroe, &c.

SAVOY THEATRE.
Proprietor and Manager, R. D'OYLY CARTER.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Sothmanez, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
At 9.15, A COMMISSION.
And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL.
Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Maxwell, and W. Grossmith; Mesdames E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Norreys.

STRAND THEATRE.
Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDGOUT.
Every Evening, at 8.45,
THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edgout, Eversfield, Hawtrey, Cape, Barracough, and H. Standing; Mesdames Fanny Brough, Edmund Phelps, Eva Moore, and Venie Bennett.
At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.
Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cunningham, John Carter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrton, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE SEQUEL.

THE SOLICITORS' JOURNAL.

THE ORGAN OF BOTH BRANCHES OF THE LEGAL PROFESSION.

ESTABLISHED 1857.
Published every Friday. Price 6d.

Of the general contents of the JOURNAL the following statement will afford some idea:—

CURRENT TOPICS.
Discussions of the legal events of the week.

LEADING ARTICLES.
Essays upon branches of law and matters of professional interest.

CASES OF THE WEEK.
Short original reports, by Barristers specially engaged for the purpose, of cases of importance decided during the current week.

PENDING LEGISLATION.
All important measures before Parliament are summarised in this department.

LEGISLATION OF THE YEAR.
Under this head careful criticisms are given of the legislative results of the Session.

REVIEWS.
New legal works are elaborately noticed in this department.

NEW ORDERS, &c.
In this department are given all new Rules and Orders; in some cases before they can be obtained by the public.

GENERAL CORRESPONDENCE.
A medium for the interchange of ideas between members of the profession.

COURTS.
Special reports of cases decided by the Railway Commission. Selected cases in the County Courts are also reported. All important decisions on Election Petitions are reported, and notes are given of decisions of importance in the Revising Barristers' Courts.

SOLICITORS' CASES.
Full reports (furnished specially by Barristers) of applications against Solicitors.

APPOINTMENTS AND OBITUARY.
Pains are taken to render these accurate and complete.

SOCIETIES AND INSTITUTIONS.
Full reports of the proceedings of the Law Societies. A Careful Summary is given of all the Legal News of the Week, and special attention is bestowed on Furnishing Early Copies of all Court Papers.

ANNUAL SUBSCRIPTIONS.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL ONLY, 26s.; by post, 28s., when paid in advance. Single Number, 6d.
SOLICITORS' JOURNAL and WEEKLY REPORTER, £2 12s., post-free, when paid in advance.

WEEKLY REPORTER, in Wrapper, £2 12s., post-free. Single Number, 1s.
The Solicitors' Journal and Reporter can be ordered from any date.
Cheques and Post Office Orders payable to H. VILLERS.

OFFICE: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

FRY'S Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SON

“A Lady wants no other Cosmetic than

Pears' soap

But one caution is absolutely necessary from an hygienic point of view. It is a notorious fact that Pears' Soap is sold at a very small profit (I think not more than about one halfpenny per tablet) on the wholesale cost price, consequently, one or other of the many soaps in the market (on the sale of which a profit of threepence or fourpence per tablet may be made) is sometimes either substituted or recommended to the buyer as 'just as good,' 'equally pure,' &c., &c., &c., the real object of the dealer, of course, being simply to obtain the greater profit by the sale of the inferior article which he recommends or attempts to substitute. Patients should, therefore, insist on having Pears' Soap when they ask for it, otherwise they may find that, instead of being served with a Genuine Soap, they have an article of most inferior quality foisted upon them; something worse than worthless, calculated only to set up HEAT, REDNESS, IRRITATION, and general unsightliness of the skin."

From the "HYGIENE OF THE SKIN," by MR. J. L. MILTON, Senior Surgeon,
St. John's Hospital for the Skin, London.

Pears' Soap makes the Hands white and fair, the Complexion bright and clear, and the Skin soft and smooth as Velvet.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1008.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, AUGUST 29, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

	PAGE
BRADLEY'S NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY, by Prof. SKEAT	167
BEAR HUNTING IN THE WHITE MOUNTAINS, by Dr. ROBERT BROWN	168
THE FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH, by R. LE GALLIENNE	169
THE GILD MERCHANT, by MISS LUCY TOLMIN SMITH	170
WATSON'S POACHERS AND POACHING, by REV. M. G. WATKINS	171
NEW NOVELS, by J. ASHCROFT NOBLE	171
SOME CLASSICAL STUDIES AND TRANSLATIONS	173
NOTES AND NEWS	174
ORIGINAL VERSE: "A NORTHERN SAILOR," by Miss F. PEACOCK	174
MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS	175
THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY—III., by Dr. MURRAY	175
SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS	176
CORRESPONDENCE:—
"To" expressing Motion, by P. Z. ROUND	176
MEREDITH'S BUSH FRIENDS IN TASMANIA, by J. B. A.	176
SOME BOOKS ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMICAL SUBJECTS	177
THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891	177
BRITISH ASSOCIATION GRANTS	178
CORRESPONDENCE:—
O.E. "Eṃmāhāṣṭhā," by George Hempel; The New Sanskrit MS. from Mongli, by Dr. R. MORRIS	178
SCIENCE NOTES	179
AVOIR DES BOURGIA, by HENRY WALLIS	180
CORRESPONDENCE:—
Some Inscribed Stones in the North, by Prof. RHYSS; The Roman Inscription at West Park, by F. HAVERFIELD	181
NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY	182
MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS	182

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS
promptly supplied on moderate terms.
CATALOGUES on application.
DULAU & CO., 27, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of the LIBRARY of the late CHARLES BRADLAUGH, M.P., with prices advised, 146 pp. 8vo. Now selling. Cover bears Mr. Bradlaugh's facsimile signature, and a reduction of the Library Photograph by Messrs. Dixon.
Price (to cover cost only) 1s. 2d. post free.
Mrs. H. BRADLAUGH DONNER, 29, Circus-road, London, N.W.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET,
excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end. Studio has anti-rattled north-east and top lights. Cooking and attendance by resident housekeepers. Electric light, hall porter, &c.—Apply to HOUSEKEEPER, 65 and 66, Chancery Lane; or to the MANAGER, 63, Chancery Lane.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO.,
14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL of Munich, the well-known Artist in PHOTOGRAPHURE. There is a steadily increasing demand for reproductions by this justly celebrated process for large plates and éditions de luxe. For ordinary book illustrations, Catalogues, Advertisements, &c., Messrs. DRUMMOND & CO. have the latest and most improved processes. Specimens on view. Prices on application.

HEAD MASTERSHIP.—ROYAL INSTITUTION SCHOOL, LIVERPOOL.

The Committee will proceed in September next to fill the above VACANCY caused by the appointment of Mr. E. H. Culley to the Head Mastership of Monmouth School. Salary £400 per annum, with a Capitation fee of £23 a day. No house. Applications and testimonials should be sent, if possible, not later than 1st SEPTEMBER, to the SECRETARY, who will supply necessary information.

READY.

ALFRED STEVENS and HIS WORK.

The Book is crown folio, 20 by 15 inches, half-bound in morocco.
Dedicated, by permission, to Sir FREDERICK LEIGHTON, Bart., P.R.A., &c.

Containing a Memoir of STEVENS, and Critical Descriptions of his Productions, by a former Pupil and Friend, Mr. HUGH STANNUS, F.R.I.B.A., Lecturer on Applied Art at University College, and Teacher of Architectural Ornament at the Royal Academy.

WITH

Fifty-seven Full-page Autotype Illustrations

Selected from Examples of the Master's Work by a Committee of Experts.

The Edition is limited to 150 Copies.

Price Six Guineas.

PUBLISHED by the AUTOTYPE COMPANY,
74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON.

DEPARTMENT of SCIENCE and ART.

NATIONAL ART TRAINING SCHOOL, South Kensington.
Visitor—EDWARD J. POYNTER, Esq., R.A.
Principal—JOHN C. L. SPARKES, Esq.

The ANNUAL SESSION will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7th. Art Classes in connection with the Training School are open to the public on payment of fees. The classes for men and women students meet separately. The studies comprise ornament and the figure, with a view to their ultimate use in design and composition, and include the study of plants and flowers, the painting of still life, and the drawing and painting of ornament and of the figure. Candidates for admission, who are not already registered as students of the school, must have passed the Second Grade Examination in Free-hand Drawing.

Admission Examinations will be held at the School on Tuesday, September 22nd and October 14th, at 11.45 a.m. and 4.45 p.m. on both days, and on subsequent Tuesdays at frequent intervals during the session.

Application for information as to fees and for admission should be made in writing to the Secretary, Department of Science and Art, S.W., or on and after October 7th, personally to the Registrar, at the School, Exhibition Road, S.W.

By order of the
LORDS of the COMMITTEE of COUNCIL on EDUCATION.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

SESSION 1891-92.

FACULTIES OF ARTS and SCIENCE.

The NEXT SESSION commences on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30th, 1891.
A syllabus, containing full information as to the various courses of instruction, lecture days and hours, fees, entrance and other scholarships, &c., is published by Messrs. Coxson, New-street, Birmingham, price 6d.; by post, 8d.

Further particulars may be obtained on application to the Secretary, at the College.

R. S. HEATH, Principal,
Geo. H. MORLEY, Secretary.

ANGLO-FOREIGN COMMERCIAL and TECHNICAL COLLEGE, connected with Royal Albert, Liege.

Director, H. WAXMOUTH, Ph.D., Laboratories and Ateliers available. French the School Language, but English management and games. Inclusive moderate terms—Prospectuses apply as above.

BRITISH MUSEUM.

The READING ROOM and NEWSPAPER ROOM will be CLOSED from TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 1st, to FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 4th, inclusive.

E. MAIND, THOMPSON,
Principal Librarian and Secretary.

British Museum, August 27, 1891.

Now ready, price 6s. 6d. net.

THE CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY CALENDAR for 1891.

With Corrections and Additions, including the New Regulations for the General and Special Examinations for the Ordinary B.A. Degree, and those for the Two New Special Examinations in Mathematics and Classics, &c.

Cambridge: DEIGHTON, BELL & Co. London: GEORGE BELL & SONS.

INTERNATIONAL CONGRESS OF ORIENTALISTS.

LONDON, 1st to 14th proximo. OFFICE, 20, Hanover Square, W.

Patron—H.R.H. THE DUKE OF CONNAUGHT; H.H.H. ARCHDUCKE RAJER

Hon. Presidents—MARQUIS DE DUFFRESNE and THE EARL OF LAYTON.

President of Organising Committee—The Right Hon. Lord RAINSBURY

600 Members in 37 countries, and 150 "papers" can be counted on 9 Government, and 26 learned bodies will be represented. Public bodies desirous of sending Delegates or of informing the Congress of their Oriental work; persons wishing to become Members, to read or send papers to present or exhibit books or collections, should communicate with Dr. Leitner, Working, who will supply the Programme of Work and other particulars regarding the Congress. Railway and other facilities are offered to Members.

Member's Subscription, £1; Non-Member's Subscription for Congress Publications, 4s.

THE MAORI-POLYNESIAN COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY.

By EDWARD TREGEAR, F.R.G.S., F.R.H.S.,

President of the Wellington Philological Society, New Zealand.

700 pp., royal 8vo, cloth lettered, 21s.

Wellington, N.Z.: LYON & BLAIR.

THE COLONY of NEW ZEALAND: its History, Vicissitudes, and Progress.

By WILLIAM GIBBORNE, Esq., formerly resident in the Colony for thirty-three years. Re-issue, with Statistical Information brought down to 1890.

Crown 8vo, with Three Maps, 6s.

"A valuable book for such as really desire to know the story of our colony and its resources. . . . A good, solid book."—Obay Times.

THE COMMON SALVATION: Notes of a Study of Romans I. 17-viii. 39.

By JOHN W. OWEN, B.A. (Oxon.). 8vo, 2s. net.

E. A. PETERBICK & Co., 33, Paternoster Row, E.C. Melbourne, Sydney, and Adelaide.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The CHAIR of GREEK is now vacant through the election of Professor Roberts as Principal of the University College, Aberystwyth. The Council will proceed to the appointment of the new PROFESSOR in September next. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded before Tuesday, September 8th, 1891.

For further information apply to:
IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 4th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will open on MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, 1891. The Lectures and Classes are open to Men and Women. For Prospectuses and information concerning Scholarships, &c. apply to:
IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
University College, Cardiff,
August 11th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in GEOLOGY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to:
IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.
The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a DIRECTOR of the STAFF of TRAVELLING TEACHERS in TECHNICAL SUBJECTS, to be established under the provisions of the Scheme of the Technical Instruction Committee of the County of Monmouth. The stipend of the Director will be £250 per annum. Candidates for the post must send in their applications, together with testimonials and references, to the undersigned, on or before THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 18th, 1891. For further information, and for copies of the above scheme, apply to:
IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN.
The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical subjects for the County of Glamorgan:—

A LECTURER in MATHEMATICS and THEORETICAL MECHANICS.

A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY.

A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.

ONE or TWO LECTURERS in MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained.

IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of MINING. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum. Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be forwarded on or before TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 15th, 1891. For further information apply to:
IVOR JAMES, Registrar,
Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE, LONDON.

LECTURES ON ZOOLOGY.

Professor W. F. R. WELDON, M.A., F.R.S., will deliver, during the opening Session, a COURSE of LECTURES on "THE DECAPOD CRUSTACEA," intended specially for Senior Students who intend to pursue original investigations in Zoology. The Lectures will be given twice weekly, commencing SATURDAY, OCTOBER 11th, at 9 a.m.

The GENERAL COURSE of LECTURES on ZOOLOGY, suitable for Students preparing for the various Examinations of the University of London, commences MONDAY, OCTOBER 5th, at 4 p.m.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.
Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Garton), Cambridge.
Professors—Socley, King's Coll.; Dr. Dulcken, Rudolph, Loman, Louis Diehl, Signor Garcia, Larpet, Ferrero, Charlton Collins, &c.
Full list and references on application.
Large Gymnasium, Lawn Tennis Courts, Swimming, and Riding.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION for filling up about FOURTEEN VACANCIES in the FOUNDATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 9th.

For information apply to the BURSAR, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1891.

- I. MR. CHAINE'S SONS. Chaps. XXXIII.—XXXVIII.
- II. Καλλίστευμα.
- III. SCIENCE and SOCIETY in the FIFTIES.
- IV. MAN.
- V. ST. PETERSBURG to SEBASTOPOL.
- VI. A HOME of REST.
- VII. THE VALE of ΜΑΥΑ.
- VIII. HENRIK IBSEN.
- IX. JOHN CHARRINGTON'S WEDDING.
- X. CHINESE COOKERY.
- XI. LOVE or MONEY. Chaps. XXXI.—XXXIV.

STANDARD WORKS FOR THE LIBRARY.

Prof. MOMMSEN'S HISTORY of ROME
to the TIME of AUGUSTUS. Translated by Dr.
DICKSON. The Popular Edition. 4 vols., crown
8vo, £2 6s. 6d.

* Also sold separately as follows:—Vols. I. and II., 21s.;
Vol. III., 16s. 6d.; Vol. IV., 15s.

THE ROMAN PROVINCES. Being the History of Rome from Cæsar to Diocletian. By Professor MOMMSEN. Translated by Rev. P. W. DICK-
SON. 2 vols., 8vo, with Maps, 36s.

THE HISTORY of ANTIQUITY.
From the German of Professor MAX DÜNKER. By
EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., of Balliol College, Oxford. 6 vols., demy 8vo. Each Volume can be obtained separately, 21s.

The HISTORY of ROMAN CLASSICAL LITERATURE. By R. W. BROWNE, M.A., Ph.D., late Prebendary of St. Paul's, and Professor of Classical Literature in King's College, London. A New Edition.
In demy 8vo, 9s.

THE LIVES of the ARCHBISHOPS of CANTERBURY. By WALTER FARQUHAR HOOK,
late Dean of Chichester. ST. AUGUSTINE to JACON.
12 vols., demy 8vo, 49s. Each separately, with the exception of III. reprinting, IV., VI., and VII., 15s. The
New Series begins with Vol. VI. Vol. XII. is the Index.

THE LIFE of OLIVER CROMWELL.
From the French of M. GUIZOT. By ANDREW
SCOBLE. Crown 8vo, with 4 Portraits, 6s.

THE LIFE of MARY, QUEEN of
SCOTS. From the French of M. MIGNET. By
ANDREW SCOBLE. With 2 Portraits, 6s.

A MEMOIR of the late Rev. JOHN
RUSSELL ("Parson Russell"), of Tordown, North
Devon. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, with a Portrait, 6s.

RECOLLECTIONS of a LITERARY LIFE. With Selections from Her Favourite Poets and Prose Writers. By MARY RUSSELL MITFORD.
Crown 8vo, with Portraits, 6s.

The AUTOBIOGRAPHY of a SEAMAN:
Thomas, Tenth Earl of Dundonald. Popular Edition, with a Sequel relating Lord Dundonald's services in liberating the Spanish and Portuguese Colonies in South America, and in the War of the Greek Independence, and with an account of his later life and scientific inventions.
Edited by the TWELFTH EARL of DUNDONALD.
With Portraits, Charts, and Nine Illustrations on Wood,
crown 8vo., 6s.

THE LIFE of THEODORE EDWARD HOOK. By Rev. RICHARD H. DALTON BARHAM.
A New Edition, crown 8vo., 6s.

SEVEN YEARS at ETON, 1857-1864.
Edited by JAMES BRINSLEY RICHARDS. Third
Edition. In 1 vol., crown 8vo., 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

CHATTO & WINDUS'S NEW BOOKS.

A NEW HUMOROUS TRAVEL-BOOK.
Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

TWO GIRLS on a BARGE.
By V. CECIL COTES. With 44 Illustrations by F. H.
Townsend.

"A breezy and frolicsome narrative."—Times.

ROBERT BUCHANAN'S NEW POEM.
Small demy 8vo, cloth boards, 8s.

THE OUTCAST: a Rhyme for the Time. By ROBERT BUCHANAN, Author of "The Shadow of the Sword." With 13 Illustrations by Rudolf Blind, Peter Macnab, and Hume Nisbet.

Small demy 8vo, cloth extra, 7s. 6d.

LIFE of JANE WELSH CAR-
LYLE. By Mrs. ALEXANDER IRELAND, Author of "Selections from the Works of Charles Reade." With Portrait and Facsimile Letter.

"Mrs. Ireland may be said to have completed what Froude began.... There is nothing but unstinted praise to be awarded for its rigidly conscientious thoroughness, as well as for a charm of style which is due as much to the heart as to the head of the writer."—Liverpool Post.

On September 10th, 2 vols., demy 8vo, cloth extra, 21s.

LIFE of JAMES BOSWELL
(of AUCHINLECK). With an Account of his Sayings,
Doings, and Writings. By PERCY FITZGERALD,
M.A. With 4 Portraits.

On September 1, crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

FREELAND: a Social Anticipation. By Dr. THEODOR HERTZKA. Translated by ARTHUR RANSOM.

"Early last year Dr. Hertzka, a well-known Viennese political economist, published a book entitled 'Freeland:
a Social Anticipation.' The book quickly ran through several large editions, and before the year ended societies were being formed in different parts of Germany and Austria preparatory to the organisation of a colony in which Dr. Hertzka's new economic views might be practically tested."

Gentleman's Magazine.

HUME NISBET'S NEW BOOK.

Immediately, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

LESSONS in ART. By Hume
NISBET. With 22 Illustrations in Facsimile.

NOW READY, NEW AND CHEAPER EDITION,
REVISED AND CORRECTED.

Crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

MYTHS and DREAMS. By Edward
CLODD, Author of "The Story of Creation."

"A delightful volume.... A welcome contribution to the literature of the subject."—Pall Mall Gazette.

GEORGE R. SIMS'S NEW BOOK.

Immediately, crown 8vo, paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d.

DAGONET DITTIES (from the Ballet). By GEORGE R. SIMS, Author of "How the Poor Live," "The Dagonet Reciter," &c.

MR. BESANT'S ROMANCE OF TO-DAY.

Cheaper Edition, crown 8vo, cloth extra, 3s. 6d.

ARMOREL of LYONESSE: a Romance of To-day. By WALTER BESANT. With 12 illustrations by F. Barnard.

"Mr. Besant has seldom, if ever, written a better or more interesting story. When we compare it with average fiction, we feel almost inclined to fall down and worship the volume."

Speaker.

THE GENTLEMAN'S MAGAZINE.
One Shilling Monthly.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

THE TROUBLES of an OXFORD BEAUTY. By Philip
Sinclair.—ON some EXTRACTS from HARRIET
SHELLEY'S LETTERS. By Annie E. Ireland.—ZOO-
LOGICAL RETROGRESSION. By H. G. Wells, B.Sc.—
WAS LORD BEACONSFIELD the SUN? By J. A. Farrer.
—A DAY at the MEYDOUM PYRAMID. By Rev. H. D.
Rawnsley, M.A.—JOHN AUBREY of WILTS. By Rev.
B. G. Johns, M.A.—NOTES on the LIAS and TRIAS CLIFFS of the SEVERN. By C. Parkinson.—SOME LONDON STREETS. By F. K. Pearce.—JEAN CHOUAN: a Tale of La Vendée. By C. E. Meeckerke.—PAGES on PLAYS. By Justin Huntly McCarthy, M.P.—HEINE on ENGLISHMEN.
By Sylvanus Urban.

LONDON: CHATTO & WINDUS, PICCADILLY.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

NOW READY.

THE

English Catalogue of Books

January, 1881, to December, 1889 (Vol. IV.),

Being an Alphabetical List of Works published in the United Kingdom and of the principal Works published in America, with dates of publication, indication of size, price, edition, and publisher's name.

Royal 8vo volume, 710 pages, half-morocco, cloth sides,
Price £2 12s. 6d.

AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

MR. GEORGE RUSSELL'S
BIOGRAPHY of the
RT. HON. W. E. GLADSTONE, M.P.

Being the New Volume in "The Queen's Prime Ministers" Series.

Crown 8vo, cloth, with New Photogravure Portrait,
Price 3s. 6d.

World.—"Written in the manly and independent spirit which we should expect in one of his lineage.... An honest book."

Speaker.—"A volume we may specially commend as the most attractive and authoritative history of the man with whom it deals that has yet been given to the world."

Saturday Review.—"Mr. Russell's book is enriched by the recollections of some of Mr. Gladstone's most eminent contemporaries, and by records which they have placed at his disposal."

* * * A Special Large-Paper Edition of the Series, with extra Portraits and Facsimiles, strictly limited to Two Hundred and Fifty Copies for England and America, printed on hand-made paper, bound in half-parliament, with gilt top, each copy numbered.
Price for the complete Set of Nine Volumes, £4 4s. net. No volume sold separately.

Full Prospectus on application.

STANDARD NOVELS FOR SUMMER READING.

At prices ranging from TWO to SIX SHILLINGS.

By WILLIAM BLACK.

Cloth gilt, 6s. each.

IN SILK ATTIRE.
A DAUGHTER of HETH.
THREE FEATHERS.
LADY SILVERDALE'S SWEETHEART.
KILMENY.
SUNRISE.
IN FAR LOCHABER.
THE STRANGE ADVENTURES of a HOUSE-
BOAT.
THE PENANCE of JOHN LOGAN.
THE NEW PRINCE FORTUNATUS.
STAND FAST, CRAIG ROYSTON.

By R. D. BLACKMORE.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

LORNA DOONE. (Thirty-fifth Edition.)
CLARA VAUGHAN.
MARY ANERLEY.
CRIPPS the CARRIER.
CHRISTOWELL.

By THOMAS HARDY.

Price 2s., boards; 2s. 6d., cloth.

FAR from the MADDING CROWD.
THE MAYOR of CASTERBRIDGE.
THE TRUMPET-MAJOR.
A PAIR of BLUE EYES.
THE HAND of ETHELBERTA.
TWO on a TOWER.
THE RETURN of the NATIVE.
A LAODICEAN.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,
St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,
Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, AUG. 29, 1891.

No. 1008, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

A New English Dictionary on Historical Principles; founded mainly on the materials collected by the Philological Society. Vol. III., Part I. E—EVERY. By Henry Bradley, Hon. M.A. Oxon., President of the Philological Society.

WE are glad to see that this Dictionary is making such good progress. It has been known, for some time past, that the third volume of this great work was already in preparation; and no doubt a good deal of curiosity has been excited as to whether the new portion would fully sustain the well-earned reputation of those that have preceded it.

In justice to Mr. Bradley, we are bound to say that we cannot find any obvious indications that the work has suffered; though, if it had been otherwise, it would hardly have been surprising. A work of this character requires a vast amount of training, not only in philological principles, which are necessarily of the highest importance, but also in a great many practical and technical details, which can only be familiarly acquired by much practice. Hence it necessarily came to pass that Dr. Murray was at considerable pains to give his colleague a fair start, by means of such advice and such suggestions as he alone, by the nature of the case, was able to give; and Mr. Bradley acknowledges, accordingly, such valuable assistance. Nevertheless, Mr. Bradley is wholly responsible for the work in its final form, and we do not think that he need be at all ashamed of the result; and he is certainly well qualified, after his present experience, to continue the third volume without much further assistance from his generous co-editor.

It was fortunate, also, that the whole of the material for the letter E had been previously sub-edited in 1881-2, under Dr. Murray's direction, by the late Mr. P. W. Jacob, who took a great deal of pains with his task, and even revised it in 1884-5, at the same time adding much new material. It is also a great gain, that Mr. Fitzedward Hall has found time for reading all the proof-sheets of the part here issued; for he has contrived, as in former parts, "to furnish many hundreds of important quotations, carrying back the history of words to an earlier date, or exemplifying senses or constructions not sufficiently illustrated." There is probably no one man at present living who knows more, practically, of the history of English words than Mr. Fitzedward Hall, and the generous way in which he has exhausted his own store of quotations (made years ago and single-handed), for the benefit of this great national undertaking, is a thing to be extremely thankful for. The gain from this source has been very great, and is deserving of full acknowledgment. As in the case of previous issues, many other scholars have lent their best aid; with the result that the present portion of the work is fairly on a level with the rest of it.

It is a remarkable fact, only known perhaps to compilers of dictionaries, that many of the words beginning with the same initial letter have a general family likeness, whereby the initial letter becomes—of course only in a vague and uncertain manner—an index to the character of the word. The letter A abounds with compounds; B is largely English, and abounds with monosyllables; all the labial letters, notably P, and in a lesser degree F and B, may be depended upon to give the etymologist a great deal of trouble; and so on. As regards E, it must be confessed that, initially, it does not shine, and that it is frequently lacking in interest, as compared with B or A. The great function of E is as a final letter; the famous "final e" haunts the student of Middle-English at every turn, and he will never know much of his subject till he becomes more or less familiar with its value and its powers. It is also well known that no English letter occurs with such frequency; the decipherers of cryptograms give it their first attention, and any inventor of a cryptogram who knows his business takes care to have more than one symbol for it. Its frequency, however, is mainly due to its employment as a vowel, both finally and medially, in preference to other vowels; but, in an initial position, the favourite vowel is rather A than E.

All this is only true on a wide view of the subject. On a closer inspection we shall find that there is really a large number of words in this part which have their peculiar value and interest; although, at the same time, we are enabled to understand why they are fewer than usual, rather than more. Some prefixes of considerable importance belong here, representing the Latin e or ex, the Latin in and inter, and the Greek ἐπι, ἐν, and ἐξ. Of these, the most important are the French forms of in, viz., em- and en-. There are several monosyllables of high antiquity, as ear, earn, earth, east, eat, ebb, edge, ell, &c., all of which require careful treatment, such as they certainly do not receive in other dictionaries, where it is the custom to neglect the native core of the language in order to ensure "completeness." An easy test of the scientific value of a dictionary, as a trustworthy guide to the actual usages of the language, is to test it by such a word as each; and we will test the "New Dictionary" accordingly.

Mr. Bradley's article on the word Each fills more than two columns and a half. The mere list of the many forms of this Protean word fills twelve lines, and includes spellings so diverse as aleh, ilk, and uwilch. We next learn a fact, never before clearly brought out, that "the historical forms inseparable from this word represent three distinct but nearly synonymous words in O. E." The three O. E. words are ælc—i.e., ā-ge-līc, gehwilc, and aghwilc, i.e., ā-ge-hwīlc. The illustration of these forms (independently of the sense) fills half a column, and includes some fifty-three quotations, sorted under five heads, respecting which we can only say that it must have cost a deal of trouble to get them right. Next comes an account of the signification and uses, first, when used alone; secondly, when used with a or an; thirdly, when used with one; and, again, when used as an adjective, attributively, or absolutely, or distributively. We have also some account of ever each, better known as every, of each other, and of various phrases in which each occurs. To those who are anxious to know how the work is done, this article is decidedly reassuring.

The longest articles are those on ear (two pages), earth (two pages), ease sb. and verb (four columns), east, Easter, easy, eat (five columns), edge, egg, elder (two columns), electric, element, elephant, elevate, elf, empty, en- as a prefix (two pages), end (two pages), enforce, engage (four columns), engine, English, enough (one page), enter (two pages), entertain, entire, entrance, entry, epoch, equal, &c.

The numerous words connected with electricity are of high interest. Already in 1646, we find Sir Thos. Browne explaining that—"By Electrick bodies, I conceive such as, conveniently placed unto their objects, attract all bodies palpable." The explanation, in 1664, in Power's Experimental Philosophy (if that be the meaning of Exp. Philos.), that "the Effluvioms of an Electrick upon its retreat, pluck up straws" is one of those which, like Miss Cornelia Blimber's, do not absolutely blind us by the light thus let in upon our intellects. The number of allied words and compounds, especially of such as begin with electro-, is surprisingly large; from electre, used by Wyclif to signify an alloy of gold and silver, down to such new terms as electro-technology and electrotherapy. It is remarkable that some of them seem to be no longer in use; such are electricalness (a clumsy word given in Bailey), electriferous, electrine, and electrizable.

Like all the preceding parts of this great work, a very short search reveals a large number of most interesting details. It is impossible to notice them here, from mere lack of space. But it will probably interest many to know that, even in the department of etymology, Mr. Bradley has brought to light not a few good things. He has discovered, for example, that there was an Anglo-French verb, aloper, in use in the fourteenth century, which may very well account for our word elope, in which the prefix e has never before been satisfactorily accounted for. The difference between the singular form enough and the plural enow is well made out. Under enthusiasm we have this interesting note. "The word ἐνθουσια has been explained by Leo Meyer as for ἐνθεουσια*, abstract sb. from ἐνθεοῦν*, stem of the pres. part of ἐνθεεῖν*, to be ἐνθεος—i.e. possessed by a god." Entice, from the O. Fr. enticier, is correctly stated to represent a Lat. form intitiare*, originally to set on fire, from titius*, with the same sense as the classical Latin titio, a firebrand. This is proved by comparison with the form atlice, already dealt with in a previous part. The history of era is too long for quotation; and the same statement applies to ermine. There are important remarks upon errant and arrant; it is certain that two distinct O. Fr. present participles were here mixed up, representing, respectively, the vulgar Latin iterantem and the classical errantem; and it is also certain, contrary to what we might expect, that the factor iterantem is much the more important of the two. Thus a justice errant is, in Law-Latin, justiciarius itinerans, where itinerans is the equivalent of errant from iterans, not of errant from errans; just as a justice in eyre is justiciarius in itinere.

In noticing some words of this character, it will readily be understood that it is only possible to mention them at all by neglecting all account of others of equal, or perhaps of greater importance and interest. Thus, the difference in form between emmet and ant is well shown; and certainly we have never before seen so clear an account of the difficult and confusing verbs which gave us the past participle embossed.

A critic usually considers himself called upon to pick out some defects, as if to insinuate (what is almost invariably untrue) that he could do the work so much better himself—which of course he never does. I therefore point out that one misses, under elephantine, what some might consider the classical quotation for the word, from the immortal Pickwick, chap. 55: "The fat boy, with elephantine playfulness, stretched out his arms to ravish a kiss." For Euripe, an old form for Euripus, the earliest quotation given is from Holland; but it occurs in Chaucer's Boethius, Book ii., met. 1. The earliest quotation for encouragement is from Caxton; but it occurs in Lydgate's Minor Poems, ed. Halliwell, p. 27:

"Which friend of his was at last encouraged."

A quotation for everly, always, is given from Barbour's Bruce, ii. 58, although no such word occurs in that poem. We are told that it is in Innes's edition, 1856; but that edition is now before us, and the reading of l. 10 on p. 28, is—

"With ane clark with him anerly";

so that some one has blundered. Under effectless, a cross-reference might have been given to feckless, which is certainly the same word. Embonpoint might have been illustrated from Chaucer's Prologue, l. 200: "He was a lord ful fat and in good point"; for it is clear that Chaucer here attempts to translate the French phrase. The earliest use of edify, as an intransitive verb, is missed. It occurs in P. Plowman, C. x. 203: "Ac these eremytes that edefyen thus by the lye weyes"; where the word has a usage not noticed in the Dictionary (see also the same, xix. 162, xxi. 42). The same work would have furnished a good example of evases, the old plural of eaves; we have, however, a quotation for the form cauisses from Coryat. In illustration of the remark that cave now sometimes appears as the singular, a certain quotation about a cottage-cave might have been introduced; but perhaps it was as well to say nothing about it. It is certainly no loss to find that the celebrated "dram of eale" is as little noticed in the Dictionary as it is in Schmidt's Shakespeare-Lexicon; for both rightly omit it. The adjective espiritual is given, but not the sb. espirit; for which see P. Plowman, xv. 27.

We notice these few points chiefly because whatever defects they suggest are not really due to the editor, but to those who "read" the books. Some readers do their work admirably; but there are others who can hardly be said to exercise common care, and it is impossible for the most "omniscient" editor to correct their blunders, and to supply their omissions.

Finally, we have nothing but hearty praise to bestow upon this instalment of the work. It were greatly to be wished that the number of purchasers could be increased tenfold. There is a great deal of insincerity in the current excuse as to not buying such a work as this "till it is finished." For it is rather a collection of excellent monographs than an ordinary lexicon; and the importance of monographs, in any other case, would be at once admitted. So prevalent is the ignorance of our own language, that but few people can give the plain reasons why this dictionary is superior to all others; and there must be thousands who would buy it at once if they could only grasp this fact.

WALTER W. SKEAT.

Bear Hunting in the White Mountains; or, Alaska and British Columbia Revisited.
By H. W. Seton-Karr. (Chapman & Hall.)

This is Lieut. Seton-Karr's second book on the north-west coast of America, and at the outset we may express the opinion that it is in many respects his best. For though of small dimensions—only one hundred and fifty-six pages in length—it contains a very graphic account of a little-known section of country. But the title of the volume is somewhat misleading. The White Mountains are not, as might be inferred, in New Hampshire, but in that portion of Alaska drained by the Chilcat River and its turbulent tributaries which fall into the inlet of the same name. No part of this wild densely-wooded glacier-dotted Alpine tract is in British Columbia. The portion of that province which Mr. Seton-Karr revisited was the country near the headwaters of the Thompson River on the eastern side of the Cascades. Neither area is very familiar even to well-tried travellers, though the last-mentioned is within easy reach of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. But the Chilcat country is so little known that, though gold prospectors are in the habit of passing across it from Dry Bay by way of the Altseik River, none of it was "laid down" with even approximate accuracy until Dr. Auriel Krause and his brother published an admirable map and description in the Zeitschrift der Gesellschaft für Erdkunde zu Berlin for 1883. But, though Mr. Seton-Karr's map is based upon that of Dr. Krause, or rather upon that of Dr. Dawson which embodies it, it is fair to our countryman to say that he never heard of the German's journey until his return home. Yet even then, so little explored is the region bounded on the north by the Copper River, on the east by the British portion of the Yukon, on the west by the coast strip of Southern Alaska, and on the south by the upper portion of the Inland Passage, that the latest visitor has been able not only to correct the previous maps, but to embrace in the one attached to his book various mountains and streams not hitherto recognised by geographers.

Two laborious months were spent in the journey here recorded—tramping through a bush as thick as seven feet of annual rainfall can make it, poling up rivers which are little better than mountain torrents in all except their lower courses, and carrying loads of provisions which would make a Swiss guide nutritious to contemplate. The scenery is, however, very fine, and the country seems to swarm with wapiti, bear, moose, beaver, and various fur animals. Cariboo reindeer are numerous in the uplands, though now that the Indians have obtained firearms they are rapidly disappearing. Grouse, snipe, and ducks abound, and up every inlet salmon are still plentiful, in spite of the "canneries," which offer such profitable employment to the Indians that they demand extortionate wages to accompany any hunting or exploring party, and, moreover, are fast killing themselves by the vile whisky into which they convert their large earnings. The once truculent Chilcats seem, however, whether through rum or a wholesome respect for white men and their gunboats, to have become a harmless enough people, if still prone to lord it over the weaker septa around them. Yet they too have their enemies, and were formerly in the habit of crossing the Chilcat Pass to reach the Yukon instead of going over the Chilcote Pass, which was in the hands of another branch of the tribe, though the journey took twelve instead of three days by the other route. In this case, however, they used to descend the Takheena River, a muddy stream not difficult to navigate in canoes. Of this region Mr. Seton-Karr supplies a very interesting description, written in the most unassuming manner, his pages being entirely bereft of that dreadful air of condescending superiority which is the bane of the ordinary "Alpinist." His pages on the Thompson River country are naturally less novel, though equally well written; and in spite of such Americanisms as "pants," "packing," "crackers," "locate," "canned," and so forth, quite as agreeable. Here and there, however, we come upon a statement which the young author—but old traveller—would do well to consider before a new edition is called for. Thus (p. 18), Vancouver did not "discover the island which bears his name"; that honour is usually credited to Cook. In reality, Juan Perez, of the corvette Santiago, had visited Nootka Sound, and named it Port San Lorenzo as early as the year 1774. All that Vancouver did was to prove the insularity of the region hitherto supposed to be part of the mainland, and even this distinction must be shared with Galiano and Valdez, whom he met with in Admiralty Inlet engaged in an expedition sent by Don Quadra, the commandant of Nootka, to solve the problem of whether the country was separated from the continent of America.

This fact Vancouver acknowledged by calling the island jointly after himself and Quadra; though with an injustice, for which there is now no remedy, we have dropped the first portion of the title. Nor is it quite correct to aver that "the Columbia River is said to have been named by Captain Gray in the year 1792." There never was any doubt about it. Gray also entered the Strait of De Fuca—the Anian Strait of the old geographers—long before Vancouver, as also did Meares, Barclay, and other early fur-traders who followed in the wake of Cook.

Mr. Seton-Karr's zoology is a little weak. What bear is the "Silver tip"? (p. 6). Nor is the porpoise "a fish" (p. 21), and the cetaceans seen pursuing the whale must have been "killers"; the ordinary Phocaena of the North Pacific—which, judging from a skull I obtained in the Queen Charlotte Islands, is different from the Atlantic species—not being addicted to any such rapacious trait.

The Indians of the North would seem to have woefully altered for the worse since I first knew them; yet surely the old-fashioned "potlatch" or feast at which property is given away has not been decreed "unlawful" (p. 28) by a paternal government? And I can vouch for the fact that the "old-time boxes" (p. 29) in a native cemetery—tied unto trees, or raised on pedestals, or supported by carved figures—do not, among the Kwakiwits at least, contain "cremated remains," but the actual body squeezed into this narrow receptacle. I remember an instance in which an Indian confined in this way while in a trance actually forced the lid open and was helped out of the pine-tree in which he had been placed by a white hunter who was passing under it. Cremation is not practised by any of the tribes near Fort Rupert, a picturesque post which we learn with regret is no longer in the hands of the Hudson's Bay Company, or a place of the importance it was when the reviewer lived within its stockades, more than twenty-five years ago. Mr. Seton-Karr never heard of any white man who has hunted the wapiti "systematically." There were plenty who did so in my day, "elk meat" being commonly sold in Victoria and New Westminster, but I am not aware of the Northern end of Vancouver Island being its favourite haunt. Indeed, after crossing the island twice at this point, I never saw one, though we came upon plenty in the country between Nanaimo and Barclay Sound, then traversed for the first time by any man, white or brown. Mr. Seton-Karr is avowedly "fond of the Indians," and ought to be if he never yet found a full-grown one "who deigned to steal" (p. 74). After a much larger experience, when the people were in a more primitive condition, the reviewer cannot profess to have been so fortunate in his numerous aboriginal friends, who nevertheless were a good deal less thievish than the average Englishman.

These differences of opinion, inevitable when two travellers of different dates and different minds come to compare notes, do not, however, detract from the favourable opinion already expressed on Mr. Seton-Karr's volume. Like every book ever written, it would be nothing the worse for revision (particularly in its natural history) and occasionally in its English. For example (p. 52), two American explorers of the same region as that examined by our author "found a long golden woman's hair in their canoe—some mysterious white prisoner, doubtless held captive by the Indians"—a very sweeping conclusion from a very slender premise, as women—"golden" or otherwise—could not long be held captive among the North-West savages without the news speedily becoming known. The illustrations from the author's pencil, though slight, are spirited, and the map—the same which appeared in the Geographical Society's Proceedings for February, 1891—is admirable in its clearness, though on too small a scale to admit of all the places described being marked on it. Alaska, when tracks—for roads must be in the far future—are made, will be the Switzerland of America. Its peaks surpassing any in Europe, and its glaciers discharging mimic icebergs, are already one of the sights of the Pacific coast. Tourists visit this region every summer, and before another generation passes away palatial steamers will carry the holiday makers along a coast which their fathers scanned from a cedar canoe, and grandiose hotels rise where the camp fires of earlier times was the only sign of civilisation for a thousand miles of fjord and forest, and rivers and mountains.

Meantime, Mr. Seton-Karr's volume, in spite of its lack of an index, will form a useful guide to those anxious to see a part of the world still unspoiled by the hand of man.

ROBERT BROWN.

The Fountain of Youth: a Fantastic Tragedy.

By Eugene Lee-Hamilton. (Elliot Stock.)

THE supernatural is, as a rule, dangerous material for drama. Even in the novel it can only be made interesting by association with incongruous conditions, as the author of Thoth knows how to make it piquant; or as the means of pointing some forcible moral, that of The Strange Case of Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, for example. If a background of modernity be not a necessity, that of humanity certainly is. A drama entirely of supernatural interests is impossible, for the breath of drama is complexity of character, and supernatural beings lack that kindly human quality; they are either colourless or self-coloured as the scarlet of Mephistopheles.

Now there is no figure more typical in supernatural story than the worn seeker for the elixir vitae, and to give him real vitality in art to-day the artist must needs find a very new background and surround him with personages of a very real flesh and blood. The only real figure, however, in Mr. Lee-Hamilton's drama is the historical Ponce de Leon himself, though his, as it was bound to be, is but the reality of a familiar stencil. All the other figures, including his daughter and her lover, are shadows, and the villain Agrippa fails to convince from very excess of villainy. He is like one of Marlowe's inhuman monsters.

All this says nothing except against Mr.

Lee-Hamilton's choice of a subject. His power as a poet is too well recognised to suffer from candour, and his possession of the dramatic gift has likewise been no question since his Imaginary Sonnets. But neither have a fair chance in this volume. The theme weighs them down. It had no inspirational interest for either. One seems to see the author in a struggle with it throughout, and it is not to be wondered at that the strain to be forcible by mere will, instead of impulse, should sometimes result in a treatment which out-Marlowes Marlowe, and occasionally "falls on the other side," in bathos. Indeed, in its piled up horror from beginning to end, The Fountain of Youth reminds one no little of "The Jew of Malta," while it does not lack the occasional lurid effectiveness of that play.

But, all this admitted, it was not possible that Mr. Lee-Hamilton should write a hundred and thirty-five pages without there being fine poetry on some of them. Here is an effective picture of the Wandering Jew:

"His great white beard, a yard in length and more,
Waved in the wind behind him. In his hand
He held a tall spiked staff on which were notched
The fifteen notches of his centuries.
His Syrian sandals, bound with dusty thongs,
Were made of hide of crocodile, to stand
The wear and tear of his eternal trudging;
His wrinkled gourd, less wrinkled than his face,
The minister of his eternal thirst,
Swung from his girdle, made of one great snake-skin,
With tai in mouth—the symbol of his life.
I barred his way; he started like a sleeper,
And shot a flame from out his sunken sockets.
'Why stopp'st thou me, Ephemeral?' he asked;
'Walk to thy grave, and let me go my way,
To make the earth another belt of steps.'
'Tarry,' I answered, 'but to tell me this:
Hast ever lighted, in thy endless journey,
Upon the thing they call the Fount of Youth?'
He paused a moment, while a frown of pain
Convulsed his brow. 'The Fount of Youth?'
he said,
Like one who slowly mutters in a dream;
'It bubbles up between the feet of Death,
In every land, in every plain and city,
And Death and I have nought that is in common.'
And he passed on and vanished in the twilight."

Here, too, is a happy little lyric:

"The wild bee is humming,
The woodpecker drumming,
My sweetheart is coming
Through summer to me;
The nutters are nutting
Till summer-day's shutting;
And now he is cutting
My name on a tree."

The Choruses of Spirits have occasional good verses, such as this of the Spirits of Ago:

"With a little invisible chisel
We work on the stone of the brow,
Where the locks are beginning to grizzle,
And thinner and thinner are now:
And deeper we furrow and deeper
By day on the cheek of the reaper,
And by night on the cheek of the sleeper,
With a little invisible plough."

Mr. Lee-Hamilton is deft in this "Mid-summer Night's Dream" fancy, he knows "faerie" and the troll-folk intimately. I remember no recent poems of the kind more entirely charming than his two sonnets on the "Death of Puck," printed in the ACADEMY some few months ago. Indeed, whatever else he can do well, he would not do ill in allowing his genius

“to be bound
Within the sonnet's scanty plot of ground.”

RICHARD LE GALLIENNE.

The Gild Merchant: a Contribution to British Municipal History. By Charles Gross. (Oxford: Clarendon Press).

THIS is a thoroughly good piece of work, for which students of English municipal constitutions must own themselves indebted to one of the rising school of historical inquirers in America. Dr. Gross is known to have been studying the subject for five or six years, and the appearance of his book will be hailed with satisfaction on both sides of the water. Since English Gilds in 1870 led the way, it is the first treatise that has attempted with any systematic method to deal with the place in mediæval civic life occupied by the trade-gilds. Ecclesiastical (with which we have little to do in England) and social gilds the author does not touch; the craft-gilds incidentally fall within his ken, and towards their story—which affords space for a battle-ground with Brentano and other writers—he has some luminous suggestions.

Gathering together a mass of facts, fresh or hitherto but little used, through their cumulative evidence he casts clear light on a difficult problem, the nature and functions of the old Gild-merchant, and unravels many passages in its previously obscure history. While keeping this main object in view his investigations enable him, not only as might be expected, to throw many side-lights on economic history and early commercial relations, but also to offer an important contribution to the elucidation of the growth and development of municipalities, especially in England and Ireland.

The plan of the work is sufficiently comprehensive. One volume is filled with “proofs and illustrations,” that is to say, a series of documents (many of them printed at first hand from original MS. sources), extracts from records already printed, and notices in local histories or topographies, giving facts as to the Gilds merchant and later mercantile companies in every town of England, Wales, and Ireland where research could discover their traces. These documents include charters, ordinances, or by-laws, rolls of members or entries of admission, oaths of the gildsmen, comptus accounts, &c., of much variety in detail, fulness, and application, relating to ninety-two different places, arranged chronologically under the alphabetical sequence of the towns. They form a most valuable body of material, many being individually of high interest, the importance of which cannot be gainsaid, however the opinions of some may differ from the conclusions the author has drawn. It is evident, however, that conclusions founded upon a careful and comparative study of the remains of so large a number of these institutions must be weighty and convincing.

To the account of the Gild merchant, which is discussed in the first volume, several essays are added by way of appendix, ancillary to the main theme. The survey of Anglo-Saxon gilds in one of these reveals “no trace of a Gild merchant”; and the author combats the received theories as to their probable composition and number. Comparison is instituted between the Scotch Gild merchant or “Gildry” and the English institution, showing that the former “differs in two important points, namely, in the inimical relations between the crafts and the gild, and in the continuance of the Gildry as a separate but constituent part of the burghal administration down to the present day.” The whole sketch of the Scotch Gild and laws, differing from those of England, which affected Scotch municipal life, with points of contrast and of analogy, is well worthy of attention. It is shown that the famous statutes of the Berwick Gild of the thirteenth century (reprinted here from Cosmo Innes) must be assigned to the northern class of burghs, and cannot be claimed as the prototype of the English Gild merchant. The recognition of the essential differences in the early municipal growths of the two kingdoms would have secured recent writers from errors against which the present volumes appear a formidable indictment.

A short appendix cursorily treats of the Continental Gild merchant, comprehending documents of the twelfth to the fourteenth centuries, relating to a dozen places. The rarity of the Gild merchant on the continent compared with its frequency in England is used as an argument against what may be called the “germ” theory of the origin of continental boroughs. “If this fraternity was not the germ of the English municipality [as already proved], but only a potent factor in its evolution, it may be fairly presumed that the Gild's influence on the Continent was not greater.” The formation of the burghal polity “in most countries may be explained by a natural process of growth from the rural township. The Gild was only one of various elements that played a prominent part in this process of municipal development.” Here we touch upon a true principle for the inquiry into municipal history.

Perhaps, however, the most interesting of these subsidiary essays is that upon “The Affiliation of Mediæval Boroughs,” an enlargement of a paper which attracted attention when it appeared in the Antiquary in 1885. How the English towns rose up, here and there, one after another, both before and during the three centuries after the conquests, and, having each determined on the privileges it wished to secure, obtained a charter after the pattern of some already chartered borough; how, amidst the variety of special customs or specified rights desired, but a few chief towns were the original exemplars for nearly two hundred boroughs in Great Britain; how the daughters applied to the parents for exemplification of customs and information when in doubt as to their own constitution (e.g., as found by the present writer some years ago in Bristol) are capital points in the steady and orderly growth of the movement for borough liberties, never thus brought out before. The same kind of link existed between municipalities on the Continent, but, owing to the different circumstances surrounding them, led to a much fuller inter-dependence than ever obtained in this country.

As to the actual origin of the Gild merchant, whether a reorganisation of older gilds, a spontaneous growth, or an introduction from Normandy, Dr. Gross has little to say, though he seems to favour the last hypothesis. The “earliest distinct references to this gild occur in documents of the end of the eleventh century; in the next two centuries the privilege becomes commonly, though not invariably, included among those enumerated in borough charters; it is even, sometimes as at Andover, the occasion of a special grant. A list of 170 towns in England, Wales, and Ireland, indicates how widely spread and prized was the gild, which was probably “one of the most prevalent and characteristic features of English municipalities.” No merchant gild is found in London or in the Cinque Ports, Exeter, Norwich, or Northampton, and elsewhere. The records of Ipswich give valuable testimony as to the organisation of a gild at outset, with its alderman and other officers who varied according to its needs or local custom. To the “hause,” and the “gild-hall,” or Tolbooth or Tolsey, the former bearing several meanings chiefly referable to a money payment, both especially incidental to this class of gild, the author devotes the attention befitting their importance; for, owing to derived meanings in the one case, and derived uses in the other, much confusion has arisen around them.

The essence of a Gild merchant in the first centuries was the exclusive right to trade freely, i.e., without toll, within the borough. Strangers or “foreigners” coming into the town could not trade without paying toll or dues, unless they were admitted members of its gild, as was sometimes the case, or unless they were members of a merchant gild in their own borough which had obtained immunity from toll “per totam Angliam”; even this privilege had its restrictions. The duty of a gildsman was to be “in scot and lot” with the burgesses, otherwise to pay his share of their pecuniary burdens, “and to make up for the default of the borough.” Tollages and the “firmaburgi” due to the crown from the borough had to be met, and the merchant fraternity might be called upon for further help in case of deficiency. What was the early toll in boroughs all over the land from which the merchants could only be free by thus compounding for it, and to whom due, are interesting questions which, so far as we see, Dr. Gross does not touch, although he quotes the chapter of Magna Carta intended to free them from “unjust imposts” (§41).

The chapters of the work which are the most distinctive in their results are those on the “Distinction between Gild and Borough” and “Influence of the Gild upon the Municipal Constitution.” In these it is clearly proved that the Gild from the very beginning was a separate entity, not to be confounded with the borough. In Ipswich, for example, in the time of John, the officials of the town

“are manifestly distinct from those of the Gild the alderman and his four colleagues. The laws of the borough and the statutes of the Gild are distinguished with equal clearness; they were to be entered in separate rolls for the guidance of the bailiffs and aldermen respectively."

Separate purses or treasuries, separate officers, separate government, all the evidence

"points to the conclusion that the Gild merchant of the twelfth and thirteenth centuries was not a body in which the general local government was centred—that it was a very important, but only a subsidiary part of the municipal administrative machinery, subordinated to the chief borough magistrates."

This point being established, Dr. Gross examines the theories of Brady, Thompson, and others on the constitution of a borough, and, far from being the original "germ," shows conclusively that the Gild merchant was only one of various valuable privileges comprehended in the expression liber burgus.

Much interesting information as to the Stapletowns appears in these pages, with accounts of the Mercers, Merchant Adventurers, and other mercantile companies which in later times took up the mantle of the old gilds with a difference. (The rolls of the Mercers' Gild at York, recently discovered, give an example of this kind.) It is a pity that the extracts relating to these in the second volume are not more clearly severed from those which illustrate the gild-life where they occur for the same town. A good index and a glossary add to the workable value of the volumes.

LUCY TOULMIN SMITH.

Poachers and Poaching. By J. Watson. (Chapman & Hall.)

SOME who remember Mr. Watson's book, published last year, The Confessions of a Poacher, might opine that the present work must be more or less of a replica. But it cannot be so characterised. The books have certain resemblances, and there are reminiscences in both of a poacher styled "Otter," evidently a portrait drawn from life. Poachers and Poaching, however, covers more ground and embraces not merely hints on the subject of its title, but pleasant sketches of wood-craft as well.

The essays which form the book are reprinted from magazines, and naturally show here and there some repetition, which is almost inseparable from this form of writing. Thus the account of the dotterel and its breeding places appears at least twice. It is difficult for an observer not to fall into the snare of repeating what has interested him in nature. Here and there, too, Mr. Watson slips into colloquialisms like "nearly never," "from even once being searched," "sound silence," and the like. With these exceptions lovers of nature may be assured that the rest of the book will supply them with a feast of delightful reading. The author evidently lives much in the northern part of the island, so the northern birds and animals are chiefly treated. He has a keen eye for the subtler traits in their life, and a poetical appreciation of the woodlands, waters, and moors which form their cherished haunts. Unlike many writers on nature, however, at the present day, he does not descant on natural beauty or glide into rhapsodies about hills and rivers. His observations on animal life are made from actual wanderings by day and night, and possess the merit of coming direct from nature. Mr. Watson need not be flattered by being told that he is a Gilbert White or a second Richard Jefferies; but it is due to the careful watch he has kept over bird and beast, and the store of remarks which he has thus accumulated, to commend this book highly and to assure naturalists that they may dip into its pages certain that old stories and sapless anecdotes will not disfigure them. He must be a diligent student who will not find therein many a subtle touch to add to his own mental portraits of animal life.

Poachers possess generous, not to say romantic attributes in literature which scarcely belong [to them in real life. The "moucher" or skulking poacher, who traps, shoots and ferrets only when he has watched the keepers take another direction, is generally a lazy countryman; whereas the ruffians who combine, attack, and shoot keepers, if they venture to resist, are almost always townsmen who have hatched the expedition at some low tavern. A skilful keeper knows by a thousand small signs, which the uninitiated would not understand, when his game has been disturbed. Spring and summer are taken up in pheasant rearing, and shooting the enemies of the young birds, but he is ever on the watch against the "moucher," and by lying in wait when he notices a rabbit caught in a snare or the like, seldom fails, sooner or later, to capture the sneaking thief. A binocular glass is a great assistance to him on his rounds. He has an ingenious mode of baffling that class of poachers who net his hares. When a hare has once been netted, it is so terrified that it cannot again be taken in that manner. Consequently he is careful to net his own hares, and then turn them loose again. Mr. Watson thinks that rabbits are degenerating and becoming smaller, and that the introduction of some of the continental varieties would be useful. Doubtless this is the case when rabbits are confined in a warren or park, just as deer also fall off in size and excellence of horns when bred in and in too long. In many districts where no feudal regard exists for the squire's interests, farmers are more or less in league with poachers. The latter propitiate them by mysterious presents of game left at the farmhouse doors, by never doing any mischief to fences, by informing their owners of any mishap to the stock and the like. In short, a poacher or two exists in every parish. They have generally sprung from fathers who were fond of outdoor sports and lawless deeds, and form as real a constituent of country life as do the blacksmith or the shepherd. So long as game finds a place in rural districts, so long will poachers rise up against it.

Mr. Watson's notes on birds show much observation. We have never verified his assertion that intense cold has proved fatal to barn owls, but he has Keats at all events on his side:

"The owl for all his feathers was a-cold."

The story of the great auk is once more carefully narrated. Of the woodcock its habit of flying at dusk along certain definite rides and paths of the wood is remarked upon. Mr. Watson might have added that it was frequently netted in old days when flying down these paths, and that in many woods open glades cut on purpose to net woodcocks more easily are yet to be seen: these are in some localities called "cockshoots." Those who visit the Faroe Islands this summer to study the eider ducks may like to know that here will be found several interesting notices of the bird's economy in making its nest. A curious "fact for Darwin" is also given from the information of Prof. Newton. A red-legged partridge had been wounded and was picked up with a ball of hard earth adhering to it, which weighed six ounces and a half. This earth was kept for three years, but on being broken and watered and placed under a bell-glass, no fewer than eighty-two plants sprang from it.

A good chapter speaks of weather-lore in nature in which the author shows that he can rival the Shepherd of Banbury. Otters and polecats are not often seen at present, but their ways have also been carefully studied. Once when rabbiting, Mr. Watson found a brown owl, a stock-dove, and a shell-duck breeding outside the burrows. It were easy to put together many singular paragraphs from this storehouse of natural history, but readers will now know what to look for. It may be hoped that Mr. Watson will continue his observations, as not every naturalist possesses the opportunities and enthusiasm which have fallen to his lot. A volume of out-door lore, such as this book, is preferable to hundreds of the compilations on natural history which are now so popular.

M. G. WATKINS.

NEW NOVELS.

- A Moorland Idyl.* By Algernon Gissing. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)
- Bonnie Kate.* By Mrs. Leith Adams (Mrs. R. S. de Courcy Laffan). In 3 vols. (Kegan Paul.)
- A Scotch Earl.* By the Countess of Munster. In 3 vols. (Hurst & Blackett.)
- A Divided Duty.* By Ida Lemon. (Warne.)
- Colonel Carter of Cartersville.* By F. Hopkinson Smith. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)
- On Newfoundland River.* By Thomas Nelson Page. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)
- Wednesday's Child.* By Miriam Alan. (Sampson Low.)
- A Minimum Wage.* A Socialist Novel. By Alfred Morris. (Cassell.)
- Darrell's Dream.* An Unexplained Romance. By Christopher Horner. (Ward & Downey.)
- Lippa.* By Beatrice Egerton. (Eden, Remington.)
- The House of Mystery.* By J. W. Nicholas. (Arrowsmith.)
- The Ayres of Studleigh.* By Annie S. Swan (Mrs. Burnett Smith). (Oliphant.)
- In Mr. Algernon Gissing's books there is always a noteworthy presence of rough power and often an equally noteworthy absence of both intellectual and literary finish. He is not merely careless in his diction, which is often much more slovenly than it ought to be, but in the weightier matters of structure and form. As we read the first volume of A Moorland Idyl, we say "This is a very striking novel"; but when we close the third volume we are conscious of a feeling of acute disappointment. As studies for an impressively dramatic situation or series of situations nothing could well be more full of promise than the figures of Isabel Few, the untamed, picturesque maiden of the moorland, and David Heathpool, the young minister, with the passionate Bohemian impulses which he thinks have long since been strangled, but which are in reality only asleep, ready to be awakened when the right voice calls them to activity. The characters are realised, stroke by stroke, in the pictures of the relations of Isabel with her reputed father, with old Sandie Wear, and with the rascally lawyer, Redpath, and of the relations of Heathpool with Miss Notgrove and the gentle girl, Ailie Craig, until the reader's expectations of the impending action are strung up to the highest pitch of intensity; but when the crisis comes it seems to come prematurely, before the actors are quite ready for it, and the long-drawn dénouement has the character of anticlimax. In the early portions of the book which justify its title there are passages which even one of the Brontës would not have been ashamed to own; and yet the writer of these passages allows his "moorland idyl" to dwindle down into a comparatively commonplace novel. It is not often that the critic has to note such a combination of unusual strength and very ordinary weakness.

Bonnie Kate is certain to be popular at the circulating libraries, and its popularity will not be undeserved, though perhaps some of the judicious would enjoy it more unreservedly if Mrs. Leith Adams were rather less liberal with her literary appeals to the reader's emotions. She seems a little too anxious we should miss no single point of tenderness and pathos, with the result that some passages of really pretty sentiment show a tendency to degenerate into mere sentimentalism. This, however, is not a fault of the gravest order, and the virtues which atone for it are a good deal more obvious. The story of poor Kate's matrimonial troubles is freshly conceived and charmingly told; but though it has real interest of its own, it is mainly useful as an expedient for the introduction of certain subsidiary characters in whose portraiture Mrs. Leith Adams shows herself at her best. The Yorkshire relations to whom John Granger introduces his newly-made bride compose an admirable rustic group, and Melissa Sweetapple, who makes her most characteristic appearances in this early portion of the tale, is one of the most attractive of those candid heroines whose frankness is the terror of conventional parents and guardians. In Melissa the writer's humour is at its best, but the winning chapters devoted to the Quaker sisters and brother of Dromore prove that she can be equally successful in portraiture which owes its charm to simple tenderness and grace. That Bonnie Kate is rather unduly sentimental here and there cannot be denied, but it is a very attractive story nevertheless.

Those simple-minded persons who are not unnaturally inclined to think that an English peeress must needs be an infallible authority upon the manners and customs of the "upper suckles" are hereby cautioned against reposing implicit and inclusive faith in Lady Munster's counterfeit presentment of the sayings and doings of the great. Thackeray is reported to have said that Sir Pitt Crawley was studied from life, and, therefore, it would perhaps be rash to deny a living original even to that illiterate and ill-mannered nobleman, the Earl of Invergordon; but as his wife, his sister, his daughter, and all the people in the story are not one whit more credible than he is, A Scottish Earl makes drafts upon our faith which soon compel a suspension of payment. Unfortunately, too, the novel, though absurd, is not absurd in an amusing way, so there really is nothing to be said for it save that it contains many "sentiments" of unimpeachable propriety.

A Divided Duty is a graceful and interesting story of an English girl's life in Paris, and Miss Lemon not only knows her people and localities well, but can turn her knowledge to good artistic account. The writer is not distinctively a humorist, but there is a pleasant suggestion of humour in the sketch of Miss Duckworth, the middle-aged governess who has become a painter, and has made up her mind to mould her conduct in accordance with the supposed requirements of the artistic nature. Her unconventional reception of the heroine, Leslie Mansell, strikes the key-note of a character, the consistency of which is maintained to the last; and, while Miss Duckworth is good in herself, she furthermore justifies her existence by brightening a story which, in her absence, would be somewhat sombre. Miss Ida Lemon is so successful in pleasant unpretentious realism that it is rather a pity she has chosen to hamper her tale with the melodramatic story of the murder of Leslie's uncle. The final chapters devoted to an explanation of the mysterious hints scattered up and down the narrative are not specially interesting in themselves, and they impair the artistic unity of a novel which is of more than average merit.

When I say that Colonel Carter, of Cartersville, is perfect, I refer to the man rather than to the book in which his portrait is drawn; but, as the man and the book are practically one, the epithet may serve for both. Mix together ninety parts of Colonel Newcome with five of Uncle Toby and five of Mr. Micawber, and make the compound into a Virginian gentleman of the good old times before the war, and you have the unworldly, unpractical, chivalrous, high-souled survival, George Fairfax Carter, who makes Mr. Hopkinson Smith's pages such altogether delicious reading. The finest humour and the finest pathos always display a tendency to melt into each other, and in Colonel Carter of Cartersville the fusion is complete. There is no exaggeration in saying that nothing better of its kind is to be found anywhere than the chapter in which the Colonel receives the grocer who has called for the settlement of his account, but whose visit is supposed by the simple-minded gentleman to be one of friendly courtesy; and the grocer's subjugation is only one of a score of episodes every one of which might be singled out as a little masterpiece. It is a rare and delightful experience to find a creation of such unmistakable genius in a story of some two hundred pages.

On Newfound River is another American tale which suffers somewhat by being read immediately after the book just noticed, but it has genuine grace and freshness of its own. The structure of the story is on rather conventional, old-fashioned lines, and the action of the old man who conceals his existence for years from his only surviving relations is not provided with a sufficiently adequate motive; but the irascible wrong-headed Major Landon is a well-individualised study of a familiar type, and Bruce's courtship is a very pretty idyll. There is humour, too, in the book, especially in the scene where the muddle-headed Virginian magistrate is nonplussed by the unconditional surrender of the defendant to whom he had determined to give a verdict; and Mr. Page may be congratulated upon a story which, though in no way remarkable, is decidedly attractive.

There is, unfortunately, nothing in the least attractive about Wednesday's Child, which is a most dreary and depressing book. In justice to the author, it must be admitted that all persons who voluntarily read it are personally responsible for their own sufferings, as Miss Miriam Alan, in a long-winded preface, elaborately prepares them for what is coming, and so gives them a chance of escape. According to this preface the story has been written to denounce and expose "the practice of publicly and shamefully whipping girls," which practice, according to the author, was "rampant some years ago" in Irish Roman Catholic convent schools, and which she believes, with or without reason, to be "rampant" still. The experiences of Hester Steele and her schoolmates at Dragon Hall are certainly gruesome and disgusting enough; but less appetising material for a story could not well be hit upon, and the ex parte character of the book of course deprives it of all weight as an argument or impeachment. Once or twice, as in the author's description of the shameless woman who undressed her baby-boy in "mixed company," we have a touch of unintentional humour, but things of this kind are too rare to be worth taking into account.

A Minimum Wage is also a story with a purpose, as the sub-title witnesseth. The book resembles a certain once famous series of essays in didactic fiction, inasmuch as it is a tale "illustrative of the principles of political economy," as political economy is understood by the writer thereof; but, alas, Mr. Alfred Morris is not exactly a Harriet Martineau. He has written something that might have been a fairly good socialist pamphlet if it had not been broken up by an irrelevant romance, or that might have been a passable love-story (though this is more doubtful) had it not been ruined beyond redemption by interjected pamphleteering; but, as it stands, his well-meant performance is neither fish, flesh, fowl, nor good red-herring. As Mr. Morris says that his story consists of "characters and scenes from real life," it must be remarked that he has been very successful in suppressing all internal evidence of their origin.

Mr. Christopher Horner calls Darrell's Dream "an unexplained romance." The significance of the epithet is not apparent unless it is meant that the existence of the book demands an explanation, and that such explanation is not forthcoming, in which case it must be pronounced most happily descriptive. Mr. Horner has invented a prophetic villain who foresees that if he can only hire another villain to fire a gun in front of the heroine's horse while the heroine is on his back the conduct of the horse will inevitably cause the heroine's death, and that he will be able to produce evidence which will apparently prove villain number two to have been the tool of the hero, who will forthwith be struck out of his uncle's will in favour of villain number one. Then the hero has his dream, but as the dream results in nothing but the discovery of an invalid and useless document, it might as well have remained undreamed; and finally the knot tied by one villain has to be cut by the knife of the other in order that the hero may come to his own. If this sounds incoherent, readers must charitably suppose that the mind of the critic has been temporarily unhinged by the study of Mr. Horner's plot and style.

Lippa has one virtue, the virtue of brevity. Miss Constance Egerton's volume contains only 196 pages, but the trail of the amateur is over them all. The sentiments are excellent; the story is thin, and at the close, when somebody's long-lost wife returns with somebody else's long-lost child, a little confusing; the numerous quotations are not distinguished by accuracy; the literary manner is not distinguished by anything; and this is all that it is necessary to say about Lippa.

Mr. J. W. Nicholas must really learn to be less lavish in his expenditure of melodramatic material, or his own invention and the intellectual digestion of his readers will collapse together. A perusal of The House of Mystery provides a new and rather uncomfortable demonstration of Bacon's remark that "reading maketh a full man," for while it is in itself only one shilling shocker, it contains the concentrated essence of half-a-dozen of those delightful productions. Mr. Nicholas provides us with hypnotism and burglary, and murder, and all kinds of mysteries in houses, churches, chambers, railway stations, underground passages, and all kinds of places, and is even good enough to let us have a moment's glimpse of that Eastern hero, Jack the Ripper. The purchaser who is not satisfied with the feast of horrors provided for him must indeed be hard to please.

The cheap edition of The Ayres of Studleigh is sure of a welcome. The writer, who is still generally known as Miss Annie S. Swan, is a very unequal worker, but this is one of her best stories.

JAMES ASHCROFT NOBLE.

SOME CLASSICAL STUDIES AND TRANSLATIONS.

Aristotle on the Art of Poetry. By A. O. Prickard. (Macmillans.) In the form of a lecture delivered at Glasgow, Mr. Prickard has given a clear and agreeably written account of the chief points of the Poetics. It does not profess to be more than popular and short, but within the limits set to such a work it is adequately and even skilfully done. The original treatise bristles with difficulties; but most of these disappear under Mr. Prickard's treatment, and he presents us only with an outline of the first "Art of Poetry," supplemented by a few judicious and pleasant notes, containing references to ancient and modern writers, discussions of two or three obscure questions, and a list of editions and translations. It is not too much to say, he writes, that the whole of Aristotle's teaching on tragedy lies in the two words Mimesis and Katharsis, rightly understood; and to them accordingly he devotes considerable space. But we are not sure that his remarks on the first of the two, though good in themselves, will explain to the general reader why Aristotle held all poetry, or at any rate most poetry, to be "imitation"; and, as to the Katharsis, we are less confident than he is of the truth of what is commonly known as the theory of Bernays. Let us hope that Egypt may yet furnish us with a fuller text of the Poetics, and solve this long-disputed question. A point of much less interest, discussed in a note of some length, is a new interpretation of the "syllogism" by which Electra is represented as having in the Choephoroe inferred the arrival of her brother. According to Mr. Prickard, we are to understand it not in the usual way, but thus: Some one like Orestes has come: No one is like him but himself: Therefore Orestes has come. The present writer is not convinced. On the other hand, we are glad to find Mr. Prickard recognising that the second "natural cause" of poetry which Aristotle speaks of must have been "the charms of melody and rhythm." Unless Aristotle thought of poetry as quite unconnected with verse—and of this there is no indication but the imperfect and unintelligible sentence about ἐποποιία near the beginning—some such second cause must plainly have been specified. Mr. Prickard seems not to have noticed the objection that has been made to the common rendering of αὐτὸς δὲ ποιεῖν in the saying attributed to Sophocles. Is it really possible that without εἶναι before δὲ the words should mean "made men as they ought to be," and not "made men as he ought." But perhaps εἶναι should be inserted. In the lines from Timocles Mr. Prickard should hardly have accepted the un-Attic form ἀνεύρατο; and in his list of editions he has overlooked Vahlen's later text of 1885.

Supplement to Studies in Aeschylus and Notes on Euripides. By F. W. Newman. (Kegan Paul & Co.) Prof. Newman is always ingenious in emendation, yet by no means carries conviction in proportion to his ability. The reason is, we think, that his mind is unconsciously whimsical: e.g., in amending Aesch. Eum. l. 76, he proposes, for βέβητ' ἐν αἰεὶ, which he rightly pronounces corrupt, βεβῆτ' ἀνατεί—α very possible reading—then he adds, "The sense is excellent":

"Who has traversed harmlessly the rogue-betrampled earth."

As if Aeschylus were Aristophanes! As if Orestes, hunted by the Furies, would be much relieved at not having his pocket picked by the way! On Choeph. 372-9, we feel the acuteness of the argument for a line having been lost; but the idea that it must have contained an explanation of the following διπλῆς μαράγγης seems to us quite arbitrary; while on Suppl. 979, scarcely could the ghost of Aeschylus himself persuade us that he wrote, with Prof. Newman, καλοῦσα σὺ μένειν ἐρᾷ. There is a good deal of the same unpersuasive ingenuity in the notes which follow on the Rhesus of Euripides; on v. iii. νυκτὸς ἐν καταστάσει, we incline to agree to Prof. Newman's rendering, but we apprehend that most people have already taken it as he does.

The Plays of Euripides. Translated into English Prose by Edward P. Coleridge. Vol. II. (Bell.) Mr. Coleridge is to be congratulated on the completion of his really formidable task. Those who wish to read Euripides in the form of alien prose can now do so in good print, and by the aid of scholarship which may be at once called adequate though not brilliant. Some of the choruses are rendered with force and skill. Here, e.g., is a specimen from the Bacchantes, ll. 105-118:

"O Thebes, nurse of Semele! crown thyself with ivy; burst forth, burst forth with blossoms fair of green convolvulus, and with the boughs of oak and pine join in the Bacchic revelry; don thy coat of dappled fawn-skin, decking it with tufts of silvered hair; with reverent hand the sportive wand now wield. Anon shall the whole land be dawning, when Bromius leads his revellers to the hills, the hills away! where wait him groups of maidens from loom and shuttle roused in frantic haste by Dionysus."

This is not faultless; the style here and there breaks and falters unpoetically—still, anyone reading it would understand in the main what the original was like. The same cannot always be said of Mr. Coleridge's management of the dialogue or the speeches. Here, for instance, the rendering of Odysseus' wrangle with Hecuba (Hecuba, ll. 389-401) must be pronounced very flat.

Ody. 'Tis not thy death, old dame, Achilles' wraith hath demanded of the Achaeans, but hers.

Hec. At least then slaughter me with my child; so shall there be a double draught of blood for the earth and the dead that claims this sacrifice.

Ody. The maiden's death suffices; no need to add a second to the first; would we needed not e'en this!

Hec. Die with my daughter I must and will.

Ody. How so? I did not know I had a master.

Hec. I will cling to her like ivy to an oak.

Ody. Not if thou wilt hearken to those who are wiser than thyself.

Hec. Be sure I will never willingly relinquish my child.

Ody. Well, be equally sure I will never go away and leave her here.

It is stiff; the pathos of Hecuba's utterances quite evaporates; in line 390, we dislike "wraith" for φάντασμα, preferring the word in its original sense of a "double," or spectral vision of a living person. The context (pp. 261-2) of Eteocles and Polynices is rendered with spirit, but "introduced that crafty Thessalian trick, having some knowledge thereof from his intercourse with that country" must be pronounced absolutely prosy.

Talks with Athenian Youths. Translations from the Charmides, Lysis, Laches, Euthydemus, and Theatetus of Plato. (David Nutt.) This anonymous little book, which is evidently of American origin, contains some very spirited rendering of Plato. Even if it be not always perfectly accurate, readers will not quarrel with a presentation of the great thinker so bright and so lively. We must cry out upon "torpified" as an ugly new word, and remark that "behooves" is not a usual form. We cannot quite forget poor Xenophon when we read that the works of Plato are "our chief source of information concerning Socrates." But we can honestly wish, on all grounds, success to this little enterprise. Nothing but good can come of young English people being induced to read these talks with young Athenians. Socrates has as much to teach now as he had in his lifetime, and his original hearers may even set something of an example to later students. "The figures upon whom our attention centres belong to the flower of the Athenian youth, and bear that stamp of breeding which seems to have been a birthright of noble parentage."

NOTES AND NEWS.

DR. FURNIVAL is spending his holidays at Norwich and copying the earliest English wills, those of the Consistory Court, for a volume in the Early English Text Society. He hoped to find many instances of dialect and local trade and custom, but very few occur. As against the earliest English will at Somerset House, 1397, Norwich can show only a short English proviso, in a Latin will of 1427, shifting the testator's estate from one nephew to another, in case the first is not "of good gouernaunce and lycly persone to the wurd, and marie hym self bi the avys of the feoffees, the executors the forn seyd." The first complete English will was made in 1429, that of Sir Andrew Botiller, knight, and after this others came slowly till 1464. The first two registers have no English wills. "Surflete," the third register (1427-35) has the proviso mentioned above, and five English wills; "Doke," the fourth register (1436-42) thirteen such wills; "Wylbey," the fifth register (1444-48), only one English will; "Aleyne," the sixth register (1448-55), only four, though a Latin will of Robert Martham recites word for word a marriage settlement of 22 Henry VI., made by the testator on the wedding of one of his two daughters. The seventh register, "Brosiard" (1454-64), contains eight English wills, some of Norwich citizens, and among them one of John Goos, no doubt the ancestor of A. Goose, the publisher lately retired who issued Mr. Walter Rye's "Book of Nonsense." A pretty "qwetheword" for "devise or bequest" occurs in 1457; "þe ingate and outgate into y^e gardine" in 1458. In 1452 John Bulston bequeathed to the Church of Hempstede "j pyxte, to putte owre lord god in;" and there are several gifts of altarcloths, vestments, &c. For "shall" or "should," "xal" and "xulde" occasionally occur: "qwceh" is sometimes found for "which," and wh for qu: "y^e which xul be seld to a-wyhtt (acquitt, pay) my dettis" (1437). A few words seem special to the Eastern counties: "ij cadys of heryng, and xx orgeys" (1437), "fyve lasers barly" (1434). Gifts of a combe of barly, &c., to the "plowlot" (1435) were probably to the "plowlight." "A farindell of elys" (1435), "xij last of trufys, ij Sahures and a dydale" (1438) are puzzles at present. When enough material is got together for a volume, it will be edited by Mr. Walter Rye and Dr. Furnival.

WITH the co-operation of the principal librarian of the British Museum, Dr. Rutherford, the head master of Westminster, has been enabled to produce a First Recension of the newly-discovered text of Herondas (Macmillan & Co.), simultaneously with the issue, by the trustees of the Museum, of the Editio Princeps of the same text, contained in "Classical Texts from Papyri in the British Museum." The learned editor also hopes to be able before long to publish a complete edition of the mimes, and perhaps also an English translation, with illustrative designs, from ancient works of art. Students of Greek literature will look eagerly for the fulfilment of this promise.

MISS AMELIA B. EDWARDS has, we are glad to learn, so far recovered her health as to be enabled to return to England after her lengthened sojourn in Italy. Her new volume, entitled Pharaohs, Fellahs, and Explorers, will be published in this country by Messrs. Osgood, McIlvaine & Co., and in America by Messrs. Harper Brothers early in November.

MR. RICHARD DAVEY's contribution to the forthcoming National Magazine is an article on Woman's Life in Old Italy; being the result of studies made among the archives of the old Genoese, Venetian and Roman families, which are little known and not easy of access. It will be very curious and interesting.

MESSRS. WHITTAKER & Co. will publish in September A First Book of Electricity and Magnetism, for the use of elementary science and art and engineering students, and general readers, by W. Perren Maycock, M.Inst.E.E. It purports to be a simple and easily understood introduction to the now most important science of electricity and magnetism suitable for beginners, young electrical engineering students, and general readers. It was designed primarily as an introduction to existing so-called elementary text-books; but will be found by teachers to cover the elementary syllabus of the Science and Art Department.

THE Registers of the Cathedral Church of Rochester (1657-1837), together with lists of the prebendaries, head masters of the King's School, minor canons, and organists, and such of the inscriptions in the cathedral and churchyard as are not included in Thorpe's Registrum Roffense, transcribed and edited by Thomas Shindler, M.A., LL.B., of the Inner Temple, Barrister-at-Law, are shortly to be printed by subscription. The price will be half a guinea a copy. Mr. Shindler's address is Hampton House, Chatham.

MR. EDMUND DOWNEY ("F. M. Allen") has just completed a companion volume to his Voyage of the Ark, now in its twenty-fifth thousand. It is entitled The Round Tower of Babel, and will be published immediately by Messrs. Ward and Downey.

MR. ELLIOT STOCK announces A History of the Parishes of St. Ives, Lelant, Towednach, and Zennor, in the county of Cornwall, by John Hobson Matthews, from the earliest times, founded largely on historic documents. The work will give copious extracts from original local documents, and will be fully illustrated.

LAMBETH Palace Library will be closed for the usual recess for six weeks from the 30th inst.

MESSRS. L. REEVE & Co. have in preparation a new work on the British Fungi Phycomictes and Ustilaginacae, by George Masseur, lecturer on botany for the London Society for the Extension of University Teaching; a work on the British Hemiptera Heteroptera, by Edward Saunders, F.L.S.; a new work on the Lepidoptera of the British Islands, by Charles G. Barrett, F.Ent.Soc.; and a new work on the Physiology of the Invertebrata, by Dr. A. B. Griffiths, F.R.S.E., F.C.S.

MESSRS. D. C. HEATH & Co., Boston, will issue this month Andersen's Bilderbuch ohne Bilder, an illustrated edition, with notes and vocabulary, by Dr. Wilhelm Bernhardt. Readers of this work will welcome an edition by this well-known teacher and editor. The same publishers announce also an early issue of Folk and Fairy Tales in French for Young or Old Children, selected and edited, with notes and vocabulary, by Prof. E. S. Joynes, of the University of South Carolina. The edition will contain a number of favourite fairy tales by Perrault, Mme. D'Aulnoy, &c., offering easy and entertaining reading, with helpful notes and vocabulary.

OWING either to the prominence given to the subject of astronomy at the present British Association meeting, or to the extended interest taken by the general public in the subject, the new and revised edition, in serial form, of The Story of the Heavens has met with an even wider welcome than the original issue. The first large edition of Part I., published this week by Messrs. Cassell & Co., has been subscribed for by the trade in advance of publication, and a second edition is now in the press, which will be ready in a few days.

WHENEVER a complete history of the English stage is written, the part which the celebrated amateur Robert Coates took in the interpretation before the footlights of Shakespeare's "Romeo," Rowe's "Lothario," &c., can hardly be overlooked. Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston & Co. will publish early in the coming season The Life of Robert Coates, better known as "Romeo" and "Diamond" Coates, the celebrated "Amateur of Fashion," by John R. and Hunter H. Robinson.

THE unexpected death of Mr. Raikes lends a melancholy interest to the Account of the Celebration of the Jubilee of Uniform Inland Penny Postage, which has just been published by the Jubilee Celebration Committee, in whose proceedings the late Postmaster-General took so active and kindly an interest. Amid much that is merely formal and ephemeral, the volume contains not a little matter of permanent interest in connexion with the recent history of the Post Office and its present organisation, and these sources of interest are enhanced by the portraits and sketches with which it is illustrated.

UNDER the title Pioneers of Science, Professor Oliver Lodge, F.R.S., intends to publish, through Messrs. Macmillan & Co., in the course of the autumn, a volume of popular sketches in the history of astronomy, from the earliest time to the present day. The work will be fully illustrated and should prove a popular gift-book.

MESSRS. WELLS GARDNER, DARTON & Co. announce the publication, early in September, of a volume by the Lord Archbishop of York, containing Pastoral Letters written and Synodal Addresses delivered by him in the diocese of Lichfield during his episcopate, 1879-1891.

THE competition in connexion with Mr. E. J. Goodman's prize story The Only Witness: What Did She See? (Trischler) closes on September 1. On that day the sealed packet, containing the last chapter and the solution of the mystery, will be opened at the residence of Mr. George Augustus Sala, who has taken charge of it and locked it up in the safe presented to him by Mr. Henry Irving. The judges appointed to award the Prizes are Mrs. G. A. Sala, Mr. Joseph Hatton, and the Author.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

A NORTHERN SAILOR.

I SHALL slip my cable, Polly,
Some night when the sun sinks low;
When the tide is moaning, moaning,
Just between the ebb and the flow.

How can they rest at night, Polly,
Far away from the sound of the sea?
I could not die in my bed, dear,
If the waves they called not me.

They never have called in vain, Polly,
I gave to the great North Sea,
The best of all I had, child,
It has taken my heart from me.

I have never been able to rest, dear,
Nor safely bide at home,
For the sea was call'ng, calling,
And I must breast the foam.

And once when I came back, Polly,
They told me my wife was dead,
Her eyes were as blue as the sea, child,
That spring-time that we wed.

Ah, Polly, I loved her dearly,
But she hated the wild North Sea,
She saw not its glorious beauty,
Strong, cruel, but oh! how free.

I have sometimes wondered, Polly,
If it heard the words she said,
When I told her I could not leave it,
Till the day that I was dead.

"You should not have married a wife then,
You can love naught else save the sea,
You had better stay with it for ever,
You never have cared for me."

Was it in anger, Polly,
That it rose so high one day
And drown'd both my little lads, dear,
That were playing down there in the bay?

It was hard, hard on me, Polly,
To tell their mother the sea
Had taken them from us for ever,
She turned her face from me,

And answered, "The sea has heard me,
Because of the words that I said,
It has taken my children from me,
Go! leave me to mourn my dead."

I left her alone with her sorrow,
And I sought the storm beat-shore,
Where my boys had played so often,
Where they should play no more.

And I told the North Sea, Polly,
That smiled so fair and blue,
I must always love her forever,
That in spite of all I was true.

And so it has ever been, Polly,
I have always given the sea
The best that I had to give, dear,
For it stole my soul from me.

And I know that I could not rest, dear,
In my grave, if away from the sea;
I shall still hear it calling, calling,
No matter how deep I be.

Ah well! I shall slip my cable
Some night, 'twixt the ebb and the flow,
I shall hear the great sea calling,
And I shall arise and go.

FLORENCE PEACOCK.

MAGAZINES AND REVIEWS.

A VERY pleasant picture of rural labour is given in the article "Among the Straw-Plaiters," in Good Words for September. The writer sketches the history of the industry from its first introduction into England by James I. between 1603 and 1625 down to the present day. A capital paper, too, is Mr. Dow's "Genoa," which is copiously illustrated with many beautiful woodcuts. The author of that fascinating Shetland romance, "Britta," contributes the first half of what promises to be a powerful little story. Biography is supplied by Dr. George Smith, whose article on Charles Grant, the first, and in many respects the greatest, of Indian philanthropists, should not be missed. A fine, full-length engraving from the painting by Raeburn at Inverness Castle accompanies the article. Archbishop Magee's posthumous sermon on "The Christian Ideal of Human Life" is an eloquent and characteristic piece of writing, and cannot fail to impress those who read it. Bristling with anecdotes is Mr. Walker's "Ye Mariners of England," and those who take a pleasure in telling dinner-table stories will find some good things here. Mr. Cuthbert Hadden contributes a short paper on "Our Lady Hymn-Writers." "The Little Minister" and "The Marriage of Elinor" are continued, and Mrs. Oliphant's numerous admirers will be delighted with the happy vein running through the story by that popular authoress. In his "Questions of the Christian Life," the Bishop of Winchester brings to a close a number of more than average interest, with suggestive thoughts on "Usefulness."

THE September Sunday Magazine contains further instalments of the two serial stories, "Godiva Durlough" and "On Lonely Hills." Archdeacon Farrar gives a glowing estimate of Whitefield's preaching, the good results of which he considers unparalleled since the days of Savonarola. Canon Talbot's interesting account of the "Fortunes of Hexham Abbey" will be read with much appreciation; and interest in the rise and vanishing away of these fine old homes of early English Christianity cannot fail to be stimulated by such sympathetic studies. Prebendary Harry Jones concludes his description of Miss Steer's Homes, and of the great work which these excellent institutions are doing. Dr. Samuel Cox's many friends will be pleased to see his able discourse of "The Potter and the Clay" in this number. The Rev. J. Reid Howatt is the children's preacher this month, and we feel very safe in leaving the little ones under his care during the September Sunday evenings. E. Robertson Croom supplies a capital little story, entitled "Saved by a Crutch"; and other miscellaneous papers, with two or three charming poems, make up a good average number. The illustrations are numerous, and maintain a high standard of excellence.

THE NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY.

SPECIAL QUOTATIONS WANTED.

III.

WILL any one kindly send quotations for some of the desiderata in the following list, and so help us to complete the literary history of some of the words of the next Part? As in previous lists, when the date stands before a word, an earlier quotation is wanted; where the date follows, a later instance is wanted; if a century is mentioned, a quotation is wanted within the limits of that century; for words without a date all quotations will be welcome. The list contains many modern words and senses for which earlier quotations than those of the dates here given ought to be, and no doubt will be, found. Besides these, good quotations for words noted in ordinary reading are still welcome; and we often want instances of very common idiomatic phrases, verbal constructions, colloquial uses, and the like. Every quotation should be furnished with as full a reference as possible to date, author, work, edition, volume, chapter, page, &c., and sent to me addressed, "Dr. Murray, Oxford."

J. A. H. MURRAY.

- 1637 fash, v.
- fashionable (able to be shaped) 1630
- 1624 fashionist
- fast, a. (of colours) 18th c.
- 1562 fast (secure)
- 1600 fast (of sleep) 1750
- fast (rapid) 17th and 18th c.
- 1800 fast (living fast)
- fast, adv. (shut) 17th and 18th c.
- fast (earnestly) 1533
- fast beside 15th to 17th c.
- 1580 fast and loose
- fast, v. (to fasten) 1700
- 1793 fast (a short cable)
- fast-day 16th to 18th c.
- fasten, v. (fix firmly) 1750
- 1704 fastidious (hard to please)
- fastigated 1668

- fasting-day 1711
- fasting-spittle 18th c.
- fastingong (Shrove tide) 1530
- fastly (firmly) 18th c.
- fastly (quickly) 17th and 18th c.
- fastness (fixity) 1700
- fastness (security) 1710
- fastness (quickness) 1700
- fat, v. (to anoint) 1700
- fat up, v. 1608
- fat, v. intr. 1700
- fat-headed 1603
- 1678 fatalism
- 1650 fatalist
- fatalness 1663
- 1697 fate (lot)
- 1718 fateful
- father (ancestor) 18th c.
- 1800 father (head of a society)
- father (source or originator) 18th c.
- father (title of respect) 18th c.
- Fathers (of the Church) 1611
- Fathers (senators of Rome) 1742
- father (one who acts as) 1611
- 1611 The Father (as in the Trinity)
- father, v. (beget, produce) 18th c.
- father, v. (reveal parentage) 18th c.
- 1666 fatherer 1666
- 1556 fatherkin 1556
- 1641 fatherless (without a known author)
- 1618
- fatherlike 18th c.
- fatherliness 18th c.
- 1625 fatherling 18th c.
- fatherly, a. 18th c.
- fatherly, adv. 1689
- fathership 17th and 18th c.
- fathom, v. (to compass with the arms)
- 1800
- fathom-line 18th c.
- fathomable 1691
- fatidical 18th c.
- fatigate, v. 1652
- fatigation 1700
- 1669 fatigue, sb.
- 1693 fatigue, v.
- 1580 fatten
- fatten, intr. 18th c.
- fatty 18th c.
- fatuous 18th c.
- faubourg 17th and 18th c.
- 1876 faucal, a.
- fauces 17th c.
- 1807 faucial, a.
- 1832 faugh, interj.
- 1625 faughty (musty) 1625
- 1545 faul (yield of corn) 1545
- 1815 fault (Geol.)
- fault (loss of scent) 17th c.
- fault-finder 18th c.
- fault-finding 18th c.
- fault, v. (fail) 1612
- fault v. (be in the wrong) 1627
- faultful 18th c.
- 1849 fauna (the animals of a country)
- 1768 faunist
- 1744 fauteuil
- 1596 fautress 1706
- 1770 faux pas 1823
- favificous (making a honeycomb)
- 1670
- 1686 faviginous 1686
- 1682 favous (like a honeycomb) 1682
- 1769 favour (letter) 1801
- favour (appearance) 18th c.
- favour (to curry) 18th c.
- 1709 favour v. (facilitate)
- favour v. (spare) 1725
- 1650 favour v. (resemble) 1690
- favourite (of a prince, &c.) 1781
- 1690 favourite (of a lock of hair) 1753
- 1711 favourite, a.
- favourize, v. 1624
- favourless 1595
- favourous 1485
- fawn, v. trans. 1483
- fawn, v. (bring forth) 1688
- fawn, s. b. (flattery) 1633
- fay (faith) 1470
- fay (by my) 18th c.
- 1611 feaberry (gooseberry) 1726
- 1671 feague, v. (whip) 1691

feal (faithful) 16th and 18th c.
 1664 feal, v. (hide) 1664 fear, v. (frighten) 18th c. fear, v. refl. 17th and 18th c.
 fearer 17th and 18th c.
 1591 fearless
 1772 fearnought (woollen stuff)
 1825 fearsome
 feasance (Law) 1741
 1621 feasant (Law) 1621 feast (to make a) 1611 feast-day 18th c.
 feast, v. (the eyes, &c.) 18th c.
 feast, v. intr. 1611
 feateous, featous 1554
 16. feather (in an arrow) 15.
 feather (kind, nature) 18th c.
 feather (curl on a horse) 1800
 1750 feather, v. (rowing)
 1865 feather, sb. (rowing) feather, v. (furnish with feathers) 18th c.
 featness 1650
 feature (shape) 1660
 featureless 18th c.
 febrific 1760
 1852 febrifugal
 1677 febrifuge
 februation 1699
 fecund 18th c.
 1763 fecundify 1763
 federacy 18th c.
 1645 federal, a.
 federal, a. (U. S.) 1787
 1878 Federal, sb.
 1793 federalism
 1792 federalist
 1789 Federalist (U. S.)
 1884 federalize
 1808 federate, a.
 1671 federate, sb. 1675
 Federate, sb. (France) 1794
 1857 federate, v.
 1849 federation
 1689 federative
 1675 fedity fee (money) 1700
 feeable 1460
 1740 feeless
 feeble, v. trans. 1646
 feeble, v. intr. 1500
 feeblish, v. 1540
 feeblish, a. 16th and 18th c.
 feed, v. (grass, have it eaten) 1700 feed, sv. (for cattle)
 1735 feed, sb. (allowance of food)
 1816 feeder (of cattle)
 1750 feeder (affluent) feeder (eater) 1718
 feeding (food) 1774
 feeding (pasturage) 1768
 1800 feel v. (one's way)
 1715 feel v. (warm, cold, &c.) 1715
 1800 feel v. (happy, strong, &c.)
 1709 feel, sb. (touch)
 1789 feel, sb. (sensation)
 feelable 17th and 18th c.
 1747 feeler (an organ of touch)
 1773 feelings, pl.
 1580 feeze, sb. (to take a) 1675 feign, v. (form) 1607
 feignedness 1710
 1715 felicitate (congratulate)
 1635 felicitous
 1834 feline
 fell, v. (a seam) fell, sb. (a flat seam) fellow (equal, peer) 1701
 1680 fellow-christian 1680
 1812 fellow-countryman
 1704 fellow-creature
 1619 fellow-feel, v. 1641 fellow-like 1632
 1820 fellow-man fellow-prisoner 1725 fellowship (a company) 1775 fellowship, v. intr. 16th and 18th c. fellowship, v. trans. 17th and 18th c.
 1651 felo de se
 1837 felonry
 1811 felsite
 1790 felspar, feldspar, -spat, -spath
 1601 felt, v. 18th c.

felter, v. (entangle, mat) 1610
 1628 felucca
 female, sb. (animal) 1700
 1598 feminist 1598
 1753 femality
 1574 femalize 1611
 feminity, feminity 17th and 18th c. fen (mud) 1567
 fence (sword-play) 18th c.
 1850 fence (repartee)
 1700 fence (receiver of stolen goods)
 fenceful 1800
 1583 fend and prove
 1570 fend, v. (parry) 1570
 fender (one who defends)
 1715 fender (before a fire)
 feneration 1650
 1835 fenestrate, a. (Bot.)
 1828 fenestrated
 1864 fenestration (Archit.)
 1870 fenestration (Zool.)
 1820 fenks (refuse of blubber) 1826
 1844 fenner 1844
 fennish, a. 1651
 fent (slit in a dress) 1571
 1878 fent (a crack, flaw)

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

MONTÉPIN, Xavier de. La dame aux émeraudes. Paris: Dentu. 6 fr.
 NEUKOMM, E. L'Allemagne à toute vapeur. Paris: Kolb. 3 fr. 50 c.

THEOLOGY.

WIEGAND, F. De ecclesiae notione quid Wiclif docuerit. Leipzig: Faber. 5 M.

HISTORY, LAW, ETC.

BERNOULLI, J. J. Römische Ikonographie. 2. Th. Die Bildnisse der röm. Kaiser. II. Von Galba bis Commodus. Stuttgart: Union. 24 M.
 IKEN, J. F. Die bremische Kirchenordnung v. 1534. Bremen: Müller. 3 M.
 KLEINFELLER, G. Die geschichtliche Entwicklung d. Thatsacheneides in Deutschland. Berlin: Heymann. 6 M.
 MILLER, A. Die Alexandergeschichte nach Strabo. 2. Thl. Würzburg: Stabel. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 NESSLING, C. De seviris Augustalibus. Giessen: Trenckmann. 1 M. 50 Pf.
 PUBLICATIONEN aus den k. preussischen Staatsarchiven. 47. u. 48. Bd. Leipzig: Hirzel. 31 M.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

DOHRN, A. Studien zur Urgeschichte d. Wirbelthierkörpers. XVI. Berlin: Friedländer. 7 M.
 FRANZ, J. Die jährliche Parallaxe d. Sterns Oeltzen 11677. bestimmt m. dem Königsberger Heliometer. Königsberg: Gräfe. 2 M. 50 Pf.
 HORNBERGER, R. Grundriss der Meteorologie u. Klimatologie. Berlin: Parey. 6 M.

PHILOLOGY.

LEIDOLF, J. Die Naunheimer Mundart. Leipzig: Fock. 1 M. 20 Pf.
 MORGENSTERN, G. Oddr Fugrskinna Snorra. Leipzig: Gräfe. 1 M. 60 Pf.
 WAGNER, Der gegenwärtige Lautbestand d. Schwäbischen in der Mundart v. Reutlingen. Leipzig: Fock. 2 M. 50 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"TO" EXPRESSING MOTION.

London: August 21, 1891.

Mr. Gollancz suggests (ACADEMY, p. 117) that in the phrase "the terme that he to schude" to may be a preposition indicating motion.

Does not this sense lie rather in the auxiliary shall? Compare the following passages from Bale's Kyng Johan (Camden Soc. ed., pp. 13, 27):

"I know hym not, I, by the waye that my sowll to shall."

"Now welcum, cosygn, by the waye that my sowle shall to."

P. Z. ROUND.

SCIENCE.

Bush Friends in Tasmania. By Louisa A. Meredith. Executed by Vincent Brooks, Day & Son. Last Series. (Macmillans.)

It is now more than thirty years since Mrs. Meredith published Some of My Bush Friends in Tasmania, a volume which was received with warm appreciation by all lovers of flowers in the northern hemisphere. Nothing further having appeared in England of late years from the pen or pencil of this genial and charming naturalist, the recollection of her name has perhaps begun to fade from the memory of the present generation, and it is a pleasant surprise to have to chronicle the appearance of her second and—as the author, now nearly eighty years of age, pathetically adds—"certainly last" volume upon the subject. The work under notice follows, in respect of arrangement, the lines of its predecessor—which, it may be remembered, derived special interest from its illustrations of Tasmanian Orchidaceae—without, however, devoting attention in this case to any one order in particular. The climate of Tasmania is only so slightly warmer than our own, and the cultivation of exotics has become so all-embracing of late years, that the botanist in examining the twelve beautifully executed plates of Mrs. Meredith's book will find only a few specimens which are not already familiar to him, either as grown under glass, or flourishing—indigenously in some cases, and in others by importation—in the warmer parts of our own islands, such as the South Wales and Cornish sea-boards, and more especially in Scilly and the Channel islands. Thus, if the Carex fascicularis, or corn-eared water sedge, of the title-page is a comparatively unknown specimen, the "sea-shore group" of pl. 2, on the other hand, introduces us at once to several familiar friends, the Acacia sophorae—known at the antipodes under the native title of "Boobyalla"—being found in the greenhouses at Kew and elsewhere, as is also the Stylidium graminifolium, well known for the property possessed by its central column of springing from side to side of the flower, while several species of Brachycome, notably the iberidifolium, are reared here, and the Correa alba grows in the open air in Scilly. All the hollies of pl. 2, viz., the Acacia verticillata, or prickly acacia, Indigofera australis, and Coprosma hirtella, are to be found at Kew; several species of Plagianthus flourish in Scilly, and so does the Anopterus glandulosa, or Tasmanian laurel, which the author incidentally mentions as being likely to thrive without artificial shelter in the Southern or even Midland counties of England. Priornotes cerinthoides, or climbing epacris, does not appear to have yet reached this country; the plant is described as "a very beautiful one, climbing up and over trees, stumps, and trunks, enrobing them with its luxuriance of small glossy leaves and rich crimson bells, forming exquisite masses of colour." Other species of epacridae, such as the Epacris impressa, myrtifolia, &c., are extensively reared here, and sold in quantities at Covent Garden. The Eurybia glandulosa, or daisy tree, is a species not much cultivated in England, though some are common, the Eurybia Gunnii, in particular, blossoming freely in open gardens, and others against sunny walls. Only three specimens of ferns—Lomaria discolor, Lomaria fluviatilis, and Asplenium flabellifolium—are given; these are comparatively common forms, well known in English conservatories, and some of the rarer species of a family in which Tasmania seems to be especially wealthy would have been acceptable. The Solanum aviculare, or kangaroo apple, is one of the sub-tropical bedding plants common at Kew and in the London parks, while the tea-tree (Leptospermum nitidum), is found growing as a bush to the height of thirty feet in the Channel islands and Scilly. In pl. 7 and the "poem-title" following it the only unfamiliar forms are Agastachys odorata, or mountain rocket, and Anthocercis tasmanica, both described as being rare even in Tasmania: the Eucryphia Billardieri of this plate has flowered at Kew recently for the first time, and an engraving of its blossom will appear in the forthcoming number of the Botanical Magazine. The Luzula campestris facing p. 42 seems to be the common British woodrush. Of the "mountain fruits" (pl. 9), Decaspora thymifolia is unfamiliar; and the cherry-fruited Aristotelia (Ar. peduncularis) is growing at Kew, but has not yet been observed in fruit; Telopea truncata, which faces p. 54, is also at Kew, but hitherto has not flowered; one species of the latter genus, the Telopea speciosissima, is interesting as having been adopted as the national badge of New South Wales. The musk-tree of pl. 11, described as Aster argophyllus, is now known as Olearia argophylla, according to Bentham and Hooker. The red grass tree (Richca scoparia), of pl. 12, has not yet reached us.

I am indebted for much of the above information to the courtesy of Mr. George Nicholson, curator of the Kew Gardens, whose ready recognition of the various plants, as plate after plate passed under his notice, is a testimony to the skill displayed in the drawing and colouring. In regard to this latter point, it may be noticed that the colour printing has lost tone in the case of Blandfordia grandiflora (pl. 7); while in that of Tasmania aromatica (pl. 11), and in the flowers of Solanum aviculare it is somewhat too accentuated. But, as a rule, both form and colour are fairly correct, and the volume is a triumph of executive ability throughout. The descriptive letter-press will also be found interesting. Of the accompanying poetry it may be sufficient to say that it is tasteful and sympathetic.

J. B. A.

SOME BOOKS ON SOCIAL AND ECONOMICAL SUBJECTS.

YET another series is announced by Methuen & Co., designed to treat social questions of to-day

"in a thoroughly sympathetic but impartial manner, with special reference to the historic aspect of the subject, and from the point of view of the historical school of economics and social science."

It is a pity that the opening volume, Trade Unionism, New and Old, by Mr. George Howell, should not have shown more of this promised sympathy and impartiality. It would have been easy for him to bring out all the points of his argument without getting angry over the doings of the new Unionists; but he has allowed his dislike of the manners and opinions of the new men to get the better both of his temper and his judgment. In other respects, Mr. Howell has given a very good sketch of the progress of trade unionism and of the state of opinion among working men with regard to State control of labour. The unions are generally associated with strikes; but, as he shows, the conduct of strikes has been far from being their chief purpose. They have been, in fact, mainly provident societies. Fourteen of the chief unions have expended over £7,000,000 in provident benefits, while they have expended on strikes less than £500,000. The new unionists, on the other hand, show a disposition to develop the fighting side, and in this, says Mr. Howell, they are simply "progressing backwards" towards the infancy of trade organisations. On this point, however, it is unsafe to reason from trade unionism as it was when law and public opinion were hostile to combination, to what it should be now when the right of combination is more or less fully recognised and when public opinion is as often as not on the side of the employed. The fighting side of the unions, indeed, receives comparatively little attention from Mr. Howell, although a careful consideration of strikes, their cost, the circumstances in which they have succeeded, and those in which they have failed, would have lain within the scope of his work.

Problems of Poverty. An inquiry into the industrial condition of the poor. John A. Hobson. (Methuen.) Mr. Hobson's inquiry embraces the following matters:—the measure of poverty, the effects of machinery on the condition of the working classes, the influx of population into large towns, the sweating system, the over-supply of low-skilled labour, the industrial condition of women workers, the moral effects of poverty, socialistic legislation, and the industrial outlook of low-skilled labour. These topics raise some of the most difficult of social questions; and Mr. Hobson has done a very useful work in stating them briefly and impartially, in pointing out their gravity and difficulty, and in reviewing the solutions which are most in favour. He sums up by saying, we think very truly:

"The great problem of poverty thus resides in the conditions of the low-skilled workman. To live industrially under the new order he must organise. He cannot organise because he is so poor, so ignorant, so weak. Because he is not organised he continues to be poor, ignorant, weak. Here is a great dilemma, of which whoever shall have found the key will have done much to solve the problem of poverty."

Essays in Politics. By C. B. Roylance Kent. (Kegan Paul & Co.) The nature of Mr. Kent's essays (in which his aim has been to review from a constitutional and historical standpoint some of the political questions of the day) will sufficiently appear from their titles. "Some questions of Sovereignty," "Federal Government," "The Political Institutions of Switzerland," "The Progress of the Masses," "Socialistic Legislation in Anglo-Saxon Communities," and "Science and Politics." The analysis of the difficult idea of sovereignty leaves much to be desired, and, indeed, none of the essays is distinguished by much originality of view. But they contain the reflections of a serious-minded and well-read student. They show that Mr. Kent has power to do more systematic and extended work in the same field, and it is a field in which, in England at least, the serious workers are not very numerous.

The first volume of the Transactions of the National Liberal Club Political Economy Circle shows that the "Circle," which was founded in 1888, has been engaged in serious work, and to judge from the published papers, it does not seem to have allowed itself to be biased by its political surroundings. The papers, several of which have already been published as magazine articles, comprise an introductory address by Mr. Leonard Courtney, on legislation with regard to the occupation of land; "International Migration and Political Economy," by Mr. J. S. Mann, who speaks on the effect of foreign migration on England with commendable freedom from panic; "The Report of the Gold and Silver Commission," by Mr. Alfred Milnes; "The Rate of Interest," by Mr. Sidney Webb; "Distribution as a branch of Economics," by Mr. J. H. Levy, the editor of the volume; and "The Migration of Labour," by Mr. Llewellyn Smith. The aim of the writers has been to submit economic doctrines to the test of facts, and they have done this in a spirit of healthy independence.

The Evolution of Property from Savagery to Civilisation. By Paul Lafargue.

"The essential condition of this form of property," says M. Lafargue, referring to capital, "is the exploitation of the free producer, who is robbed hourly of a fraction of the value he creates, a fact which Marx has demonstrated beyond refutation."

Any person holding this opinion is pretty sure, when he comes to trace the evolution of property, to say a good many new things; but it is a little difficult to understand what the preface to this translation of M. Lafargue's article means by referring to "the originality of the theory advanced" in them. That primitive property is collective and not private (a new edition, we may note, by the way, has appeared of M. Laveleye's book on this subject); that private rights have grown up by a long and gradual process; that in modern industrial society a new form of communism is developing, which differs from primitive communism in giving the produce not to the community, but to the parasitic capitalist; and that as the landed nobility have disappeared as a ruling class, the same fate awaits the capitalists—these are the points which M. Lafargue illustrates, and enforces with much vigour of argument. We have no doubt that those who are already convinced that the capitalist is of the profession of Barabbas will find their conviction strengthened by reading the volume.

THE ORIENTAL CONGRESS OF 1891.

A CARD of invitation for the opening of the Congress next Tuesday at the Inner Temple Hall has been issued to the members by the organising committee, which, in its way, is a triumph of the designer's and engraver's art. It represents, besides other allegorical devices, the sun rising over an Oriental scenery, with the motto "Sol oriens discutit umbras." A diploma of statutory membership, illustrating the history of the Congress since its foundation in 1873, will also be conferred on those who adhere to the original statutes, and various Oriental "sanads," such as are awarded to native Oriental scholars, have been illuminated by hand for the Congress in various parts of the East. Medals have also been struck to mark the continuity of the series of the Congresses since 1873.

Mr. Charles Leland has made a striking addition to folk-lore. He has discovered a cult of the Saligrana stone in Italy similar to that of the Saligrana stone in India. The analogies are more than coincidences, and may lead to prove an unexpected connexion. Among the new departures in philology may be mentioned the paper of Mr. C. Johnstone, B.C.S., on the necessity of ethnography to philological studies. This is a very different thing from any former attempt to connect ethnology or anthropology with language, to which allusion was made at the British Association.

An entertainment, to follow papers on the science of oriental music, consisting of recitations, songs, and instrumental music, Japanese, Arab, Sanskrit, &c., is being arranged in connexion with the conversation of the members of the Congress on September 9. The banquet takes place on the 10th, and an excursion to Cambridge will follow a day or two after. There will be an exhibition of collections, illustrative of the various sections of the Congress, as also of books of reference regarding them, at the Examiners' Hall in Chancery-lane, and at the Oriental Institute at Woking, where Dr. Blau's Assyrian collection is also now deposited. Dr. Stapf will give an account of his discovery of a salt lake between Teheran and Yezd, and exhibit his Persian botanical collection and Persian medical drugs. Similar collections are on their way from India accompanied by an unique medical Sanskrit manuscript and accounts of the uses of native drugs by two eminent professors of the Vaidak system of medicine. A remarkable paper on the Hittite question has been specially prepared for the Congress by the Rev. Prof. C. A. de Cara, S.J. The number of papers in the various sections of the Congress now exceeds 150, including accounts of important discoveries in Eastern lands and literature. The chief London office of the Congress is at the Incorporated Law Society, Chancery-lane.

BRITISH ASSOCIATION GRANTS.

At a meeting of the General Committee, held on Wednesday, the concluding day of the Congress, Dr. Huggins in the chair, Mr. Vernon Harcourt read the following synopsis of grants of money, amounting in all to £1013, and appropriated to scientific purposes by the Committee.

Mathematics and Physics.—*Prof. Carey Foster, Electrical Standards (partly renewed), £27; *Lord M'Laren, Meteorological Observations on Ben Nevis, £50; *Mr. G. J. Symons, Photographs of Meteorological Phenomena, £15; *Prof. Cayley, Pellian Equation Tables (partly renewed), £15; *Lord Rayleigh, Tables of Mathematical Functions, £15; *Prof. G. F. Fitzgerald, Electrolysis, £5; *Prof. Lodge, Discharge of Electricity from Points, £50; *Sir W. Thomson, Seismological Phenomena of Japan, £10.

Chemistry and Mineralogy.—*Prof. Roberts-Austen, Analysis of Iron and Steel (renewed), £8; *Prof. H. E. Armstrong, Formation of Haloids from Pure Materials (partly renewed), £25; *Prof. W. A. Tilden, Properties of Solutions, £10; *Prof. Thorpe, Action of Light upon Dyed Colours (partly renewed), £10.

Geology.—*Prof. Prestwich, Erratic Blocks (partly renewed), £15; *Rev. T. Wiltshire, Fossil Phyllopora (renewed), £10; *Prof. J. Geikie, Photographs of Geological Interest, £20; *Dr. H. Woodward, Registration of Type Specimens of British Fossils (renewed), £5; *Prof. E. Hull, Underground Waters, £10; *Mr. J. W. Davis, Investigation of Elbolton Cave, £25; *Prof. R. Jones, Faunal contents of Sowerby's Zone, £10; *Dr. J. Evans, Excavations at Oldbury Hill, £25; *Dr. H. Woodward, Cretaceous Polyzoa, £10.

Biology.—*Dr. P. L. Sclater, Table at the Naples Zoological Station, £100; *Mr. E. R. Lankester, Table at Plymouth Biological Laboratory (renewed), £17; *Prof. A. C. Haddon, Improving a Deep Sea Tow-net (partly renewed), £40; *Prof. Newton, Fauna of Sandwich Islands (renewed), £100; *Dr. P. L. Sclater, Zoology and Botany of the West India Islands (renewed), £100.

Geography.—Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, Climatology and Hydrography of Tropical Africa, £75.

Anthropology.—*Prof. Flower, Anthropometric Laboratory, £5; Dr. J. G. Garson, Prehistoric Remains in Mashonaland, £50; *Dr. E. B. Tylor, North-Western Tribes of Canada, £100; *Sir W. Turner, Habits, Customs, &c., of Natives of India (renewed), £10; *Prof. Flower, New Edition of Anthropological Notes and Queries, £20; *Mr. G. J. Symons, Corresponding Societies' Committee, £25.

CORRESPONDENCE.

O.E. "EFEN(N)EHÖ(U)."

Ann Arbor, Michigan: July 20, 1891.

As stated in a recent communication to the ACADEMY, I anticipated and justified some such criticism as that made by W. H. Stevenson in the ACADEMY of July 4; and while I cannot accept any of Henry Bradley's arguments, in the same paper, for the "neighbourhood" theory, his criticism has led me to examine my own position more carefully and to change it somewhat.

Thus: efenhéhah, "equally high," would have as abstract† (cf. ACADEMY, June 27) efenhéhö(u) > efen(n)ehö(u) "that of which the various parts are equally high," "a plain." We have efen-héhah, we have the abstract héhö(u) belonging to héhah, and the only thing assumed is that in efen(n)ehö(u) we have the corresponding abstract of efenhéhah. The change of efenhéhö(u) > efen(n)ehö(u) is as given in the ACADEMY for June 27, in which Mr. Bradley challenges the step "h > n, or is lost." Mr. Bradley says the analogy of on(n)ettan, &c., "is not to the purpose, the gemination (or the assimilation of the h) being in that case accounted for by the obvious fact that when the word was formed the prefix bore the accent, so that the n was immediately preceded by a stressed vowel." Who discovered or formulated the law that h is assimilated after a stressed vowel? We are all familiar with the fact that lack of accent or weakness of accent often allows an h to fall out or assimilate to a neighbouring sonorous consonant (Sweet, H.E.S. §§ 500, 724; Sievers, §§ 217-218 and A¹; Kluge, Paul's Gr. i., p. 847). That this, in the majority of cases, happens after an accented syllable should not make us blind to the real cause of the phenomenon, and lead us to deny its potency under less familiar conditions. Thus h is lost in M.E. fosterhild > fosterild > fostriild; maðel-hild > maðelild; Mn.E. Waterhouse > Waterous > Watrous, &c., for the same reason that it is lost in O.E. efhát > eofot; M.E. kundhede > kundede; Mn.E. foreheud > fored. So long as the unaccented (or weakly accented) element of the compound retains in other respects the form of the simple word, the influence of the simple word will often suffice to maintain the h in the compound, so we are not surprised at efenhéhah. But in efenhéhö(u) the second part of the derivative already differs from the primitive as regards the vowel, and the meaning of efenhéhö(u) was too remote from that of héhö(u) for it to be affected by that.

I am at a loss to explain Mr. Bradley's "the obvious fact that when the word was formed the prefix bore the accent." I have always understood that Germanic compound verbs were accented on the second member (Brandt, Ger. Gr. § 421; Kluge, Paul's Gr. i., pp. 340, 890). Is it possible that Mr. Bradley was misled by the Modern German compounds of verb and adverb (so-called separable compound verbs) like an'nehmen? That on(n)ettan (< on-hettan < on-hatjan, *not < on-hátjan, as I, following Sievers, § 43 A¹, said in the ACADEMY for June 27; on-hátjan > onhettan in time came to be accented on the first syllable, is due to the fact that the simple verb hettan died out, and so onhettan, no longer felt to be a compound, fell under the influence of those verbs that had the ending -ettan (rocettan, &c., Sievers, § 403), and was accented as they were.

* Re-appointed.

† I do know that abstracts "do not invariably retain their original abstract sense," and even that it is very likely that words with concrete meaning (denoting that which possesses the abstract quality) were sometimes formed on the model of abstracts thus used, without ever passing through the abstract stage, cf. Gothic afgrundiþa "precipice," aupida "desert," &c.

Mr. Bradley attempts to explain efen(n)ehö(u) as an abstract "from efennéhah* (= convincinus, if I may imitate Etmüller's Latin). I am not aware that this adjective is recorded, but its existence is rendered probable by M.E. efennerta 'neighbour.'" Now, efen is compounded with substantives and adjectives, as well as with verbs; with adjectives it regularly has the force of "equally," with substantives that of "fellow-." Moreover, the adjective efennéhah occurs in Alfred's Metra, xx. 141 (recorded in Grein, Bosworth-Toller, &c.):

"ne hire on náfre ne móf néor þonne on óðro stówe gestæppan, striceð ymbútan ufane and neoðane efennéhah gehwæder"— and means just what we should expect, "equally near," not "convincinus," which manufactured Latin, like Etmüller's "convincinia," could only serve as an ineffectual means of dodging the force of efen. An abstract formed from efennéhah would denote "equality in nearness," "that which is as near as other things, or that has all its parts equally near something else." Will it be easy to get this to mean simply "neighbouring district"? But what would be the meaning of a superlative of efennéhah, as Mr. Bradley apparently supposes efennerta to be? "the one who is) most equally near"! A moment's thought will show that efen-nerta is not the superlative of an adjective at all, but a compound noun made up of efen "fellow," and nerta "neighbour." The word occurs but twice, and in the same sentence, Old-English Homilies i. 17: Gif þu agultest wið þine efen nerta unðonkes; bet hit þin þonkes hu se þu miht wið him for þon ic wat fulwe ðet þu miht agultan wið þine euen nerta. The passage in the mind of the homilist (Matt. v. 23) has "brother" in the sense of fellow mortal. In biblical language nerta, like German Nächster, was common in the sense of "neighbour, brother, fellow man," and the strengthening of the idea of fellow dependence upon God by the addition of the prefix efen (as in M.E. efen-cristene, -disciple, -eir, -servant, -workere, &c.), is not even as striking as the similar strengthening of O.E. gemacca, "companion," into efen-gemacca.

GEORGE HEMPL.

THE NEW SANSKRIT MS. FROM MINGAI.

Dedham, Essex: Aug. 17, 1891.

The "Rain-charm," translated by Prof. Bühler (ACADEMY, August 15, 1891, pp. 138, 139), is certainly Buddhistic, but appears to conform, for the most part, to the North Buddhist type. The Mantra l. 1 contains a list of words which the translator thinks are the names of various plants to be used as ingredients for an oblation; but the Buddhists did not offer sacrifices and oblations.† These terms, therefore, may be merely magical or talismanic words, such as we often find in North Buddhist sūtras (see Lotus, ch. xxvi., Kern's Translation S.B.E., pp. 434-5), and are probably epithets of "Çiva's female counterpart Durgā." In the usual invocations we find these magical

* Cf. German hetzen, and see Kluge sub Hass and hetzen.

† In the Tantra ceremonies flesh and even ordure were thrown into the sacred fire.

SCIENCE NOTES.

terms in the vocative case; and perhaps Dundubhi, &c., are Prakrit vocatives for Dundubhi, &c. See Megha-sūtra in J.R.A.S. xii., pt. 2, p. 301 (1880).

Dundubhi, Garjani (thundering), Varshani (raining), Hārini (Harini), are the feminines of epithets that could well be applied to Īva as the representative of Rudra; and Durgā in the Mantra may be regarded as the devi causing thunder, lightning, and rain. Compare the use of ṛālā, ukkā, &c., as applied to the goddess Durgā in the Lotus, ch. xxi. (Kern's Translation, p. 372).

What "cucumber" is I cannot tell, as I have not the Skt. text before me; probably jāli, which is a Prakrit form of an original jālī*, "flame," or jālsū.

Swāhā = "Durgā," is the usual ending of a N. Buddhist dhāraṇī. Ilīkīsi = "ilīk'si," is perhaps the vocative of a Prakrit ilīkā + īsi = "the earth-goddess."

The Anumantira contains a list of the Ahīrājakulas and Nāga-rājas,* which are those usually met with in North-Buddhist works. We may compare this list with that in the Vardha-varsha-sūtra, entitled in Chinese "The Great Cloud-wheel Rain-asking-sutra" (Beal's Catena, p. 420), the Lotus, &c. :

Mingai MS.	Chinese Sutra.	Lotus.	Southern Buddhist.
Dhītarāshtra	Dhītarāshtra	Dhītarāshtra	Dhātaraṭha
Nairāvāna	—	—	Erāvāna (?)
Virūpāksha	Virūpāksha	Virūpāksha	Virupakkha
Krishna	—	—	(Kambha)
Gautamaka	—	—	Gautamaka
Māni	—	—	Māni-akkhi (?)
Vāsuki	Vāsuki	Vāsuki	—
Dandapāda	—	—	—
Pūrṇabhādra	—	—	—
Nanda	Nanda	Nanda	Nanda
Upananda	Upananda	Upananda	Upananda
Anavatapta	Anavatapta	Anavatapta	Anotatta*
Varuṇa	—	—	—
Samhāraka	Sāgara	Sāgara	—
Takshaka	Takshaka	Takshaka	Tacchaka
Ananta	—	—	—
Vāsumukha	—	—	—
Aparājita	—	—	—
Chibbā-putra	—	—	Chabbyāputta
Manasvin	Manasvin	—	—
—	Mucalinda	—	Mucalinda*
—	Elapatra (Ela-pana)	—	Erapatha
—	Pindara	—	—
—	Tejasvin	—	—

1. Dhītarāshtra = the regent of the East; also a Nāgarāja.

2. Nairāvāna = Vairāvāna (Pāli Vessavana = Kuvera), regent of the North (?). It may be a misreading for Airāvāna.

3. Virūpāksha = the regent of the West, and also a Nāga-rāja. Virūdhaka = the regent of the South, is left out, because he was not regarded as a snake-king. Erāpatha is also omitted, though mentioned in the Chinese Sūtra and the Pāli Jātaka, &c.

4. Nanda and Upananda are mentioned in Hardy's M. B., second edition, p. 313. These Nāgarājas assisted the Devas in a struggle with the Asuras (see Jāt. I., p. 204; Beal's Catena, pp. 52-55).

5. Anavatapta is not mentioned as a Nāgarāja in Southern Buddhist works; but he was doubtless the guardian of the Anotatta dāha (lake), just as Mucalinda was the Nāgaking that guarded the Mandākinī waters. For Mucalinda, the seven-headed snake, see Udāna, p. 10.

6. Samhāraka is evidently a misreading for Sāmgava = Sāgara.

7. Chibbā = Pāli Chabyā or Chabbyā, seems to point to an original chaviyā* = chavikā* (see Callavagga, v. 6).

8. Pūrṇabhādra and Aparājita occur in the Mahābhārata; Vāsumukha = Sumukha (?). Of Dandapāda the legends are silent.

9. Krishna and Gautamaka are mentioned in the Divyāvadāna as two snake-kings.

R. MORRIS.

* In N. Buddhist Sanskrit writers we find about 80 nāgarājas; the Chinese sūtras have over 200.

VISITORS to the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, will hereafter miss the great cylindrical structure which has for a quarter of a century or more covered the largest telescope possessed by the Observatory. Notwithstanding its size, the Astronomer-Royal has now procured through the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty a telescope more than twice as large as the old one. This step, long delayed at Greenwich, was absolutely required in the recent advances of astronomical science; and the optical peculiarities which the Astronomer-Royal has embodied in the new instrument will render it one of the three most powerful telescopes at present in existence. The glass itself has a diameter of twenty-eight inches, and is figured by Sir Howard Grubb to a focal length of twenty-eight feet. This relatively short distance of the focal plane specially adapts the objective to photographic requirements. The peculiar architectural feature of the building which is to shelter the new telescope is that its dome, of thirty-six feet diameter, will surmount a tower having a diameter of only thirty-one feet. Technically, the form adopted is the surface generated by the revolution of an involute of a circle. The general exterior effect will be not unlike that of the cupola of a Turkish mosque, and the requirements of the astronomer are easily met mechanically, the necessary lightness and rigidity being secured by a framework of iron and steel.

THE International Geographical Congress concluded its sittings on August 14 at Berne, as has already been briefly noticed in our columns, and its recorded transactions, shortly to be made public, will mark a distinct advance on its predecessors in the interest of the papers read, and in the ability with which they were discussed. The exhibition in connexion with the Congress was peculiarly rich in cartography and in the literature relating to climate and to atmospheric vicissitudes, in both of which departments, however, Great Britain was by no means so well represented as she was entitled to be. It is to be hoped that if the recommendation of the committee that the next place of meeting be London should take effect, a better show will be made of the geographical publications of a nationality which in many important respects has been a pioneer in maritime and inland exploration. Au reste, some interesting facts were made prominent in the exhibition. Swiss cartography, a really brilliant feature of the collection, owes its origin, it appears, to a physician, Dr. Conrad Fürst, of Zurich, whose map of Switzerland, constructed between the years 1495 and 1497, was the first ever made of the Helvetic country. From Fürstenau to Seekinggen, and from Bregenz to Lausanne, it gives an accurate view of the mountains and lakes, and is, on the whole, a surprising instance of correct cartography at a time when the art was but in its infancy. Curiously enough, the south is placed at the top of the map and the north at the foot—an arrangement reversed by the modern map-maker who, however, as was said at the Congress, has only convention, not science, to plead for his innovation. From good old Dr. Fürst's testamen geographicum to the magnificent coloured maps of the Siegfried Atlas now publishing by the Federal Topographic Bureau, and of which the instalments already issued were a chief attraction of the exhibition, there is a stride indeed. But there is a direction in which geography may improve even on this latest addition to the "mystery of map-making." A climatological atlas, giving the prevalent air currents and the other indications affecting the salubrity of the region, is still a desideratum, the supplying of which by his professional compatriots would be a worthy tribute to the Zurich physician's memory, as exhibiting a legitimate development of the studies in which he was a veritable pathfinder.

FINE ART.

Autour des Borgia: Études d'histoire et d'art. Par Charles Yriarte. (Paris: Rothschild.)

THE present volume, from the pen of M. Charles Yriarte, is intended to supplement his work on Caesar Borgia, published two years since. He deals here with the monuments, the portraits, and the works of art pertaining to the Borgia family; and to obtain representations of these he has ransacked the museums and collections of Europe, with a patience and perseverance more usually associated with our notions of Teuton than of Gallic scholarship. The renaissance art of the fifteenth century is a field wherein M. Yriarte has worked diligently and successfully on former occasions; he comes, therefore, to the consideration of objects of doubtful or erroneous attribution with a trained eye and matured judgment, qualities especially valuable when the authenticity of portraits such as those found in foreign galleries, purporting to be members of the Borgia family, are in question.

Respecting the portrait of the head of the family, Pope Alexander the Sixth, there can be no doubts whatever. Pinturicchio has painted him in the fresco of the Resurrection in the first room after the Hall of the Pontiffs in the Appartamento Borgia, as he appeared in the year 1493 at the age of sixty-three. The individuality and character of the head show that the artist has succeeded in securing a likeness which can be accepted as entirely trustworthy. The joyous expression habitual to the pope, remarked by contemporaries, is not there; but then Pinturicchio's portraits are always characterised by a certain heaviness and absence of vivacity. Setting aside the grace of expression, we have the strongly marked features of Roderigo Borgia faithfully set forth by a man who was well skilled in all the technicalities of his craft; and this, from many points of view, is about the most desirable type of portrait of an historical personage that can be handed down to posterity. Another hitherto accepted portrait of the pope will be known to readers of Schmarsow's life of Pinturicchio: this is on a damaged panel in the Museum of Valencia. M. Yriarte gives a facsimile representation of the work, and, comparing it with the portrait of the Appartamento, arrives at the conclusion that the kneeling donatore is intended for the founder of the chapel in which the picture originally stood, Francesco Borgia, cousin of the pope, and not the pope himself. Further confirmation that the profile in the picture was not intended for the pope is furnished by a comparison with the medal of Alexander VI., which certainly has strong affinities with the Vatican fresco, and none with the Valencian panel.

Everyone who has visited the Borghese Gallery will remember the portrait of a handsome young noble, attributed to Raphael, and said to be the portrait of Caesar Borgia, and every one having the most superficial knowledge of painting and Italian history will have rejected the attribution and denied the portrait. Yet, probably with regret, for the figure unquestionably personifies the popular ideal of the "biondo e bellissimo," Duke Valentino. The disappointment is the greater since some of the other so-called portraits, which M. Yriarte considers may have been copied from an authentic likeness, are absolutely intolerable from their utter absence of artistic merit. It is known that Caesar was painted by Pinturicchio in the series of frescoes at the castle of St. Angelo, but these were effaced, and probably the same fate befel the other portraits on the ruin of the family after the Pope's death, when every record of the Borgias was blotted out and destroyed. And there were many who had an interest in obliterating all remembrances of Caesar. The petty tyrants whom he had cleared out of the Romagna naturally hated him, and all, whether natives or foreigners, who desired to keep Italy split up into small states, dreaded the man who had visions of a united Italy. The separatists carried the day, and Caesar was handed over to the safe keeping of the country which had most profited by Italy's divisions. Among the portraits of Caesar in Italy, M. Yriarte is inclined to think that the one in the possession of Count Codronghi, of Imola, belongs to the period, and was painted from a genuine work. He suggests that it was one of the official likenesses of the ruler, set up in offices and guardrooms, in the same way that in Italy, at the present day, we see hanging in such places a lithograph of the reigning sovereign.

Lucrezia, more fortunate than her brother, still lives in the finely executed medal attributed to Filippino Lippi, and which has for reverse the charming design of Love bound and tied to a laurel tree. Here the hair is represented free and flowing, another medal shows it confined in a net, and with a jewelled fillet across the forehead. Both are admirable examples of the medals of the Italian renaissance. M. Yriarte discusses the various Lucrezias attributed to Titian, Dosso Dossi, and others, and agrees with Gregorovius that they must be rejected. He finds, however, two paintings, each of the head and bust of a lady in rich attire, and both inscribed "Lucrezia Borgia," to have strong claims to authenticity, not as original works, but as contemporary copies. The one is at Ferrara, the other at the Museum of Nimes, bequeathed by an Englishman, the late Mr. Gower. They have no claim to regard as works of art, but in general likeness and in the details of ornamentation there is considerable resemblance to Lucrezia's portrait in the medals. Again, M. Yriarte cites two other canvases, belonging to Mr. Spence, of Florence, and Signor Gugenheim, of Venice, as having strong affinities with the Nimes and Ferrara pictures. But it is probable that those for whom the personality of Lucrezia of the "dolce ciera" has an abiding fascination will always prefer remembering her as she appears in the authentic image of the living bronze.

One of the most interesting sections of the volume is that giving the history of Caesar Borgia's sword, now belonging to the Duke of Sermoneta, its sheath, as it will be remembered, being one of the choicest treasures of South Kensington Museum. The sword is an example of those picturesque weapons commonly known as a langue de boeuf, but more correctly termed a cinque dea, and bearing ornamentation highly characteristic of a certain phase of early renaissance Italian art. In the present instance the upper portion of the blade is covered with elaborate compositions of figure subjects, divided by bands of foliated ornament and medallions, all having reference to the owners or his family. The dramatic scenes represent events in the career of Julius Caesar, as his Triumph, and the Crossing the Rubicon. Other subjects are purely allegorical, based on classical motives, the whole interspersed with a profusion of Latin inscriptions, as "Jacta est alea," "Cum numine Cesaris omen," and at least, on one occasion, remembering the ownership, with somewhat dubious propriety; "Fides prevalet armis" is scarcely the device one would expect to find on an object belonging to Duke Valentino. The figures are almost invariably represented in a state of nudity and in vigorous action; the female figures are posed in the conventional attitudes of the late Greek sculptors, working in Roman times, and sometimes, it must be confessed, this studied elegance lapses into affectation. The backgrounds of pseudo-classical buildings are similar to those we are accustomed to find in the paintings of the period. Indeed, the motives of design and ornamentation are distinctly reminiscent of the frescoes of the Apartamento Borgia. There is an equally close relationship with the woodcut illustrations produced at the end of the fifteenth century at Venice, the execution in both cases being in the same decisive outlines and simple shading. That the artist of the sword could carry the execution further is shown by the delicate modelling of the figures and acanthus ornamentation in the South Kensington sheath.

The sword is signed OPVS HERC. The problem M. Yriarte set himself to solve was—who was the artist using this signature? Commencing his search in the various museums of Europe, he found another sheath of a cinque dea at the Musée d'Artillerie, at Paris, with analogous ornamentation, and signed OPVS HERCULIS. Then at the Berlin Museum M. Yriarte lighted on a cinque dea bearing the word FIDELI, which suggested that the artist might be Ercole da Fideli, goldsmith to the Duke of Ferrara. Without entering at length into the reasons which induced the author finally to assign the sword to Ercole, we may leave him to state his conclusions:

"On a défini au cours de cette étude le caractère de ce genre d'œuvres, la manière et les tendances de l'homme qui, probablement, a été le traducteur, des inventions d'artistes supérieurs, dont il a gardé l'empreinte. Hercule de Fideli évoquait de grands souvenirs et des idées hautes; il était tout imprégné de l'idée antique et s'étant frotté aux humanistes, il se dégagéait de ses œuvres un parfum littéraire; aussi au milieu de productions de pacotille destinées au commerce et de bijoux et colliers, a-t-il laissé quelque compositions d'un goût si élevé et des fourreaux d'épées d'une architecture si noble, qu'ils sont dignes de figurer à côté des œuvres des grands maîtres de la Renaissance. L'orfèvre avait le goût des inscriptions, il les empruntait aux poètes et aux historiens de l'antiquité, et souvent aussi aux dictons en langue vulgaire. Parfois il les estropiait, soit qu'elles fussent abandonnées à des grossiers ouvriers qui ne les comprenaient pas, soit que le patron de la bottega n'en connût pas lui-même le sens. Ce maître Hercule représente bien, par ses facultés multiples, un tempérament du temps de la Renaissance; quand il se met à la disposition du passant, il fabrique sans passion et met en œuvre, sans ordre et sans discernement, les éléments qu'il a empreints à l'antiquité. Ondoyant et divers, il est aurifer, et tenant boutique dans un spalerialia de Ferrare, il travaille pour qui le paye et ses fils travaillaient avec lui et prennent sa manière. Mais quand il a l'honneur d'être appelé par une grande personne ou un de ces princes souverain qui ont laissé dans l'histoire un sillon sanglant ou lumineux comme César Borgia, François Goncague ou Este, Hercule se redresse, et il parle haut."

Around the Borgias contains, among other matters, a detailed examination of the decoration of the Apartamento Borgia, copiously illustrated. So also is the entire volume, which, besides chromo-lithographic reproductions of paintings, is full of artistically rendered text illustrations.

HENRY WALLIS.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME INSCRIBED STONES IN THE NORTH.

Oxford: Aug. 1, 1891.

The other day I visited some of the inscribed stones of Scotland, and examined them with various degrees of success. In one or two instances the result is worth communicating to the readers of the ACADEMY.

When at Edinburgh Dr. Daniell and I visited the Catstane, near Kirkliston, which I had on a previous occasion read IN OC TV | MVLO IACIT | VETTA F[ILIA] VICT. . . We were now inclined to think that we detected traces of the A of F[ILIA]; but we were puzzled as to the latter part of the last vocable. In any case we felt certain that the reading is not VICTI; there is too much at the end to be explained by an I: in fact, it looks rather like a part of an R, followed possibly by an s; nor is that all, as there seems to be a horizontal stroke over the R. This would give VICTRS, which suggests victis, with s for r. That is, I know, desperate, and I only mention it in the hopes that the stone will be scrutinised by somebody with better eyes. At any rate, I hope this inscription will not be habitually passed over as if its reading had been made out beyond all doubt. The stone is No. 211 in Hübner's Inscriptiones Britanniae Christianae.

The next I would mention is Hübner's No. 209, namely, the Yarrow Stone, well known for the difficulties presented by its letters in their weathered state. Dr. Hübner gives four readings, not one of which will construe. The best is Smith's, which runs thus:

hic Memor iaceti | Loin[ris]ni . . . princ(i) | pes [C]nudi | Dumngeni hic iacent | in tumulo duo fili | Liberali.

The lettering is very irregular and frequently debased. The last e in the first line is a capital, but in every other instance, I think, the lower part only is that of a capital, the upper part having its top bar bent downwards to join the middle bar, which is made long. The s is of the perpendicular kind, resembling L upside down. The R occurs in various stages of debasement, and so do l and v; while the VM of tumulo and Dumnogeni are conjoint. Lastly, d is always a minuscule.

At first the whole thing seemed to me hopeless, and it was not till I had gazed at the stone repeatedly for three days that I satisfied myself that the following is the reading:

HIC MEMORIA LETI
[BE]LLO INIGNIFIIMI PRINCI
PEI · NVDI ·
DVMNOGENI · HIC IACENT
IN TVMVLO DVO FILII
LIBERALI

The first ray of light came with my discovery that the c of Smith's Memor iaceti is an undoubted L. Then I reasoned that memoria leti meant in some sort of way "happy or fortunate in their memory." My friends who know Latin tell me that it is all wrong, that leti does not stand for laeti, used loosely for felices or a happier adjective, but the genitive of letum, a poetic word for "death." Be that as it may, in my ignorance I construed memoria laeti, and concluded that . . . LOIN . . ., a highly improbable combination, must be severed, and the LO regarded as the end of an ablative, followed by an adjective beginning with IN. What the word ending in LO could be was a mere matter of guessing, as a piece of the top of the stone is gone long ago. Periculo would be too long; besides, I persuaded myself that I saw traces of an outer L, so that one had LLO as indicating bello. The next question was to read the adjective beginning with in; this was the chief difficulty, as the letters are small and, for some unaccountable reason, very crowded. At first I seemed to make out INTIM with a doubtful sort of m, the latter part of which was a perfect N. Then I had visions of a very questionable adjective intimidi, but, after long puzzling over it, and changing my point of view, I discovered that it ended in a very small but perfect IM. Then I ought to have had intimisimi; but I was labouring under the difficulty that I had no clear specimen of an s to judge by; for the one I guessed as the final of principes had a perpendicular stem, but it was so far gone that one could hardly guess the exact shape of its ends. However, I remembered that I was not quite satisfied with the T, as the top stroke was not quite horizontal, and the space left for the left half of it was suspiciously small; this exactly suited a straight s somewhat like L upside down. Then my questionable M analysed itself into GN, with a very small G of the shape of a reaping-hook, and like the bigger G of Dumnogeni. This completed my reading of insignisimi, the second s of which I must admit to be still only a guess. Here must be added that not only are the letters of this word insignisimi comparatively small and crowded, but they run somewhat out of the proper direction of the line, so that the word ends in close proximity to the o of memoria, which is a small letter. The R, however, is larger, so the first P of principes begins lower. In fact, the bottom of the MI is almost on a level with the top of the P following. The rest of the line consists of larger letters, namely, PRINCI, but the last two are very faint; in fact, I am not certain that I could trace the CI quite correctly, and it is even possible that the spelling here is PRINCCI. In that case the line would end exactly opposite the end of the first line. Before and after Nudi I noticed a point, and another after Dumnogeni. Lastly, the c in iacent is so faint as to be difficult to trace; without a drawing or photograph it is impossible to give an exact idea of the spacing and size of the letters on the stone. The II of fili seem to me certain, though I should have expected fili as the more probable spelling in this kind of inscription; and I think that Liberalis never had its final s written on this stone. Similarly I would regard Nudi and Dumnogeni as standing for Nudis and Dumnogenis to be construed as nominatives. I need scarcely say that I have all along regarded the princes in the first part of the epitaph as being the same persons as the two sons of Liberalis in the latter part, and that accordingly I was led to interpret the whole somewhat freely as follows:

Here Nudis and Dumnogenis, princes of happy memory and pre-eminence in war,
Here the two sons of Liberalis lie in the barrow.

As my interpretation of the inscription may have influenced my reading of some of the letters, I have thought it but right to give the former at length, but I must warn the readers of the ACADEMY that the Latinists whom I have consulted are inclined, as already suggested, to treat leti as the noun. I do not feel sure that I have quite accurately understood how they would construe the rest. But one of my friends would construe principes as principis, and translate thus:

Here is the memorial of the death of a prince most distinguished in war, Nudus Dumnogenus.
Here lie in the barrow the two sons of Liberalis.

A word now as to the persons commemorated. The names Nudi and Dumnogeni would in Modern Welsh be Nüð and Dyvnien, and the former is familiar in the pedigrees of the Men of the North; but there it has the epithet Hael, which is exactly the Welsh for Liberalis. Here, however, one cannot possibly read Nudi Liberalis. I should rather suppose that Hael or Liberalis was a standing epithet or surname in Nüð's family; in fact, Dr. Skene, who has associated this stone with it in his Four Ancient Books of Wales (i. 169) gives three Haels of the same generation, namely Rhyðerch Hael, Mordav Hael, and Nüð Hael. The family was descended from a gwledig called Ceredig, who was doubtless the Coroticus of St. Patrick's famous letter. The name Dumnogeni or Dyfnien does not occur so far as I can remember anywhere else, but it is quite in harmony with that of one of the ancestors of Nüð Hael, namely Dywnwal, grandson of Ceredig; for Dywnwal restored to its early form would be Duninwal with the same element dumno- taking the lead in the compound. Dr. Skene has called attention in this connection to a remarkable legend preserved in the MS. of the Venedotian version of the Laws of Wales, which is to the following effect:

"Here Elidir Mubenuaur, a man from the North, was slain; and the Men of the North came here to avenge him. These are the men who came as their leaders, Clidno Eydin, and Nud Hael son of Senillt, and Mordav Hael son of Servari [read Servan], and Retherc Hael son of Tudauwal Tutclit; and they came to Arvon, and, because of the slaying of Elidir at Aber Meuhedus in Arvon, they burnt Arvon as an addition of revenge. And afterwards Rud [read Run] son of Maelcun, with the men of Guinet following him, went on a hosting to the banks of the Forth in the North, and there they were a long while disputing who should take the lead in crossing the Forth."

It is remarkable that a Taliessin poem obscurely associates Rhün with Nüð and Nwython. I think that the passage may be rendered thus, though a very different translation is given in Skene's Four Ancient Books of Wales (i. 338):

"The host of Rhün refused equality
Of rulers' rank with Nüð and Nwython."

Nwython is a name which decidedly belongs to the North in the Old Welsh sense, and I fancy the bearer of it to have been a Pict in alliance with Nüð and his Cumbrians against Rhün, who is supposed to have succeeded his father Maelgwn, and to have lost considerable portions of his dominions. Maelgwn, far the most powerful of the kings of the line of Cunedä, is supposed to have died in the year 547—at any rate that is the date given in the Annales Cambriae. Possibly Rhün's war with the Men of the North occurred soon after his father's death, and so Nüð Hael, as one of the leaders in that war, would date about the middle of the sixth century, or at any rate not long after. Our Nudi may have been that very Nüð, but if not he doubtless belonged to the same princely family, and I should guess that our inscription dates some time in the latter half of the sixth century.

Let it, however, be understood that I mention these surmises merely in order to give some idea of the interest attaching to the Yarrow Stone, and in the hope that they may induce others to inspect the inscription far more thoroughly than I have been able to do, and examine much more closely the historical allusions which may have a bearing on it.

Lastly, my special thanks are due to two gentlemen in the neighbourhood, to the Rev. Malcolm Carment of the Free Church manse for his generous hospitality and ready help in a variety of ways, and to Mr. Lindsay, on whose farm of Whitehope, belonging to the Duke of Buccleugh, the stone stands: Mr. Lindsay had kept the stone covered since last spring with a mixture of soil and stable manure, so that when it was uncovered for me the other day the lichen could be washed off with the greatest ease. Owing to his forethought the stone is now cleaner than it has been perhaps for centuries, and it is owing to this advantage that I have been able to make what progress I have in the matter of reading the inscription.

J. RHYS.

THE ROMAN INSCRIPTION AT WEST PARK.

London: August 23, 1891.

One of the few Roman inscriptions which has intrinsic importance is a dedication to the Emperor Severus, now preserved at West Park, near Fordingbridge. A copy of this inscription has been published, from my readings, by Prof. Mommsen in the Ephemeris (v. p. 250), and the supplement to the third volume of the Corpus (n. 6580). I have since found a copy of the same inscription among the papers of the Society of Antiquaries, and append here a few readings where the copy—made by "Gen. Wolfe, Bombr. R.A." in May, 1801—seems to preserve more lettering than is now on the stone:

1. Spectator's Left.

18. ITTIDIANA
25. VITALIS
26. IOL
27. POL

2. Spectator's Right.

1. GIVRANA
23. ALEXAN
24 end. Add C (astris)
25 end. ,, II
27 end. ,, C
32. PHILADELPIA C
35 init. C end. CASTR SI
36. end. PA
37. RAVILLIVS
40. init. M; end. MARCVS
42 foll M. ATILIVS. M. F. COL. MVRICI
C IVLIVS. C. F. POL. SE
C IVLIVS. C. F.
L VALERI

Most of these additional letters have been lost, no doubt, by the cutting of the stone to fix it into its present position.

F. HAVERFIELD.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

"AN Alphabetical Account of the Nobility and Gentry which are (or lately were) related unto the several Counties of England and Wales. As to their Names, Titles, and Seats by which they are, or have been, generally known and distinguished according as they were received from the hands of Divers Persons, experienced therein in each County by their Public Offices or otherwise. The like never before Published. Printed 1673." The above is a copy of the title-page of a rare work of much genealogical interest and utility, which it is intended to reprint. It is a work well worthy of being thus perpetuated, containing records of a period subsequent to the discontinuance of the Heralds' Visitations. The names recorded therein are over 7400 in number; alphabetically arranged in double column under each county of England and Wales, including Monmouthshire and the Isle of Wight. The status of each individual mentioned is indicated as "nobleman," "esquire," or "gentleman." At the end of the book will be added a return of "The Names of Certain Gentlemen that tarry at Home in every Shire," made in the reign of King Edward the Sixth, and never previously printed.

MUSIC.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

"THE GREAT MUSICIANS."—Cherubini. By Frederick J. Crowest. (Sampson Low.) "No apology, therefore, is needed for this brief monograph of Cherubini." Thus writes the author in his preface; the "therefore" referring to a previous paragraph in which he thinks the character and works of musicians deserve to be recorded "equally with those of potentates, warriors, and ecclesiastics." We cannot quite agree with Mr. Crowest, and think that some of the careless writing, and some of the opinions expressed, decidedly call for apology. As a specimen of the writer's style let us quote two sentences. Speaking of the opera Démophon he says:

"The finished detail, the majestic form, the brilliant instrumentation, the lofty style, the beautiful chorus music, all was of a new order, new from the composer, new to the public who listened to it. Failure that it was, contents and non-contents alike looked forward to a next opera with surprising anxiety."

Here there is faulty grammar, redundancy, anti-climax. Again, why does he write "librettos" on one page, and "libretti" on another?

Then we find it stated that Cherubini went to London in the autumn of 1784, and on the next page that he was present at the Handel Commemoration Festival in July of that year. But now let us come to some of the opinions expressed. In the preface Mr. Crowest tells us that Cherubini was "one who lacked a great faculty, namely, poetry and fancy." Yet on p. 10 he speaks of the "richness of fancy" in Cherubini's dramatic compositions, and on p. 41 the master is described as one "gifted with a rare and keen sense of what is poetic and beautiful." From this Mr. Crowest does not seem to have a settled opinion with regard to Cherubini's merits as a composer. In fact, he is constantly quoting some authority or other, as if distrusting his own judgment. He tells us that the Mass in G "would alone be sufficient to win for its composer an enduring fame as a master in this form of composition." The sentence is redundant, but let that pass. He has previously described works of less import at considerable length, and here one would naturally expect to find further comment. Mr. Crowest merely remarks: "The lengths of the several movements in this Mass are as follows:—Kyrie, 101 bars; Gloria, 503 bars," &c. Our author admires Cherubini for following the example of Gluck, and aiming at dramatic truth.

This admiration is sound. But what does he mean by describing Cherubini as a giant harmonist, "able to gather together the ruins of German, French, and Italian dramatic art-forms, and restore them in reasonable and more rational mould than did Wagner"? Is that a reasonable way of describing the art work of the Bayreuth master? Mr. Crowest, indeed, is unfortunate in his remarks on Wagner. On another page Tannhäuser is spoken of as "persevered recitative." There is another sentence in the preface which calls for mention. It is as follows: "As a composer, Cherubini does not rank with Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, or the last of the Titans of music—Mendelssohn." On page 78 he says that in his masses Cherubini "places himself on an equality with these masters of art." The "masters" are mentioned in the previous sentence; they are, "Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven." By the way, the masses of these masters are elsewhere described as "glorious contributions to sacred musical art," another remark which suggests that our author is not altogether a trustworthy guide.

There is one exceedingly amusing passage about Mendelssohn, the so-called "Titan." "Composers," says Mr. Crowest, do not "imitate him (Cherubini) in melodic turn and harmonic combination after the same fashion that hosts of workers have imitated Mendelssohn." Of course not: Mendelssohn was, to a great extent, a mannerist, and as Mr. Crowest ingeniously remarks on the very next page, Cherubini was remarkable for his "complete freedom from mannerism."

Mr. Crowest's book, in spite of its weakness, has points of interest. His appreciation of the composer is, on the whole, correct, and it is only when he begins to compare him with other composers, that he fails to do justice either to him or to them. The volume concludes with a useful catalogue of Cherubini's works.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal. Part xci., Vol. xii. (London Music Publishing Company.) This number includes a long Fantasia in F by Edwin H. Lemare, organist of the parish church, Sheffield. It opens with an Allegro maestoso of an introductory character, in which the composer shows that he has caught the spirit of Wagner's music. It is followed by a melodious theme with variations; of the latter there are five, all cleverly written, though somewhat mechanical. In Var. 2 chromatic notes are introduced to an alarming extent: Mr. Lemare seems to be trying to out-Spohr Spohr. The Finale Fugato shows skill, but unfortunately there is anticlimax, for the first part is better than the last. A solemn march by Walther H. Sangster is simple; the trio is not over refined.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MR. BUCHANAN'S NEW POEM.

This day is published, crown 8vo, price 8s., with Illustrations by Rudolf Blind, Hume Nisbet, Peter Macnab, &c., Mr. ROBERT BUCHANAN'S new Poem, entitled "THE OUTCAST": A RHYME FOR THE TIME.

CHATTO & WINDUS, PICCADILLY.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE.

No. 911.—SEPTEMBER, 1891.—28. 6d.

CONTENTS.—DIAMOND DIGGING IN SOUTH AFRICA, by Lieut.-Colonel Henry Knollys, R.A.—THE SONGS AND BALLADS OF FIFE.—ACROSS RANNOCH MOOR.—CHRONICLES OF WESTERLY: A PROVINCIAL SKETCH.—MACBETH AS THE CELTIC TYPE.—MY PYTHAGOREAN FRIEND.—ETON MONTEM: A MEMORY OF THE PAST.—EARLY SETTLERS IN ENGLISH AMERICA.—A COUNTRY TOWN.—A BLACK STAG IN MONAR.—MR. RUSSELL LOWELL.

WILLIAM BLACKWOOD & SONS, EDINBURGH AND LONDON.

Monthly, price Half-a-Crown.

THE CONTEMPORARY REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

A MONTH IN SOUTHERN INDIA. By the Rt. Hon. Sir M. E. GUEST DUFF.
HENRIK IBSEN'S POEMS. By PHILIP H. WERSTED.
LAURENCE OLIPIANT. By JULIA WEDGWOOD.
THE NATIONALISATION OF CATHEDRALS. By H. W. MASSINGHAM.
PICTOR SACRILEGUS: A.D. 1483. By VERNON LEE.
THE FOURTH GOSPEL. By Professor EMIL SCHÜRER, D.D.
JOHANN SEBASTIAN BACH. By WILLIAM F. AUTHOR.
MODERN ASTRONOMY. By Sir R. S. BALL, LL.D., F.R.S.
THE ANTIPODEANS.—II. By D. CHRISTIE MURRAY.
Isbister & Co., Limited, 15 and 16, Tavistock Street, Covent Garden.

PRICE ONE SHILLING.

MURRAY'S MAGAZINE.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER.

CALVARY and the TOMB OF CHRIST. Rev. HASKETT SMITH.
ESTHER VANHORN RIGH. Part II. Chaps. 1-2. Mrs. WOODS.
AMONGST THE CAGED-DWELLERS. J. THEODORE BENT.
LOVE IS ENOUGH. M. C. E.
THE ROMANTIC EPISODE in the LIFE of MISS CHARLOTTE O'MARA. HANSACH LANSCH.
TEMPER. By the AUTHOR of "THE LETTERS from the BALTIC."
SOCIAL BATH in the LAST CENTURY. Chap. IV. Mrs. A. PHILLIPS.
STRAY CHILDREN in FICTION. E. C. SELLAR.
THIS LIFE. D. M. BRUCE.
BEGUN in JEST. Chaps. 20-21. Mrs. NEWMAN.
NOTES of the MONTH.—OUR LIBRARY LIST.
London: JOHN MURRAY, Albemarle Street.

THE NEW REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.—Price Ninepence.

A FEW WORDS about MR. LOWELL. By BRET HARTE.
WOMEN and WORK.
I. By J. LES SIMONS (Member of the French Senate).
II. By CLEMENSINA BLAVK.
TRAINING: its Bearing on Health. No. 1. By Sir MORELL MACKENZIE.
RUSSIA under ALEXANDER III. By Professor GEFFCKEN.
LITERATURE in the UNITED STATES. By G. PARSONS LATHROP.
THEODORE KORNER. By H. SCHUTZ WILSON.
FRENCH HYPOCRISY. By A. FRENCHMAN.
SWALLOW and SPARROWS. By Lady LINDSAY.
London: LONGMANS, GREEN, & CO.

MACMILLAN'S MAGAZINE,

No. 383.—SEPTEMBER, 1891.

CONTENTS.

1. A FIRST FAMILY OF TASAJARA. By BRET HARTE. (Chaps. IV.-V.)
2. HENRI PESTALOZZI. By C. J. HAMILTON.
3. FRUIT-GROWING IN FLORIDA. By ARTHUR MONTEFIORE.
4. SALOME.
5. THE HUMOURS OF BAUCARAT.
6. THE LADIES' WREATH.
7. A SERMON IN ROUEN. By W. F. STOCKLEY.
8. THE STORY OF AN OAK TREE. By ALAN ADAIR.
9. THE GREAT WORK.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

NOTICE.—The price of the ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE is now Sixpence Net. The terms on which it is supplied to Booksellers are not such as will enable them to sell the Magazine at less than the published price.

THE ENGLISH ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE

For SEPTEMBER, 1891, contains—

1. STUDIOUS MOMENTS. Engraved by T. W. LASCELLES, from a Drawing by MAX L. DRY. Front.
2. A SONG OF THE YEAR. LEWIS MORRIS.
3. THE RUSSO-JEWISH IMMIGRANT.—II. The Rev. S. SINGER. Illustrated.
4. THE QUEEN'S PRIVATE GARDENS at OSBORNE. L. R. WHEELER. Illustrated.
5. TWO JEALOUSIES. ALAN ADAIR.
6. EMANUEL HOSPITAL, WESTMINSTER. ROBERT HUNTER. Illustrated.
7. TURKISH GIRLHOOD. By FATIMA. Illustrated from Photographs.
8. CHISWICK, PAST and PRESENT. C. J. HAMILTON. Illustrated by Mrs. Jolyng Rowe.
9. THE WITCH OF PRAGUE. CHAPS. XXVI.—XXVII. (Concluded.) F. MARION CHAMFORD. Illustrated by W. J. HENDESSY.

MACMILLAN & Co., London.

THE FORTNIGHTLY REVIEW.

SEPTEMBER.

- ON the ORIGIN, PROPAGATION, and PREVENTION of PHTHISIS. By PROFESSOR TYNDALE.
- LOWELL in his POETRY. By SIDNEY LOW.
- A SURVEY OF the THIRTEENTH CENTURY. By FREDERIC HARRISON.
- A FESSIMIST PLAYWRIGHT. By WILLIAM ARCHER.
- AN OLD GREEK EXPLORER OF BRITAIN. By KARL BLIND.
- A BALKAN CONFEDERATION. By JAMES BOUCHIER.
- M. MAURICE BARRES. By EDWARD DELILLE.
- SOCIAL LIFE in AUSTRALIA. By FRANCIS ADAMS.
- SWISS ATHLETIC SPORTS. By J. A. SYMONDS.
- A TRIPTYCH. By the Editor.
- CORRESPONDENCE:
- The Papuan and his Masters. By HENRY O. FORDES. (HUME NISBET)

CHAPMAN & HALL, Limited

TERMS OF SUBSCRIPTIONS

TO

THE ACADEMY.

(PAYABLE IN ADVANCE.)

	YEARLY.		HALF-YEARLY.		QUARTERLY.
	£	s. d.	£	s. d.	£	s. d.
If obtained of a Newsvendor or at a Railway Station	0	13	0	6	0	3
Including Postage to any part of the United Kingdom.	0	15	0	7	0	10
Including Postage to any part of France, Germany, India, China &c.	0	17	0	8	0	4

AGENCIES.

London Agents, Messrs. W. H. SMITH & SON, 186, Strand.

Copies of the ACADEMY can be obtained every Saturday morning in EDINBURGH of Mr. MENZIES; in DUBLIN of Messrs. EASON & SON, 40, Sackville-street; in MANCHESTER of Mr. J. HEYWOOD. Ten days after date of publication, in NEW YORK, of Messrs. G. P. PUTNAM'S SONS.

ESTABLISHED 1861.

BIRKBECK BANK,

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.

THREE per CENT. INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.

TWO per CENT. on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £100

STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposit, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT. per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.

The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

THEATRES.

ADELPHI THEATRE,

Sole Proprietors and Managers, A. & S. GARRI.
To-night, at 7.45, a new and original drama, by Geo. R. Sims and Robert Buchanan, entitled,
THE TRUMPET CALL.

COMEDY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, HUSBAND AND WIFE.
Messrs. C. Brookfield, W. F. Hawtrej, J. Nelson, G. Gurney, S. H. Lechmere, W. Wyas, and G. Giddens; Mesdames Vane Featherston, Ada Murray, Ethel Matthews, Edith Kenward, Ethel Norton, and Lottie Venne.
Preceded, at 8.10, by FOR CHARITY'S SAKE.

CRITERION THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. CHARLES WYNDHAM.
This Evening, at 8.30, an Operatic Comedy, adapted from the French of Messieurs Audran and Boucheron, by F. C. Burnand, entitled MISS DECIMA.
The cast includes Messrs. David James, Charles Conyers, Chauncey Olcott, Tempilar Saxe, W. Dale; Mesdames M. A. Victor, Josephine Findlay, F. Frances, Lucy Buckstone, and Nesville.

DRURY LANE THEATRE.

Sole Lessee and Manager, Sir AUGUSTUS HARRIS.
In active preparation, an original Drama, entitled A SAILOR'S KNOT, written by Henry Pettitt, to be produced on SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1891.
Messrs. Charles Warner, Charles Glenney, Edmund Gurney, Julian Cross, Fred. Dobell, and Harry Nicholls; Mesdames Millward and Fanny Brough.

GLOBE THEATRE.

To-night, at 8, DAVID CHRISTIE MURRAY will make his appearance in his own Comedy-Drama, NED'S CHUM.

GRAND THEATRE.

MINNIE PALMER, as MY BROTHER'S SISTER, at 8.15.
Preceded, at 7.30, by WELL MATCHED.

LYRIC THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening at 8.15. LA CIGALE
Messrs. H. Monkhouse, C. Hayden Coffin, Garden, Lewis, Peachey, Mudie, and the Chevalier Scovel; Mesdames Geraldine Umar, Clements, Rose, Melville, Newton, St. Cyr, Clay, Schubert, Ellis, and Jefferies.
Preceded, at 7.30, by LOVE and LAW.

NEW OLYMPIC THEATRE.

Proprietor, Mr. CHARLES WILMOT.
Manager, W. W. KELLY.
At 8, Grand revival of Sardou's
THEODORA.
Messrs. Fuller Mellish, Murray, Corson, G. W. Cockburn, T. W. Percival, Leslie Corcoran, F. Victor, Henry de Solla, Alker, Ludlow, Warton, &c.; Mesdames Bertie Willis, Lilian Seacombe, Louisa Wyatt, and Grace Hawthorne.

PRINCE OF WALES' THEATRE.

Under the sole direction of Mr. HORACE SEDGER.
This Evening, at 9, the great Parisian success, by arrangement with Mr. Charles Lauri, a Musical Play without words, entitled L'ENFANT PRODIGE.
Matinee every Wednesday and Saturday, at 3.
Preceded, at 8, by THE 15TH OF OCTOBER.

PRINCESS'S THEATRE.

To-night (Aug. 29) at 8,
ARRAH-NA-POGUE.
Miss Amy Rosello, Mr. Arthur Dacre, and Mr. Harry Neville their first appearance in London since their return from America. Mrs. John Carter, and Miss Ella Terriss; Messrs. Wilfred E. Shine, Charles Ashford, Henry Bedford, Bissett Roe, John Carter, &c.

SAVOY THEATRE.

Proprietor and Manager, R. D'O'LY CARTE.
Every Evening, at 8.30, THE NAUTCH GIRL.
Messrs. R. Barrington, F. Wyatt, W. H. Denny, F. Thornton, and C. Pounds; Mesdames L. Snyder, L. Rowe, A. Cole, C. Tinnie, Sautmarcz, Lawrence, and J. Bond.

SHAFTESBURY THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LANCASHIRE SAILOR.
At 9.15, A COMMISSION.
And at 10, A PANTOMIME REHEARSAL.
Messrs. B. Thomas, F. Dawson, C. Coutts, C. P. Little, W. L. Branscombe, Maxwell, and W. Grossmith; Mesdames E. Chester, B. Lamb, D. Drummond, S. Grey, and Norreys.

STRAND THEATRE.

Lessee and Manager, Mr. WILLIE EDQUIN.
Every Evening, at 8.15,
THE LATE LAMENTED.
Messrs. Willie Edouin, Eversfield, Hawtrej, Cape, Barnacough, and H. Standing; Mesdames Fanny Brough, Edmund Phelps, Eva Moore, and Venie Bennett.
At 8, BACK IN FIVE MINUTES.

VAUDEVILLE THEATRE.

Every Evening, at 9, THE MISCHIEFMAKER.
Messrs. Harry Paulton, Charles Fawcett, Philip Cunningham, John Curter, Wheatman, and Nelson; Mesdames Phyllis Ayrian, Alice Bruce, B. Eversleigh, Florence Haydon, and Edith Bruce.
Preceded, at 8, by THE EQUEL.

DR. MACLAREN'S NEW VOLUME.

Just out, crown 8vo, 392 pp., cloth boards, 6s., post free.
THE HOLY OF HOLIES: a Series of Sermons on the 14th, 15th, and 16th Chapters of the Gospel by John. By ALEXANDER MACLAREN, D.D.

BY DR. MACLAREN.

SECOND EDITION, crown 8vo, cloth boards, 5s., post free.
THE UNCHANGING CHRIST, and other Sermons.

POPULAR EDITION.

Large 4to, with PORTRAIT, price 6d.
JOSEPH MAZZINI: a Memoir by E. A. V. with two Essays by MAZZINI: "THOUGHTS on DEMOCRACY" and "THE DUTIES of MAN."

LONDON: ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD, 21 and 22, FURNIVAL STREET, E.C.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S A1 SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—
11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

FRY'S

Lancet—"Pure and very soluble."
Medical Times—"Eminently suitable for Invalids."

PURE CONCENTRATED

Sir C. A. Cameron—"I have never tasted Cocoa that I like so well."
President Royal College of Surgeons, Ireland.

COCOA

Paris Exhibition 1889: GOLD MEDAL awarded to J. S. FRY & SONS.

MESSRS. MACMILLAN & CO.'S BOOKS FOR SCHOOLS AND COLLEGES.

NEW PUBLICATIONS and TEXT-BOOKS for the OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE LOCAL EXAMINATIONS, the OXFORD and CAMBRIDGE SCHOOLS EXAMINATIONS, LONDON UNIVERSITY and COLLEGE OF PRECEPTORS EXAMINATIONS.

LATIN.

CÆSAR.—GALLIC WAR. BOOKS II. and III. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. W. G. RUTHERFORD, LL.D. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

BOOK IV. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. BRYANS, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

BOOK V. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. COLBECK, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

BOOK VI. With Notes and Vocabulary by C. COLBECK, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

CICERO.—SECOND PHILIPPIC. Edited by Prof. J. E. B. MAYOR. 3s. 6d.

HORACE.—ODES. BOOKS I. II. and III. With Notes and Vocabularies by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 1s. 6d. each. Without Vocabularies. Fcp. 8vo, 2s. each.

EPISTLES and ARS POETICA. Edited by Prof. A. S. WILKINS. Fcp. 8vo, 5s.

SELECT EPODES and ARS POETICA. Edited by H. A. DALTON, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

THE SATIRES. Edited by ARTHUR PALMER, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 5s.

JUVENAL.—THIRTEEN SATIRES. Edited by E. G. HARDY, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 5s.

LIVY.—BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. H. M. STEPHENSON, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

BOOK V. With Notes and Vocabulary by M. ALFORD. 18mo. In preparation.

BOOKS XXI. and XXII. Edited by Rev. W. W. CAPES, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

Also, Adapted from Mr. CAPES's Edition, with Notes and Vocabularies, by J. E. MELHUSH, M.A. 1s. 6d. each.

PINDAR.—THE NEMEAN ODES. Edited by J. B. BURY, M.A., Dublin. 8vo, 12s.

MANCHESTER EXAMINER.—"Mr. Bury's full and masterly edition of 'The Nemean Odes' should receive a cordial welcome."

PLAUTUS.—CAPTIVI. Edited by A. R. S. HALLIDIE, M.A. In the press.

TACITUS.—ANNALS. BOOKS I. and II. Edited by J. S. REID, Litt.D. In preparation.

— THE HISTORIES. With Introduction, Notes, and an Index by Rev. W. A. SPOONER, M.A. 8vo, 16s.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"The commentary is full, but not too full . . . and the difficult passages are handled with sound scholarship and tact. . . . On the whole this much-needed edition is an excellent piece of careful work."

VERGIL.—BUCOLICA. Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The notes are copious, correct, and suggestive, exactly hitting off the wants of boys."

VIRGIL.—ÆNEID. BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— ÆNEID. BOOKS II. and III. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d. each.

— ÆNEID. BOOKS II. and III. Edited by E. W. HOWSON, M.A. (without Vocabulary). Fcp. 8vo, 2s.

— ÆNEID. BOOK VI. With Notes and Vocabulary by T. E. PAGE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— ÆNEID. BOOK VII. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. A. CALVERT. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

GREEK.

ÆSCHINES.—IN OTESIPHONTA. Edited by the Rev. T. GWATKIN, M.A., and E. S. SHUCKERGH, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 5s.

ÆSCHYLUS.—AGAMEMNON. With Translation by A. W. VERRALL, Litt.D. 8vo, 12s.

DEMOSTHENES.—DE CORONA. Edited by B. DRAKE, M.A. Seventh Edition, Revision by E. S. SHUCKERGH, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

EURIPIDES.—ALCESTIS. With Notes and Vocabulary by M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— ION. Edited by Rev. M. A. BAYFIELD, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

— HECUBA. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. J. BOND, M.A., and Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— BACCHÆ. Edited by Prof. R. Y. TYRRELL, M.A. In preparation.

— IPHIGENIA in AULIS. Edited by E. B. ENGLAND, M.A. 8vo, 7s. 6d.

HERODOTUS.—BOOK III. Edited by G. C. MACAULAY, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 2s. 6d.

BOOK VI. Edited by Prof. J. STRACHAN, M.A. Fcp. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

MANCHESTER GUARDIAN.—"It is far and away the best edition of any single book of Herodotus that has yet appeared in this country."

BOOK VII. Edited by Mrs. MONTAGU BUTLER. Fcp. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"The notes do high credit to the editor's scholarship."

THUCYDIDES.—BOOK IV. CHAPS. 1-41. Edited by C. E. GRAVES. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— BOOK II. By E. C. MARCHANT, M.A. Nearly ready.

— BOOKS VI. and VII. Edited by Rev. P. FROST, M.A. With Map. Fcp. 8vo, 3s. 6d.

XENOPHON.—ANABASIS. BOOK I. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A., 1s. 6d.; by E. A. WELLS, M.A., 18mo, 1s. 6d.

— ANABASIS. BOOK II. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. A. S. WALPOLE, M.A. 1s. 6d.

— ANABASIS. BOOK III. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. G. N. NALL, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

GLASGOW HERALD.—"The best eighteenpenny-worth of text and commentary that we have come across for many a day."

— ANABASIS. BOOK IV. With Notes and Vocabulary by Rev. E. D. STONE, M.A. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

ENGLISH.

ELIZABETHAN LITERATURE (1560-1665). By GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY LITERATURE (1660-1780). By EDMUND GOSSE. Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d.

A SHORT HISTORY of the ENGLISH PEOPLE. By J. R. GREEN, M.A. 8s. 6d. Part I. With Analysis. Part II. (1201-1553). Part III. (1540-1689). Part IV. (1689-1873). 3s. each.

DRYDEN. By G. SAINTSBURY (English Men of Letters) 1s. 6d.; sewed, 1s.

GRAY.—POEMS. With Introduction and Notes by JOHN BRADSHAW, LL.D., Inspector of Schools, Madras. Globe 8vo, 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

MILTON.—PARADISE LOST. BOOKS I. and II. With Introduction and Notes by MICHAEL MACMILLAN, B.A. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

POPE. By LESLIE STEPHEN. (English Men of Letters) 1s. 6d.; sewed, 1s.

— POETICAL WORKS (including the Satires and Epistles). Edited by Prof. A. W. WARD. Globe Edition. 3s. 6d.

SCOTT.—LADY of the LAKE. With Introduction and Notes by F. T. PALGRAVE, M.A. 1s.

— LADY of the LAKE. With Introduction and Notes by G. H. STUART, M.A. 2s. 6s.; sewed, 2s.

— THE LAY of the LAST MINSTREL. By G. H. STUART, M.A., and E. H. ELLIOT, B.A. Globe 8vo, 2s.; sewed, 1s. 9d.

SHAKESPEARE.—AS YOU LIKE IT. With Introduction and Notes by K. DEIGHTON. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

— ANTHONY and CLEOPATRA. By the Same. Cloth, 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.

— CORIOLANUS. By the Same. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.

— HAMLET. By the Same. 2s. 6d.; sewed, 2s.

— HENRY V. By the Same. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

— KING LEAR. By the Same. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

— THE MERCHANT of VENICE. By the Same. 1s. 9d.; sewed, 1s. 6d.

TENNYSON.—THE COMING of ARTHUR and THE PASSING of ARTHUR. Edited by F. J. HOWE, M.A. Globe 8vo, 2s.

— ENOCH ARDEN. With Introduction and Notes by W. T. WEBB, M.A., Professor of English Literature, Presidency College, Calcutta. Globe 8vo, 2s.

— THE PRINCESS. With Introduction and Notes by H. M. PERCIVAL, M.A. Globe 8vo. In the press.

DIVINITY.

A CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By G. F. MACLEAR. 18mo, 1s. 6d.

A FIRST CLASS-BOOK of the CATECHISM of the CHURCH of ENGLAND. By the Same. With Scripture Proofs. 18mo, 6d.

ST. LUKE'S GOSPEL. Greek Text, with notes, by Rev. J. BOND, M.A. 2s. 6d.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

A COMPENDIOUS FRENCH DICTIONARY. By GUSTAVE MASSON. 3s. 6d.

MOLIERE.—LE MEDECIN MALGRE LUI. Edited by G. E. PASSAULT. 1s.

— LE MISANTHROPE. By the Same. 1s.

— LES PRECIEUSES RIDICULES. By the same. 1s.

SCHILLER.—MARIA STUART. Edited by C. Sheldon, Litt.D. 2s. 6d.

MATHEMATICS.

RIDER PAPERS on EUCLID. BOOKS I. and II. By RUPERT DEAKIN, M.A. 18mo, cloth, 1s.

THE ELEMENTS of EUCLID. BOOKS I. and II. By I. TODDUNTER, F.R.S. 18mo, 1s.

THE PROGRESSIVE EUCLID. BOOKS I. and II. With Notes, Exercises, and Deductions. Edited by A. T. RICHARDSON, M.A. Illustrated. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SCOTSMAN.—"A capital Euclid to begin on."

THE TRIGONOMETRY of ONE ANGLE. By the Rev. J. B. LOCK, M.A. Globe 8vo, 2s. 6d.

SCIENCE.

A NEW TEXT-BOOK OF CRYSTALLOGRAPHY.

ELEMENTS of CRYSTALLOGRAPHY. For Students of Chemistry, Physics, and Mineralogy. By GEORGE HUNTINGTON WILLIAMS, Ph.D. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

LESSONS in ELEMENTARY BIOLOGY. By T. JEFFERY PARKER, B.Sc., F.R.S. Illustrated. Crown 8vo, cloth 10s. 6d.

OUTLINES of PSYCHOLOGY. By HAROLD HOFFDING. Translated by M. E. LOWDES. Crown 8vo, cloth 6s.

SCOTSMAN.—"It is as clear and as comprehensive a text-book of modern scientific psychology as will be found in any language."

A COURSE of PRACTICAL INSTRUCTION in BOTANY. By F. O. POWELL, D.Sc., F.R.S., Regius Professor of Botany in the University of Glasgow. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, cloth 10s. 6d.

ELEMENTARY LESSONS in HEAT, LIGHT, and SOUND. By D. E. JONES, B.Sc. Globe 8vo, cloth 2s. 6d.

LONDON: MACMILLAN & CO.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1009.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

CASSELL & COMPANY'S ANNOUNCEMENTS.

NEW VOLUMES READY SHORTLY.

- THE CABINET PORTRAIT GALLERY. Containing 36 Cabinet Photographs of Eminent Men and Women of the day, from Photographs by Messrs. W. & D. DOWNEY, Photographers to the Queen. With Biographical Sketches. Second Series. 15s.
- THE WORLD of ADVENTURE. With Several Hundred Original Illustrations. Complete in Three Volumes, containing 2,300 4to pp., bound in cloth, 9s. each.
- LETTERS of MARIE BASHKIRTSEFF. Translated from the French by MARY J. SERRANO, with Portrait, Autograph Letters, &c. 7s. 6d.
- THE DICTIONARY of RELIGION. An Encyclopaedia of Christian and other Religious Doctrines, Denominations, Sects, Heresies, Ecclesiastical Terms, History, Biography, &c., &c. By the Rev. WILLIAM BENHAM, B.D. Cheap Edition. 10s. 6d.
- WATTS PHILLIPS, ARTIST and PLAYWRIGHT. By Miss E. WATTS PHILLIPS. With 32 Plates. 10s. 6d.

THE "SHORT STORY" LIBRARY.

The growing desire for Short Stories which is so striking a feature in the public taste of to-day has induced Messrs. Cassell & Company to issue a Series of Original Works by popular English and American Authors. The first Books of this Series will be:—

- OTTO the KNIGHT, &c. By OCTAVE THANET. 5s.
- FOURTEEN to ONE, &c. By ELIZABETH STUART PHELPS. 6s.
- ELEVEN POSSIBLE CASES. Stories by FRANK R. STOCKTON, Q, and other Writers. 5s.
- FELICIA. By FANNY N. D. MURFREE. 5s.
- NOUGHTS and CROSSES. By Q, Author of "Dead Man's Rock," &c. 5s.
- THE POET'S AUDIENCE, and DELILAH. By CLARA SAVILE CLARKE. 5s.

CHEAP ILLUSTRATED EDITIONS OF

THE "TREASURE ISLAND" SERIES.

- KING SOLOMON'S MINES. By H. RIDER HAGGARD. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- "KIDNAPPED." By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- TREASURE ISLAND. By R. L. STEVENSON. With 25 Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
- THE SPLENDID SPUR. By Q. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- THE MASTER of BALLANTRAE. By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- THE BLACK ARROW: a Tale of the Two Roses. By R. L. STEVENSON. Illustrated. 3s. 6d.
- CASSELL'S STOREHOUSE of GENERAL INFORMATION. Fully Illustrated with High-class Wood Engravings, and with Maps and Coloured Plates. Vol. I. 5s.
- A YEAR'S COOKERY. Giving Dishes for Breakfast, Luncheon, and Dinner for every Day in the Year. By PHYLLIS BROWNE. New and Enlarged Edition. 3s. 6d.
- GREAT-GRANDMAMMA and ELSIE. By GEORGINA M. SYNGE. Illustrated by Gordon Browne. 3s. 6d.
- ROBIN'S RIDE. By Miss E. DAVENPORT ADAMS. Illustrated by W. S. STACEY. 3s. 6d.
- ELIZABETH GILBERT and her WORK for the BLIND. By FRANCES MARTIN. 2s. 6d.

NEW SERIALS.

"Fascinating beyond any romance."—Birmingham Post.
PART I, NOW READY, price 7d., of an Entirely NEW AND REVISED EDITION OF

THE STORY of the HEAVENS.

By Sir ROBERT STAWELL BALL, LL.D., F.R.A.S.,
Royal Astronomer of Ireland.

Illustrated with COLOURED PLATES and numerous Wood Engravings.

* * With Part I. is given a large and valuable STAR MAP
"It is doubtful whether any previous effort to popularise astronomy, in our language at any rate, deserves to rank as highly as the delightful and most instructive work which the Royal Astronomer for Ireland happily entitles THE STORY OF THE HEAVENS. Sir Robert Ball not only astounds the imagination, but convinces the reason of his readers."—Scott. News.
"A story of boundless interest and of exquisite beauty."
The National Times.

* * * The NEW WORK uniform with "The World of Adventure."

IN MONTHLY PARTS, 7d.

THE WORLD of ROMANCE.

WITH NEW AND ORIGINAL ILLUSTRATIONS.

Part I., ready September 24. price 7d.,
Including Large Tinted Presentation Plate.

"The World of Romance" will form a representative collection from the romance of all ages and all countries. Its pages will be filled with the strangest company, and will tell of the exploits and adventures of gods and heroes; of giants and fairies; of mermaids, hydrae, and chimeras dire; of ghosts and vampires; stories of knight-errantry and chivalry will take their place with tales of the monkish chronicles; the modern masters of romance will be found side by side with the Arabian chroniclers. There will be stories of fear and stories of gallantry; stories to chill the blood and to make it run briskly in the veins. The book will be even more fascinating than "THE WORLD OF ADVENTURE," and will have the same Editor as that most popular work.

THE NEW FINE-ART WORK.

Messrs. CASSELL & COMPANY will publish in Monthly Parts, price 7d.,

HISTORIC HOUSES of the UNITED KINGDOM.

PROFUSELY ILLUSTRATED WITH HIGH-CLASS ORIGINAL ENGRAVINGS.

PART I., ready SEPT. 24, Price 7d

This New Work will present a delineation by pen and pencil of the principal ancestral homes of Great Britain and Ireland which are so closely connected with the chief events that have marked the course of our national history. As in the case of "CATHEDRALS, ABBEYS, AND CHURCHES," the text will be furnished by well-known writers, whose descriptive accounts of the various "Houses" will be full of interesting facts, and lightened by anecdotal reminiscences of illustrious persons, past and present. "Historic Houses" will be profusely and appropriately illustrated with high-class Engravings, and the fine-art character of the Work will be preserved in all branches of its production.

* * * Prospectuses of the above NEW SERIALS may be obtained at all Book-shops, or will be sent post free on application to the Publishers.

NEW BOOKS FOR THE SEASON, 1891-92.

Messrs. CASSELL & COMPANY'S List of NEW and FORTHCOMING VOLUMES is Now Ready, and a copy will be sent post free on application to

CASSELL & COMPANY, LIMITED, LUDGATE HILL, LONDON.

TABLE OF CONTENTS.

Table listing articles and their page numbers, including 'CHEYNE'S ORIGIN OF THE PSALMS', 'FANNY KEHLE'S FURTHER RECORDS', 'MRS. PIATT'S IRISH WILD-FLOWER', etc.

CATALOGUES.

FOREIGN BOOKS and PERIODICALS promptly supplied on moderate terms. CATALOGUES on application. DULAU & CO., 37, SOHO SQUARE.

CATALOGUE of Scarce and Interesting BOOKS in all Classes of Literature, at low prices, will be sent post free on application.

TO ARTISTS and others.—TO be LET, excellent STUDIO and snug BACHELOR'S QUARTERS combined, in central position, and midway between City and West-end.

MESSRS. DRUMMOND & CO., 14, HENRIETTA STREET, COVENT GARDEN, W.C., are the sole representatives in Great Britain of HERR HANFSTAENGL.

Just published, crown 4to, over 300 pages, fully illustrated, and handsomely bound in cloth, price 21s.

ROCKINGHAM CASTLE and the WATSONS. By CHAS. WISE. ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON.

The Autotype Company, London,

Renowned for the excellence of its process of high-class BOOK ILLUSTRATION. Adopted by the Trustees of the British Museum, the Learned Societies, and the leading Publishers.

AUTO-GRAVURE

The Autotype process adapted to Photographic Engraving on copper. Copies of Paintings by Gainsborough, Holman Hunt, Herbert Schmalz, &c., of Portraits by Holl, R.A., etc.

THE

AUTOTYPE FINE ART GALLERY,

74, NEW OXFORD STREET, LONDON,

Is remarkable for its display of Copies of celebrated Works by

"THE GREAT MASTERS"

from the Louvre, Vatican, Hermitage, and the National Galleries of Italy, Spain, Holland, and London, including H.M. Collections at Buckingham Palace and Windsor Castle.

Albums of reference to the various Galleries are provided, are easily looked over, and of great interest to lovers of Art. The new Pamphlet, "AUTOTYPE: A Decorative and Educational Art," post free at any address.

The AUTOTYPE FINE ART CATALOGUE, 186 pp., free per post, for Sixpence,

THE AUTOTYPE COMPANY, LONDON.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following Members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical Subjects for the County of Monmouth:—

A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY. A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.

The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses.—Applications, together with testimonials and references, should be sent in not later than SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 19th, 1891, to the undersigned, from whom further information in regard to the duties of the Staff may be obtained.

Cardiff, August 28th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The CHAIR of GREEK is now vacant through the election of Professor Roberts as Principal of the University College, Aberystwyth. The Council will proceed to the appointment of the new PROFESSOR in September next.

Cardiff, August 4th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The DEPARTMENTS of ARTS, SCIENCE, and ENGINEERING and the NORMAL DEPARTMENTS for INTERMEDIATE and ELEMENTARY TEACHERS will OPEN on MONDAY, October 5th, 1891.

University College, Cardiff, August 11th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a LECTURER in GEOLOGY. The stipend of the Lecturer will be £200 per annum.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF MONMOUTH.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a DIRECTOR of the STAFF of TRAVELLING TEACHERS in TECHNICAL SUBJECTS.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

COUNTY OF GLAMORGAN.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint the following members of a Staff of Travelling Teachers in Technical subjects for the County of Glamorgan:—

A LECTURER in MATHEMATICS and THEORETICAL MECHANICS.

A LECTURER in CHEMISTRY and METALLURGY.

A LECTURER in GEOLOGY and MINING.

ONE or TWO LECTURERS in MECHANICAL ENGINEERING.

The stipend of each Lecturer will be £200 per annum, together with travelling expenses.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES Registrar.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE of SOUTH WALES and MONMOUTHSHIRE, CARDIFF.

The Council of the University College of South Wales and Monmouthshire is prepared to appoint a PROFESSOR of MINING. The stipend of the Professor will be £350 per annum.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

THE THEOLOGICAL COLLEGE, BALA, NORTH WALES.

The College will be OPENED on the 28th and 29th of this month. Principal FAIRBAIRN will PREACH at 4 p.m. on MONDAY, the 28th.

Cardiff, August 12th, 1891.

Ivor JAMES, Registrar.

HUDDERSFIELD TECHNICAL SCHOOL.

FRENCH AND GERMAN.

The Governors will shortly appoint a TEACHER of FRENCH and GERMAN, to commence duties in January next.

September 1st, 1891.

AUSTIN KEES.

ST. PAUL'S SCHOOL.—AN EXAMINATION for filling up about FOURTEEN VACANCIES on the FOUNDATION will be held on SEPTEMBER 30th.

For information apply to the Bursar, St. Paul's School, West Kensington, W.

THE COUNTY COUNCIL for the COUNTY PALATINE of LANCASTER.

The Technical Instruction Committee of the Lancashire County Council is prepared to receive applications for the appointment of DIRECTOR of TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION and ORGANIZING SECRETARY.

Candidates must be over 25 years of age and under 50, and the elected candidate will be expected to enter on his duties on the 6th November, 1891.

The official will not be eligible for a pension, and the appointment is to be determinable by a six months' notice in writing on either side.

County Office, Preston, 1st September, 1891.

THE MASON COLLEGE, BIRMINGHAM.

SESSION 1891-92.

FACULTIES OF ARTS AND SCIENCE.

The NEXT SESSION commences on WEDNESDAY, SEPTEMBER 30th.

A Syllabus, containing full information as to the various courses of instruction, lecture days and hours, fees, entrance and other scholarships, &c., is published by Messrs. CURSIN, New-street, Birmingham.

The ANNUAL SESSION will commence on WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 7th.

By order of the LORDS OF THE COMMITTEE OF COUNCIL ON EDUCATION.

TUDOR HALL LADIES' COLLEGE, FOREST HILL, S.E., LONDON.

Principals—Rev. Dr. and Mrs. TODD.

Head Mistress—Miss M. TODD (Girton), Cambridge.

Professors—Secley, King's Coll.; Dr. Duleken, Rudolph, Lowman, Louis, Drechl, Signor Garcia, Laripont, Ferrero, Churton Collins, &c.

SCHOOL for the DAUGHTERS of GEN- TLEMEN—Sea air and home life, with thorough education and good masters.

PREPARATORY SCHOOL OF MUSIC, 114, Cambridge Street, Warwick Square, S.W.

THE PUBLISHER of a high-class American magazine which reaches the most intelligent classes is prepared to PURCHASE the PLATES of a SUITABLE WORK.

BIRMINGHAM MUSICAL FESTIVAL, 1891.

TUESDAY, WEDNESDAY, THURSDAY, and FRIDAY, OCTOBER 6th, 7th, 8th and 9th, 1891.

PRINCIPAL VIOLINISTS.—Madame ALBANI, Miss ANNA WILLIAMS, Mrs. BREGENTON, Miss MONTRE, Miss HILDA WILSON, Madame HOPE GLENN, Mr. EDWARD LEVY, Mr. IVER McKAY, Mr. SANTLEY, Mr. JAMES MILLS, Mr. BREKENTON, and Mr. HENSCHEL.

TUESDAY MORNING.—"ELLAH," TUESDAY EVENING.—"DOR A. C. MACKENZIE'S SEVEN CREATOR SPIRITUS,"

WEDNESDAY MORNING.—"ST. MATTHEW PASSION MUSIC," WEDNESDAY EVENING.—"STANFORD'S NEW DRAMATIC ORATORIO, 'EDEN' &c."

THURSDAY MORNING.—"MESSIAH," THURSDAY EVENING.—"PARRY'S 'BLEST PAIR OF SIRENS'."

FRIDAY MORNING.—"BETHOVEN'S SEVENTH SYMPHONY," FRIDAY EVENING.—"FAUST."

Detailed Programmes may be obtained on application to ROBERT L. IMPEY, Secretary, 28, Waterloo Street, Birmingham.

LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. POPULAR EDITION.

Just published, in medium 8vo, cloth, with numerous Illustrations, price 3s. 6d. MRS BURNETT'S World-known Volume, LITTLE LORD FAUNTLEROY. The first Popular Edition.

LONDON: FREDERICK WARNE & CO.; AND NEW YORK.

FROM WALTER SCOTT'S LIST.

IBSEN'S FAMOUS PROSE DRAMAS.

COMPLETE IN FIVE VOLS.

Uniform and Authoritative English Edition. Crown 8vo, cloth, 3s. 6d. per Vol.

The Fifth and last Volume of this Series, containing ROSMERSHOLM, THE LADY from the SEA, and Mr. WILLIAM ARCHER'S Translation of HEDDA GABLER, is now ready.

Set of 5 Vols. in Case, 17s. 6d.; also 5 Vols. in half-Morocco, in Case, 32s. 6d.

LONDON: WALTER SCOTT, 24, WARWICK LANE.

PRIZE NOVEL: "THE ONLY WITNESS."

SPECIAL NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC.

The date of the Close of the Competition is extended from the 1st September to the 1st OCTOBER, 1891, in consequence of the great demand for the book. To be procured at all Bookstalls and Booksellers. Price One Shilling.

TRISCHLER & CO., 18, NEW BRIDGE STREET, E.C.

JAPANESE POTTERY,

WITH NOTES

Describing the Emblems, the Poetical Associations, and other thoughts and subjects employed in the Decoration of the Wares, an Account of the Festivals, and of some of the Customs of Japan.

By JAMES L. BOWES.

Imperial 8vo, cloth, 600 pp., with Plates, £2 12s. 6d.

The "Extra Illustrated Edition," half-morocco, gilt top, £6 6s. (Only a few copies left.)

Japan &c.—"It is a noble book... a book of the most valuable and genuine character. It is evident that Mr. Bowes has brought together a worthy representative collection, and that he has made every specimen it contains the object of careful research and intelligent scrutiny."
Home Tel. Graph.—"Few are entitled to speak with absolute authority, but of those Mr. Bowes stands foremost. Virtually a complete history of the art. To the true connoisseur it needs little recommendation."
The Academy.—"Produced with singular care and completeness... A worthy sequel to the author's previous labours in the cause of Japanese art."
The Times.—"Worthy of its subject and its author."
The Art Journal.—"Remarkably free from mistakes."
The Saturday Review.—"Let us repeat our admiration of Mr. Bowes' beautiful and enticing volume."
The Architect.—"A guide for the collector, and the best of its kind."
The Builder.—"Not only one of the most beautiful, but one of the most useful and rational books upon Japanese art which has been published in England."
Voice and Quire.—"To collectors his books are as authoritative as is to the lover of Elzevir's the priceless book of Mr. Williams."
St. James's Gazette.—"The volume is one in which the connoisseur will delight."

LONDON: SIMPKIN, MARSHALL, HAMILTON, KENT & Co., Limited
Liverpool: EDWARD HOWELL.

To H.R.H. the PRINCE of WALES.

BRAND & CO.'S AI SAUCE,

SOUPS, PRESERVED PROVISIONS,

POTTED MEATS, and YORK and GAME

PIES. Also, ESSENCE of BEEF, BEEF TEA,

TURTLE SOUP, and JELLY, and other

SPECIALITIES for INVALIDS.

CAUTION—BEWARE of IMITATIONS.

SOLE ADDRESS—

11, LITTLE STANHOPE STREET,
MAYFAIR, W.

THE JOURNAL OF EDUCATION,

No. 286, for SEPTEMBER.

1. ORAL and AURAL FRENCH TEACHING. By EMILY MULL. (Concluded.)
2. UNETHICAL EDUCATION. By the late Rev. R. H. QUICK.
3. SOMETHING ROTTEN in the STATE of our SECONDARY SCHOOLS.
4. MORAL TRAINING by SUGGESTION. By S. CORBETT.
5. TECHNICAL INSTRUCTION and the DEVON COUNTY COUNCIL.
6. THE TOO-AMBITIOUS TEXT-BOOK. By H. G. WELLS.
7. THE HOME EDUCATION of GIRLS.
8. OCCASIONAL NOTES: Notes on Elementary Schools.
9. CORRESPONDENCE: Mr. A. R. Cherrill on Overpressure.
10. FOREIGN NOTES: Schools and Universities.
11. THE TEACHERS' GUILD of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND.
12. TRANSLATION PRIZES.

Price 6d.; per post, 8d.

Office: 86, FLEET STREET, LONDON, E.C.

THE NATIONAL REVIEW.

CONTENTS FOR SEPTEMBER, 1891.

- DEMOCRACY and IRISH LOCAL GOVERNMENT. By "UNIONIST."
- AN UNSCIENTIFIC VIEW of VIVISECTION. By Her Excellency LADY PAGET.
- THE NEW EMPEROR and his NEW CHANCELLOR. By CHARLES LOWE.
- SEPTEMBER. By T. E. KIBBEL.
- FITTEST or LUCKIEST: WHICH SURVIVES? By G. W. BULMAN.
- ERNEST DAUDET on COBLENTZ. By LORD COLCHESTER.
- THE COUNTY COUNCILLOR: a Study. By H. D. TRAILL.
- WOMAN'S LIFE in OLD ITALY. By RICHARD DAVEY.
- FREE LAW? A Scheme. By G. ACTON LOMAX.
- CONTEMPORARY LITERATURE.
- CORRESPONDENCE.

LONDON: EDWARD ARNOLD, 37, Bedford Street, W.C.

BIRKBECK BANK,

ESTABLISHED 1851.

Southampton Buildings, Chancery Lane.
THREE PER CENT INTEREST allowed on DEPOSITS, repayable on demand.
TWO PER CENT on CURRENT ACCOUNTS, calculated on minimum monthly balances, when not drawn below £10.
STOCKS, SHARES, and ANNUITIES purchased and sold.

SAVINGS DEPARTMENT.

For the encouragement of Thrift the Bank receives small sums on deposits, and allows interest at the rate of THREE PER CENT per annum, on each completed £1. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT Manager.

HOW TO PURCHASE A HOUSE FOR

TWO GUINEAS PER MONTH, OR A PLOT OF LAND, FOR FIVE SHILLINGS PER MONTH.
The BIRKBECK ALMANACK, with full particulars post-free, on application. FRANCIS RAVENSCROFT, Manager.

F. V. WHITE & CO.'S

RECENT PUBLICATIONS.

I.
By Mrs. Alexander.

A WOMAN'S HEART.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," "By Woman's Wit," "Mona's Choice," "Blind Fate," &c.
3 vols. [At all Libraries.]

II.
By Lady Constance Howard,

Author of "Sweetheart and Wife," "Mollie Darling," "Mated with a Clown," &c., and Ada Fielder King,

Author of "It is Written," "Lionel Villiers," &c.

MASTER of her LIFE.

3 vols. [At all Libraries.]
".....Is a readable story...."—Court Circular.

III.
By Mrs. Edward Kennard.

THAT PRETTY LITTLE HORSEBREAKER.

By the Author of "The Girl in the Brown Habit," "A Homburg Beauty," &c. 3 vols. [Immediately.]

IV.
By B. M. Croker.

INTERFERENCE.

By the Author of "Proper Pride," "Pretty Miss Neville," "Two Masters," &c. 3 vols. [Shortly.]

V.
By Mrs. Alexander.

WELL WON.

By the Author of "The Wooing o't," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VI.
By Helen Mathers.

MY JO, JOHN.

By the Author of "Comin' thro' the Rye," "Sam's Sweetheart," "The Mystery of No. 13," &c. In paper covers, 1s.; cloth, 1s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

VII.
By Mrs. Robert Jocelyn.

THE CRITON HUNT MYSTERY.

By the Author of "The M.F.H.'s Daughter," "£100,000 versus Ghosts," "A Distracting Guest," &c. Cloth, 2s. 6d. [At all Booksellers and Bookstalls.]

NOTICE.

Serial Tales by B. M. Croker and Mrs. Robert Jocelyn are continued in "BELGRAVIA," and Serial Tales by Mrs. Oliphant, and Curtis Yorke (Author of "Hush!") "The Mystery of Belgrave Square," &c., in "LONDON SOCIETY," Magazine for September.

The CATALOGUE of WORKS in PRINT—by John Strange Winter, Mrs. Edward Kennard, Hawley Smart, B. L. Farjeon, Fergus Hume, Mrs. Lovett Cameron, "Rita," Mrs. Hungerford (Author of "Molly Bawn"), Helen Mathers, B. M. Croker, Florence Warden, Mrs. Alexander, F. C. Philips, Mrs. Alexander Fraser, Justin McCarthy, M.P., and Mrs. Campbell Praed, Bret Harte, Annie Thomas (Mrs. Pender Cudlip), Sir Randal Roberts, Bart., Lady Margaret Majendie, The Hon. Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh, Marie Corvili, Alfred C. Calmour, Mrs. Houston, May Crommelin, Florence Marryat, The Hon. Mrs. H. W. Chetwynd, Katharine Chetwynd, Col. Rowan Hamilton, William Day, and other Authors—who will be sent on application.

F. V. WHITE & CO.,
31, SOUTHAMPTON STREET, STRAND, W.C.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON'S LIST.

NOW READY, PRICE ONE SHILLING.

THE TEMPLE BAR MAGAZINE

For SEPTEMBER, 1891, contains, among other articles of interest:—MR. CHAINE'S SONS. By W. E. NORRIS, Author of "Miss Shafto," &c. Chaps. XXXIII.—XXXVIII. —Καλλιόπεια.—SCIENCE and SOCIETY in the FIFTIES.—MAN.—ST. PETERSBURG to SEBASTOPOL.—A HOME OF REST.—THE VALE of MAYA.—HENRIK IBSEN.—JOHN CHARRINGTON'S WEDDING.—CHINESE COOKERY.—LOVE or MONEY. Chaps. XXXI.—XXXIV.

TO BE OBTAINED AT ALL BOOKSELLERS.

The NOVELS of JESSIE FOTHERGILL

ALDYTH (Now first issued in cheap form). HEALEY.
THE "FIRST VIOLIN." KITH and KIN.
BORDERLAND. PROBATION.
Each in uniform binding, in 1 vol., crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

JUST READY. BEACON FIRES.

By E. WERNER,
Author of "Under a Charm."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

NOW READY. RULING the PLANETS.

By MINA E. BURTON.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "HER OWN COUNSEL." EVELYN'S CAREER.

By the Author of "Dr. Edith Romney."
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"It is pleasant to notice a novel written with so much thought, feeling, and discernment of character."—Guardian.

NOW READY. SO NEAR AKIN.

By M. A. BENGOUGH.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A good novel that is also easy and pleasant reading is acceptable at all times of the year, but never more so than at this season. 'So Near Akin' can be heartily recommended as being a good story."—Observer.

"An entertaining and gracefully-written tale."—Morning Post.

"There is much that is fresh and vigorous in this novel."—Academy.

"A clever and original novel told with a humour and artistic detachment which promise well for the future of the author."—Queen.

"'So Near Akin' is a clever story, and if it is a first book we shall look forward with interest to its successor."—Standard.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "MR. BAZALGETTE'S AGENT." VIOLET MOSES.

By LEONARD MERRICK.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"The characters are skillfully drawn and show excellent observation, while the story altogether is notable for freshness and power."—Saturday Review.

"A good novel, and one that is written with taste."—Observer.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "THE DUKE'S MARRIAGE." The ALDERMAN'S CHILDREN

By JAMES BRINSLEY-RICHARDS.
In 3 vols., crown 8vo.

"A story in which crime plays a more conspicuous part than love. The plot of this somewhat sensational novel is characterised by considerable ingenuity and originality. There are smart sketches of character, notably those of Lady Looney, Madge Rose, and Chauncey Travers."—Daily Telegraph.

"Throughout a sensible and well-executed story. The author is a deft hand both in construction of plot and in descriptive matter. His book is thoroughly enjoyable."—Academy.

New and Popular Editions at all Booksellers.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "A ROMANCE OF TWO WORLDS."

WORMWOOD: a Drama of Paris.

By MARIE CORELLI. In 1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

BY AN ANONYMOUS AUTHOR.

AN AUSTRALIAN GIRL. In 1 vol.,

crown 8vo, 6s.

BY THE AUTHOR OF "NANCY"

ALAS! By Rhoda Broughton. In

1 vol., crown 8vo, 6s.

RICHARD BENTLEY & SON, New Burlington Street,
Publishers in Ordinary to Her Majesty the Queen.

MR. WM. HEINEMANN'S NEW BOOKS.

THE WORKS OF HEINRICH

HEINE. Translated by CHARLES G. LELAND (Hans Breitmann). Volume I. FLORENTINE NIGHTS, The MEMOIRS of HERR VON SCHNABELWOPSKI, THE RABBI of BACHARACH, and SHAKESPEARE'S MAIDENS and WOMEN. Price 5s.

Volumes II. and III. PICTURES of TRAVEL. In 2 vols., 6s. each. (In the press.)

* * * Prospectus on application.

St. James's Gazette.—"It is more than time we had a complete English translation of that unique and fascinating genius."
Saturday Review.—"A success which is on the whole very remarkable."

THE FRUITS of ENLIGHTEN-

MENT: a Comedy. By Count TOLSTOY. Translated from the Russian by E. J. DILLON, Ph.D. With an Introduction by Mr. W. A. PINERO, and a Portrait of the Author. Price 5s.

Pall Mall Gazette.—"The whole effect of the play is distinctly Moliereque; it has something of the large humanity of the master; its satire is genial, almost gay."

HEDDA GABLER: a Drama in Four Acts. By HENRIK IBSEN. Translated from the Norwegian by EDMUND GOSSE. Three Editions:—

Large-Paper Edition, with 3 Portraits, 21s. net.

Library Edition, with 1 Portrait, 6s.

Vaudeville Edition, paper, 1s.

Times.—"The language in which this play is couched is a model of brevity, decision, and pointedness. Every line tells, and there is not an incident that does not bear on the action, immediate or remote. As a corrective to the rapid foolish writing with which the stage is deluged, 'Hedda Gabler' is perhaps entitled to the place of honour."

THE LITTLE MANX NATION.

By HALL CAINE, Author of "The Bondman." 3s. 6d. cloth; 2s. 6d. paper.

Speaker.—"A pleasant book, clever and unconventional, and with plenty of fancy as well as no lack of facts."

Guardian.—"A very pleasant little book, with such a dash of patriotic spirit as to give it life and animation without injuring the power of perceiving peculiarities and disadvantages."

DE QUINCEY (THOMAS), The

POSTHUMOUS WORKS of. Edited, from the Author's Original MSS., by ALEXANDER H. JAPP, LL.D.

VOL. I.—SUSPIRIA DE PROFUNDIS, and other Essays, Critical, Historical, Biographical, Philosophical, Imaginative, and Humorous. Crown 8vo, cloth, price 6s.

Times.—"Here we have De Quincey at his best. Will be welcome to lovers of De Quincey, and lovers of good literature."

Anti-Jacobin.—"In these Suspiria De Quincey writes with the sonorous grandeur of Cicero, while his subject is some vision or imagination worthy of Poe."

IMPERIAL GERMANY: a

Critical Study of Fact and Character. By SIDNEY WHITMAN. New Edition, Revised. Crown 8vo, 2s. 6d., cloth; 2s., paper.

PRICE: BISMARCK.—"I consider the different chapters of this book masterly."

THE COMING TERROR, and other Essays and Letters. By ROBERT BUCHANAN. Second Edition. Demy 8vo, 12s. 6d.

Daily Chronicle.—"This amusing, wrong-headed, audacious, cranky book should be widely read, for there is not a dull line in it."

Popular Edition, in 1 vol.

IN the VALLEY: a Novel. By

HAROLD FREDERIC, Author of "Seth's Brother's Wife," &c. Crown 8vo, 3s. 6d., Illustrated.

MR. GLADSTONE'S OPINION.—"It has a great historical interest from its apparently faithful exhibition of the relations of the different nationalities and races who were so curiously grouped together in and about the State of New York before the War of American Independence."

Heinemann's International Library.

Edited by EDMUND GOSSE.

Price 3s. 6d., cloth; 2s. 6d., paper.

IN GOD'S WAY. By BJÖRNSTJERNE JÖRNSON.
Speaker.—"A notable book."

PIERRE and JEAN. By GUY DE MAUPASSANT.
Pall Mall.—"Admirable from beginning to end."

THE CHIEF JUSTICE. By KARL EMIL FRANZOS.
Christian World.—"A story of wonderful power."

WORK WHILE YE HAVE the LIGHT. By Count TOLSTOY.
Manchester Guardian.—"Full of high and noble feeling."

FANTASY. By MATILDE SERAO.
Scottish Leader.—"A work of elicit art; a mosaic of life and love."

FROTH. By DON ARMANDO PALACIO VALDES.
Daily Telegraph.—"Vigorous and powerful."

FOOTSTEPS of FATE. By LOUIS COPPENHUS.
Globe and Herald.—"Written with a quite unusual direct power and vividness."

LONDON:

WM. HEINEMANN, 21, BEDFORD STREET, W.C.

Sampson Low, Marston & Company's PUBLICATIONS.

THE

English Catalogue of Books

Vol. IV. January, 1881, to December, 1889.

An Alphabetical List of Works published in the United Kingdom and of the principal Works published in America, with dates of publication, indication of size, price, edition, and publisher's name.

710 pages, royal 8vo, half-morocco, cloth sides,

£2 12s. 6d.

THE RURAL ECONOMY and

AGRICULTURE of AUSTRALIA and NEW ZEALAND. As seen by ROBERT WALLACE, F.L.S., F.R.S.

With 8 Maps, 80 Full-Page Plates, and 80 Text Illustrations. Demy 8vo, cloth, One Guinea, net.

"Professor Wallace gives, as the result of personal observation, a very complete and very instructive account of the agricultural methods and appliances in use throughout the principal Australian colonies."—Times.

MEMORABLE LONDON

HOUSES. A Handy Guide, with Illustrative Anecdotes by WILMOT HARRISON. With over 100 Illustrations from Drawings made expressly for this work by G. N. Martin.

Crown 8vo, limp cloth, 2s. 6d.

"An excellent little volume....easily carried in a side pocket, is profusely illustrated, and is provided with a numbered plan. The necessity of such a book is so obvious, one wonders that it was never before thought of."—World.

FOUR WELSH COUNTIES: a

Holiday Book about Brecknock, Carnarvon, Merioneth, and Pembroke. By E. A. KILNER. With Illustrations.

Crown 8vo, cloth, 6s.

"The pleasures of holidaying in Wales will be enhanced to those who consult beforehand, or better still, take along with them as a companion, Miss Kilner's 'Four Welsh Counties.'"—Scotsman.

NEW NOVELS AT ALL LIBRARIES

DONALD ROSS of HEIMRA.

By WILLIAM BLACK, Author of "In Far Lochaber," "A Princess of Thule," &c. Second Edition. 3 vols., crown 8vo, cloth.

"An admirable story."—Athenaeum.

"Its interest never flags. There is much delicious humour."—Scotsman.

"It is soothing and invigorating to turn to Mr. William Black's delightful pages after wandering for a time through the leagues of dreary commonplace of less gifted writers. A brisk and picturesque story."—Daily Telegraph.

A MAN'S CONSCIENCE. By

EVERY MACALPINE. 2 vols., crown 8vo, cloth, 21s.

"The studies of character are cleverly consistent throughout, and Mr. Macalpine, with his genial analysis of the feelings, can be pathetic as well as humorous. The story is powerfully worked out, and we are left in doubt till the last as to the denouement."—Times.

"An extremely interesting and well-written story."—Scotsman.

"Mr. Macalpine's book is remarkable for a good description of the vast corralands of Minnesota and the terrible monotony of life in the Western States."—Athenaeum.

"A decidedly pleasant novel."—Graphic.

LONDON: SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON & COMPANY, Ltd.,

St. Dunstan's House, Fetter Lane,

Fleet Street, E.C.

SATURDAY, SEPT. 5, 1891.

No. 1009, New Series.

THE EDITOR cannot undertake to return, or to correspond with the writers of, rejected manuscript.

It is particularly requested that all business letters regarding the supply of the paper, &c., may be addressed to the PUBLISHER, and not to the EDITOR.

LITERATURE.

The Origin and Religious Contents of the Psalter. By T. K. Cheyne. (Kegan Paul & Co.)

It was an important sign of the times that a theologian of such known courage and independence as Prof. Cheyne should have been chosen to deliver the Bampton Lectures of 1889. But the autumn of the same year was marked by an event of perhaps even greater significance in ecclesiastical history—the publication of Lux Mundi. It is no secret that the astonishing success of that volume was chiefly due to Mr. Gore's Essay on Inspiration, and that Mr. Gore's essay itself was chiefly remarkable for its very candid concessions to the demands of recent Old Testament criticism. The protests of other High Churchmen went for nothing; it was felt that the president of Pusey House spoke with authority, and that English clergymen were now in practical possession of the liberty which had been legally given to them by the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Dr. Rowland Williams and Mr. H. B. Wilson. Mr. Gore and his colleagues deserve whatever praise is due to the graceful recognition and assimilation of results to which their own school had contributed absolutely nothing; but in our admiration for the purple feats of Pusey House let us not forget who fished the murex up. The preface to Prof. Cheyne's new volume—an Apologia in little—comes opportunely to remind some of us, and to let others know for the first time, how great have been his efforts on behalf of a truly scientific exegesis, moving in harmony with the deepest religious spirit: begun under what difficulties, carried on with how little support, and rewarded by how little recognition, may best be ascertained from his own artless and touching narrative. That Prof. Cheyne should find it necessary at this time of day to prove himself "no fledgeling" in criticism speaks volumes for the stolidity of the religious public. It may be assumed that the readers of a journal which has been enriched during so many years by his contributions—contributions some of them specified in this autobiographical preface—will readily admit his competence, I may perhaps say his unrivalled competence, to deal with such a problem as the origin of the Psalter. It may be as well, however, to mention that the lecturer is not, like Dean Stanley, a mere populariser of German research. His analysis of the so-called Second Isaiah, published ten years ago in the Encyclopaedia Britannica, was an original contribution to criticism of capital importance, and has since been confirmed as the result of independent inquiry by no less an authority than Kuenen; the conclusion of both scholars being that a much later date than that of the Exile must be assigned to certain portions of that anonymous prophecy.

The general drift of recent criticism has, indeed, been to detach large portions of the Old Testament from their ancient moorings and to lodge them much lower down on the stream of history; and when our author quitted, as he tells us, in 1871 the school of Ewald for the school of Graf and Kuenen, he fully committed himself to this tendency. It is, therefore, no surprise that he should now assign the whole Psalter to the post-exilic period, with the somewhat doubtful exception of Ps. xviii., which dates at the earliest from the reign of Josiah. Five lectures out of eight are devoted to establishing this conclusion in detail. Nothing but actual perusal can give any idea of the untiring patience, the ever ready scholarship, and the vigilant ingenuity with which Prof. Cheyne canvasses the whole Psalter, group by group, psalm by psalm—one may almost say, verse by verse. The headings, which once passed for being equally inspired with the text, are of no authority whatever. Psalms are attributed to David that David could not possibly have written, whether we consider his character, the circumstances of his life, or his religious standpoint. Nevertheless, there are certain external indications which, in the hands of the sagacious critic, may be used as clues to historic fact. The Psalter is, as is well known, divided into five books on the model of the Pentateuch. But the fourth and fifth books, while markedly separated from the third by a notice at the end of Ps. lxxii. stating that "the prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended," really form a single collection, the division between them being purely artificial. This collection is of later origin than the Davidic Psalter and differs from it in some important particulars. These are, "the paucity of authors' names, the almost complete absence of musical phrases in the titles, and the many distinct references to a congregational use of the Psalms—characteristics which presuppose, the first that the Psalms of Books IV. and V. are not much older than the collections themselves, the second that the temple music had undergone a radical change in (or near) the time of the collectors, and the third that, while the temple services had become more precious than ever, the older Psalms were found to be from a later point of view not in all points sufficiently adapted to congregational use" (p. 9).

Internally they are distinguished by a martial and jubilant tone, and by a complete disappearance of the old doubts of God's righteousness. Taken together, these indications suggest a period marked by a great influx of some foreign and higher civilisation, accompanied by a triumphant re-assertion of Israel's religion against a foreign oppressor—requirements satisfied by the Maccabean epoch, and by that alone. On examining Psalm cxviii. we find it just such a hymn as would have been indited to celebrate the victories of the heroic deliverer Judas (p. 17). But this Psalm is only one of a group, from which, on sound exegetical principles, it cannot be separated. Thus the Maccabean psalms multiply under one's hands, including among others that glorious hundred and tenth, which, as Carlyle tells us, so filled the thoughts of Cromwell on his march to Dunbar field. The "priest for ever after the order of Melchizedek" can be no other than Simon the Maccabee, chief of the Jewish state and high priest in one. Even in the older collection Psalms of a precisely similar character, and therefore referable to the same period, are to be found. Prof. Cheyne supposes them to have been interpolated in their present places by a later editor; an assumption in which there is nothing arbitrary, as such editorial interpolations are proved on independent grounds to have been practised in the case of other Psalms. Altogether, the lecturer enumerates twenty-six Psalms, which he regards with more or less confidence as Maccabean (pp. 455-6). It may be observed in passing that Psalm cx. has been omitted from this final list, while by another oversight Psalm lxxxvi. is classified as Maccabean in the text (p. 119), and as pre-Maccabean in the appendix (p. 456). To some critics it may appear that Prof. Cheyne has, if anything, assigned too few rather than too many Psalms to the period of the glorious struggle against the Syrian monarchy.

No Psalms can be dated with such certainty as the group that we have just been considering, and none gain so much in freshness, interest, and power, by being exhibited in their true historical setting. Thus, both on scientific and literary grounds, the Bampton Lecturer did well to put them in the fore-front of his argument, and to work back from them to the earlier portions of the Psalter. The allusions, if any, to contemporary events in the hymnology of the Persian and pre-Maccabean Greek periods are few and indistinct. On the other hand, the purely literary evidence assumes greater prominence; and the many parallels offered to the later Isaian prophecies, to Job, and to Proverbs, serve to bring the Psalms where they occur into close connexion with other more or less certainly dated documents. Unfortunately, in view of recent criticism, it would be dangerous to assume that Job and Proverbs are not themselves works of the Hellenic period. It is much to have satisfied ourselves that the Psalms are all or nearly all post-exilic, that they breathe the very air of the Second Temple, of happy pilgrimages to Jerusalem, of the Diaspora, of the synagogues, of the Law as it was completed by Ezra, of a re-united Northern Israel, of cruel persecutions and of treason within the fold itself, but never of such idolatry or of such secularising politics as had been so common under the old monarchy. Moreover, the linguistic evidence, although not of itself decisive, is, so far as it goes, entirely favourable to the theory of a post-exilic origin of the Psalter. It will be found set out with the author's usual learning in the second appendix to this volume.

In two most remarkable Psalms, xlv. and lxxii., a king is spoken of in terms of the most rapturous panegyric. Prof. Cheyne thinks that in both instances the royal hero is no other than Ptolemy Philadelphus. This hypothesis was, I believe, received with marked disfavour when first put forward at Oxford; and certainly there is nothing in the present volume more likely to provoke dissent and even ridicule. But it would be easier to smile at Prof. Cheyne than to refute him. It is less difficult to understand how such lyrics could be addressed to Ptolemy than how they could come to be dissociated from him, and regarded as divinely inspired prophecies of the Messiah. One cannot help feeling that another critic of equal learning and ingenuity might make out a still better case for (say) Alexander the Great. What light would be thrown on some phrases in Psalm xlv. could we believe that they were intended for the daughter of Darius! And when we consider the cruel oppression practised towards the close of the Persian period and, according to the lecturer, so vividly described in certain Psalms, it would be strange if the young Macedonian conqueror had not been welcomed with such another rapturous greeting as was addressed to Cyrus by the Second Isaiah.

There are many religious minds to whom the modern account of the Psalter will be profoundly distasteful, less as a break with the old tradition than for the very reasons that make it so delightful to the historical student. The better you explain a Psalm by the circumstances in which it was written the more you seem to take from its value as a prophecy of Christ. I do not say that Prof. Cheyne's later lectures will remove the difficulty felt by such pious and tender souls, but I do say that his apologetic method is at once the soundest and most effective of which the case admits. The Psalmists, then, he seems to think, did not indeed proclaim the advent of a personal Messiah; but their whole tendency is in the direction of what we know as the Christian faith; and the later we place them the closer is the connexion into which we bring that faith with the old religion of Israel: the more clearly do we interpret both as necessary phases of a single ascending evolution. First of all, each sacred singer speaks not for himself alone, but for the whole faithful congregation; it is not David or another that we hear, but the personified conscience of Israel, in passionate self-abasement, in urgent pleading for help, in piteous abandonment, or again in blissful security or triumphant jubilation. Thus the Church-nation anticipates the Church. And in this national consciousness the germ of a world-wide expansion was contained. The universalistic teaching of the Second Isaiah had not been forgotten. It is true that Jewish charity was chequered by periods of sullen and repellent self-isolation. The Psalms are not without expressions of savage vindictiveness, proving too clearly that the highest Christian standard had not yet been reached. But these were reactions provoked by the outrages of a Bagôses or an Antiochus Epiphanes; and when the clouds broke, the old missionary spirit re-asserted itself in opposition to the spirit of sacerdotal exclusiveness.

In the next place, side by side with the Temple-worship of the psalmists, there are energetic protests against material rites and sacrifices—a proof that the teaching of Jeremiah was still maintained as a living tradition by his lyrical successors. Here, too, we have the promise of a purely spiritual religion, already recognised as such by St. Paul. In fact, the enlarged and purified conceptions of humanity which at that time were gaining currency corresponded to an enlarged and purified idea of God. The problem was how to re-unite these seemingly antithetic elements of religious thought; and the Psalmists are constantly feeling their way along different lines of mediating and self-revealing activity very subtly distinguished and traced out by the lecturer. They speak much of God's loving-kindness; they figure Him as a Teacher and a Shepherd; by a revived but no longer mischievous mythology, they conceive the great powers and processes of nature as the ministers of His will. The Law, the Scriptures, the everlasting covenant with Israel are yet nearer and dearer means of grace. But the gap still remains unfilled. The immanent dialectic of religion drives them on to confront the triumph of injustice on earth with the hope of a life beyond the grave. So at least Prof. Cheyne holds. It is certain that the author of Daniel believed in a resurrection. A few Psalms contain some more or less enigmatic expressions pointing in the same direction. They date from a time when Israel lived in close contact with the pure and lofty religion of Zoroaster, in which the doctrine of rewards and punishments after death forms an integral part. Read in the light of the Avesta, those doubtful psalm-passages are no longer doubtful. The germs of such a belief pre-existed in old Israelitic legends and more recent prophecy; but they could only be brought to maturity by the influence of a fully developed faith. "Iran and Israel were pre-destined fellow-workers in the cause of religion" (p. 362).

Such in its barest outlines is an argument the like of which for breadth and candour was probably never heard before from the pulpit of St. Mary's. Prof. Cheyne's lectures carry our knowledge of the subject to the furthest point it has yet reached, and mark, or ought to mark, a new epoch in English Psalter-criticism.

ALFRED W. BENN.

Further Records. By Frances Anne Kemble. In 2 vols. (Bentley.)

MRS. KEMBLE has been encouraged by the success of her Records of a Girlhood and Records of a Later Life to produce what may be called another instalment of her autobiography. In these volumes we have a collection of letters written to intimate friends between 1848 and 1883, mostly from her home in the United States. Taken as a whole, the work is somewhat less substantial than its predecessors, but is not inferior to them in closeness of observation, skill of narration, and a certain unstudied grace of style. That it has been prepared with due care we are scarcely able to assert. No strict chronological order is observed in the arrangement of the letters; passages obviously calling for explanation or correction are passed by in silence, and several references to persons still living are of a kind that ought to have been omitted. In the revision of her proofs, too, Mrs. Kemble has overlooked a rich crop of errors. Handel is credited with having composed a "Sampson," and many of the scraps of French to be found in her pages are inaccurately printed.

Little is said by Mrs. Kemble of the Civil War, but that little is not without interest. In the autumn of 1861 she writes from Lenox:

"Our daily talk is of fights and flights, weapons and wounds. The stars and stripes flaunt their gay colours from every farm roof among these peaceful hills, and give a sort of gala effect to the quiet New England villages, embowered in maple and elm trees, that would be pretty and pleasing but for the grievous suggestions they awake of bitter civil war, of the cruel interruption of an unparalleled national prosperity, of impending danger and insecurity, of heavy immediate taxation, of probable loss of property, and all the evils, public and personal, which spring from the general disorganisation of the government and disruption of the national ties. . . . Of the ultimate success of the North I have not the shadow of a doubt."

Here is a little sketch of the condition of the country soon after the cessation of the conflict:

"The activity, energy, wealth, and material progress are something amazing. The country has made a wonderful start forward since I went away six [sic] years ago; and the check which its prosperity received by the four years' Civil War seems only to have accelerated its vigorous action now that the people's energies have returned to their accustomed channels. I perceive, however, an enormous change in one respect, which was probably operating upon the country before I left it, but which now, after several years' absence, strikes me more than anything else. The country is no longer English. New England may be so essentially still, but out of New England the English national element has died out almost entirely. When first I came here, thirty-four years ago, the whole country was like some remote part of England that I had never seen before, the people like English provincial or colonial folk; in short, they were like queer English people. Now there is not a trace of their British origin except their speech about them; and they are becoming a real nation, and that nation will be German in its character and intellect more than English. Our language is and will be theirs, and the foundations of their laws will be English law; but the people will be more like the great Teutonic people of the continent of Europe, and not like us, their Anglo-Saxon ancestors. Even in Philadelphia the Quaker element, which was really one of English conservatism, has died out, and the whole tone of society and manners has changed."

It should have been pointed out in a note that the prediction hazarded in the foregoing extract has not been fulfilled.

In the letters written between 1874 and 1877 there is a good deal about American life and character as shown during that period. Especially does Mrs. Kemble dwell upon the total absence of devotion to public affairs that the best class of men evinced.

They had already come to hold a political career in outspoken contempt:

"Their own private concerns absorb all their energy. They would have to resign the engrossing pursuit of indefinite wealth for a settled small stipend as members of Congress if they adopted the government of the country as their business; and they are quite content to give that over to a class of men whose intellectual qualities and general capacity are at once stamped as of an inferior order by their being what is technically called 'politicians'—a term which in this country not unfrequently means a low, ignorant, unprincipled man, who, being quite unequal to the successful management of his own private affairs, undertakes those of the nation. . . . There are no men of leisure; the men of wealth are all money-makers, devoted to that supreme 'industry'; the gentlemen (of whom there is no class) are professional men—lawyers, physicians, bankers, merchants—with a sufficiently thorough knowledge of their own peculiar business and a superficial smattering of general non-technical education; and they keep absolutely aloof from politics and politicians, as they would keep aloof from dirty work and dirty people."

American women do not find unmixed favour in Mrs. Kemble's eyes. While recognising their beauty as a race, she holds them to be deficient in the charm of sensibility, to have a dryness and coldness of manner which distinguish them from any others she has seen. They are more remarkable for good looks than good manners. In railway carriages they will accept seats from men "without so much as a word, a look, or a bow of acknowledgment." And their extravagance, especially in dress, has long been a byword:

"I knew one woman—I was going to say lady, but I retract that—who, wearing during the summer exquisite linen dresses made for the American market, and light and cool for the heat, never had one washed, but as soon as it had lost its first crisp freshness threw it away. Another lady of the same stamp paid fifteen dollars—three pounds—for the ironing of a flounced dress that was rather tumbled. The head of one of the first lace establishments in Brussels told me that she had received a commission from an American gentleman, for a New York lady, for a flounce which was to cost not less per yard than a sum so extravagant 'that,' said the great lacemaker, 'I did not know how we could contrive to make anything in size, pattern, or fine texture for which we could honestly demand such a price.' The gentleman insisted nevertheless, as that, he said, was the condition his female friend affixed to the purchase of her flounce, wishing only that its price should exceed that of an acquaintance of hers."

Formerly it was an affectation among young ladies in the States to hold rank in but slight esteem. One of the Prince of Wales's partners at the New York ball in 1860 was afterwards asked whether she had not laid up in lavender the satin shoes she wore on the occasion. In reply she shrugged her shoulders and laughed, at the same time admitting, with a patronising air, that he was a "nice little fellow." But this affectation has long since died away; at the present time, as all of us know, the fair American will "condescend to marry even the son of an English duke."

Mrs. Kemble has something to tell us of many interesting people—Lord Tennyson, Thackeray, Longfellow, the Carlyles,

Miss Frances Cobbe, Henry Ward Beecher, Charles Greville, Margaret Fuller, Frederica Bremer, James Spedding, Bret Harte, Lord Houghton, Prescott, Motley, Emerson, Lowell, Oliver Wendell Holmes, and Richard Chenevix Trench. Once we get a glimpse of Carlyle at his house in Cheyne-walk:

"He is pleased to be visited by his friends and acquaintances, and I sat with him an hour, and sang him the Scotch ballad of 'Lizzie Lindsay.' He was very eloquent, and very severe in his denunciations of our present government, and far from cheerful in his prognostications of the future of England."

Between Mrs. Kemble and Mrs. Carlyle no love appears to have been lost:

"I do not know whether I am singular in not endorsing very heartily the enthusiastic admiration of his wife's genius bestowed upon her after her death by Carlyle. In my personal intercourse with her she seemed to me a bright, clever, intelligent woman; but as to any comparison between her mental powers and those of the two great geniuses of our day, George Sand and George Eliot, it was really absurdly inadmissible. She either had caught from Carlyle, or was naturally endowed with, a fine general contempt for the intellects of her acquaintance; and in her letters, I think, displays an effort at brilliancy and point quite destructive of its effect. A very small instance of this with reference to myself will illustrate this tendency. 'Mrs. Butler paid me a visit,' said she, 'with a riding whip, I suppose to keep her hand in.' I was dressed in my habit, and just going out on horseback, and necessarily carried my riding whip, which I am not aware of ever practising (keeping my hand in the use of) with any creature but my horse. The desire to write something smart, such as this observation of hers exhibits, seems to me unpleasant, and unsuccessfully and frequently apparent in Mrs. Carlyle's letters. I wish clever people had a higher and juster respect for simple stupidity."

During a visit paid by Mrs. Kemble to Lord Houghton and his wife at Frystone, their place in Yorkshire, there occurred an incident which, as she says, might figure with good effect in a novel:

"One evening, when I was dressed for dinner before anyone else, and was sitting alone in the drawing room, I overheard old Mr. Milnes, the father of my host, who was very little acquainted with me, questioning my many-years kind and attached friend, James Spedding, about my career and fortunes. They were walking up and down an adjacent room, of which the door was open; and I heard a story that I should have pined if told of another woman, related in the compassionate voice of the gentleman who had known me from my girlhood, and been my brother's school and college friend and companion. Plunged in very sad reminiscences, it was some minutes before I perceived that I was sitting, quite unconsciously, opposite a very good portrait of Lord Houghton, with the tears streaming down my face, apparently at its contemplation. What any of my fellow guests, or my charming hostess, might have thought of such an apparent indication of feeling has often made me smile. Luckily I recovered myself before anyone came to misinterpret it."

Archbishop Trench would have wished to bury one part of his early life in complete oblivion. On the appearance of Mrs. Kemble's Records of a Girlhood he "expressed himself displeased and hurt at my mention of his participation with John Sterling and my brother in their Spanish adventure and sympathy with the unfortunate revolutionary attempt of Torrivos. . . . I found to my extreme astonishment that Dr. Trench had made such a complete secret of his part in the affair that until the publication of my book his own family and children knew nothing of that episode in his life; and my full reference to it was an absolute revelation to them, and caused them considerable amusement, and him, I am sorry to say, much annoyance. A curious circumstance of rather a comical nature occurred to my daughter, who, dining at the Deanery in Westminster with Dean Stanley and Lady Augusta, found herself, to her great pleasure, seated next to the Archbishop of Dublin, of whose early friendship with her uncle and partnership in the romantic Spanish expedition she had often heard me speak. When, therefore, Dr. Trench said courteously, 'I think on these occasions it would be an advantage if neighbours at table were furnished with a sort of conversation menu, slight hints of the subject by which they might interest each other.' 'Yes,' said my daughter, with smiling acquiescence, little suspecting on what unwelcome and forbidden ground she was treading in appealing to her neighbour's youthful recollections; 'for instance, my lord, your early Spanish adventures.' Dr. Trench was dismayed and not delighted with the young lady's familiarity with that carefully, silently-suppressed Spanish secret, and much surprised at it till he found out who she was and how she became acquainted with it."

One of Bret Harte's experiences in the savage and lonely western wilderness, through which he travelled as agent for some Eastern Express Company, is thus related:

"He had arrived at night at a solitary house of call on his way, absolutely isolated and far distant from any other dwelling—a sort of rough road-side tavern, known and resorted to by the wanderers in that region. Here he was to pass the night. The master of the house, to whom he was known, answered his question as to whether anyone else was there by giving the name of a notorious desperado, who had committed some recent outrage, and in search of whom the wild justices—the lynchers of the wilderness—were scouring the district. This guest, the landlord said, was in hiding in the house, and was to leave it (if he was still alive) the next day. Bret Harte, accustomed to rough company, went quietly to bed and to sleep, but was aroused in the middle of the night by the arrival of a party of horsemen, who called up the master of the house and inquired if a man they were in pursuit of was with him. Upon receiving his repeated positive assurance that he was not, they remounted their horses and resumed their search. At break of day Bret Harte took his departure, finding that for the first part of his journey he was to have the hiding hero of the night (thief or murderer probably) for his companion, to whom, on his departure, the master of the house gave the most reiterated, detailed, precise, and minute directions as to the only road by which it would be possible that he could escape his pursuers, Bret Harte meanwhile listening to these directions as if they were addressed to himself. They rode silently for a short time, and then the fugitive began to talk—not about his escape, not about the danger of the past night, not about the crime he had committed, but about Dickens's last story, in which he expressed such an eager and enthusiastic interest that he would have passed the turning in the road by which he was to have made his escape, if Bret Harte had not pointed it out to him, saying: 'That is your way.'

In this book, as in her Records of a Girlhood, Mrs. Kemble is at the pains to disparage the profession to which she formerly owed so much. Her view is that "a life of incessant excitement and factitious emotion is unworthy of a man, and that a calling which involves public exhibition is unworthy of a woman." It is permissible to ask whether Mrs. Kemble would have regarded the stage with so much dislike if her career upon it had been more brilliant than it was. Not until the author of the Métromanie had failed to win a place among the learned forty in Paris did he write the well-known epitaph upon himself—

"Ci-git Piron, qui ne fut rien, Pas même Académicien;"

and Mrs. Kemble, according to all appearance, is illustrating the story of the fox and the grapes in a similar way. Her early triumph as an actress was due almost wholly to the interest excited by the spectacle of a girl coming forward to save her father from grievous embarrassment, if not absolute ruin. After an interval of about thirteen years she reappeared on the boards, though only to find before long that her hold upon the town had virtually gone. In a note she speaks of this as the natural decrease of her attraction and popularity; but why such a decrease should have occurred in the case of a woman only thirty-eight years of age, as she then was, is inexplicable except upon the hypothesis that she had not the talents to achieve a lasting success. It is difficult to resist the suspicion that had the mantle of Mrs. Siddons descended upon her she would have worn it as long as possible.

FREDERICK HAWKINS.

An Irish Wild-Flower. By Sarah M. B. Piatt. (Fisher Unwin.)

NEARLY a thousand years ago it came into the mind of a poet to write a poem which should be complete in fourteen lines. Poems of fourteen thousand lines were written in those days, and the friends of the poet laughed at his whim. He let them laugh and wrote. No one had told him what we have all been told—that brevity is the soul of wit; it had suddenly come to his thoughts that it was the heart of poetry. Since then the world has been flooded with work based on this theory. There is scarce a poet, scarce a rhymester in England who does not to-day write sonnets. It will be to some a disappointment and to some a pleasant surprise to find that in the little book of poems which Mrs. Piatt has just given to the world there is not a sonnet. This is the more remarkable because it is in short poems that Mrs. Piatt excels. The one which gives its name to the book, "An Irish Wild-Flower" (suggested by the sight of a barefoot child by a castle), is complete in eight lines:—

"She felt, I think, but as a wild-flower can Through her bright fluttering rags, the dark,
the cold,
Some farthest star, remembering what man
Forgets, had warmed her little head with gold.
Above her, hollow-eyed, long blind to tears,
Leaf-cloaked, a skeleton of stone arose
Oh, castle-shadow of a thousand years,
Where have you fallen—is this the thing that grows?"

This seems to me absolutely perfect, the loveliest Irish growth of this sad summer.

The eight-line poem offers great difficulties, and the danger of obscurity lies always near. Mrs. Piatt sometimes—not often—succumbs to it. In the pretty bit of pathos called "By an Ancient Mound," the octave is not taken quite cleanly, as a musician would say; but "Wayside Courtesy," to read which is to visit Ireland, is beautiful, marred only by one tripping line. The picture-poem—if this word may be used—is one in which French poets and women poets of all countries excel. It is the harvest of a quiet eye. A German woman-writer, too little known in this country—she is not a queen—has produced a little masterwork in this species of poem, "Das Haus in der Heide." Finest, if not most beautiful, among Mrs. Piatt's octaves is the one called "A Reproach," addressed to Ireland. The Shan van vocht is a shameful name for Ireland's sons to have given her. Walt Whitman has made perhaps the best that poet could make of it in his metreless, rhymeless, most unmusical, but most powerful and pathetic "Old Ireland"; but Mrs. Piatt has done better in treating Ireland not as a lonely beldame, but as a mother "beautiful, cruel," and, I dare think, young, with her wild brood about her feet.

It would be impossible for one unacquainted with this poet's nationality to divine what it is from her booklet. A young Irish girl reading it lately exclaimed at intervals, "She's Irish!"—"No, she's American!" (with disappointment)—"She's Irish!"—"No, she isn't; what is she?" and shut the book with some annoyance. The allusions to America in it are indeed many and loving, and that contained in the poem called "A Funeral on the Lee" is beautiful. The book has no political colouring, and is the work of an artist, not of an "orator." This makes it not only gracious, but timely. Its prevailing tone is sad, but not desponding, and now and then a laugh rings out. It has not always the right Irish tone in it; but once it is heart-full of Irish mirth and mischief, and the mirth is most infectious. I allude to the poem called "Last of his Line." The last of his line is a young donkey looking through the ruined window of his family castle:

"In his grey garments, with the ivy blown
About his serious face,
He muses, in the sunrise bloom alone,
On his romantic race."

The donkey's musings merit reading, and Mrs. Piatt merits thanking. So does Mr. Fisher Unwin, who has bound up her wild-flowers charmingly.

ELSA D'ESTERRE KEELING.

Calendar of Ancient Records of Dublin. By J. T. Gilbert. Vol. II. (Dublin: Joseph Dollard; London: Bernard Quaritch.)

MR. GILBERT is by no means an ideal editor; but it would be a scurvy return for the many valuable services he has rendered to the cause of Irish history were we to allow his shortcomings to weigh heavily in the balance against his many merits. Good paper and good printing in the case of a book intrinsically interesting cover a multitude of sins, and go far to secure immunity from criticism for an editor whose marginal references and occasional footnotes are not unfrequently miracles of ineptitude.

The documents in the present volume would furnish ample material for an interesting sketch of civic life in Dublin during the reign of Elizabeth; but I must here content myself with briefly referring to one or two points which may serve to elucidate their general character. The Municipal Council of Dublin, consisting of the mayor, aldermen, council of forty-eight, and council of ninety-six, used to assemble at the Tholsel four times a year, viz., on the fourth Friday after Christmas-day, Easter-day, Midsummer-day, and Michaelmas-day. The members were summoned together by the ringing of the Tholsel bell at nine o'clock in the morning, and all sat together in one room where the debates were held. The proceedings were marked by a good deal of irregular and disorderly conduct; and in 1602 it was found necessary to institute certain fines for the punishment of those who neglected to be in their places at half-past nine, who quitted the assembly any time during the day without permission, or who interrupted the orderly progress of debate by speaking more than once to the same motion. The present volume is chiefly occupied with the record of their proceedings from 1538 to 1610. The citizens of Dublin have always been famous for their hospitality; and as their magistrates have naturally been expected to maintain the reputation of the city in this respect, the office of mayor has not always proved an unqualified honour, "yt being ofte tymes sene that severall persons supplying that offyce falleth after to great decaille by reason of the chardge." More than one instance occurs in the present volume in which refusal to take office was followed by disfranchisement and even by fine and imprisonment. But Mr. John Shelton, who was elected mayor in 1604, appears to have been the only one who disqualified himself from serving by refusing to take the oath of supremacy, whereby as having brought the liberties of the city in danger he was fined £300. Matters affecting the trade of the city, intercourse with foreigners, regulation of prices and wages, appointing of times and places for the sale of certain commodities such as fish and meat, punishment of fraudulent dealing and breaches of the guild laws, formed of course a very important part of the business that came before the Council, in connexion with which I will merely quote the following curious order respecting the sale of seeds:—

"Wheras inconvenience dailie groweth unto such ignorante people as dothe bye sedes without warrantise, and that the same dothe not growe to perfection, it is agreed that if any citizen of this cittie shall henceforthe beye any sedes to be sold agayne, and that the same do not growe with them that bye the same, the partie that sold the said sedes shall recompence the bier accordinge his hindrance and shall pay as a fyne to the tresory of this cittie xl.s."

Then, again, the city walls, the bridge, the river, and the harbour demanded constant supervision. Colman's brook, too, which joined the Liffey just outside the west wall, was a continual source of trouble, and many were the orders passed, with but little success, to prevent it becoming choked up with filth and rubbish. In order to provide against fire, which the narrow streets and thatch-roofed houses rendered an imminent cause of peril, it was forbidden to build furze or faggot ricks within the city or suburbs, while a special contribution of £24 was levied in order to provide "threskore bucketes, six lathers of xxx. fote long apece or therabouts, two crookes with their chaynes and ropes, and to repayre the two crookes which at this present we have."

The money was speedily raised, but complaint was made long afterwards that the "bucketes" had not been bought. It would be hard to say whether the beggars or the swine that infested the streets and open places were the greater nuisance. The latter certainly seem to have been the more dangerous, if we may judge from the following petition towards the close of Elizabeth's reign, complaining that the ancient laws against swine were not put into strict execution

"by reyson whearof great danger groweth therby, as well for infection, as also the poore infanties lying under stales and in the streetes subject to swyne, being a cattill much given to ravening, as well of creatures as of other things and alsoe the cittie and government therof hardlie spoken of by the State wherin they required a reformation."

The reference to the danger likely to arise from infection reminds us that twice during the period covered by this volume Dublin was visited by the plague. The first time was in 1575. The summer had been extraordinarily dry and hot. From May 1 to the beginning of August not a drop of rain fell; and the state of Dublin, with its wretchedly inadequate water supply, its filthy streets and still filthier ditches and open sewers, can be more easily imagined than described. The plague broke out in July, and as we read

"dyd growe in this cittie chieffie by meane that the inhabitauntes whose howses was or is infected with the same disease de keape the same secrete, and soo their neighbors or outhers repayinge to them are trapped in the same disease or seyckness onely by that meane."

Crowds of well-to-do citizens fled terror-stricken into the country, carrying the infection with them wherever they went, and "leving noe sufficient menn to keape the howses and doors open, to be aunswerable to watche, warde, and cesses, necessarie for the keapinge and saufe garde of this cittie," for which offence scores of them were disfranchised, and only readmitted on payment of heavy fines. The name of Dennis Collier, however, "physician and surgien," who for that he "adventured his life in this contagious tyme of plague," was admitted to the freedom of the city, deserves mention as of one who remained faithful to his post. The second visitation occurred in 1604; but this time the plague seems to have assumed a much less virulent form, though one of its victims happened to be the Mayor, Mr. William Gough, of whom it was observed that he "died the soner for that he was soe carefull and ventrose of himselfe in the government of this cittie in these dangerous daies of infection." Hardly less disastrous than the plague was the explosion on March 11, 1597, of a large quantity of gunpowder in process of being transported from the Quay to the Castle. Nearly two hundred persons lost their lives by this accident; twenty houses in the neighbourhood were completely wrecked, and scarcely a house or church in the city, and few in the suburbs, that did not receive some damage in the "tylynges, smaale tymbers and glasse."

The question of public morals was, of course, one that intimately affected the welfare of the city, and the orders of the Council in this respect were many and varied. But it was a sign of the times when, in 1606, after noticing that there had sprung up among the 'prentices certain new vices, "especiallie the wearing of long haire fashioned lyke ruffins, an unmeet thing to be permitted in any civil cittie," they should have attempted to suppress it by ordering any 'prentice who persisted in the offence to be publicly flogged by two porters in disguise.

The annual muster of the citizens at Cullenswood on Easter Monday, or Black Monday as it was called, in memory of a terrible disaster that once befell them there at the hand of the "mountain enemy"; the ringing of a bell "in tyme of greate tempest and storms, to thend that every well-disposed citizen may be remembered to pray for ther neighbors which be in danger upon the seas"; the keeping of "a solemn light" on the eve of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist by the butchers of the city, and of a fire and light by the fishmongers on St. Peter's Eve, are among the most curious of the ancient customs alluded to in the present volume.

There are several other points to which I should have liked briefly to allude, such, for example, as the foundation of Trinity College, the effect of the debasement of the coinage at the close of Elizabeth's reign, the occurrence of many curious words and phrases; but enough, I think, has been said to illustrate the general nature of the contents of the volume. And in expressing my thanks to Mr. Gilbert for the pleasure it has afforded me, I would merely venture to add an earnest hope that the concluding volume of the work will contain, what for working purposes is absolutely indispensable, a full and complete index nominum et rerum.

R. DUNLOP.

NEW NOVELS.

The Witch of Prague. In 3 vols. By F. Marion Crawford. (Macmillans.)

The Trial of Parson Finch. By Somerville Gibney. (Ward & Downey.)

The Fountain of Youth. By Erasmus Dawson. (Chatto & Windus.)

Zadoc Pine, and other Stories. By H. C. Bunner. (Gay & Bird.)

Felicia. By Fanny N. D. Murfree. (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.)

Captain Lanagan's Log. By Edmund Downey. (Ward & Downey.)

Lord Arthur Savile's Crime, and other Stories. By Oscar Wilde. (Osgood, McIlvaine & Co.)

A Curious Case. By Sidney Sime. (Digby & Long.)

MR. MARION CRAWFORD is the most notable living instance to prove that an author may be prolific without deteriorating. He has, on the contrary, gained more and more mastery over his art since he first won wide repute by Mr. Isaacs. The present writer has read all and reviewed several of Mr. Crawford's novels; and now, having just read The Witch of Prague, he finds his admiration of its author's brilliant and exceptionally varied literary faculty enhanced in no slight degree. There is no living British novelist who can compete with Mr. Crawford in range and variety; and though these qualities are not everything, nor even, from the point of view of art, the main thing, they generally concur with a charm that is sufficiently rare to be always welcome and delightful. Of course, something more than wide range and variety of subject is meant; for art lies in the manner rather than the matter, if the two can fitly be dissociated at all. No doubt something is apt to be lost in the gain of wider scope and freer movement, but that any forfeiture of this kind paid by Mr. Crawford is to the serious detriment of the high quality of his work will not be imagined by those who have read romances so notable in literary power, and so varied in kind, as Mr. Isaacs and The Tale of a Lonely Parish, A Roman Singer and Zoroaster, Marzio's Crucifix and To Leeward, A Cigarette-Maker's Romance and The Witch of Prague. His latest book is almost defiantly handicapped; for surely no one, save a master confident of his craft and of his audience, or else an amateur sinning in ignorance against the public taste, would venture to publish a novel wherein the hero is never once named, but always alluded to as "The Wanderer"; where the heroine is "Unorna" and, to echo Poe's Raven, "nothing more"; where one of the protagonists is called Keyork Arabian (as though such strange nomenclature were as natural as "John Smith"); and where the co-heroine is so shadowy and unreal a personage that one is almost indifferent whether she be the vision imagined by Unorna or the veritable living daughter of a still more shadowy and unreal father, also never named, though by inference the reader is aware that Beatrice's father is a Mr. Varanger. In addition to this, there is a wild and, from the general standpoint, most improbable plot, with a background as remote from the ordinary reader's knowledge as it is gloomily impressive. Finally, this strange romance is sent forth under as unattractive a title as could well be chosen, unattractive at least to the class of readers to whom Mr. Crawford's books appeal. It means much, therefore, that in the face of this heavy handicapping The Witch of Prague is so remarkable a book as to be certain of as wide a popularity as any of its predecessors. The keenest interest for most readers will lie in its demonstration of the latest revelations of hypnotic science. Mr. Crawford has not rummaged among old and recent books for striking incidents, at the cost of verity: he is a scholarly and acute student who has brought to his purpose a familiarity with the esoteric aspects and revelations of hypnotism which is far beyond that of most of our physicians, even of the newer school—the men who of all others ought to be acquainted with one of the most remedial factors as well as most obvious perils for mind and body within the scope of human knowledge. But The Witch of Prague is not merely a striking exposition of the far-reaching possibilities of a new science; it is a romance of singular daring and power. It would be useless to give here any digest of the plot, as the book will be read independently of any critical signposts. But it may certainly be added that this novel is written with a power which shows a growing and not a waning maturity of talent—an admission which may be freely made, though, for his part, the present writer is of opinion that Mr. Marion Crawford reaches his highest level, not in semi-mystical romances like Mr. Isaacs and The Witch of Prague, certainly not (for all their charm and even power) in imaginative exercises like Zoroaster and K'halel, but in acute and vivid revelations of life more within the scope of his individual experience, in books of the kind in which To Leeward stands pre-eminent.

When a novel begins thus:

"The birthday of the year 1754 was smiled on by the sun. There was not a cloud in the sky to mar his greeting—a smiling greeting, but lacking warmth. Jack Frost, &c., &c.: the very breeze, &c., seemed to have no power to toy with its accustomed playthings (and so forth, including 'the fragile jewels' with which novel-readers must now be so woefully familiar)"

—when a novel begins thus, the reader who is wary will rather turn to Thomson's Seasons at first hand, or at least seek mental recreation elsewhere. The plot of The Trial of Parson Finch, however, is a fairly good one; and the story, as a whole, might be entertaining, were it not in other respects conventional to a wearisome degree. However, what is wearisome to one may very well be pleasant to another; and it is only fair to the author to add that he has produced a book which is no doubt quite capable of affording welcome distraction to many readers.

There is a fount of youth in the human heart, which is the cause of our insatiable craving for excitement and daring adventure; and no happier title could be had for a book of the wildest adventure than that chosen by "Erasmus Dawson," or, rather, Mr. Paul Devon. The fountain of youth that is nominally sought for is not that situate in Heine's "wondrous isle of Bimini," nor is any one of the "heroes" the least like the dauntless Ponce da Leon. Those who would hear of the actual quest of that impossible ideal should turn rather to another recent book bearing the same name, the remarkable dramatic poem by Mr. Eugene Lee Hamilton. I say "nominally sought for," because the strange quest of Erasmus

Dawson and John Luttrell and the most irreverend Rev. Zachary Scutcher is really for a mysterious metal named Dianite, whose powers and capacities are nothing short of miraculous; though the voyage is assumed to be undertaken at the instance of an enormously wealthy but weak-minded nobleman, for no other purpose than a search for the fabulous Waters of Eternal Youth. The story is so good, the narrative is, indeed, such an enthralling one, that it can afford to suffer that disparagement which is also its due. In the first place, the introduction of "the funny man," in the person of Barnabas Geach, is altogether unnecessary, and, from first to last, is a source of irritation to the reader as well as of weakness to that air of verisimilitude which is the most potent charm in narratives of this kind. He is Holly out-Hollied. Several of the incidents, too, are markedly drawn after the originals by Mr. Rider Haggard, and even Mr. Stanley's recent African experiences are laid under too obvious contribution. The first two-thirds of the romance is much the better portion; the real or imagined necessity to introduce a love episode rather spoils the closing chapters. But with all its faults and shortcomings, even with all its obvious inspiration by King Solomon's Mines (down to a profusion of bloodshed, which at times make a chapter seem a kind of literary shambles), The Fountain of Youth is one of the ablest and most entertaining stories of adventure which has been published for a year or two past. That touch of what a French critic of M. Jules Verne paradoxically calls the magic of the possible-impossible enhances its fascination.

Mr. H. C. Bunner is well known in America both as poet and romancer. These short stories do not seem to me to adequately represent his powers, though they are good of their kind, and "Zadoc Pine" itself is in every way admirable. "The Zadoc Pine Labour Union," to give it its full title, and "Squire Five-Fathom," are the most striking of the six tales: though all are more than ordinarily readable, and only one, "Natural Selection," is too long for that artistic effect which is, or should be, the justification as well as the aim of the short story or episode.

Miss Fanny Murfree (not, be it noted, the author of The Prophet of the Great Smoky Mountain and other Tennessee tales) is fond of such sentences as "by way of accomplishing this purpose she proceeded per ambages"; "had written of his pretensions much as if they were un fait accompli"; "Fred will be entirely au fait by the time he gets home"; and, worst of all, "her husband regarded her au grand sérieux." It is a pity that Felicia is spoilt by these and other unfortunate tricks of style or blunders of inexperience, for there is much in the book that is creditable in accomplishment as well as notable in promise. The effort to be "powerful" is sometimes too emphasised: the author is on safe ground as long as she is on the highway.

Naturally there is humour as well as "go" in a story by Mr. Edmund Downey, better known perhaps as F. M. Allen.

These "passages in the life of a merchant skipper" are entertaining, and their interest is enhanced by the illustrations. Captain Lanagan's Log has the great merit of being suited to "old boys" as well as to youngsters.

Lord Arthur Savile's Crime, and its three companion stories, will not add to their author's reputation. Mr. Oscar Wilde's previous book, though in style florid to excess, and in sentiment shallow, had at least a certain cleverness; this quality, however, is singularly absent in at least the first three of these tales. Much the best of the series is the fourth, the short sketch entitled "A Model Millionaire," though even this brief tale is spoilt by such commonplace would-be witticisms as "the poor should be practical and prosaic," "it is better to have a permanent income than to be fascinating." There is much more of this commonplace padding in the story that gives its name to the book, e.g., "actors can choose whether they will appear in tragedy or comedy," &c., "but in real life it is different. Most men and women are forced to perform parts for which they have no qualifications," and so on, and so on, even to the painfully hackneyed "the world is a stage, but the play is badly cast." This story is an attempt to follow in the footsteps of the author of New Arabian Nights. Unfortunately for Mr. Wilde's ambition, Mr. Stevenson is a literary artist of rare originality. Such a story as this is nothing if not wrought with scrupulous delicacy of touch. It is, unfortunately, dull as well as derivative. "The Sphinx without a Secret" is better. "The Cantervile Ghost" is, as a story, better still, though much the same kind of thing has already been far better done by Mr. Andrew Lang; but it is disfigured by some stupid vulgarisms. "We have really everything in common with America nowadays, except, of course, language." "And manners," an American may be prompted to add. A single example may suffice:

"The subjects discussed were merely such as form the ordinary conversation of cultured Americans of the better class, such as the immense superiority of Miss Fanny Davenport over Sara Bernhardt as an actress; the difficulty of obtaining green corn, buckwheat cakes, and hominy, even in the best English houses . . . and the sweetness of the New York accent as compared to the London drawl."

It is the perpetration of banalities of this kind which disgusts Englishmen as well as "cultured Americans." One should not judge the society of a nation by that of a parish; the company of the elect by the sinners of one's own acquaintance. Mr. Wilde's verbal missiles will serve merely to assure those whom he ridicules that another not very redoubtable warrior has bestirred himself in the camps of Philistia.

Mr. Sidney Sime's Curious Case is a sufficiently sensational return for the shilling demanded for it. It is, indeed, better than most books of its kind; and the social problem involved in Dr. Hart's ethically justifiable if legally reprehensible and punishable action is one that is all the better for being brought before the attention of thinking men and women in all manner of ways.

WILLIAM SHARP.

SOME BOOKS ABOUT JAPAN.

Noto: an Unexplored Corner of Japan. By Percival Lowell. (Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co.) Noto is certainly a suggestive name, and it suggested to Mr. Percival Lowell womanliness and will. Why this should have increased his desire to go there is not so apparent; but luckily it did, and he went. Luckily, that is, for those who like his book, as many will; not luckily altogether for himself, for Noto was not much of a place, after all, viewed in the light of an unknown goal for a sentimental journeyer. What must have been a greater disappointment was to find that an enterprising European, perhaps himself a sentimental journeyer, had been there before him. Alas! unbeaten tracks have become scarcer in Japan since the voyages and travels of Miss Bird. But Mr. Percival Lowell is a traveller whose disappointments are taken with a light heart; for his pleasure consists so much in seeking, that it is comparatively independent of what it finds. On what he calls the two great principles, "that pursuit is itself the prize, and that the means justifies the end," he was content to have made his journey, even though Noto was not quite so unexplored or quite so unlike other places as he had fondly hoped. At all events the excursion was new to him, and he has made it new to his readers, by the freshness with which he has preserved his impressions, and the felicitous language in which he often expresses them. Noto, indeed, though not unknown, was sufficiently out of the way and difficult of access to make a visit romantic and worthy of record. It lies on the west coast of Nippon; and the journey from Tōkyō is long and has to be performed by every variety of conveyance, including railway, horse railway and jinrikisha, with passages of pedestrianism. The way traverses ranges of high mountains, some of which strike sheer into the sea, and have to be circumvented by giddy roads sliced on the face of the rocks. If on the whole the journey outward proved uneventful and the goal insignificant, the former was not without pleasant incident, nor the latter without food for reflection. The fine and strange scenery, the experiences of the different inns and tea-houses, the old ladies watching the fish-traps on the inland sea of Noto, the charming manners of male and female, and the odd fellow-travellers in their strange variety of costume between European and Japanese, variegate Mr. Lowell's pages with life and colour. Moreover, if the spirit of adventure was somewhat disappointed in going, it had its revenge on the return. Here the traveller, to the temporary distress of himself, but the permanent delight of his readers, got into real difficulties and dangers on the snow mountains, and narrowly escaped being brought back to Tōkyō in custody of the police. All these troubles Mr. Lowell appears to have borne with an equal mind. Clearly what has happened in the day vexes not over much the soul which can take comfort of its imagination. Many of the passages in the book remind us of Robert Louis Stevenson, as when Mr. Lowell writes:

"Twilight is the time of times to arrive anywhere. Any spot, be it ever so homely, seems home-like then. The dusk has snatched from you the silent companionship of nature, to leave you poignantly alone. It is the hour when a man draws closer to the one he loves, and the hour when he most shrinks from himself, though he wants another near. It is then the rays of the house lights wander abroad and appear to beckon the homeless in; and that must be, in truth, a sorry hostelry to seem such to him."

Throughout, this little book is well written and in excellent taste. It is various, too, vivid description alternating with epigram, and shrewdness with poetical feeling. Indeed, Mr.

Lowell bursts into poetry itself now and then, though his verse is not of so high a quality as his prose. The book can be safely recommended to all those who love Japan, or literature, or both.

Japanese Girls and Women. By Alice Mabel Bacon. (Gay & Bird.) The Japanese cannot complain of any want of interest on the part of Western nations as to themselves and their country. It is true that their fascinating art has had, perhaps, the lion's share of attention; but, nevertheless, their history, their religions, their habits and customs, their industries and their literature, the geography and natural history of their country, have undergone a not less thorough scrutiny by travellers, men of science, and philosophers of Europe and America. So true is this, that a book like the present, which, to a certain extent, covers new ground, and adds not a little to our previous knowledge of the Land of the Sun, is a welcome surprise. It cannot, indeed, be said that Japanese girls and women are entirely unknown to us. We are very familiar with their outward appearance; we know their beautiful costumes to a hairpin, and their various types of beauty, from the Daimio's wife to the inn-keeper's daughter. Even those who have never left London or Paris can picture to themselves with confidence the charming manners of the tea-house girl and the blandishments of the geisha. Nor can anyone have read the many translations of Japanese stories and dramas without knowing something of the character of Japanese women, especially in the days of old Japan. But of the domestic life of the Japanese woman of to-day, of her education, her principles, and her fortunes, we have little or no knowledge. Why this particular plot of the Japanese field should have remained so long untilled, it is not difficult to divine. It required the hand of a woman; and few Western women, with the necessary opportunities and inclinations for the study, have resided for sufficient time in the country. The author of this little book appears to have been the first to have set about the task with the necessary qualifications. In accepting as authoritative accounts of Japan by persons foreign to the country, one may be pardoned for a little scepticism, especially when they purport to divulge the secrets of the inner life. The reader is very much at the mercy of his instructor, and experience has shown the danger of implicit confidence. But in the present case there is little cause for caution, and our suspicions are, to a great extent, disarmed by the modesty of the preface, in which the writer tells us that this work is by no means entirely her own, that it is largely the result of interchange of thought with Japanese ladies, that it has been carefully revised and criticised by Miss Umé Tauda, teacher of English in the Peeresses' School in Tōkyō, and by Mr. Griffin, the author of The Mikado's Empire. But the book has little need of such credentials. The Japanese girl, like everything else in Japan, is in a state of transition. She has her high school, and she likes it, finding in the discipline less restraint than in the gentle round of home duties and ceremonies; and it is a sad day when she has to resign such comparative liberty of thought and action. Another fear on leaving school is that of marriage; for though a Japanese girl is not forced to marry against her will, she is "expected" by the family to take little time in making up her mind, so that she may be off her parents' hands at the age of sixteen or thereabouts. It often happens that she takes leave of her school-fellows to be immediately mated with a man of whom she knows little, and for whom she cares nothing, and enters on a doubtful career, with no prospect at the best of any but a humdrum future as wife and mother. It is evident that at present the "higher education" is not so suitable for her future as that simple but in many respects beautiful one, of music, and tea-making, and flower painting, and etiquette, and other pretty and domestic accomplishments, which sufficed under the old conditions of Japan to make her life happy and contented. Already we learn that she looks upon her lessons in etiquette as the least interesting of all, and not without feelings of ridicule. Let us hope that some means may be found of modifying the too great ceremony of Japanese manners without destroying their charming ideal of politeness and grace. At all events, no one reading this book can help feeling a more than common interest in the future of Japanese girls and women; but it is not only they that will have to change, but their lords and masters, before the discordance between the old and new civilisations in regard to their position is satisfactorily arranged.

Utamaro. Par Edmond de Goncourt. (Paris: Charpentier.) Utamaro or Kitagawa Utamaro (which is as though we called Titian, Vecellio Titian), is a name now well known among the collectors of Japanese chromo-zylographs. He belongs to the palmy period about the beginning of this century, when the art of printing with coloured wood blocks reached a point of beauty and technical perfection unattained elsewhere. Utamaro's exquisite taste in the arrangement of delicate colour, the decorative charm of his compositions, the freedom and elegance of the lines of his drapery, and the grace of his poses, make his works objects of desire to the collector. He belonged to what is known as "the popular school of Japanese art." He had the same master as Hokusai. He illustrated novelettes; he was a marvellous draughtsman of birds and flowers and insects; but his chief speciality was in depicting the manners and appearance of that class of women who dwell in the "maisons vertes" of Yedo. A book which consists of a "Catalogue raisonné," accompanied by a biography which is little more than a critical account of the different works of a Japanese artist, is of interest to a comparatively small class; and it is not a little remarkable as a sign of the ardour with which the study of Japanese art has been lately pursued in Europe that this volume should have already reached its second thousand. Part of this success may be due to the popularity of the veteran author, Mr. Edmond de Goncourt, who, though past the age of seventy, has entered with a light heart upon an undertaking which might daunt a younger man. The author of so many books on the arts of his own country in the eighteenth century proposes to write (if fate allow him) a series of no less than thirteen volumes on "L'Art Japonais du XVIII^e Siècle," of which this is the first. It will be the wish of all that he may live to complete the task.

NOTES AND NEWS.

THE most interesting announcement for the coming season that we have as yet heard of is a volume of poems by Mr. W. E. H. Lecky, which Messrs. Longmans have in the press.

FOR some time before his death, Mr. William Blades was engaged on a History of Printing, which was intended for publication in the "Book Lovers' Library." The work grew under the author's hands till it became too large for this series. The volume was practically completed before Mr. Blades's death; but it will be edited by Mr. Talbot B. Reed, who will now add to the volume a memoir of the author, and a list of his contributions to literature on the subject of printing. The work will be published by Mr. Elliot Stock, in crown quarto size, and will be copiously illustrated.

MESSRS. LONGMANS will publish, at the end of the present month, the third and concluding volume of Mr. S. R. Gardiner's Student's History of England, covering the period from 1689 to 1885. Soon afterwards they will have ready a companion Atlas of English History. In addition to historical maps of the British Isles, and plans of battles and sieges, it will contain maps of foreign countries which have been the scenes of events connected with English history, while the colonial development of the race also receives recognition. Some of the maps have been specially prepared for this atlas; and all have been carefully revised, and in some cases corrected, by Mr. Gardiner himself.

MESSRS. SWAN SONNENSCHNEIN will shortly publish a History of Titles, by the Rev. H. W. Clarke. The volume, which takes Selden's classical work of the same title (1618) as its chief authority, will contain some trenchant criticisms on Lord Selborne's book, and for the first time publish important statistics of the gross aggregate amount of the revenues of the Church of England, derived from the new parliamentary return compiled in the office of the Ecclesiastical Commissioners.

A REPRESENTATIVE collection of stories of all ages and all countries is about to be published by Messrs. Cassell & Co. under the title of The World of Romance, edited by "Q." and illustrated with original engravings. Part I. will be issued with the October magazines at the end of this month.

WITH the issue for October, which commences Vol. III., The Expository Times will be enlarged to double its present size. An arrangement has been made with Mr. Pinches, of the British Museum, to write a series of articles dealing with the Old Testament and the Cuneiform Inscriptions. He will go over the whole field of discovery in this department, incorporating and correcting Schrader's latest edition, and adding the new material which has been made available since it was published. Prof. Sayce will write upon "The Higher Criticism and the Monuments," the first article appearing in October. The same number will contain an article by Prof. Caspar René Gregory, of Leipzig, dealing with the teaching of theology in that university. Arrangements have also been made for articles upon English literature in its religious and ethical aspects: Prof. Henry Jones, of University College, North Wales, will write on Browning, and Miss Woods, of Clifton High School, on Milton.

MR. HODGES has nearly ready for publication Narcissa Brendon, a romance in two volumes, by Mr. Edward Peacock.

DR. GEORGE MACDONALD'S new novel, The Flight of a Shadow, will be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

MESSRS. HENRY & Co. will publish in October a new novel, by Mr. George Moore, in one volume, entitled Vain Fortune, with illustrations by Mr. Maurice Grieffenhagen.

MESSRS. FREDERICK WARNE & Co. will publish next week a new sensational story in their "London Library," entitled Sir Ralph's Secret, by Mr. James Maclaren Cobban.

MESSRS. WARD & DOWNEY have a new work by Mr. Fogerty in the press, called Mr. Jocko, after an educated ape, around whom are grouped a number of curious characters, chiefly connected with a travelling circus. The story is intended to illustrate the teaching of Darwin, and is written from an agnostic point of view, recognising "Mr. Jocko" as an amiable member of the great human family. The book will be published simultaneously in America under the new copyright law.

MESSRS. CHATTO & WINDUS will publish shortly a volume of poems by Miss Mathilde Blind, entitled Dramas in Miniature.

A THIRD series of poems for recitation by Messrs. Aylmer & Gowing, entitled Ballads of the Tower, will shortly be published by Messrs. Griffith, Farran, Okeden, & Welsh. The book will be dedicated to Sir Edwin Arnold.

THE next volumes of the "Social Science Series" (Sonnenschein) will be The London Programme, by Mr. Sidney Webb, dealing with the water and gas companies, markets, docks, tramways, hospitals, poor law, housing of the poor, police, ground rents, and like topics; and The Modern State in Relation to Society and the Individual, by M. Paul Leroy Beaulieu.

MESSRS. DIGBY & LONG have now ready, under the title of Up Stream and about Town, the humorous reminiscences of a boating man, containing character-sketches of his companions and persons he has met.

WE are informed that the sixth edition of Mr. Joseph Hatton's By Order of the Czar was sold within a fortnight, and that a seventh edition is now in the press. Mr. Hatton is one of those whom the new American law will benefit; for, while no less than three pirated editions were brought out of By Order of the Czar, he has already arranged for the copyright of his new novel, The Princess Mazaroff, which will appear both here and in New York early in October.

MR. FRANK MURRAY, of Derby, Leicester, and Nottingham, has now ready for issue to subscribers a little volume of prose by Mr. R. Le Gallienne. The edition is limited to 250 copies, all of which, we hear, were taken up before publication.

SOME interesting information respecting the life and works of Miss Olive Schreiner is given in the September number of Beauty's Queens, together with a portrait.

THE English Dialect Society has sent out three of its publications for 1891, viz., Rutland Words, by the Rev. Christopher Wordsworth; a supplement to the Sheffield Glossary, by Mr. Sidney O. Addy; and an essay on Alaut in the Modern Dialects of the South of England, translated from the German of Dr. Karl Bülbring by Mr. A. W. Badham. A fourth volume will be issued later in the year.

MR. R. S. SMYTHE, the Australian manager, and Major Pond, of New York, sailed from England last week to return to their respective countries. Mr. Smythe carries away with him contracts with Mr. Henry M. Stanley (for October 1891 to April 1892), and with Max O'Rell and M. Paderewski (for May 1892 to May 1893). Major Pond has engaged Sir Edwin Arnold and Max O'Rell for the forthcoming season (1891-1892) in the United States and Canada. Max O'Rell, who is engaged by both managers, will sail for Australia from San Francisco on March 31, 1892.

THE Duchess of Albany has consented to open the new buildings forming the extension of the Printers' Almshouses at Wood Green, N., at an early date in October.

THOSE who have been unable to obtain a copy of Mr. William Watson's little volume of poems entitled Wordsworth's Grave—which won such unusual praise from Mr. W. D. Howells in Harpur's Magazine, and from Mr. Grant Allen in the Fortnightly Review—may be glad to know that Mr. Fisher Unwin has just published a new edition of it in his "Cameo Series." For the benefit of the biographer of the future, we add that two pieces, both of a somewhat personal nature, which appeared in the first edition, are now omitted; while four new ones are added—"In Laleham Churchyard," "The Glimpse," "A Child's Hair," and "Ireland." At the same time the number of Epigrams has been increased from twenty to forty-seven, by larger drafts upon the volume of one hundred Epigrams which was published at Liverpool (Gilbert G. Walmsley) in 1884.

ORIGINAL VERSE.

WEAL AND WOE.

THE tide has ebb'd, and we a little band
Are left alone upon the silent sand:
Why are these sad dark rocks of waves bereft,
And storm-tossed weeds as spellbound seamarks left
To show where once the eager waters spread?
The vigorous life is gone—we softly tread,
Now touched with awe, our careless laughter
stilled,
By the stern grandeur of the bare rocks chilled.

The tide has ebb'd, and we who saw it flow
Lamenting ask, "Ah, wherefore dost thou go,
Old ocean, hiding in thy southern caves,
While all the north laments thy ebbing waves?"
And far-off whispers from th' horizon come,
From flying winds that hither, thither roam.
"Children of men, 'twixt heaven and earth ye go
In this strange fate of wandering to and fro,
Now drawn to good and now to evil deed,
Until from earth's vibration ye are freed.
Why wonder Ocean has its ebb and flow,
While Man alternates still 'twixt Weal and Woe?"

BEATRIX L. TOLLEMACHE.

OBITUARY.

SYDNEY WILLIAMS.

IT is with much regret that we record the death of Mr. Edmund Sydney Williams, in whom liberal studies—alike in theology, in philosophy, and in orientalism—have lost a devoted supporter. For three years (1871-73) he was the publisher of the ACADEMY, and he always continued to be a friend to its interests. He died at his residence, Blackbrook, near Bickley, Kent, in the morning of Tuesday, September 1, in the seventy-fifth year of his age.

Mr. Williams was born at Beeston, in Nottinghamshire, on January 26, 1817; but in the following year he was taken to Hamburg by his father, who had been appointed English teacher at the Johanneum in that city. Here he was educated, and thus he acquired that knowledge of German which was afterwards to be so useful to him in his business. In 1836 he returned to England, and became a clerk with Messrs. Black & Armstrong, foreign booksellers in London. On the failure of that firm, he joined with Mr. Frederick Norgate as publishers and booksellers, under the style of Williams & Norgate, at 14, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden. The partnership terminated in 1864, when Mr. Norgate opened a house of his own in Bedford-street; and Mr. Williams has since carried on the business alone at the old address. A branch office was opened at Edinburgh in 1855.

As a publisher, Mr. Williams did much for the cause of liberal theology. Under the auspices of the Theological Translation Fund, he brought out translations of the most important works of advanced German theology, in thirty-eight volumes. Though supported at first by several prominent English scholars, before the series was concluded the sole responsibility rested upon him. Later, he was entrusted by the Hibbert Trustees with the publication of the works written under their patronage, including the valuable series of Hibbert Lectures. He also published most of the works of Miss Frances Power Cobbe. In philosophy, it is sufficient to say that he was the publisher of Mr. Herbert Spencer, and of the quarterly psychological journal, Mind. His own interest in education led him to issue a large number of school-books, chiefly for the use of teachers of French and German. Among his recent books, we may specially mention Mr. Charles Booth's exhaustive studies of The Labour and Life of the People.

Mr. Williams had a wide knowledge of German literature, and also many friends in Germany. As a young man, he frequently wrote reviews of German books in the Foreign Quarterly Review; and in his old age he took pleasure in forming a valuable collection of books relating to "Reynard the Fox." He acted as agent for Baron Tauchnitz, and intermediary in his negotiations with British authors. Among his other German friends may be mentioned Prof. Pauli, the historian; Prof. Albrecht Weber, the veteran orientalist; and Prof. Th. Aufrecht, of Bonn.

As a man, Mr. Williams was very amiable and loyal in his friendships. Many will remember with mingled feelings the pleasant hours they have passed at his home. Though a keen man of business, he was always generous in his treatment both of authors and of his employees. While he lived in London he devoted much of his spare time to the affairs of the German Hospital at Dalston, of which he was a director, and in which he took a great interest all through his life.

He leaves a widow (a sister of Sydney Dobell) and a family of seven children. His two sons will continue the business.

SELECTED FOREIGN BOOKS.

GENERAL LITERATURE.

- BOURGET, Paul. Sensations d'Italie. Paris: Lemerre. 3 fr. 50 c.
 BRIEFWECHSEL F. Lücke's m. den Brüdern J. u. W. Grimm. Hrg. v. F. Sander. Hannover-Linden: Manz. 5 M.
 RIVET, AUG. La législation de l'enseignement primaire libre. Paris: Larose & Forcel. 6 fr.
 ROSENBERG, M. 17 Blatt aus dem grossherzogl. Silberschatz im Schlosse zu Weimar. Karlsruhe: Bielefeld. 240 M.

THEOLOGY, ETC.

- BEISSEL, S. D. hl. Bernhard Evangelienbuch im Dome zu Hildesheim. Mit Handschriften d. 10. u. 11. Jahrh. in kunsthistor. u. liturg. Hinsicht verglichen. Hildesheim: Lex. 12 M.

HISTORY.

- MOLTKE, Graf H. v. Gesammelte Schriften u. Denkwürdigkeiten. 3. Bd. Geschichte d. deutsch-französischen Krieges von 1870-71. Berlin: Mittler. 7 M.
 QUELLEN zur Schweizer Geschichte. 10. Bd. Rätische Urkunden aus dem Centralarchiv d. fürstl. Hauses Thurn u. Taxis in Regensburg. Basel: Geering. 10 M. 40 Pf.

PHYSICAL SCIENCE.

- NOVAK, O. Revision der paläozoischen Hyolithiden Böhmens. Prag: Rávnac. 4 M.
 SCHLICHTENDAL, D. H. R. v. Die Gallbildungen (Zooeciden) der deutschen Gefässpflanzen. Zwickau: Zückerl. 2 M.
 WEX, G. Ritter v. Periodische Meeresanschwellungen an den Polen u. am Aequator. Wien: Spielhagen. 4 M.

PHILOLOGY, ETC.

- LIEBLEIN, J. Hieroglyphisches Namen-Wörterbuch. Genealogisch u. alphabetisch geordnet. Nach den ägypt. Denkmälern hrg. 3. Lfg. Leipzig: Hinrichs. 30 M.
 LOEPMAN, H. L'inscription anglo-saxonne du reliquaire de la vraie croix au trésor de l'église de St. Michel et Gudule à Bruxelles. Ghent: Clém. 2 fr.
 MEYER, W. Der accentuirte Satzschluss in der griechischen Prosa vom 4. bis 16. Jahrh., nachgewiesen. Göttingen: Deuerlich. 1 M.
 POLAND, F. Staat der Athener, übersetzt u. erläutert. Berlin: Langenscheidt. 70 Pf.

CORRESPONDENCE.

KYD'S "SPANISH TRAGEDY."

London: Aug. 31, 1891.

In the ACADEMY of August 22, Dr. A. Brandl calls attention to a copy of this play in the University Library at Göttingen bearing the following title-page:—

"The Spanish Tragedie, containing the lamentable end of Don Horatio, and Bel-imperia: with the pittifull death of old Hieronimo. Newly corrected and amended of such grosse faults as passed in the first impression. London, printed by Abell Jeffes [not 'Teffes' as printed throughout in Herr Brandl's note], and are to be sold by Edward White, 1594."

The title-page of the undated edition, printed by Alde, and reprinted by Hawkins in his Origin of the English Drama, is identical with the above, except in the imprint, which has:—"At London, Printed by Edward Alde, for Edward White."

This undated edition is conjecturally dated in the British Museum Catalogue, and by some bibliographers, as also of 1594; but if we follow the history of the play in the Stationers' Register we can, I think, pretty accurately determine the date of the Alde edition, and prove it to be much later than that of the Göttingen copy.

The play was entered to Abell Jeffes on October 6, 1592. When he first printed it, and how many editions he issued, we have no means of knowing: the 1594 copy at Göttingen is the only one that has come down to us. And note, that he did not print this edition for Edward White; in 1594 White merely acted as his salesman. Jeffes, indeed, retained his right in the play until August 13, 1599, when he assigned it to William White; and accordingly in this same year we have an edition with the imprint "At London, Printed by William White, dwelling in Cow-lane, 1599." The only other alteration W. White made in Jeffes's title-page was to refer to the faults of the former impression, instead of first impression. What connexion, either of relationship or business, there was between William White and Edward White does not appear; but some there must have been, for on August 14, 1600, Edward White, then warden of the Stationers' Company, directed the Spanish Tragedy, with other works, to be set over to Thomas Pavyer. It seems obvious, therefore, that at some time between William White's publication and the transfer of the play to Pavyer, Edward White must have obtained a right to it, and have got Alde to print an edition for him. We may then, I think, with some confidence date the Alde edition as of the year 1600. The earliest known edition of Pavyer is dated 1602; and in it appear for the first time the additions attributed to Ben Jonson. But for the earlier unadded-to editions it is clear that the Göttingen copy is the most important; and as it appears to be unique, it is to be hoped that our German cousins will favour us with a facsimile reprint of it.

P. A. DANIEL.

A REMINISCENCE OF LERMONTOFF.

Ballykilbeg: Sept. 1, 1891.

Among the memories of Lermontoff's life which have appeared in Russia, à propos of the fiftieth anniversary of his fatal duel on July 27, 1841, one story, the truth of which is vouched for by General Komaroff, is particularly interesting, as it gives a picture of Lermontoff rivalling the mad escapades of his own hero, Petchorin, among the gorges and cliffs of the Caucasus.

It will be remembered that, for a fierce attack on the Emperor Nicholas, in his verses on the death of Pushkin, Lermontoff was transferred from a regiment of the Guards in St. Petersburg to one of the companies serving in the Caucasus against the Cherkess mountaineers. The Russian camp was almost nightly attacked; and to venture outside the lines was to court capture or death. One day Lermontoff proposed to his brother officers—among whom were Pushkin's brother, and Gleboff, afterwards Lermontoff's second in the duel with Martynoff—to arrange a picnic beyond the lines, where their festivities would be out of earshot of the commanding officers. Though extremely dangerous, and contrary to express orders, the picnic was agreed to; and Lermontoff, as projector of the expedition, led the way to a ravine in the mountains, out of sight of the camp. He pointed out a row of figures on the edge of the ravine, and explained to the party that they were Kayaks, whom he had placed there to watch against the Cherkess. A bonfire was lit, well-hidden from the camp, but perfectly visible to the Cherkess sharpshooters, who were hovering round. The officers feasted and made merry, and soon forgot the possibility of an attack. Lyeff Pushkin and Lermontoff, the best talkers of the party, vied with each other in brilliant sallies. Lermontoff overflowed with sparkling wit and epigram. All night the party carried on their revelry, happily unattacked by the Cherkess, till the first grey of morning creeping up behind the mountains admonished them that it was time to return to camp. Then Lermontoff showed his companions the sentinels on whose vigilance they had relied for the safety of their lives; and the officers saw that their faithful Kayak guardians were only old uniforms that Lermontoff had stuffed with straw, and that the whole party had really been at the mercy of the Cherkess all night.

CHARLES JOHNSTON.

"TALLYHO!" "HONNI!"

Faversham: Aug. 27, 1891.

In Achille Jubinal's Nouveau recueil de Contes, Dits et Fabliaux (1839) is "le Dit de la chace du don Cerf," in which, when the Huntsman's pupil is instructed how to speak to his dogs during the hunt, the following lines are printed:

"Et lor dois dire assez, non po (peu)
 Ra, ra, ra, ra, taho taho!"

Being struck by this, I referred to the original MS. from which Jubinal took it (now Bibl. Nat. No. 1593), and found that the second line distinctly is "Ta, ta, ta, ta, ta ho, ta ho!"

which, as it seemed to me, gives us the genesis of tayaut—a word which Littré disdained even to mention. Even nowadays in France it is common to set on a dog by crying "Ta, ta, ta, ta"; and ho is the same as hou, which we have in the cry used in watering a pack of hounds: houleau! which is simply ho! l'eau!

Tayaut must thus be the combination of the two monosyllabic cries "ta" and "ho," with a liquid y inserted as copula by the organs of speech, which y became still more liquid as ll in the English "tallyho."

In the same Dit (p. 156) is the famous word honnir, but in an intransitive sense of "lying hid." The pupil is instructed how to take his dogs to where, from information received, he believes the stag to be concealed:

"Et puis faites chéaus mener
 Là on tu cuides, par avis,
 Que li serf doie estre honnir."

All the examples in Littré are of honnir as an active verb; but in this (unique?) instance the sense is intransitive, and perhaps an earlier meaning. Logically and etymologically "to be put to shame" and "to lie hid," as meanings of honnir, are not far apart in human nature. Vener retains a number of words in their oldest meanings, such as gagner (= "guadagner" = O.H.G. "waidanjan"); paître, "to browse."

It may be added that no less than sixty-two other misprints from the MS. were detected in the same Dit; and I have been informed by a distinguished French expert that Jubinal never had his proofs checked from the original old MSS. which he copied out, or had copied out for him. This may be a useful warning to others who may have to use his publications.

JOHN O'NEILL.

"EFENNĒHŠU."

London: Aug. 31, 1891.

Prof. Hempl's arguments do not convince me that the interpretation "plain" is possible, or that the interpretation "neighbourhood" is wrong.

First, as to the phonology. I never disputed, as Prof. Hempl seems to suppose, that efenĥēhšū* might easily become efenĥēhšū. My objection was that the doubling of the n was not supported by any satisfactory analogy. The case of omattan is not parallel, if it be true that this verb had prefix-stress, because then there is a vera causa for the gemination in this case which does not exist in the other. According to Sievers's view of the etymology (which Prof. Hempl at first accepted), the stress on the prefix is vouched for by the shortening of the root vowel. And though Prof. Hempl now rejects Sievers's hypothesis, he admits that the verb at some period assumed prefix-stress through analogy. But on that supposition the doubling of the n in this word may be explained by the accent, and does not justify the assumption of a similar doubling in so weak a syllable as the second syllable of efen.

As to the meaning, I must admit that Etmüller's "in omni convicinia" looks like a rather sophistical evasion of the difficulty. The notion which he meant to express was, however, something like this: "in all the places that collectively form the neighbourhood." On this view the force of efen- would be the same as in M.E. efen-nea, though I cannot now defend the form of my previous remark with reference to this word. It still appears to me possible that Etmüller was perfectly right. But perhaps we should rather compare efenĥēhšū with such later expressions as even now, even here, even at hand, even by (= close by).

The positive objections to Prof. Hempl's view, on the ground of meaning, he does not attempt to answer. I think most persons will feel that "even-height" is unlikely to have been used for "a plain," and that the sense "on every plain" is not very appropriate to the context. On the other hand, if it had happened that words had been used unequivocally meaning "in every neighbouring district," I do not think it would have occurred to anyone to find any difficulty in the passage. Mr. Stevenson thinks "barn" or "cart" is the word that would be expected; but he would hardly say that the abstract plausibility of either suggestion is so overwhelming as to justify its being accepted in the total absence of etymological support.

HENRY BRADLEY.

"TORPIFY."

Marlesford: Aug. 29, 1891.

In to-day's issue of the ACADEMY, p. 174, col. 1, torpified is spoken of as "an ugly new word." Certainly it is not beautiful; but torpify is hardly "new." According to Dr. Worcester's Dictionary (eds. 1846, 1860, &c.), it occurs in the Edinburgh Review; and I have at hand quotations for it from Landor, Southey, the Saturday Review of August 20, 1859, &c. Properly, its spelling is, of course, torpify. It seemed to me rather too common for insertion in a list of "Some of the Rarer among Old and New Verbs in -fy, Miscellaneous lingually and in other respects, as regards their First Element," which I collected in the New York Nation of August 7, 1890.

F. H.

SCIENCE.

FICK'S COMPARATIVE DICTIONARY OF THE INDO-EUROPEAN LANGUAGES.

Vergleichendes Wörterbuch der Indogermanischen Sprachen. Part I. By A. Fick. Fourth Edition. (Göttingen: Vandenhoeck & Ruprecht.)

It is now more than twenty years ago since Prof. Fick created an epoch in the history of scientific philology by the publication of his Comparative Dictionary of the Indo-European languages. The work was a colossal one; and there was no other man who could have attempted it single-handed, much less have carried it out successfully. Since it first appeared, rapid strides have been made in comparative philology. The languages which had already been studied have been studied more profoundly, languages whose Indo-European character was still a matter of question have been minutely sifted, etymology has submitted to laws of increased stringency, old theories and assumptions have been overthrown, and a wholly new light has been shed on the hypothetical "Parent-speech." The third edition of Fick's dictionary has long been out of print—it is not surprising, therefore, that the fourth edition of it is, in many respects, a new work.

It is no longer possible, even for the author, to traverse the vast field of Indo-European philology by himself. In the Celtic languages he has had the assistance of Dr. Whitley Stokes, in the Slavonic languages of Prof. Bezzenberger; and in the Preface he expresses his regret that he has not been able to utilise the researches of Hübschmann in Armenian, and of Gustav Meyer in Albanian, as they deserved.

The volume just published contains a short Introduction, in which Prof. Fick sets forth, with the lucid conciseness of which he is a master, his views in regard to the chief questions raised by the study of comparative etymology. The table of different sounds possessed by the Parent-Speech is not as large as that which is found in the pages of Brugmann. Brugmann's neutral vowel, for example, is wanting, and Fick believes that the sonant b was unknown to the primitive Aryans. He regards the East-Aryan ç and k as more original than the West-Aryan k and velar q; and he still holds, in a modified form, to the theory of the independent growth of the several Indo-European languages, which was once the subject of so much controversy between himself and Johannes Schmidt. These languages, he considers, fall into three groups, Eastern, Western, and Intermediate, each group developing separately and without being influenced by another. If Schmidt's views were correct,

"the members of the Intermediate group would exhibit original linguistic formations, peculiar only to it and one or other of the two groups on either side of it. In the case of the Eastern group, the common stock of words would exist in Iranian and Slavonic, Greek and Phrygo-Armenian, Teutonic and Lithuanian. I find nothing in the common vocabularies of these languages which would indicate a continual and fruitful contact."

The Eastern branch will have been the first to separate itself from the mother-speech.

The Eastern or Iranian branch, Prof. Fick further argues, left the primitive hive before agriculture was known to the Aryans, or at any rate was developed to any considerable extent. But here I think he depends too much upon negative evidence. A nomadic life is not favourable to agriculture and the retention of agricultural terms in a vocabulary; and it therefore does not follow that such terms did not exist in the Parent-Speech, because the Iranian emigrants no longer possessed them when they first become known to us. Upon negative evidence only we should be obliged to maintain that the primitive Aryans were unacquainted with seas, lakes, or rivers; and yet the existence of a word for "boat" in both the Eastern and Western branches of the Indo-European family of speech shows that such a conclusion would be false. We must wait to see what light M. de Morgan will have thrown upon the subject by his excavations in the prehistoric tumuli of Northern Persia.

Prof. Fick does not touch upon the question, which has of late been so greatly exercising the minds of the anthropologists: who were the primitive Aryans, the original speakers of the Indo-European languages, and from whence did they come? Nor does he refer to Penka's suggestion, that the leading phonetic differences which mark off one Indo-European language from another are due to the inability of a conquered population to pronounce the language of their masters. Prof. Rhys has recently based an ingenious theory upon this suggestion in order to account for the transformation of qu into p.

I wish I could find space to reproduce Prof. Fick's words upon the nature of roots. But I must content myself with quoting a passage from the Hindu grammarian Bhartrihari, which shows that even in India protests have been raised against the grammatical system which Bopp introduced into Europe, and translated into the materialistic terms of European logic.

"The significant element in language is the sentence, not the letter or the word. Individual words have as little real existence as roots, stems, or suffixes; like these, words are the artificial creations of the grammarian, whose object is to assist the defective intelligence."

After this I find it difficult to understand Prof. Fick's attitude in regard to the primitive Indo-European suffixes; what proof is there, or can there be, that they were ever separable from the forms to which they belong, much more that they were ever independent words?

It is clear, however, that throughout his linguistic researches he has his eye fixed, not so much upon obscure questions such as these, as upon the great problems of anthropology, to which comparative philology ought to be a helpful handmaid. The late tendency of the science has been to forget the larger questions which occupied the thoughts of a former generation, and to dwell too exclusively upon minor points of detail. It is good to be reminded occasionally that this is not the whole duty of the linguistic student. Something more is demanded from him than a knowledge of phonology and an acquaintanceship with the latest hypothesis as to the etymology of the Greek áv.

I must not omit to say that the volume of Prof. Fick's Dictionary just published contains three comparative vocabularies, one of the Parent-speech, another of the Eastern, and the third of the Western European periods of linguistic unity; and, in conclusion, I must express a hope that he will not object to my having used in reference to it the two expressions Indo-European and Aryan, the first to denote the languages of the Indo-Iranian and European family of speech, the second to denote their original speakers. The term "Teutarian," which he proposes in place of "Indo-European" or "Indo-Germanic," is excellent; but I am afraid that it is now too late to hope for its general acceptance.

A. H. SAYCE.

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE DISCOVERIES OF THE AMERICAN EXPEDITION TO BABYLONIA.

London: August 22, 1891.

In a letter from Constantinople, dated July 27, Dr. Peters, the enthusiastic chief of the American expedition to Babylonia, has communicated to me some of the important discoveries which he made in the course of his explorations. Dr. Peters having kindly given me permission to publish the contents of his interesting letter, I beg leave herewith to communicate the substance of the more important parts, with translations of the inscriptions quoted, and a few comments thereon, expressing to him my thanks for the privilege accorded.

Dr. Peters says:—

"The fact has already been published that we found at Niffer, during the first year of our work, a stamp of Naram-Sin. The second year I found another stamp of the same king, and two of Sargon his father. I also found three door sockets with votive inscriptions of Sargon of Agade. . . . At about the Sargon level we found several inscriptions of another king, apparently, therefore, of about the same age, who seems to be unknown. Here is one of his inscriptions on an alabaster vase from the temple of Bel."

Dr. Peters here gives a copy of an archaic Babylonian inscription which I read as follows:—

"Erimuš (or Urumuš) king of the earth" (or "the universe"),

in Babylonian: Eri-mu-uš luḡal kiš.

As is now well known, the date of Sargon of Agade (formerly read Agane) is generally accepted as being about 3800 B.C., his son Naram-Sin having reigned about 3750. Erimuš or Urumuš probably reigned, as Dr. Peters indicates, about the same period, and his name is a welcome addition to our knowledge. Dr. Peters's discoveries prove, moreover, that the city of Niffer was one of the most ancient in Babylonia, a fact which is also confirmed by the newly-found Akkadian (or Sumerian) story of the Creation, published by me in the ACADEMY, in which Niffer is the first city mentioned by name. The style of the inscription is the same as that of the inscriptions of Sargon of Agade already known.

Dr. Peters then continues:—

"Here is also a rude inscription found on several door sockets of about the same period. . ."

The text which he gives I translate as follows: "(To) Bel, his beloved king, Garde (?) has dedicated (this)" (Ellilla, luḡal kiaga-ni garde munaru). The text is in five lines, and seems to be perfect. The reading Garde, though doubtful, is very probable. There is, however, no indication whether it is a royal name or not.

"Among the curious and interesting finds from the temple of Bel are a number of votive inscriptions, chiefly on lapis-lazuli, agate, and a chalk-like white stone, so soft that it had to be covered with a kind of enamel. These are all from one room, in a series of booths or shops before the temple, had all been contained in one box, and were in various stages of completion, showing, perhaps, that this was the shop of a vendor or manufacturer of 'objets de piété.' The inscriptions on the bulk of these belong to Kurigalzu, son of Burnaburiash, but the largest and most important of the series bears the name of a king. . . . He should be approximately of the period of Kurigalzu, and he bears the title 'king of Babylon.'"

The name which Dr. Peters gives I read Kadasman-Turgu (written Ka-da-as-ma-an-tur-gu), a variant reading of which (Ka-da-as-man-tu-ur-gu) occurs on a small lapis-lazuli tablet. Another similar name, Kadasman-Bel (Ka-da-as-ma-an-(D.P.)Bél), occurs on an agate tablet of the same series.

This find of Dr. Peters is most important, for it furnishes us with the names of two Kassite kings, one wholly, the other partially, new. The name Kadasman-Bel is evidently the same as that hitherto transcribed as Kara-Bel (by comparison with such names as Kara-Murudas, &c.). The reason of this misreading is that the first element of the name, as known before, was written differently, and was regarded as composed of two characters—ka and ara (?). Really, however, it consists of three, and is to be read Kadisman or Kadesman, the whole, Kadasman (Kadesman, Kadisman)-Bel, meaning "(my) trust is Bel." At present a precise date for these two rulers, Kadasman-Turgu and Kadasman-Bel, cannot be ventured on: but, as they were found along with a small tablet bearing the name of Nazi-Murutta (= Nazi-Murattas), son of Durri-galzu (about 1345 B.C.), they probably reigned about that time. Dr. Peters adds with regard to this series that "one very pretty agate amulet bore on one side a finely cut inscription of Dungi, king of Ur, and on the other side a less finely worked inscription of Kurigalzu (= Durri-galzu)"—a combination interesting from more than one point of view.

Dr. Peters then describes the inscriptions of Zur-Sin or Amar-Sin, which he found "in a small two-roomed construction before the great wall of the temple of Bel." They were on two diorite door-sockets, one at the outer and the other at the inner door. The bricks of the building also bear his name.

At Mugheir (or Mukeyyer) Dr. Peters found a brick "dedicated to the god (Ni-sum [?]), his king, by Kuri-galzu" (Durri-galzu), "restorer of En-lil-la," the powerful king, "king of Sumer and Akkad," &c. Dr. Peters then says:

"At Mugheir the natives had been digging out bricks for use either in building the new dam across the Hindiyeih canal, or for the purpose of building in Nasriyeh, opposite Mugheir, across the Euphrates. Lying on the surface I found a diorite door socket with a fine inscription of Ganil-Sin, which the Arabs had been trying to efface by backing away the surface. A larger inscription on a block of stone had been entirely destroyed. Four brief and identical inscriptions of (Ur-Bau), the same which occurs on the bricks of the Ziggurat, were in various stages of effacement. The Turkish law absolutely forbids you to carry off such objects for yourself; and the sad experience of explorers shows that if you attempt to have them placed in the museum at Constantinople you involve yourself in manifold difficulties and expenses, and at the end they may never arrive at their destination. In Irak inscribed bricks are as the sands of the sea for number; but you may not take them, and the government will not give them transport to Constantinople. It is altogether a sad spectacle of waste and destruction."

* It is not improbable that kadasman is really two words, noun and pronoun, in which case kadaš would mean "trust," and man "any."

Dr. Peters seems to have had very fair success in his explorations, and is greatly to be congratulated on the important discoveries he has made. It is to be hoped that he will soon be able to give them to the world, as they are of more than usual interest and value.

THEO. G. PINCHES.

P.S.—The name of King Erimuš or Urumuš seems also to occur on some fragments from Sippara (Abu-habbah) which Dr. Jensen has lately copied; but, if so, the name must, Dr. Jensen thinks, have been written Erimusu (or Urumusu).

SCIENCE NOTES.

It may be remembered that in the spring of 1888 Prof. Oliver Lodge gave two lectures on lightning conductors before the Society of Arts, in which he promulgated several revolutionary views on the subject, and supported them by a series of direct experiments with Leyden jars. The experiments also branched off into a study of electric waves, a subject which was being simultaneously worked at in Germany by Hertz. At the British Association meeting in Bath that same year Prof. Lodge's views were goodnaturedly controverted by Mr. W. H. Preece, partly for the purpose of raising a discussion and partly because some of them were rather startling. Since then more complete communications from Prof. Lodge to the Institution of Electrical Engineers and to many scientific periodicals, and in particular a recent paper read before the Royal Society, are held to have fairly substantiated the new views. We understand that during the present year he has been engaged in welding together the principal portions of all this literature, with sundry additions, and that Messrs. Whittaker & Co. will issue it as a large volume of their "Specialist's" series in the course of the autumn.

A NATURAL HISTORY OF GLOUCESTER, by Mr. C. A. Mitchell, will shortly be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

THE executors of the estate of the late William B. Ogden, the first mayor of Chicago, have selected the University of Chicago as one of the beneficiaries. The gift, which will amount to from three hundred thousand to half a million dollars, will endow a separate department of the university, to be called the Ogden Scientific School, its purpose being to furnish graduate students with facilities for scientific investigation by courses of lectures and laboratory practice. The income of the money is to be devoted to the payment of salaries and fellowships, and to the maintenance of laboratories in physics, chemistry, biology, geology, and astronomy. A large share of the time of the professors in the school is to be given to original investigation, and encouragement of various kinds is to be furnished them to publish the results of their investigations, a portion of the funds being set apart for this purpose.

PHILOLOGY NOTES.

THE "statutory" International Congress of Orientalists held its first general meeting on Tuesday, September 21, at 11 a.m., in the Inner Temple Hall. In the absence of Lord Dufferin, an opening address was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Charles Taylor, Master of St. John's College, Cambridge. The reading of papers and other sectional work has since been going on continuously in the Inner Temple, and also in the rooms of the Law Institution, Chancery-lane. Among the papers read we may mention two as of special interest: on a little-known race of dwarfs in the Atlas Mountains, Morocco, by Mr. R. G. Haliburton; and "Prehistoric Discoveries near Bellary, Southern India," by Mr. F. Fawcett. The latter was illustrated by a collection of stone implements, mostly of a distinct neolithic character, and also by a series of photographs of rock-drawings representing men and animals.

THE attempt to revive the old Oriental Translation Fund by donation and subscription having failed, it has been decided, with the sanction of the council of the Royal Asiatic Society, to bring out certain translated volumes under their patronage. The first volume of this series—a full and complete translation of the first two parts of Mirkhond's Rauzat-us-Safa, or Garden of Purity, containing the Histories of Prophets, Kings, and Khalifs—will be ready for delivery at the end of October. The volume contains the Moslem version of our Bible stories from the creation of genii before Adam up to the death of Aaron. Details concerning the proposed arrangements for the series will be found in the editor's preface. As only a limited number of this series will be printed, intending purchasers can have copies either of this volume, or of the entire series, reserved for them on sending their names and addresses to Mr. F. F. Arbuthnot, 18, Park-lane, London, W.

FINE ART.

GRAECO-ROMAN INFLUENCE ON THE CIVILISATION OF ANCIENT INDIA.

UNDER this title, Mr. Vincent A. Smith, of the Bengal Civil Service—already known to Oriental scholars for his Index to the Reports of the Archaeological Survey, and for his Catalogue of the Gupta coins—has published a paper in the Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, which deserves attention alike for the abundance of the material collected, and for the ingenuity of some of its conclusions.

Mr. Smith starts with the proposition laid down long ago by James Fergusson—that the introduction into India of stone instead of wood for both architecture and sculpture was due to the influence of Alexander's successors upon the Mauryan dynasty of Chandra Gupta and Asoka. Indeed, he extends this proposition to other fields of civilisation:

"I do not know any historical problem more startling at first sight than that propounded by the sudden and simultaneous first appearance in India during the third century B.C. of long documents in two diverse highly-developed alphabets, of stone architecture, stone sculpture, chronological eras, inscribed coins, and a missionary state religion."

But the greater part of his paper is limited to architecture and sculpture, and still further limited to the architecture and sculpture of one tract and one period.

On the present occasion, he says little about the style of sculpture called Indo-Persian, which is represented throughout Northern India by inscribed monoliths, surmounted by the figure of an animal; or about the manifestly Hellenic sculptures which have been found at Buddha Gaya and Mathura; or about the modified Doric pillar which seems to have characterised the early architecture of Kashmir. He confines himself almost entirely to the numerous remains, all of a very similar class, which have been found in the neighbourhood of Peshawar, on the extreme north-western frontier. This tract is now known as the Yusufzai country, from its Afghan inhabitants, many of whom are still independent of English jurisdiction. Its ancient name was Gandhara; and it included the great cities of Purushapura, Hashtnagar, Taxila, and Manikyala.

Of these Gandhara sculptures Mr. Smith gives a full account, together with a bibliography. The principal collection of them is in the Lahore Museum, of which there seems to be no adequate catalogue. Dr. Anderson has compiled a careful catalogue of the collection next in importance, that in the India Museum, Calcutta. There are also examples in the British Museum, at South Kensington, and in the Oriental Institute at Woking. The first Englishmen to describe these sculptures were the late Sir E. Clive Bayley and General James Abbott; but the attention they have attracted in Europe is mainly due to the exhibition of them by Dr. Leitner in 1870, and to the illustrated publications of Major Cole.

Mr. Smith begins by distinguishing among these sculptures. In a class by themselves he places the pillars of the Ionic order, such as those which Sir A. Cunningham disinterred on the site of Taxila, together with a number of coins of King Azes, whose date is approximately 30-20 B.C. To this same class Mr. Smith would assign a statuette of Athene, in good Greek style, which happens to be almost identical in attitude with the goddess as represented on the coins of the same Azes. These he admits to be Indo-Hellenic, properly so-called, and to date from the beginning of the Christian era.

With regard to the other and much more numerous class, Mr. Smith has a novel theory of his own, which may be summed up in the word "Indo-Roman." This conclusion he bases upon two converging lines of evidence—the character of the sculpture and the probable date. First, the style of architecture is throughout of the Corinthian order of a very florid type, which finds its closest analogy in the ornamentation of the buildings of Palmyra and Baalbek. Yet more notable is the introduction of small human figures among the acanthus leaves, which has an exact parallel in the Baths of Caracalla. Again, the bas-reliefs representing the birth or death of Buddha, the mythological monstrosities, the comic friezes—all alike imitate Greek art of a Romanised type. Fergusson had already observed that some of the Gandhara sculptures might be mistaken for early Christian works. Mr. Smith, after a careful comparison of photographs, gives some fifteen examples of sculptures on sarcophagi in the Catacombs which bear the closest resemblance to the Gandhara bas-reliefs.

The intrinsic evidence of date is unfortunately very meagre, and also ambiguous. The few inscriptions found in the Gandhara region are all written in the Arian or Bactrio-Pali character; but hardly any of them can be definitely associated with the sculptures. Even where dates are given, we cannot be sure what era is intended. Mr. Smith publishes for the first time a photograph of an inscription beneath a bas-relief, which, as read by Sir A. Cunningham, gives the date 274. If this be in the Saka era, which was probably used by Kanishka, it would be identical with A.D. 352; according to the Vikrama Samvat era, it would be A.D. 214. The numismatic evidence is even less satisfactory. At the important site of Jamalgarhi, seven coins of Bazo Deo or Vasu Deva were discovered in the course of the excavations. Coins bearing the name of this king continued to be struck for a long period, but none of them are earlier than about A.D. 150. Major Cole records that coins of Kanishka (A.D. 80 to 120) were found in the superstructure of a building at Sanghao; but Mr. Smith discredits this evidence. The testimony of the Chinese pilgrims shows that, between the visit of Fa Hian (A.D. 400-405) and the visit of Hiuen Tsiang (A.D. 629-642), the Buddhist religion had become almost extinct in Gandhara.

After a consideration of the historical connexion between Rome and the East, Mr. Smith concludes that the school of Gandhara art probably owes its origin to the Syrian expeditions of the Emperor Hadrian (A.D. 117-138), the distinctively Roman influence being derived from Palmyra; that its highest development was contemporary with the Antonines (the middle of the third century); that its closest relationship is with the Christian sculpture of the Catacombs (A.D. 250-450); and that it became extinct by the sixth century. He thus marks a wide interval, of nearly two centuries, between early Indo-Hellenic work proper and what he calls the later Indo-Roman work, thus differing from Sir A. Cunningham, who regards the series as continuous; while, on the other hand, he disagrees with Fergusson, who would bring the latest examples down to the eighth century.

In the remainder of his paper Mr. Smith discusses such cognate questions as the Greek origin of Indian painting, the debt of the Indian to the Greek drama (as to which he entirely adopts the views of E. Brandes and Prof. Windisch—indeed, he suggests that the New Comedy may have been known to learned men in India through the Latin adaptations of Plautus and Terence, as well as in the original Greek), and the influence of Hellenic sculpture in encouraging idolatrous practices.

A special chapter is devoted to the history of the art of coinage. Here, in opposition to Lenormant, Mr. Smith admits the contention of the late Edward Thomas that the mechanical process of coining money was known to the Indians before the time of Alexander. No Indian coins, of course, can be dated before the time of Alexander, because the earliest of the "punch-marked" series bear no legends. But they are struck to the Indian standard of 32 ratias, and bear Indian devices. Some of them also bear characters of the form current in the days of Asoka, but no legends proper; and these Mr. Smith would assign to Asoka himself, who has otherwise left no coinage. This indigenous coinage consisted only of silver and copper. A gold currency (apart from the foreign mintages of the Graeco-Bactrian kings) was introduced by the Indo-Scythians, whose gold coins are essentially Roman aurei, equivalent to Greek staters. From the fairly well-executed Greek legends on these coins of the first two centuries of our era, Mr. Smith infers that Greek may have been understood, at any rate, by many of the court officials. In the reigns of Kanishka and Huvishka Greek probably occupied a position in India similar to that of English forty years ago, previous to the development of the existing system of public instruction. The Gupta coinage is related to the Indo-Scythian, and its devices exhibit faint traces of Greek artistic power as late as A.D. 400. Of this same date are the earliest gold coins (those of Chandra Gupta II.) which follow the indigenous scale of weight. After the break-up of the Gupta dynasty, about A.D. 480, the coinage of India became utterly barbarous, and lost all marks of Hellenic influence on design, legend, or standard.

J. S. C.

THE ART MAGAZINES.

THE most notable article in the Magazine of Art is "David Cox and Peter De Wint," by Mr. James Orrock. The opinions of this painter and connoisseur on these "great masters" of the English school is well known. To him Cox is the purest and truest pastoral painter in oil the world ever saw, and De Wint the finest of all landscape colourists; and he claims for them in the world of art a position analogous to that of the figure painters of Italy, Spain, and Holland. His article is in the form of a review of Mr. Gilbert Redgrave's little book in the "Great Artists" series. The rest of the number is as various, as interesting, and as well illustrated as usual. Mr.

Walter Armstrong reviews the two Salons with his accustomed ability; and the charming tomb of the wicked Barbara Ordeanfi at Forli is pleasantly noticed by Mr. Stephen Thompson.

The series of papers now appearing in Harper's under the title of "The Comedies of Shakspeare, with illustrations by Mr. E. A. Abbey, and comments by Mr. Andrew Lang," deserve notice, not less as "art" than as literature. The comedy for September is "Much Ado about Nothing," which gives Mr. Abbey inspiration for many of those designs in which ease and style are balanced with a charm which is Mr. Abbey's own secret. With grace ever fresh from nature, and humour quite unhackneyed, in spite of his many forerunners, Mr. Abbey gives us a Hero unseen before, and a new Dogberry—both quite credible and delightful.

CORRESPONDENCE.

SOME INSCRIBED STONES IN THE NORTH.

II.

Oxford: Aug. 1, 1891.

From Yarrow I made my way to Chollerford, near Hexham, in order to see the epitaph of Brigomaglos at the Chesters; but in this I was grievously disappointed, as the stone had been stowed away, pending the building of Mr. Clayton's museum on the spot. However, I was lucky enough to find one of the leading antiquaries at Hexham—Mr. Gibson, who kindly gave me a photograph of it. This reads in capital letters, with the M upside down:

BRIGOMAGLOS
LACIT

Underneath are portions of another word, which I guess to have been FILIVS. The greater part of the two last letters are there, and seem to be vs, but possibly, though not probably, IG. It is needless to say that the stone is broken, and the rest of it lost.

At the Chesters there were many things to console me in my disappointment, and among other things I was much exercised by the name Chollerford. I came to the conclusion that Choller must be the English version of the native name of the Chesters, which in its Latin form was Cilurnum. So I asked people at the station how they pronounced Chollerford; that, however, was a mistake, for they looked at the name as set up on the board, and gave what they considered its proper sound to the first o; but when I asked them what they called the station above it, the name of which I knew to be spelt "Chollerton," they at once said Chullerton. As to Cilurnum, it is hard to believe that it is not the same word as the modern Welsh celurn, "a tub or bucket," old Welsh ciurnam, "urnam," as has long since been suggested. But I looked about in vain for anything in the landscape to countenance this identification. Since my return to Oxford, however, a friend has reminded me that the Tyne in the neighbourhood of the Chesters consists of deep pools alternating in a striking fashion with the shallows which connect them. I noticed some of those fine dark pools—there was an excellent specimen close to that comfortable hotel, the George, just above the bridge at Chollerford—but I was not aware then that the local name for them is "cawdrons" or caldrons. This seems to supply the missing link; but there must be a somewhat embarrassing choice of these caldrons from Chollerton down to the remains of the Roman bridge at the Chesters. Perhaps, however, a man well acquainted with that part of the river could even fix on the caldron par excellence, which gave its name to the Roman station of the Chesters.

From Hexham I proceeded to Whithorn, in Galloway, and I do not recollect ever enjoying any trip more in my life: the scenery was fine and the weather perfect, while the pleasure of gazing on a landscape ever new to me was greatly enhanced by a few hours' stay at Dumfries, to visit the resting place of Burns and view the bridge over the Pictish waters of the Nith. Late on a lovely night I reached Whithorn, and in the morning I called on Mr. Galloway, who superintends the excavations carried on at St. Ninian's Candida Casa. We went at once to see an inscribed stone, which he had found some time ago. He had kindly sent photographs of it to Dr. Hübner, of Berlin, and to me; but, owing to no fault of Mr. Galloway's, they were, as photographs are apt to be, here and there rather misleading. At any rate, neither of us could make the inscription out to his own satisfaction. On close inspection, however, of the stone itself, I found the reading comparatively easy, as follows:

TE D[OM]INV
LAVDAMV[S]
LATINVS
ANNORVM
XXXV ET FILIA SVA
ANNI V
IC TINVM
FECERVNT
NEPVS BARROVA
DI

The OM in dominu is so far gone that I could only trace the end of the M, but there never seems to have been a final M at the edge to make the word into dominum. The s of laudamus would also be on the edge of the stone, but I could not trace it with any great certainty: I think it was once there. The remains of the presence of the final s of Latinus are more visible, though I could not vouch for its exact form. The OR and M of annorum are also far gone, but subject to no serious doubt, I think. The two bars of the F slant upwards at a palpably obtuse angle. As to the s of sua I am sorry to find that I have made no note whether it is straight or curved; but that of sinum is decidedly of the former kind, resembling an L upside down. There never was anything to indicate the N of fecerunt in this inscription. The three bars of the E are throughout short, but especially so in the one in nepus, to which must be added that the stone has flaked a little inside this letter; but even as it is, its top bar is as long as the bottom bar of the E immediately above it, namely, in the word fecerunt. The joining of the limbs of the v in nepus is very shallow, if it ever was completely executed. The s is of that form decidedly in this instance. The I of Barrovadi is not quite straight and simple, but I cannot make an E of it. Lastly, the ligatures are AN in annorum, and NN in anni.

The interpretation of the epitaph is much helped by a suggestion which I owe to my learned colleague Mr. Henry Nettleship—namely, that sinum is a late form of signum. Dr. Hübner approves of it, and adds that he had detected the straight s in a squeeze which had been sent him of the stone. He further makes the important suggestion that he construes nepus as if it had been neposes, and treats it as the nominative to fecerunt[u]t. In thus using nepus (for nepos, as on the Exmoor Stone and others) in the singular, the author of the epitaph was proceeding probably on lines suggested to him by the use of the Goideleic word maccu, which tends to be treated as an indeclinable word in Irish clan-names. I say "Irish," for the inscription cannot be Brythonic. It is rather Goideleic or Pictish, and may, so far as I understand it, be Englished thus:

We praise thee as our Lord.

Latinus aged 35 years and his daughter of 5. Here the Descendants of Barrovad made the monument to them.

The said descendants of Barrovad ought to be in Old Irish "Maccu Barraid" or "Barraide," and in Medieval Irish Ui Barraidh or Barraidhi, with the option of substituting g for d in the spelling of those forms. I should be glad if any Irish scholars who are well versed in the pedigrees in the Book of Leinster and other Irish codices would look out for the name of the clan which the Whithorn inscription calls Nepus Barrovadi. That might help us to an approximate date: as it is, I have no means of dating the inscription; but I do not at present see any reason for thinking that it may not belong to the fifth century.

The work which Mr. Galloway has to superintend is very interesting and important. It is to be regretted that it is greatly hampered by the intrusion of modern tombstones. From Whithorn we went to see St. Ninian's Cave, of which I can only say that I have never before seen anything like its rock-walls covered with small crosses of various dates. Owing to the kindness and archaeological knowledge of Mr. Galloway, my day in Wigtonshire was one of the pleasantest I have ever spent in a country which Southerners always visit with pleasure.

J. RHYS.

NOTES ON ART AND ARCHAEOLOGY.

MESSRS. CASSELL & Co. will publish on October 24 the first part of a new work, entitled Historic Houses of the United Kingdom, illustrated with engravings from original drawings and from photographs, and with ground-floor plans of the buildings. It will be uniform with Cathedrals, Abbeys, and Churches of England and Wales.

A WORK on Danish Churches, by Major Alfred Heales, will shortly be published by Messrs. Kegan Paul, Trübner & Co.

MR. FRANK C. HIGGINS is preparing an Introduction to the Study of the Copper Coins of Modern Europe, which will appear in the course of October in the "Young Collector Series" (Sonnenschein). The book will be based on the best authorities, and on a comparison of the actual coins in the collection of the author and others.

THE jury of the annual art exhibition at Munich has made the following awards to English artists: medals of the first class to Messrs. A. Melville and W. Q. Orchardson; and medals of the second class to Messrs. Austen Brown (Edinburgh), Alfred East, E. J. Gregory, David Murray, A. Roche (Glasgow), William Stott, and Herbert Vos.

At the Louvre a new gallery has been opened and filled with Jewish antiquities, and a large mosaic of great interest has been exposed to view. It is known as the Mosaic of Kabr-Hiram, and was discovered by M. Renan in 1863 in the plain of Tyre, where it once formed the pavement of a church dedicated to St. Christopher. It is composed of thirty-one medallions of rural and other subjects.

A statue of Admiral Jacob by Lefevre has been unveiled at Livry, one of Joan of Arc at Beaufort, and one of the late painter Cot at Bédarieux, his birthplace.

MUSIC.

MASCAGNI'S "CAVALLERIA RUSTICANA."

Dresden: August 27, 1891.

MASCAGNI'S one-act Opera, "Cavalleria Rusticana," which was recently produced in Italy, has already been performed frequently in this and in other German cities, and with extraordinary success. How comes it that we have not as yet heard it in London? It would not only be a novelty, but would undoubtedly prove an attraction. Arriving in Dresden last Wednesday, I found it announced for performance on the following evening, and went to judge for myself how far the Opera was worthy of its great reputation. One listens sometimes to new works mistrusting the impressions of the moment; and this, whether they be favourable or unfavourable. On the other hand, there is sometimes an emphatic feeling of some new manifestation of power. Mascagni, in his Opera, holds you spellbound for an hour. As an artist, I am anxious to acknowledge this; as a critic, I will endeavour briefly to account for the effect produced by this brief music-drama.

The libretto, based on Verga's Popular Scenes of Sicily, tells of love, dishonour, and death. The plot is extremely simple. Turiddu loves Lola before he leaves his native village and goes to the wars; the audience is made to understand this by means of a Siciliana, sung by Turiddu (tenor) before the curtain rises, and, indeed, as an episode in the instrumental prelude. This prelude combines quaintness of melody and simplicity of rhythm with skillful and modern harmonies, and with picturesque orchestration; themes are introduced which are afterwards found to be connected with the personages of this village drama. Mascagni's music is simple in structure, though elaborate in detail. Again it is terse, and abounds in effective contrasts. When the curtain rises, villagers are seen assembled before the church in the market square of the Sicilian village; it is Easter morning, and men and women sing alternately, and then together, expressing their joy on the festive holiday. Turiddu has returned from the wars, but only to find Lola married to the itinerant merchant Alfio; in despair he makes love to Santuzza. Lola, however, once more exerts her influence, and her former lover succumbs to her charms. Lucia, Turiddu's mother, is outside her wine shop, and a very effective scene occurs when Santuzza comes to tell of her sorrow and shame; she has been dishonoured and deserted by Turiddu. Alfio now arrives, singing a merry song. He has been travelling, and returns, as he believes, to his faithful wife and happy home. Soon the strains of the organ are heard, and the people gathered outside join in a hymn of thanksgiving. When all have entered the church, Santuzza tells Lucia more of her sorrow. Then Turiddu arrives, and the maiden accuses him of falsehood, when he says he has been away from the village. She refers to her successful rival, but Turiddu repulses the agitated maiden with the cold words, "I am not thy slave." Presently Lola is heard behind the stage singing one of her native songs. She enters, and seeing Turiddu with Santuzza, passes on to the church. Santuzza appeals to Turiddu, and finding appeal useless, threatens him. He casts her from him, and follows Lola into the church. Alfio again appears, and Santuzza, mad with grief and passion, reveals to him the intrigue of Turiddu with his wife. The congregation come out of church. Turiddu invites the men to drink. Alfio joins the group and challenges Turiddu. The challenge is accepted in the Sicilian fashion, and Turiddu, with a presentiment of coming evil, takes farewell of his mother, and bids her look after Santuzza. He then asks forgiveness from the injured husband. The two men retire, and soon comes the news, "Turiddu has fallen; Turiddu is dead."

The action is so rapid; the lyrical moments are introduced in such a natural manner; the personages in this village drama speak so little and say so much; and there is such an absence of effort, that one seems to be taking part in a real village scene rather than witnessing a stage performance. There is no time for reflection; and however brief the scenes, the music has dramatic power and meaning. Mascagni is influenced by German and French composers. He has caught the modern spirit, but he has something also of his own. That in a music drama of one hour in length a composer cannot show his full strength is evident. But he can show enough to make one wish for more. And it must not be forgotten that there is merit in brevity, and a writer who can say a little and say it well is now rare. Over-elaboration is the tendency of the age. Mascagni will of course not go on writing only one-act operas, but whatever he does will probably be characterised by clearness and conciseness. The freshness of his themes, the charm, delicacy, and at times boldness of his harmonies, and the delightful colouring, all proclaim a mind of great freshness and originality.

Concerning the performance I need not enter into detail; it was excellent. The cast was as follows:—Santuzza (Frau Wittich), Turiddu (Herr Anthes), Lucia (Fräulein von Chavanne), Alfio (Herr Scheidemantel), and Lola (Frau Schuch). The fine orchestra of the Hofoper was under the able direction of Capellmeister Schuch.

I must add a word respecting the performance of the "Götterdämmerung" on the following Saturday evening. It commenced at six o'clock and ended at a quarter to eleven. The voices of some of the singers were perhaps not all that could be desired; the mounting of the opera might have been improved upon. But instead of calling attention to any defects, I would rather praise the intelligence, energy, and enthusiasm of all who took part in this great work. Frau Malten was superb as Brünnhilde, and Herr Gudehus displayed real dramatic power as Siegfried. Herr Jensen's forcible impersonation of Hagen also well deserves mention. The orchestral playing was extremely fine. The enthusiasm of the audience was immense; the theatre was crowded, and the interest was maintained till the close. As I left the theatre, and crossed the quiet square, I could not help thinking how fortunate the Germans are to be able to hear from time to time Wagner's trilogy. There may be more human passion in "Tristan," more divine calm in "Parsifal," but for tragic grandeur the "Götterdämmerung" is unsurpassed. The world moves slowly. For half a century and more Beethoven's Choral Symphony has been the stumbling block. Now the "Ring des Nibelungen" is a mystery to some, a mad freak of genius to others. A time, however, is coming, and that not so very far distant, when Wagner's magnum opus will be fully recognised. Can London do nothing to bring about such a result? A few fine performances now of the "Ring" in London would be a grand artistic and, for this must not be altogether forgotten, a grand financial success. There is in London, at any rate, one impresario who has both the power and the means to popularise Wagner's trilogy.

J. S. SHEDLOCK.

MUSIC NOTES.

THE programme has just been issued of the Birmingham Musical Festival, which is to be held this year during the second week of October, about a month later than usual. The novelties composed expressly for the festival are three in number: (1) Herr Anton Dvorák's "Requiem Mass," which will be given on the morning of Friday, October 9, with Mme. Albani in one of the solo parts; (2) Prof. Villers Stanford's Dramatic Oratorio "Eden," composed to words by Mr. Robert Bridges, on the evening of Wednesday; and (3) Dr. A. C. Mackenzie's "Veni Creator Spiritus," on the evening of Tuesday. Both the "Messiah" and the "Elijah" are also to be given; while among the other attractions we may mention Bach's "St. Matthew Passion Music," Brahms's Third Symphony, Berlioz's "Faust," and Wagner's Parsifal Vorspiel. The conductor is Dr. Hans Richter; the organist, Mr. C. W. Perkins; and the solo violin, Dr. Joachim.

We have to record the death of Mr. Ferdinand Praeger—equally well-known as a composer, a teacher of the piano, a writer on music, and a friend of musicians. He was born at Leipzig in 1815, first came to London in 1834, and died here at his residence in Shepherd's Bush, on Wednesday, September 2, after a long and painful illness. He was the translator of Naumann's History of Music (Casells, 1887), and he also wrote a book entitled Wagner as I knew him.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

FRENCH.

AHN.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the French Language. By Dr. F. AHN. First Course, 1s. 6d. Second Course, 1s. 6d. The Two Courses in One Vol., 3s.

—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the French Language. Third Course, containing a French Reader, with Notes and Vocabulary. By H. W. EHRICH. 1s. 6d.

BRETTE AND THOMAS.—French Examination Papers, set at the University of London from 1889 to January 1888. Compiled and Edited by the Rev. P. H. ERNEST BRETTE, B.D., and FREDERICK THOMAS, B.A.

PART I.—MATRICULATION EXAMINATIONS, JULY 1883 TO JANUARY 1888. 3s. 6d. Key, 5s.

In the Key, all the extracts from the Writings of French Authors are translated into English, and all the Questions on Grammar, Idiom, and Elementary Etymology are fully answered.

PART II.—FIRST B.A. (or INTERMEDIATE IN ARTS) and B.A. PASS EXAMINATIONS; Examinations for Honours (Intermediate in Arts and B.A.); and for Certificates of Higher Proficiency—M.A. (Branch IV.), and D.Litt. Examinations. 7s.

BELLOWS.—Dictionary for the Pocket. French and English—English and French. By JOHN BELLOWS. Masculine and Feminine words shown by distinguishing Types. Conjugation of all the Verbs, Conjunctio marked in French Part, and Hints to Aid Pronunciation, together with Tables and Maps. Roan tuck, 10s. 6d.; Morocco tuck, 12s. 6d.

CASSAL.—Glossary of Idioms, Gallicisms, &c. With Short Notices of important French Writers, and Hints as to Works to be Read or Studied. By CHARLES CASSAL, LL.D. 2s. 6d.

CASSAL AND KARCHER.—Little French Reader (The). Extracted from "The Modern French Reader." Edited by Prof. C. CASSAL, LL.D., and Prof. T. KARCHER, LL.B. 2s.

—Modern French Reader (The). Prose. Junior Course. Edited by C. CASSAL, LL.D., and THEODORE KARCHER, LL.B. 2s. 6d.

—Modern French Reader (The). Senior Course. Edited by C. CASSAL, LL.D., and THEODORE KARCHER, LL.B. 4s. With Glossary, &c.

EHRICH.—French Reader. With Notes and Vocabulary by H. W. EHRICH. 1s. 6d.

KARCHER.—Questionnaire Français. Questions on French Grammar, Idiomatic Difficulties, and Military Expressions. By THEODORE KARCHER, LL.B. 4s. 6d.; interleaved with writing paper, 6s. 6d.

LARMOYER.—Practical French Grammar. By MORTIMER DE LARMOYER. Part I., 3s. 6d.; Part II., (in the press.)

* Part II. of this Grammar will contain (1) A Short History of the French Language; (2) A Complete Syntax; and (3) Over 2,000 Gallicisms.

LE-BRUN.—Materials for Translating from English into French. Being a Short Essay on Translation. By L. LE-BRUN. Revised by HENRY VAN LAUN. 4s. 6d.

MARMOSTEL.—Hérisaire. By J. F. MARMOSTEL. With Introduction by the Rev. P. H. E. BRETTE and Professors CASSAL and KARCHER. 2s. 6d.

NUGENT'S Improved French and English and English and French Pocket Dictionary. By SMITH. 3s.

Continued on next page.

KEGAN PAUL, TRENCH, TRÜBNER & CO.'S EDUCATIONAL WORKS.

FRENCH—Continued.

- Pocket Dictionary of the English and French Languages. 5s.
- ROCHE.—French Grammar for the Use of English students. By A. ROCHE. 3s.
- Prose and Poetry. Select Pieces from the best English Authors, for Reading, Composition, and Translation. By A. ROCHE. 2s. 6d.
- VAN LAUN.—Grammar of the French Language. In Three Parts. Parts I. and II. Accidence and Syntax. By H. VAN LAUN. 4s. Part III. Exercises. 3s. 6d.

GREEK.

- ARISTOTLE.—The Nicomachean Ethics of Aristotle. translated by F. H. PETERS. 6s.
- CONTOPOULOS.—Lexicon of Modern Greek-English and English-Modern Greek. By N. CONTOPOULOS. Two Vols. 27s.
- Handbook of English and Greek Dialogues and Correspondence, with a Short Guide to the Antiquities of Athens. By N. CONTOPOULOS. 2s. 6d.
- GELDART.—Guide to Modern Greek. By E. M. GELDART, M.A. 7s. 6d. Key, 2s. 6d.
- Simplified Grammar of Modern Greek. By E. M. GELDART, M.A. 2s. 6d.

- HOMER'S Iliad. Greek Text, with translation by J. G. CORDERY. Two Vols. 14s. Cheap Edition (translation only), 5s.
- SOPHOCLES.—The Seven Plays, translated into English Verse by LEWIS CAMPBELL. 7s. 6d.

LATIN.

- HORATIUS FLACCUS (Q.).—Opera. Edited by F. A. CORNISH. Vellum, 7s. 6d.; parchment or cloth, 6s.
- IHNE.—Latin Grammar for Beginners, on Ahn's System. by W. H. IHNE. 3s.

HUNGARIAN.

- SINGER.—Simplified Grammar of the Hungarian Language. By IGNATIUS SINGER. 4s. 6d.

GERMAN.

- AHN.—Practical Grammar of the German Language, with a Grammatical Index and Glossary of all the German Words. By Dr. F. AHN. 3s. 6d.
- New, Practical and Easy Method of Learning the German Language. By Dr. F. AHN. First and Second Course, in One Vol., 3s. Key 8d.
- Manual of German Conversation, or Vade Mecum for English Travellers. By Dr. F. AHN. 1s. 6d.
- FREEMBLING.—Graduated German Reader. Consisting of a Selection from the most Popular Writers, with a complete Vocabulary for the First Part. By FRIEDRICH OTTO FREEMBLING, Ph.D. 3s. 6d.
- Graduated Exercises for Translation into German. Consisting of Extracts from the best English Authors, with an Appendix, containing Idiomatic Notes. By FRIEDRICH OTTO FREEMBLING, Ph.D. With Notes, 4s. 6d. Without Notes, 4s.

- Pocket Dictionary of the English and German Languages. 4s.

ITALIAN.

- AHN.—New, Practical, and Easy Method of Learning the Italian Language. By Dr. F. AHN. First and Second Course. 3s. 6d.
- MILLHOUSE.—Manual of Italian Conversation, for the Use of Schools and Travellers. By JOHN MILLHOUSE. 2s.
- New English and Italian Pronouncing and Explanatory Dictionary. By JOHN MILLHOUSE. Vol. I. English-Italian. Vol. II. Italian-English. Two Vols., 12s. Pocket Dictionary of the English and Italian Languages. 5s.

RUSSIAN.

- ALEXANDROW.—Complete English-Russian and Russian-English Dictionary. By A. ALEXANDROW. 2 vols. 40s.
- IVANHOFF'S Russian Grammar, translated, enlarged and arranged for use of Students by Major W. E. GOWAN. 6s.
- MAKAROFF.—Dictionnaire Francais-Russe et Russe-Francais. Complet. Composé par N. P. MAKAROFF. 2 vols. 40s.
- Pocket Dictionary of the English and Russian Languages. 5s. 6d.
- RIOLA.—How to Learn Russian. A Manual for Students of Russian, adapted for Self-Instruction. By HENRY RIOLA. With a Preface by W. R. S. RALSTON. 12s. Key to ditto, 5s.
- Graduated Russian Reader, with a Vocabulary of all the Russian Words contained in it. By HENRY RIOLA. 10s. 6d.

SWEDISH.

- NILSSON, WIDMARK, and COLLIN.—English-Swedish Dictionary. Compiled by L. G. NILSSON, P. F. WIDMARK, and A. Z. COLLIN. 10s.
- OMAN.—Svensk-Engelsk Hand-Ordbok. (Swedish-English Dictionary.) By F. E. OMAN. 8s.
- OTTE.—Simplified Grammar of the Swedish Language. By E. C. OTTE. 2s. 6d.
- Pocket Dictionary of the English and Swedish Languages. 5s. 6d.

DANO-NORWEGIAN.

- LARSEN.—Danish-English Dictionary. By L. LARSEN. 10s. 6d.
- OTTE.—Dano-Norwegian Grammar: A Manual for Students of Danish, based on the Ollendorffian System of teaching Languages, and adapted for self-instruction. By E. C. OTTE. 7s. 6d. Key, 3s.
- Simplified Grammar of the Danish Language. By E. C. OTTE. 2s. 6d.
- Pocket Dictionary of the English and Dano-Norwegian Languages. 5s. 6d.
- ROSIING.—English-Danish Dictionary. By S. ROSIING. 8s. 6d.
- SMITH and HORNEMAN.—Norwegian Grammar; with a Glossary for Tourists. By M. SMITH and H. HORNEMAN. 2s.

SPANISH.

- BUTLER.—The Spanish Teacher and Colloquial Phrase-Book. By FRANCIS BUTLER. 2s. 6d.
- CARRENO.—Metodo para Aprender a Leer, escribir y hablar el Ingles segun el sistema de Ollendorff, con un tratado de pronunciaci6n al principio y un Ap6ndice importante al fin, que sirve de complemento a la obra. Por RAMON PALENCIOLA y JUAN DE LA CARRENO. 4s. 6d. Key, 3s.
- HARVEY.—Simplified Grammar of the Spanish Language. By W. F. HARVEY, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- SIMONNE.—Metodo para Aprender a Leer, escribir y hablar el Frances, segun el verdadero sistema de Ollendorff; ordenado en lecciones progresivas, consistiendo de ejercicios orales y escritos; enriquecido de la pronunciaci6n figurada como se estila en la conversaci6n; y de un Ap6ndice abrazando las reglas de la sintaxis, la formaci6n de los verbos regulares, y la conjugaci6n de los irregulares. Por TEODORO SIMONNE, Professor de Lenguas. 6s. Key, 3s. 6d.
- VELASQUEZ and SIMONNE.—New Method of Learning to Read, Write, and Speak the Spanish Language. By M. VELASQUEZ and J. SIMONNE. 6s. Key, 4s.
- VELASQUEZ.—Dictionary of the Spanish and English Languages. By M. VELASQUEZ DE LA CADENA. In Two Parts.—I. Spanish-English; II. English-Spanish. 6s.
- Pronouncing Dictionary of the Spanish and English Languages. In Two Parts.—I. Spanish-English; II. English-Spanish. By M. VELASQUEZ DE LA CADENA. £1 4s.
- New Spanish Reader. Passages from the Most Approved Authors, in Prose and Verse, with Vocabulary. By M. VELASQUEZ DE LA CADENA. 6s.
- An Easy Introduction to Spanish Conversation. Particularly designed for persons who have little time to study, or are their own instructors. By M. VELASQUEZ DE LA CADENA. 2s. 6d.

PORTUGUESE.

- ANDERSON and TUGMAN.—Mercantile Correspondence. Containing a Collection of Commercial Letters in Portuguese and English, with their Translation, treating of the System of Business in the principal Commercial Cities. Accompanied by pro forma Accounts, Sales, Invoices, &c. By WILLIAM ANDERSON and JAMES E. TUGMAN. 6s.
- D'ORSEY.—Practical Grammar of Portuguese and English. Exhibiting in a Series of Exercises, in Double Translation, the Idiomatic Structure of both Languages. By the Rev. ALEXANDER J. D. D'ORSEY, B.D. 7s.
- Colloquial Portuguese; or, Words and Phrases of Everyday Life. With a Brief Collection of Epistolary Phrases. By the Rev. A. J. D. D'ORSEY. 3s. 6d.
- VIEYRA.—New Pocket Dictionary of the Portuguese and English Languages. In Two Parts, Portuguese-English and English-Portuguese. Two Vols. 10s.

TURKISH.

- REDHOUSE.—The Turkish Vade-mecum of Ottoman Colloquial Language; Containing a Concise Ottoman Grammar; and a Carefully Selected Vocabulary, Alphabetically Arranged, in Two Parts, English-Turkish and Turkish-English. By J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S. 6s.
- Simplified Grammar of the Ottoman Turkish Language. By J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S. 10s. 6d.
- Turkish and English Lexicon. Showing in English the Signification of the Turkish Terms. By J. W. REDHOUSE, M.R.A.S. Parts I. to VII. £3 3s.

DUTCH.

- AHN.—Concise Grammar of the Dutch Language, with Selections from Best Authors in Prose and Poetry. After Dr. F. Ahn's Method. By Dr. J. M. HOOGLIET and Dr. KRAN. 3s. 6d.
- KRAMERS.—New Pocket Dictionary of the English-Dutch and Dutch-English Languages. Containing Pronunciation and Vocabulary of Proper Names, Geographical and Historical. By J. KRAMERS. 4s.
- PICARD.—New Pocket Dictionary of the English-Dutch and Dutch-English Languages. By A. PICARD. 10s.

ENGLISH.

- ANDERSON.—Practical Mercantile Correspondence. A Collection of Modern Letters of Business, with Notes, Bills of Lading, &c. Bills of Exchange. By WILLIAM ANDERSON. 3s. 6d.
- BELL.—The Principles of Elocution. With Exercises and Notations for Pronunciation, Intonation, Emphasis, Gesture, and Emotional Expression. By A. MELVILLE BELL. 7s. 6d.
- BOWEN (H. C.).—Studies in English for the use of Modern Schools. 1s. 6d.
- English Grammar for Beginners. 1s.
- Simple English Poems: English Literature for Junior Classes. 3s. Parts I., II., and III., 6d. each. Part IV. 1s.
- BYRNE (James).—General Principles of the Structure of Language. 3 vols. 36s.
- CLODD (Edward).—Childhood of Religions. Including a Simple Account of the Birth and Growth of Myths and Legends. 5s. Special Edition for Schools, 1s 6d.
- Childhood of the World: A Simple Account of Man in Early Times. 3s. Special Edition for Schools, 1s.
- Jesus of Nazareth. With a brief Sketch of Jewish History to the time of His Birth. 6s. Special Edition for Schools, in Two Parts, each 1s. 6d.
- GOULD.—Good English; or, Popular Errors in Language. By EDWARD S. GOULD. 6s.
- HULME (P. Edward).—Mathematical Drawing Instruments and How to Use them. With Illustrations. 3s. 6d.
- JENKINS.—Vest-Pocket Lexicon. An English Dictionary of all except Familiar Words, including the principal Scientific and Technical Terms, and Foreign Moneys, Weights, and Measures. By JAMES JENKINS. Roan, 1s. 6d.
- LONDON (Joseph).—School Management. Including a General View of the Work of Education, Organization, and Discipline. 6s.
- MAGNUS (Sir Philip).—Industrial Education. 6s.
- MASON (Charlotte M.).—Home Education. A Course of Lectures to Ladies. 3s. 6d.
- MEYER (G. Hermann von).—Organs of Speech, and their Application in the Formation of Articulate Sounds. With 17 Woodcuts. 5s.
- PLUMPTRE.—King's College Lectures on Elocution: or The Physiology and Culture of Voice and Speech, and the Expression of the Emotions by Language, Countenance, and Gesture. By CHARLES JOHN PLUMPTRE. Illustrated Edition. 15s.
- SAYCE (A. B.).—Introduction to the Science of Language. 2 vols. 9s.
- Principles of Comparative Philology. 10s. 6d.
- SAYWELL (J. L.).—Handbook of County Dialects. 5s.
- SMITH (H. Percy).—Glossary of Terms and Phrases. Edited by H. PERCY SMITH and others. 3s. 6d.
- Specimens of English Prose Style, from Malory to Macaulay. Selected and Annotated, with an Introductory Essay, by GEORGE SAINTSBURY. Vellum 15s. Parchment antique, or cloth, 12s.
- STRECKER (Adolph).—Text-Book of Organic Chemistry. Edited by Prof. WILHELM STRECKER. Translated and Edited, with extensive Additions, by W. R. HODGKINSON and A. J. GREENAWAY. 12s. 6d.
- TRENCH (Archbp.).—On the Study of Words. Revised by A. L. MAYHEW. 5s.
- English Past and Present. Revised by A. L. MAYHEW. 5s.
- WHITKEY (Prof W. D.).—Language and its Study, with Special Reference to the Indo-European Family of Languages. Edited by R. MORRIS. 5s.
- Life and Growth of Language. 5s.
- Essentials of English Grammar. 3s. 6d.
- Language and the Study of Language. 10s. 6d.
- WEDGWOOD.—Dictionary of English Etymology. By H. WEDGWOOD, M.A. With Introduction on the Origin of Language. £1 1s.
- Contested Etymologies in the Dictionary of the Rev. W. W. Skeat. By H. WEDGWOOD. 5s.
- YOU MANS (Eliza A.).—First Book of Botany. Designed to Cultivate the Observing Powers of Children. With 300 Engravings. 2s. 6d.

CLARENDON PRESS PUBLICATIONS.

NEW AND IMMEDIATELY FORTHCOMING BOOKS.

"RULERS OF INDIA." Edited by Sir WILLIAM WILSON HUNTER, K.C.S.I., &c.

NEW VOLUME, crown 8vo, cloth, price 2s. 6d.

CLYDE and STRATHNAIRN; and the Suppression of the Great Revolt.

By Major-General Sir OWEN TUDOR BURNE, K.C.S.I., sometime Military Secretary to the Commander-in-Chief in India.

THE VOLUMES NOW PUBLISHED ARE:

DALHOUSIE. By Sir W. W. HUNTER.
AKBAR. By Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I.
DUPLIX. By Colonel MALLESON, C.S.I.
WARREN HASTINGS. By Captain L. J. TROTTER.

CORNWALLIS. By W. S. SETON-KARR.
MAYO. By Sir W. W. HUNTER.
HARDINGE. By CHARLES VISCOUNT HARDINGE, B.A.
CLYDE and STRATHNAIRN. (See above.)

Further Volumes will be issued at short intervals. Prospectus on application.

THE CLARENDON PRESS TRANSLATIONS OF FOREIGN MEMOIRS.

New Volume, 8vo, with 49 Illustrations, cloth, 18s.

FOSSIL BOTANY: being an Introduction to Palaeobotany from the Standpoint of the Botanist. By H. GRAF de SOELMS-LAUBACH, Professor in the University of Göttingen. Authorised English Translation. By H. E. F. GARNSEY, M.A., Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; Revised by ISAAC BAYLEY BAILEY, M.A., M.D., F.R.S., Queen's Botanist in Scotland, Professor of Botany in the University, and Keeper of the Royal Botanic Garden, Edinburgh.

COMPLETION OF MR. FURNEAUX'S EDITION OF "THE ANNALS OF TACITUS."

Nearly ready, Vol. II., Books XI.-XVI., 8vo, cloth.

CORNELII TACITI ANNALIUM AB EXCESSU

DIVI AUGUSTI LIBRI. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by HENRY FURNEAUX, M.A., formerly Fellow and Tutor of Corpus Christi College, Oxford. With a Map.

(Volume I., Books I.-VI., 8vo, cloth, 18s.)

IL PRINCIPE. By Niccolò Machiavelli.

Demy 8vo, half-bound, 11s.

Edited by L. ARTHUR BURD, with a Preface by LORD ACTON.

"The present edition of 'The Prince' is mainly intended for the use of those who are not already familiar with Machiavelli's Life and Writings. Though it deals nominally with 'The Prince' alone, it is hoped that it may prove useful as a foundation for more extended study, and as a general introduction to Machiavelli's works. The aim of the Editor has been to summarise the results at which Machiavellian studies have now arrived, and to indicate the most important sources from which further information may be obtained."—From the EDITOR'S PREFACE.

"Very scholarly and well-nigh exhaustive."—Times.

MR. PETERSON'S NEW EDITION OF QUINTILIAN'S "INSTITUTIO ORATORIA."

Nearly ready, 8vo, cloth.

M. FABI QUINTILIANI INSTITUTIONIS

ORATORIAE. LIBER DECIMUS. A Revised Text, with Introductory Essays, Critical and Explanatory Notes, and a Facsimile of the Handwritten MS. By W. PETERSON, M.A., LL.D., Principal of University College, Dundee; St. Andrew's University.

A NEW ENGLISH DICTIONARY ON HISTORICAL PRINCIPLES.

Founded mainly on the Materials Collected by the Philological Society.

Edited by JAMES A. H. MURRAY, M.A., D.C.L., LL.D., sometime President of the Philological Society; and HENRY BRADLEY, M.A., President of the Philological Society.

NEW PART NEARLY READY. Vol. II. Part VI. [CLO—CONSIGNER]. 12s. 6d.

JUST PUBLISHED. Vol. III. Part I. [E—EVERY]. 12s. 6d.

Full particulars of the Work on application.

"There is a great deal of insincerity in the current excuse as to not buying such a work as this 'till it is finished.' For it is rather a collection of excellent monographs than an ordinary lexicon; and the importance of monographs, in any other case, would be at once admitted. So prevalent is the ignorance of our own language, that but few people can give the plain reasons why this dictionary is superior to all others; and there must be thousands who would buy it at once if they could only grasp this fact."—Professor SKELTON (Leading, Aug. 20).

CLASSICAL TEXTS FOR SCHOOL USE.

- CICERO.—INTERESTING and DESCRIPTIVE PASSAGES. With Notes by H. WALFORD, M.A. In Three Parts. Third Edition. Complete 4s. 6d. Separately, 1s. 6d. each Part.
- SELECT ORATIONS. (For Schools) With Notes, &c., by J. E. KING, M.A., Editor of "Cicero.—Philippics," &c. Second Edition. 2s. 6d.
- IN Q. CÆCILII DIVINATIO and in C. VERREM ACTIO PRIMA. Limp, 1s. 6d. "A masterly work."—School Guardian.
- DE SENECTUTE. Edited, with Notes, by LEONARD HUXLEY, B.A. In Two Parts. 2s.
- PRO ROSCIO. Edited, with English Notes, by ST. GEORGE STOKK, M.A. 3s. 6d.
- CATILINE ORATIONS. Edited, with English Notes, by G. A. UICOTT, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- SELECTED LETTERS. (For Schools.) With Notes by the late C. E. PRICHARD, M.A., and E. R. BERNARD, M.A. Second Edition. 3s.
- HORACE.—SELECTED ODES. With Notes for the Use of the Fifth Form. By E. C. WICKHAM, M.A. 2s.
- JUVENAL.—THIRTEEN SATIRES. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by C. H. FRANKSON, M.A., and H. A. STONOR, M.A., LL.D. Crown 8vo. Part I., 3s.; Part II., 3s. 6d.
- LIVY.—SELECTIONS. (For Schools.) With Notes and Maps by H. LEE-WARNER, M.A. In Three Parts. Limp, each 1s. 6d.
- BOOKS V.—VII. With Introduction and Notes by A. R. CLYDE, B.A. Second Edition. Revised by P. E. MATHESON, M.A. 3s.
- BOOKS XXI.—XXIII. With Introduction and Notes by M. T. TATHAM, M.A. Second Edition. 3s. "A thoroughly good school-book."—Sunday Review.
- BOOKS XXI., XXII. Separately, 2s. 6d. each.
- ÆSCHYLUS.—PROMETHEUS BOUND. (For Schools.) With Notes, &c., by A. O. PRICHARD, M.A. 2s.
- ÆSCHYLUS. With Introduction and Notes by ARTHUR SIDGWICK, M.A. Each 3s.
- AGAMEMNON. Third Edition, Revised. "Admirably adapted for the purpose for which it is intended."—Athenæum.
- CHOEPHOROI. "Will abundantly supply the requirements of any ordinary student."—Spectator.
- EUMENIDES. "The work is good and solid, and represents the judgments of an acute scholar."—Guardian.
- ARISTOPHANES. In Single Plays. Edited, with English Notes, Introductions, &c., by W. W. MERRY, D.D. 3s. each.
- ACHARNIANS. Third Edition. "Quite sustains Mr. Merry's high reputation as a scholar."—Cambridge Review.
- THE CLOUDS. Third Edition. "The notes seem to leave no difficulty unexplained."—Spectator.
- THE FROGS. Second Edition. "An excellent school edition."—Athenæum.
- THE KNIGHTS. Second Edition. "Excellent fitted to the needs of sixth-form boys."—Saturday Review.
- THE BIRDS. 3s. 6d.
- DEMOSTHENES.—ORATIONS AGAINST PHILIP. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., LL.D., and P. E. MATHESON, M.A. Vol. I. THE FIRST PHILIPPIC and OINTHACUS. L.III. 2s. Vol. II. DE PACE, PHILIPPIC II., DE CHERSONESE, PHILIPPIC III. 4s. 6d. "A model of what a school book should be."—Academy.
- EURIPIDES.—IPHIGENIA in TAURIS. By C. S. JERRAM, M.A. 3s.
- HERACLEIDÆ. Edited by the Same. 3s.
- ALCESTIS. Edited by the Same. 2s. 6d.
- HECUBA. Edited by C. H. RUSSELL, M.A. 2s. 6d.
- MEDEA. Edited by C. B. Heberden, M.A. 2s.
- HERODOTUS. BOOK IX. Edited, with Introduction and Notes, by EVELYN ABBOTT, M.A., Fellow and Tutor of Balliol College, Oxford. 3s.
- HERODOTUS.—SELECTIONS from. Edited, with Introduction, Notes, and a Map, by W. W. MERRY, D.D. 2s. 6d.
- SOPHOCLES. (For the Use of Schools) Edited by L. CAMPBELL, M.A., and E. ABBOTT, M.A. New Edition. Vol. I., 4s. 6d.; Vol. II., 6s.
- Also in Single Plays, limp.
CEPHEUS TYRANNUS. 2s. TRACHINIE. 2s.
CEPHEUS COLONEUS. 1s. 6d. PHILOCTETES. 2s.
ANTIGONE. 1s. 6d. ELECTRA. 2s.
AJAX. 2s.
- THEOCRITUS. (For Schools.) With Notes by H. KYNASTON, D.D. (late Snow). Fourth Edition. 4s. 6d.
- XENOPHON.—SELECTIONS. (For Schools.) With Notes and Maps by J. S. PHILPOTTS, B.C.L. Fourth Edition. 3s. 6d.
- EASY SELECTIONS (For Junior Classes.) With a Vocabulary, Notes, and Maps by J. S. PHILPOTTS, B.C.L., and C. S. JERRAM, M.A. Third Edition. 3s. 6d.
- CYROPÆDIA. Book I. With Introduction and Notes by C. BIGG, D.D. 2s.
- CYROPÆDIA. BOOKS IV., V. 2s. 6d.
- HELENICA. BOOKS I and II. With Introduction and Notes by G. E. UNDERHILL, M.A. Extra Imp. 8vo, 3s.

Full Catalogue of Clarendon Press Publications free on application.

LONDON: HENRY FROWDE, CLARENDON PRESS WAREHOUSE, AMEN CORNER, E.C.

THE ACADEMY.

A WEEKLY REVIEW OF LITERATURE, SCIENCE, AND ART.

No. 1010.
[New Issue.]

SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1891.

PRICE 3d.
[Registered as a Newspaper.]

MR. MURRAY'S LIST OF SCHOOL BOOKS.

DR. WM. SMITH'S EDUCATIONAL SERIES. YOUNG BEGINNERS' LATIN COURSE.

A NEW SERIES.

- I. First Latin Book. Grammar, Easy Questions, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 2s.
- II. Second Latin Book. An Easy Latin Reading Book, with Analysis of Sentences. 2s.
- III. Third Latin Book. Easy Exercises on the Syntax, with Vocabulary. 2s. [Nearly ready.]

PRINCIPIA SERIES.

PRINCIPIA LATINA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
- *Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A First Latin Reading-Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part III. A First Latin Verse Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part IV. Latin Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.
- *Part V. Short Tales and Anecdotes for Translation into Prose. 3s.

- Students' Latin Grammar. 6s.
- Smaller Latin Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

Latin-English Vocabulary to Phædrus, Cæcilius Nepos, and Cæsar's Gallic War. 3s. 6d.

- A Child's First Latin Book. Comprising a full Practice of Nouns, Pronouns, and Adjectives, with the Verbs. By T. D. HALL. Revised and Enlarged Edition. 2s.
- Tacitus, Germania, Agricola, and First Book of the Annals. With Notes. 12mo, 3s. 6d.

GREEK COURSE.

INITIA GRÆCÆ.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, and Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
- *Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A Greek Reading-Book. 3s. 6d.
- *Part III. Prose Composition. 3s. 6d.
- Students' Greek Grammar. 6s.
- Smaller Greek Grammar. For Middle and Lower Forms. 3s. 6d.

- Greek Accidence. 2s. 6d.
- Plato.—Selections. With Notes. 3s. 6d.

ENGLISH COURSE.

- *English Grammar. With Exercises. 3s. 6d.
- *Primary English Grammar. With Exercises and Questions. 1s.
- Primary History of Britain. From the Earliest Times down to 1850. New and thoroughly Revised Edition. Coloured Map. (430 pp.) 2s. 6d.
- Modern Geography. 5s.
- Smaller Modern Geography. 2s. 6d.
- English Composition. Examples and Exercises. 3s. 6d.

FRENCH COURSE.

FRENCH PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
- *Appendix to Part I. Additional Exercises and Examination Papers. 2s. 6d.
- *Part II. A French Reading-Book, with Etymological Dictionary. 4s. 6d.
- *Part III. Prose Composition. 4s. 6d.

- Students' French Grammar. With an Introduction by M. LITTRE. 6s.
- Smaller French Grammar. 3s. 6d.

GERMAN COURSE.

GERMAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Exercises, Vocabulary, and Materials for Conversation. 3s. 6d.
- *Part II. Reading Book, with Dictionary. 3s. 6d.
- Practical German Grammar. For Advanced Students. 3s. 6d.

ITALIAN COURSE.

ITALIAN PRINCIPIA.

- *Part I. Grammar, Delectus, Exercises, Vocabulary. 3s. 6d.
- *Part II. An Italian Reading-Book. 3s. 6d.

MURRAY'S STUDENTS' MANUALS.

Crown 8vo, 7s. 6d. each.

The Students' Hume: A HISTORY OF ENGLAND FROM THE EARLIEST TIMES TO THE REVOLUTION IN 1688. Thoroughly Revised Edition. Continued to the TREATY OF BERLIN, 1878. By the late Prof. J. S. BEWEE. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts (830 pp.). 7s. 6d.

The Work may also be obtained in Three Divisions, price 2s. 6d. each. PART I., B.C. 55—A.D. 1485; PART II., A.D. 1485—1688; PART III., 1688—1878.

Students' Modern Europe, FROM THE FALL OF CONSTANTINOPLE TO THE TREATY OF BERLIN. By R. LODGE, M.A. 7s. 6d.

Students' History of Europe during the Middle Ages. By HENRY HALLAM. 7s. 6d.

Students' Constitutional History of England. Henry VII.—George II. By HENRY HALLAM. 7s. 6d.

Students' Old Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. With Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' New Testament History. By PHILIP SMITH. With Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Ancient History, to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. By PHILIP SMITH. With Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Ecclesiastical History. 2 Vols.: I. A.D. 20—1063; II. 1063—1614. By PHILIP SMITH. With Woodcuts. 7s. 6d. each.

Students' English Church History. 3 Vols.: I. 596—1500; II. 1500—1717; III. 1717 to 1884. By CANON FERRY. 7s. 6d. each.

Students' History of Greece. To the Roman Conquest. By DR. WM. SMITH. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' History of Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. By DEAN LIDDELL. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Gibbon: The Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire. By DR. WM. SMITH. With Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' History of France, to the Fall of the Second Empire. By W. H. JERVIS. With Coloured Maps and Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Ancient Geography. By CANON BEVAN. With Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Modern Geography. By CANON BEVAN. With Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Students' Geography of British India. By DR. GEORGE SMITH. With Maps. 7s. 6d.

Students' English Language: Its Origin and Growth. By GEORGE P. MARSH. 7s. 6d.

Students' English Literature. With Biographical Notices of the Authors. By T. B. SHAW. 7s. 6d.

Students' Specimens of English Literature. By T. B. SHAW. 6s.

Students' Moral Philosophy. By DR. FLEMING. 7s. 6d.

DR. SMITH'S SMALLER HISTORIES.

England, from the Earliest Times to 1857. New and Thoroughly Revised Edition. With 4 Coloured Maps, 14 Plans, and 68 Woodcuts. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Scripture History, continued down to A.D. 70. With 40 Illustrations. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Ancient History. Down to the Conquests of Alexander the Great. With 70 Illustrations. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Ancient Geography. With 30 Illustrations. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Modern Geography, Physical and Political. 16mo, 2s. 6d.

Rome, to the Establishment of the Empire. With Coloured Map and 70 Illustrations. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Greece, to the Roman Conquest. With Coloured Maps and 74 Illustrations. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Classical Mythology. For Ladies' Schools and Young Persons. With 90 Woodcuts. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

English Literature. With Lives of our Chief Writers. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

Specimens of English Literature. To be used with the foregoing book. 16mo, 3s. 6d.

* Keys to these Works supplied to authenticated Teachers on written application.

DR. WM. SMITH'S SCHOOL DICTIONARIES.

A Smaller Latin-English Dictionary. With a Dictionary of Proper Names. Thirty-first Edition. By Dr. WM. SMITH and Prof. T. D. HALL, M.A. 730 pp., 7s. 6d.

This Edition is, to a great extent, a New and Original Work. Every article has been carefully revised.

Smaller English-Latin Dictionary. 7s. 6d.

Latin-English Dictionary. With the Calendar, Measures, Weights, Proper Names, &c. 16s.

Copious and Critical English-Latin Dictionary, Compiled from original sources. 16s.

Concise Dictionary of the Bible. Illustrations. 21s.

Smaller Bible Dictionary. With Illustrations. 7s. 6d.

Classical Dictionary of Greek and Roman Mythology, Biography, and Geography. With 750 Woodcuts. 18s.

Smaller Classical Dictionary. With 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Smaller Dictionary of Greek and Roman Antiquities. 200 Woodcuts. 7s. 6d.

Readable English Dictionary. Etymologically arranged. By DAVID MILNE, M.A. 7s. 6d.

